Holmes Case

LONDON

PUBLISHED BY WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, STRAND.

SUPPLEMENT, GRATIS.] [JANUARY 9, 1847.

INDEX TO ENGRAVINGS.

ADELAIDE, Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, Visit of, to Cashiobury; Arrival, 172
African Curiosities—African Guitar; Costume of a King; African Umbrella Hat; African War Dress; Gazelle brought home by Captain Denham, 341
Agricultural Implements (See "Smithfield Club Cattle Show")
Agricultural Pictures—Sheepwashing, Sheep Shearing, 41; Hay Harvest, Wheat Harvest, 136; Thatching, 220; Ploughing, 245; Drilling and Harrowing, 300; Thrashing, 345
Albert, His Royal Highness Prince, K.G., &c.—Liverpool, Visit of his Royal Highness to, Trowel presented to his Royal Highness on Laying the Foundation Stone of "The Sailor's Home," 65; Liverpool from Woodside (1846), 68; Liverpool in 1728, The Sailor's Home, 69; The Royal Yacht entering the Albert Dock, The Déjeûner at the Albert Dock, His Royal Highness Leaving, 72; Grand Banquet to his Royal Highness in the Town Hall, 73; Great Procession to the site of the Sailor's Home, 89; His Royal Highness Laying the Foundation Stone of the Sailor's Home, Arrival of the Royal Yacht, 92
Alexandria (Foreign Corn Ports), 385; St. Mark's Church, 196
Amateur Concert, Note from an, 371
Andover Union Workhouse, 304
Angling Notes for the Month—The Barbel, 13; The Pike, 93; The Grayling, 149; The Chub, 220
Archæological Institute, Meeting of the at York, 64
Army, Improved Discipline of the, 411
Arundel Castle, The Progress and Visit of her Majesty to—Landing at Portsmouth, 353; Entrance Arch to Arundel Castle, Reception in the Grand Corridor, New Dairy, The Owls in the Castle Keep, The Keep Illuminated, 356, 357; The Great Drawing-Room, the Great Dining-Room, The Superb State Bed, Illumination of the Castle and Town of Arundel, 360, 361; Spade used by her Majesty in Planting an Oak in the Small Park, 378
Astley's Amphitheatre, The Great Dutch Equilibrist's Bottle Feat, 301
Atlantic, Loss of the American Steamer near Boston, 400

"BATTLE OF LIFE," Scene from, at the Lyceum Theatre, 413
Beckford's Monument in the Cemetery at Bath, 140
Bedford Lodge, Campden Hill, Fête at, 60
Birmingham Musical Festival, The Great Music Hall, 137
"Bondman, The," Scene from Mr. Balfe's New Opera, 393
Booksellers' Provident Retreat at Abbot's Langley, 60
Bouquet of Game (Bouquet de Gibier) 377
Brighton and Chichester Railway, Railway Draw-bridge over the Arun, The Draw-bridge open, 320
British Association, The Meeting of at Southampton—Portraits of Members, &c., 184, 185, 186; Alum Bay, Geologists Landing, Black Gang Chine, Dr. Fitton's Lecture, President's Geological Lecture on board the De Saumarez, 185; Arrival of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, 188
Bury and Ipswich Railway, The Opening of the—Bury Station, 377

CABINET MINISTERS, Her Majesty's, Portraits of, 57
Canary Fancy, The Annual Shows of the—Lizard, Spangled-back, Jonquil, Mealy-bird, 373
Canterbury Union Workhouse, 304
Capri, The Iron Mediterranean Steamer, 348
Cattle Show (See "Smithfield Club Cattle Show")
Charles the First, Bust of, at Portsmouth, 4
Cheapside, The Wood Paving Removed, 261
Chelsea Out-Pensioners in their New Uniform, 293
Chess, 3, 19, 42, 59, 71, 83, 110, 128, 131, 155, 171, 192, 206, 224, 240, 256, 259, 286, 291, 307, 331, 350, 363, 382, 394, 403
Chester, Remains of the Palace of the Earls of Derby at, 325
Chesterfield, The New Free Grammar School at, 140
Chili, Santiago, 20
Christmas Pictures—"The Compliments of the Season (by Duncan), 401; Christmas Morning, Going to Church (Dodgson), Christmas Eve in Germany, Martin Luther and his Family, 405; Ornamental Letter, 407; Bringing in the Boar's Head at Queen's College, Oxford (J. L. Williams), 408; The Misletoe (by Kenny Meadows), 409; "Christmas is Come," Song, with Music and Illustration, 416
Circassia, The War in—Schamil, the Circassian Chief, Assembling of the Russian Troops for the Campaign of the Caucasus, 132
Cologne, Insurrection in—Procession to St. Martin's, Government Troops and Municipal Guards, Charge of Cavalry across the Bridge of Boats, 120
Corn Bill, The New, The Royal Assent given by Commission to, 1
Covent Garden Theatre, The Interior of, from a Recent Sketch, 372
Cracow, The Ceremony of the Incorporation of, proclaimed at the Senate House, 372

DECOMPOSITION OF WATER, Apparatus used in the, 267
Design, Government School of—Vase presented to Mr. C. H. Wilson, 128
Doncaster Prize Plate (1846), 189
Doncaster Races (1846)—The Betting Ring, W. Scott, Portrait of, 204; Sir Tatton Sykes Leading in the Winner of the St. Leger, Portrait of the horse, "Sir Tatton Sykes," 205
Dorsetshire Peasantry. Whitchurch Village. Interior of a Dorsetshire Labourer's Cottage, 156; Labourer's Cottage near Blandford, 157
Duke, The, "In the West. God bless you! Good bye!" 161
Dundrum, The Village of, with Mourn Mountains, 268
Durham Cathedral, New Font in, 316

EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY, Interior of Smoking Saloon on the, 173; Exterior of Ditto, 174
Elizabethan Remains, Discovered at Whitstable (Relics of an Ancient Wreck), 400
Euphonia, or Speaking Machine, 96
Everybody's Column, Illustrated, 413

FARMERY, (New), or Model Farm, in Berkshire, 28
Fashions, London and Parisian, 28, 96, 172, 221, 285, 349, 413
Fine Arts:—
  Choosing the Wedding Gown, 233
  Diana surprised by Actæon, 56
  Lily and Rose (Kenny Meadows), 380
  Penserosa! Painted by Winterhalter, 296
  Prophecy of the Flower (Vidal), 97
  Repose (Gainsborough), 56
  Temptations of St. Anthony (A. Caracci), 392
Five Sovereign Piece, The New, 292
Flixton Hall, Suffolk, Destroyed by Fire, 393; Carved Doorway and Black Jack, Elizabethan Table at, 404
Flogging in the Army. The Ladder—the Halberts—the Cat, 67

GENEVA, from the Bergue, 244
Giraffe Cricket, 340
Glenelg, The, the Condemned Indiaman (Flores Expedition), 368
Gloucester, Toll-house near, struck by Lightning, 13
"Gold; or, the Half-Brothers. A Story of Life in the Middle Station," by Camilla Toulmin, 13, 29, 45, 61, 91, 109, 139, 141, 158, 174, 189, 206, 221, 235, 250, 270, 288, 301, 318
Goodwood Races (1846), Road from the Railway Station, Going to the Races, High-street Chichester, The Race Course, 76
Gravesend, Ruins after the Recent Fire at, 352
Gravesend, Embarkation of Troops at, for Foreign Service—The March through the Town, The Parting, Preparing to Embark, The Embarkation, 332, 333
Great Britain Ship, ashore at Rathmullan, 212; View of, as she appeared on the 7th October, Removal of the Ship's Stores to the Coast Guard Station, 268; The Vessel at Mid-water, State Cabin, Carting Property, &c., 269; Track of the Ship, Plan of the, 275
Great Northern Railway of France, Accident on the, 36
Great Western Steam Ship, in a Late Gale, 273
Guernsey, Her Majesty's Visit to—The Debarkation, 149
Guy Fawkes's Lantern, in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, 292

HAARLEM LAKE, Gigantic Steam Engine for Draining the, 229, 230
Hadley Church Beacon, 208
Half-way House, The, between Knightsbridge and Kensington, 144
Harvest, Hymn of the, Drawn by Harvey, 200
Hatfield, Her Majesty entering the Town of, 257
Hatfield House, Her Majesty's Visit to—Hatfield House—Old Palace of Hatfield, 265; Grand Staircase, Banquet in the Great Hall, 280; Grand Ball in the Corridor, Hall of the Old Palace, now the Stable, Sketch from the Vineyard Garden, 281
Hatfield Church, from the London Road, and Tomb of the Ladies Brocket, in Hatfield Church, 284
Hatfield Park, Queen Elizabeth's Oak in, 284
Helena Augusta Victoria, Christening of Her Royal Highness the Princess, 80
Hyde Park, Grand Review in, in the presence of Ibrahim Pacha, &c., 5

IBRAHIM PACHA, Reform Club Banquet to, 17
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, Patent Printing Machine, for working the, 336
India, Colours taken in (See Thirty-first Regiment)
India, North Western Mail Cart, Changing Ground, Native Hack Cab 344
Irish Bread Riots—Dungarvan Old Chapel Road, Youghal Mall and Mall House, 293
Irish Deer, Extinct, Skull and Horns of, Skulls of Female of Ditto (Supposed), Skull of Short-horned Bull, 397
Irvine Toxopholite Society, Anniversary of the, Uniform of the Society, 165
Isle of Wight, Yachting in the—Group of Yachtsmen, Ryde Pier, Royal Victoria Regatta, 121; Schooner Yachts off Culver Cliff, 124
Isle of Wight Regatta—Prince Albert's Cup, 149

JELLALABAD, Ghuznee, and Cabul, Tablet to the Memory of the Heroes of, 228
Jersey, Her Majesty's Visit to—Her Majesty passing St. Mark's Church, Landing at Victoria Pier, Mont Orgueil, Waiting for the Arrival of the Queen, Royal Square, 168, 169
Jullien's Concert, Orchestra, &c., at Covent Garden Theatre, 289

KAFFIRLAND, The War in—Bambrick, Captain, Death of, 33; Muster of Malay Volunteers, Scene in Kaffirland, 40; Kaffirs Bush-Fighting, Rescue of Ammunition Waggons, 52; Kaffir Chiefs (Portraits), 81; Beaufort Cottage and Frontier Post near Fort Beaufort, Kaffirs Driving their Spoil, &c., across Trompetter's Drift, 116; Kaffir Women Advancing as a Screen to the Men, Embassy of Pandah to the Government of Natal, 340; Kaffir Camp, Plan of a, 243; Kaffir Weather Doctor, Kaffir Letter Carrier, 244
Kalergi, the Greek Patriot, Hellenic Festival to, 348
Kew Royal Botanical Gardens, Monster Cactus at, 245
Kilwinning Papingo—Shooting at the Tower, the Target Field, 108
Knapsack, The Improved, for the Army, 172
Kote Kangra, Fort of, View of—Bringing up the Guns, Portrait of Soondur Singh, Killadar of Kangra, 117

LANCASTER AND CARLISLE RAILWAY, Opening of the—Lancaster Station, Lowther Viaduct, Newbiggin Bridge, Eamont Viaduct, 396; Bridge over the Lune, from the Churchyard, Lancaster, Packhorse Bridge over the Lune, Borrowbridge, Dinner at Carlisle, 412
Leipsic, Destruction of the Hotel de Pologne, by Fire, 164
Leslie's New Gas Burner, 256
Life Boat, Beadon's Floating, 96
Lisbon, View of the Palace at, 285
London and Richmond Railway—the Wandle Viaduct, 93
London Street Architecture—New Shop Front, Regent-street, 128
London Street Music—the Monster Organ, 397
"Look before you Leap," Scene from the New Comedy of, 301
Lord Mayor's Show in the 17th Century, 308
Lord Mayor's Show (1846) Landing at Westminster, 309
Lord Mayor's View of the Thames, 100; Visit to Oxford, the Grace Cup, Embarkation at Oxford, Accident at Benson Lock, Culham Bridge, Abingdon, 101; Basildon House, Arrival of the Civic Party at, View of Medmenham Abbey, Ceremony at the Boundary Stone, Staines, 104
Louis Philippe, Attempt to Assassinate his Majesty, at the Tuileries, 88

MADRID, The Buen Retiro, 193; the Spanish Marriages—Arrival at the Alcala, the Prado, Puerto del Sol, El Patio or the Inner Court of the Royal Palace, 248, 249; the Velacion, Reception of the Royal Procession, 260; Corrida di Toros, Going to the Bull Fight, Al à Sombra, Al Sol, 276; Procession, the Fight, Taking Away the Bull, 277
"Magic Horn," the, Scene from the New Burlesque of, 173
"Maid of Artois"—The Desert Scene, at Drury-lane Theatre, 253
Manchester, Two Views of the Opening of the Queen's Park, 144
Manchester Public Parks—The Peel Park, 12
Marseilles (Foreign Corn Ports), View of, 305
Masonic New Hall, at Cowes, 61
Masonic Procession at Bolton, Churchgate, 53
"Measure for Measure," Scene from, at Sadler's Wells, 349
Meteor, Splendid, one seen on the 25th September, 1846, 220
Montery, Plan of the Siege of, 290
Montpensier, The Duke de, Crossing the Pyrenees, 241
Morice Town, Devonport, The Earl of Auckland Laying the Foundation Stone of the New Steam Yard at, 188

NASSAU BALLOON, Ascent of the, 61; Passing Battersea Bridge on its Passage up the Thames, 240
Nativity Hymn, air, "Heber's Jerusalem," 391
Newfoundland, Plan of St. John's, 4
Newport Pagnel Steeple Chase, 337
New York, Great Mexican Meeting in the Park, 20
New York Harbour, Encampment of the Californian Legion, on Governor's Island, 164
New Zealand, War in, Kawiti's Pah, 4
Normanby, The Marquis of, the Newly Appointed Ambassador to Paris, State Carriages of Louis Philippe sent to convey him to the Tuileries, 148
North Staffordshire Railway, Commencement of the, 221

"OLD OAKS OF WINDSOR," Music by Edward Loder, 236
"One kindly word before we part," Ballad, Music by Mrs. Gilbert à Beckett, 297
Osborne House, Rustic Fête given by her Majesty to the Workmen and Labourers at, to Celebrate Prince Albert's Birthday, 148

PAINTED GLASS, Specimens of Ancient Descriptions, 107
Parasol, The Newly-Invented, 188
Paris, Winter Garden in (Le Jardin d'Hiver), 381; Bread Riots in the Rue du Faubourg St. Antoine, 225; July Fête in the Champs Elysées, 80; Grand Concert of the Artistes Musiciens, at the Hippodrome, 84
Parliamentary Portraits (See "Portraits")
"Pas de Deesses," as danced at her Majesty's Theatre, 77
Plate River, Plan of the Evolutions of the Squadron on the, 170
Playford Hall, the Seat of Thomas Clarkson, Esq., 228
Plymouth, Wrecks of the Schooner Providence, and the Brig Heros, at, 345
Police Offices of London—The Mansion House, 125; Westminster Police-office, 253; Thames Police-office, 317
Portraits:—
  Addison, Miss Laura, as Isabella, in "Measure for Measure," 349
  Anglesey, Statuette of the Marquis of, by Count d'Orsay, 292
  Ansted, Professor, 185
  Auckland, The Earl of, 57
  — Ballantine, Esq., the Magistrate, 317
  Bedford, Mr., in the "Wonderful Water Cure," 61
  Bond, Esq., William, The Late Magistrate, 253
  — Broderip, Esq., the Magistrate, 317
  Bulwer, Mr. Henry Lytton-Earle, 245
  Campbell, Lord, 57
  Carpenter, Dr. W., 184
  Carroll, The Right Hon. Sir George (Lord Mayor of London), 309
  Clanricarde, The Marquis of, 57
  Clarendon The Earl of, 57
  Clarkson, Esq., the late Thomas, 228
  Cobus Congo, 81
  Cottenham, Lord Chancellor, 57
  Cushman, The Misses, as Viola and Olivia, in "Twelfth Night," 29
  Daubeny, Dr., 184
  De la Beche, Sir Henry, 185
  Don Francis D'Assis, 232
  Donna Maria Luisa Fernanda, Infanta of Spain, 232
  Douglas, Frederick, of Maryland, 109
  Duperre, The Late Admiral, 316
  Dwarkanauth Tagore, The Late, 93
  Elton, Esq. (America), 186
  Ewart, M.P., William, 53
  Faraday, Dr., 184
  Fitton, Dr., 185
  Forbes, Professor, 185
  Fowler, Dr., 184
  Gersted, Professor, 184
  Greenough, Esq., G.B., 185
  Grey, Earl, 57
  Grey, Bart., The Right Hon. Sir George, 57
  Grove, Professor, 184
  Haydon, Esq., The Late, B.R., 12
  Herschel, Bart., F.R.S., Sir J. F. W., 184
  Heywood, Esq., James, 186
  Hobhouse, Bart., M.P., The Right Hon. Sir John Cam, 57
  Hopkins, Esq., W., 185
  Horner, Esq., Leonard, 185
  Hudson, Mr., of the Haymarket Theatre, 61
  Isabella II., Queen of Spain, 232
  Keeley, Mr. and Mrs., in "The Battle of Life," 413
  Labouchere, M.P., The Right Hon. Henry, 57
  Laning, Esq., S., 184
  Lansdowne, The Marquis of, 57
  Leichardt, Dr., 141
  Leopold, Francis Jules, of Saxe Coburg, 229
  Louis Buonaparte, 93
  Lytton, Bart., Sir Edward Bulwer, 380
  Macaulay, The Right Hon. T. B., 57
  Macready, Mr., as Hamlet, 173
  Mathew, Father (Statue of), 109
  Minto, The Earl of, 57
  Montpensier, H.R.H. the Duke de, 232
  Morpeth, M.P., Lord Viscount, 57
  Negrimmo, 81
  Norwich, The Bishop of, 184
  Northampton, The Marquis of, 185
  O'Connell, Daniel, Colossal Statue of, 288
  Orleans, Statue of the Late Duke of, at Paris, 292
  Owen, Professor, 184
  Pakenham, Sir Hercules, 184
  Palmerston, M.P., Viscount, 57, 184
  Phelps, Mr., as the Duke, in "Measure for Measure," 349
  Phillips, Esq., John, 185
  Playfair, Dr. L., 184
  Pope Pius IX., 24
  Porter, Esq., G. R., 186
  Portugal, Maria II., Queen of, and Ferdinand, King of, 321
  Prideaux, Esq., J., 184
  Rachel, Mdlle., as Camille, 36
  Rose, Professor, 184
  Russell, M.P., The Right Hon. Lord John, 57
  Sabine, Colonel, 184
  Sa Da Bandeira, Viscount, 389
  Saldanha, the Duque de, 389
  Schönbein, Professor, 184
  Scoresby, Dr., 184
  Scott, Sir Walter, Colossal Statue of, 113
  Scott, W., 204
  Schamil, the Circassian Chief, 132
  Soondur Singh, the Killadar of Kangra, 117
  Southampton, The Mayor of, 186
  Stevelly, Dr., 184
  Svanberg, Professor, 184
  Sykes, Colonel, 186
  Taylor, General, 316
  Taylor, Dr. Cooke, 136
  Taylor, John, F.R.S., 184
  Thillon, Madame Anna, 61
  Tindal, The Late Sir Nicholas C., Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, 37
  Umkei, 81
  Wales, His Royal Highness the Prince of, 312
  Wartmann, Professor, 184
  Wetherell, The Late Sir Charles, 125
  Wheatstone, Professor, 184
  Whewell, Dr., 184
  Williams, The Late Mr. Justice, 208
  Williams, Esq., M.P., William, 45
  Wood, The Right Hon. Charles, 57
  Wurtemburg, Olga, the Princess Royal of, 88
  Yarborough, The Late Earl of, 196
Portsmouth, New Fortifications at, 4; Bust of Charles the First at, 4; The Queen Landing at King's Stairs, 353
Portugal—Fort St. Julian on the Tagus, Santarem on do., 324
Posy, A, "Stocks and Wild Sweet William," 371
Potato Murrain, Representations of the Progress of the, 133
Pottinger and the Cyclops Steamers Stranded in Thorness Bay, Cowes, Isle of Wight, 300
Printing Machine, The Patent, with Four Cylinders, for Working THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 336

QUEBEC, Ground Plan of the St. Louis Theatre, Destroyed by Fire, 35; The Burning, 36
Queen, The, Her Most Gracious Majesty Victoria Alexandrina—Her Majesty and her Ministers in Council, 24
Queen, The—Arundel Castle, Her Majesty's Visit and Progress to, 353, 356, 357, 360, 361
Queen, The—Cassiobury, Her Majesty's Visit to, The Cassio Gate, Cassiobury House, Swiss Cottage, Cassiobury Park, 264
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Visit to Cornwall Plas House, 177; Pendennis Castle, The Royal Yachts off, The Fairy in the River Fal, 180; The Royal Yachts off St. Michael's Mount, Restormel Castle, 181
Queen, The—Her Majesty's Cruise, Her Majesty's Yacht off the St. Michael's Mount, H. R. H. Prince Albert landing at Penzance, The Royal Yacht passing the Longships Lighthouse, Land's End, 176
Queen, The—Hatfield, Her Majesty's Visit and Progress, to 257, 265, 280, 281,
Queen's Stag Hounds—Her Majesty, The Meet, Aylesbury Vale, Going to the Meet, The Start, Enjoying the Sport, on the Horns of a Dilemma, A Tail-piece, 364, 365
Queen Victoria Yacht, State Cabin of the, built for the Emperor of Russia, 141

RAILWAY TRAINS—Tracts for the, 43, 74, 138, 170, 208, 235, 259, 298
Ravensworth Castle, View of, 45
Reynolds's Improved Patent Safety Cab, 240
Richmond Palace, Remains of, 213
Ripon Steamer—The Boatswain Making Fast the Rudder, 285
"Robert le Diable," Scene from, by the Brussels Company, 17
Royal Agricultural Society of England—Meeting at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Mr. Hall's Farm, The Show Yards upon the Moor, Newcastle, 25; Great Pavilion Cattle Show, Plan of Horticultural Society's Tent, The Newcastle and Northumberland Horticultural Society's Flower Show, 44; Prize Implements, Garrett's Patent Four Horse Bolting Thrashing Machine, Coleman's Expanding Harrow, Crosskill's Cart, Hornby's Winnowing Machine, Stratton's Norwegian Harrow, &c., Garrett's Patent Hand Pipe and Tile Machine, 48
Royal Exchange, The Memorial to the late Mr. Lydekker, at the, 208
Royal Thames Yacht Club. The Secret, 29

SADLER'S WELLS THEATRE, New Entrance, 53
St. John the Evangelist, New Church, Charlotte-street, 48
Sangar, the Rev. B. C., Silver Inkstand Presented to, 253
Santarem, The Valley and Heights of, 389
Scott Monument at Edinburgh, Inauguration of the, 125
Season, (1846), The End of the: Off to Paris, 145; Landing at Boulogne, Luggage Porters, Courier and Travelling Carriage, The Femme de Chambre, 152; Viewing the Column at Boulogne, Visit to the Church, 153; Changing Horses, Parisian Café, 160
Shakspeare's Birth Place, and the Room in which he was born, Stratford-upon-Avon, 316
Shannon Steamer on Fire at Plymouth, 381
Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Commencement of, The Wheelbarrow and Spade, 271, Cutting the first Sod, Collation in Cutler's Hall, Sheffield, 272
Sidon, Sir Charles Napier's Steam-ship, the, 49
Sion House, The Duchess of Northumberland's Fête at, 5
Smithfield Club Cattle, Arrival of Fat Sheep at the Bazaar, 369; Arrival of Fat Cattle at the Bazaar, 376; Agricultural Implements at: Gillett's Improved Chaff-cutter, Horse Dibbling Machine, Richmond's Vertical Dash Churn and Improved Portable Cooling Apparatus, Vingo's Seed Depositor, Farmer's Mill, Smith's Double-action Hay-maker, Coleman's Patent Subsoil Harrow, Ainslie's Patent Clay Mill, Improved Drill for General Purposes, Hall's Brick-making Machine, Smith and Co.'s Improved Lever Cultivator, 384; Prize Oxen, &c—Earl of Warwick's Hereford Ox, Prince Albert's Highland Scot, Mr. Trinder's Steer and Short-horned Heifer, Lord Southampton's Hereford Ox, 376
Smoking Saloon on the Eastern Counties Railway, Interior and Exterior of, 173, 174
Southampton Royal Southern Yacht Club-house, 96
South-Eastern Railway, Margate and Ramsgate Branch—Opening of the: The Directors passing the Marine Parade, 368
South Foreland, New Dioptric Lighthouse on the, 251; The Upper South Foreland Lighthouse, 252; South Foreland, with the Upper and Lower Lights, 252
South Milford, Yorkshire, New Church of St. Mary the Virgin, 368
Spanish Marriages, Fêtes, &c. (See Madrid)
Stag Hounds (See Queen's, The, Stag Hounds)
Stephenson's Iron Tunnel Railway Britannia, over the Menai Straits, 197
Stephenson's Iron Tunnel Railway Bridge, Conway, 197
Storm of First August—Sewer at Blackfriars Bridge, Brook Hill, London from Blackheath, Houses in Middle Row, Holborn, 85
Stourbridge Cricket Club—Testimonia to Mr. Rufford, 349
Stratford Jubilee Cup, 29
Summer, Drawn by Harvey, 8
Swales, Col., of the Royal Marines Funeral of, at Portsmouth, Grand Military Procession, &c., 400

TAGLIONI TESTIMONIAL, The, 189
Temperance Tower at Mountpatrick, near Cork—Opening of the—Principal Apartment in the Tower, 328
Temperance—Portraits from the World's Temperance Convention, at Covent Garden, 109
Thames Grand Regatta—Scullers' Match—Regatta Fair at Putney, The Gold Challenge and the Silver Challenge Cups, The Tradesmen's Plate, 9
Thames, The Lord Mayor's View of the, 100. (See Lord Mayor's View, &c.)
Theatrical Portraits (See Portraits)
Third Regiment (Buffs) Marching through the City—Accident on Blackfriars Bridge, 256
Thirteenth Light Infantry—Tabl to the Memory of the Heroes of Jellalabad, Ghuznee, and Cabul, 228
Thirteenth Regiment, His Royal Highness Prince Albert presenting the New Colours to the, 124
Thirty-first Regiment—Return of the from India, Landing at the Ordnance Wharf, Gravesend, Indian Colours taken at Alliwal, and at Ferozeshah, Colours of the 31st Regiment, 388
The Times Testimonial Tablet, Roya Exchange Vestibule, 141
Tobasco, River and City, Plan of, 386
Tunis, The Bey of, Arrival at the Palace D'Elysée Bourbon, 352
Twickenham Trinity Church, 128
Tynemouth Priory, near Newcastle, 37

VERRIER'S NEW PLANET, 215, 230
Victoria and Albert Royal Yacht, off the Needles, Isle of Wight, 129

"WAGS OF WAPPING," Scene from the New Ballet of the, 325
Wastdale Head, Cumberland, Chapel near, 349
Wellington Statue—Mr. Wyatt's Atelier and Foundry, 21; the Great Statue, as it would appear from the Green Park, Piccadilly, and also from Constitution Hill, 105, Colossal Statue by M. C. Wyatt, Esq., 209; Ditto, at Mr. Wyatt's House, 213; Front of the Carriage, 213; Side of Ditto, 214; Grand Procession of the Statue (Park-lane), 216; Arrival at the Arch, 217; Raising the Statue, 224; Statue and Arch, 329
Western Royal Yacht Club Regatta—The Grand Turk and the Lily of Devon in Mount's Bay, 212
Westminster Bridge—Alcove, Watch-house, 165
Whitehall—The New Façade of the Privy Council Office, 261
Whittington Club, 371
Winchester House, Southwark, The Remains of, 269
Windsor Castle—The Round Tower, The Waterloo Chamber, 201; Great Quadrangular Presence Chamber (State Ball Room), 237; The Long Walk, 313; The Crimson Drawing-Room, 313; Windsor Great Park, Her Majesty's Schools in, 404
Woollett, the Engraver, Tomb of, in Old St. Pancras Churchyard, 140
Woolwich Common, Grand Artillery Review on—Shell Practice at the Flag Staff, Horse Artillery and Field Batteries, Ibrahim Pacha and Staff, 32
Worcester Steeple Chase—the Water Leap, 317
Wurtemberg, The Princess Royal of—Cabriolet, Phaeton, and Barouche for 84; Portrait of her Highness, 88

YORK—Ouse Bridge, Multangular Tower, Micklegate Bar, View from the Walls of York, 64

THE GETTY CENTER LIBRARY

INDEX.

ALBERT, His Royal Highness Prince—His Royal Highness' Visit to Liverpool, 65, 68, 72, 89, 91
Alsager, Mr., The Suicide of (the Official Assignee), 323, 330
American Navy, Execution of a British Seaman in the, 331
Andover Union—Report of the Select Committee, 115
Archæological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland, 64, 75, 107
Army, The, and the Duke, 97; The "Guards" and the "Line," 326; Neglect of the Comforts and Safety of the Men of the, 70
Austria and Cracow, 407

BATHS and Washhouses for the Labouring Classes, Opening of, 82, 135, 151
Beadon's Portable Life Boats and Life Rafts for Ships, 96
Bearwood, Rural Fête given by John Walter, Esq., at, 222
Bentinck, Lord George, Political Influence, &c., of, 134; Dinner to, at King's Lynn, Observations on the, 86
Bequests to a Dog and two Cats, 162
Berwick Bank Robbery, Committal, &c., of Mrs. Thompson, 147
Birmingham Musical Festival, 78
Births, 15, 27, 47, 62, 78, 94, 112, 127, 143, 159, 170, 175, 191, 207, 223, 238, 254, 270, 287, 303, 318, 334, 347, 366, 379, 395, 414
Bishop, Madame Anna, Début of, 234
Bode, The Inquest on the late Baron de, 231
Borneo, Operations in, 211
Brevet, The, 310, 311, 314
Bridewell, Old Palace, Discovery of a Portion of the, 166
Brighton, Violent Gale at, 39

CABINET MINISTERS, Her Majesty's—Particulars and Portraits of, 58, 59
Californian Legion, The, 164
Cattle Show of the Smithfield Club, 369, 375
Charles the First, Bust of, at Portsmouth, 4
Chili, Attempted Revolution in, 19
Christmas in Two Centuries, 401
Christmas in Germany, &c., 406
Circassia, The War in, 131
City Improvements Proposed, 166
Clarkson, The Late Thomas, Narrative, &c., respecting, 227
Cobden, Esq., M.P., Richard—Position of, Testimonial and Banquets to, &c., 19, 22, 119, 139, 147, 198
Cologne, The Riots, &c. at, 113, 119
Combination, 241
Corn—Release of Bonded Corn at Liverpool, under the New Act, 6
Courage of a Female Servant, 211
Coutts, Singular Fraud upon Messrs., 139
Cracow, Political Condition of the State of, &c., 150, 326, 340
Croydon Railway Terminus, Fire at the, 203

DAGENHAM, Essex, Murder of a Policeman at, 18, 211
Deaths, 15, 27, 47, 62, 78, 94, 112, 127, 143, 159, 170, 175, 191, 207, 223, 238, 254, 270, 287, 303, 318, 334, 347, 366, 379, 395, 414
Derby Election, 147
Desecration of a Churchyard, 167, 191
Design, Government School of, 128, 182
Don Carlos, The Escape of, 182, 198
Dublin and Cashel Railway, 94
"Duke," The, in the West, 163
Dulwich, Suspicious Death at, 359
Dunn, Mr., the Barrister, and Miss Burdett Coutts, 106
Dwarkanauth Tagore, Funeral of the late, 94

EARTHQUAKE in Wales, 392
East Lancashire Railway, Opening of the, 222
Elections—The Official Remarks thereon, 17
Electric Phenomenon—Marseilles and Avignon Railway, 3
Ellman, Mr., the Agriculturist, 28
English Taste and Science, 162
Euphonia, or The Speaking Automaton, 59, 96

FAMINE Apprehended—Form of Prayer, 311
Farmery, New, in Berkshire, 27
Ferrand, Esq., M.P., W. B., Criminal Information against, 302
Fictions of Diplomacy, 225
Flixton Hall, Suffolk, 404
Flogging in the Army, 67; Alleged Death from (Case of Frederick White), 39, 55, 70, 87
Flores, General, Expedition of, 368
Food Supplies for Ireland, &c., 278
Foreign Loans, The System of, 166

GARRICK THEATRE Destroyed by Fire, 295
Glasgow University, Election of Lord Rector of, 322
Gordon, R.N., The Hon. Capt., Court Martial on, 134
Gossip on Many Topics, 90, 107, 123, 154, 163, 179, 202, 218, 234, 247
Great Britain, Steam Ship, Ashore in Dundrum Bay, 198, 211, 246, 263, 268, 275, 316
Guardians and Juries, 353
Guildhall Coffee House, A Woman Murdered at the—Conviction of John Vincent Smith, 126, 135, 147

HAIR-CUTTING Gratis, 362
Haydon, The Late Mr. B. R., 11, 38, 94, 126
Health of Towns, 305
Helena, The Christening of Her Royal Highness the Princess, 79
Hill, Mr. Rowland, Appointment of, 363
Hood, Thomas, Death of the Widow of, 380
Hull and Midlington Railway, Opening of the, 227
Hydro-Electric Machine, Experiments with the, 155

IBRAHIM PACHA, 6, 17, 18, 33, 38,
Incendiarism, 370
Indian Matters, 294
Ireland, Conduct of the New Ministry in respect to, 102; Government plan for the relief of distress in, 119; Withdrawal of the Arms Bill for, 118; The Famine in: inertness of the Government, 230; Lamentable condition of the country, 379; Murders and outrages in—food riots, &c., 15, 182, 195, 215, 227, 262, 286, 293
Irvine Archery Meeting, 165
Isle of Wight Regattas—Prince Albert's Cup, 150

KAFFIR WAR, 81, 82, 115, 211, 243, 257, 274, 340

LAMBETH: Dreadful fire, with loss of life, 363
Leipsic, Destructive Fire at, 164
Lewes and Hastings Railway, Opening of the, 15
London and Richmond Railway, 93
London Street Architecture, 128
Lord Mayor, The: Election of, 219, 226
Louis Buonaparte, ex-King of Holland, Will of, 110
Louis Philippe, Attempt to assassinate his Majesty, 71, 80, 88, 130; and Mr. Cobden, 126

MACLEAN, M.P., Donald, The Bankruptcy of, 130, 246
Manchester Public Parks, 12, 114
Marriages, 15, 27, 47, 62, 78, 94, 112, 127, 143, 159, 170, 175, 191, 207, 223, 238, 254, 270, 287, 303, 318, 334, 347, 366, 379, 395, 414
Merit and Reward, 210
Mexican Bonds, 246
Mexican War, 215
Mexico and the United States, 358; Review of political aspect of the affairs of, &c., 38
Ministry, The—The Resignation of: Remarks on, 1; Sir Robert Peel's Speech on Leaving Office, 2
Ministry, The New Whig, 6, 23
Murder Committed nerly Four Years since, Remarkable Conviction for a, 39

NAPOLEON COLUMN, at Boulogne, 179
National Gallery, 392
National Sports, 29, 43, 62, 75, 95, 111, 122, 136, 158, 163, 183, 199, 204, 222, 238, 243, 266, 275, 291, 307, 330, 365, 379, 398, 414
New York, Great Meeting at, 19, 20
New Zealand, 87
Niger Steam Sloop, Launch of the, 331
Nooks and Corners of Old England, 37, 208, 213, 269, 316, 325
North Western Railway, Serious Affray on the, 130
Norwegian Sea Serpent, 387
Nottingham and Lincoln Railway, Opening of the, 94

OBITUARY of Eminent Persons Recently Deceased:—
Abdy, Esq., Edward Strutt, 274
Allen, Viscount, 251
Athol, The Duke of, 203
Baring, Lady, 67
Barlow, Bart., Sir George Hilaro, 41
Barneby, Esq., M.P., John, 363
Beauclerk, G.C.B., G.C.H., Admiral Lord Amelius, 371, 387
Blackett, Lady, 15
Bloomfield, Lord, 123
Bond, Wm., Esq., 253
Bourmont, The Marshal, 299
Campbell, Bart., Sir Archibald, 6
Cathcart, Lady Augusta Sophia,
Clarkson, Thomas, Memoir of the late, 227
Colquhoun, Lady of Luss, 274
Davies, M.P., Colonel T. H. H., 387
Dealtry, Esq., of Lofthouse Hall, county York, Benjamin, 259
De Bode, The Baron, 227
Deshayes, Monsieur, 411
D'Harcourt, La Marquise, 15
Dickenson, Lieut.-General, 381
Dilkes, C. B., Captain Charles, 227
Duperre, Admiral, 316
Dwarkanauth Tagore, 93
Edmonstone, Major Charles Henry, 331
Edwards, Esq., George Niger, 347
Edwin, K.C., Lieut.-Colonel Fountain, 386
Fetherstonhaugh, Bart., Sir Henry, 299
Fox, The Hon. Henry, 316
Goold, Thos., Esq., Q.C., 51
Grant, Bart., Sir George Macpherson, of Ballindalloch, 363
Grenville, The Rt. Hon. Thomas, 411
Grimston, The Hon. Harriot, 259
Hamilton, Lady Anne, 251
Handley, H., Esq., M.P., 15
Hesse Homburg, The Landgrave of, 411
Hunter, General Sir Martin, 387
Huntingdon, The Dowager Countess of, 274
Isham, Bart., Sir Justinian Vere, 155
Jouy, M., 179
Kildare, The Lord Bishop of, 107
Kilkenny, The Earl of, 51
Lake, Bart., Sir James Samuel, 387
Lee, Esq., Valentine, 251
Lipscombe, M.D., George, 331
Liverpool, The Countess Dowager of 259
Logier, Jno. Bernard, the celebrated Musician, 58
Louis Bonaparte, 93
Macirone, Colonel, 71
Mahon, Lieut.-Colonel, 387
Manners, Lady Jane, 299
Maria Michaelowna, the Grand Duchess of Russia, 363
Mawe, Mrs. Sarah, 179
Metcalfe, Lord, 171
Morgan, Bart., Sir Charles Gould, 378
Mount Sandford, Lord, 218
M'Tear, The Rev. James, 411
Murray, Sir George, 75
Muskerry, Lady, 218
Ottley, Esq., Warner, 378
Pennant, Lady Emma, 378
Penrice, Esq., Thomas, 347
Radzivill, Prince, 316
Rohan, Rochefort, The Prince De, 125
Rudge, Esq., Edward, 179
Russell, Lord William, 75
Rycroft, Bart., Sir Henry, 227, 251
St. Asaph, The Bishop of, 179
Scott, The Roman Catholic Bishop, 378
Shuckburgh, Lady Anna Maria, 316
Somerset, Lord John, 227
Stewart, M.P., P. M., Esq., 299
Stourton, Lord, 381, 387
Strathmore, The Earl of, 131
Taylor, Sir Brook, G.C.H., 259
Templetown, Lord, 203
Thomond, K.P., The Marquis of, 131
Tindal, The Chief Justice, 19
Toker, Capt., R.N., 15
Turner, Bart., of Ambrosden, Sir Edward George Thomas Page, 259
Vere, Bart., Sir Aubrey De, 46
Wakefield, Q.C., Sudden Death of Mr., 50
Waldegrave, The Earl of, 227
Ward, Esq., Robert Plumer, 123
Westminster, The Dowager Marchioness of, 363
Wetherell, Sir Charles, 146
Williams, Mr. Justice, 208
Winchester, Lieut.-Col., K.H., 93
Winterton, Dowager Countess of, 274
Wolseley, Bart., Sir Charles, 227
Wombwell, Bart., Sir George, 299
Wulff, Lieutenant-General, 125
Yarborough, The Earl of, 190, 195
Oregon Question, Amicable Settlement of the, 7, 23

PAINTED GLASS, 107
Parliamentary Portraits, 45, 53
Parliament, The Prorogation of, 135
Past and Present, 289
Peninsular Medal, The, 385
Police Magistrates' decisions, &c, 374
Pope Pius IX, 24, 82, 278
Portsmouth, New Fortifications at, 4
Portugal, Insurrection in, 285, 324, 340, 389
Postage Stamped Envelopes, Cost of producing, 83
Post Office Directory, for 1846, The Romance of the, 346
Potato Murrain, 133
Preston, Viscount, The old Scotch title of, 54
Protection Societies, Objects &c. of, Considered, 198
Public Income and Expenditure, 50

QUEBEC, Calamitous fires and loss of life at, 23, 35
Queen, The, Arundel Castle, Her Majesty's Visit to, 356, 360; Her Majesty's Cruise, 130; Guernsey, Visit of her Majesty to, 130, 149; Jersey, Her Majesty's Visit to, 168
Queen's College, Oxford, Bringing in the Boar's Head at Christmas, 407

RAILWAY Accidents, Frequency of, on the Eastern Counties line, 54
Railway Accidents, 18, 35, 39, 55, 70, 99, 114, 119, 142, 147, 163, 183, 191, 199, 211, 231, 254, 302, 359, 386, 403, 407
Railway Board, Institution of a new one, 118
Railway Commission and the 30th of Nov., 358
Railway Companies, Powers of, 94
Railway Litigation, 26
Railway Metropolis Termini, 219
Red Sea, Volcano in the, 203
Retreats for decayed members of different trades, Importance of providing, 54
Richardson, Capt. William, late Chairman of the Tenbury, Worcester, and Ludlow Railway Company, case of, 146, 158, 166, 199
Richmond Railway, Opening of the, 59
Rifle Ball—Mr. Lancaster, Jun.'s Experiments at Woolwich, 386
Royal Alliances, 161
Royal Agricultural Society of England, Great Meetings of the, &c., 25, 43, 48
Royal Exchange, 18
Russell, Lord John, Re-election of, for London, 19

St. ALBAN'S Election, Return of Mr. B. B. Cabbell, 107
St. Pancras Workhouse, Treatment of Paupers in, 167; Charges against the Authorities of, 199, 219, 359
Sanatory Condition of the people, 135
Scientific Associations, 177
Scott Monument, Inauguration of the, 50
Season, the End of the, 145, 151, 160
Session, The Past, 129
Shakspeare, Sale of a Supposed Autograph of, 373
Silver from Lead, Extracting of, 179
Smithfield Club Cattle Show, 369, 375
Solomon outdone, 363
Southampton Royal Southern Yacht Club House, Opening of the, 95
Spain and the Carlists, 193
Spanish Marriages, Observations, &c., on the, 215, 232, 246, 259
Steam Navigation Act, 164
Stephenson's Iron Tunnel Railway Bridges, 198
Storm in and around the Metropolis, on August 1, 1846, 85
Sugar Duties Bill, the Division on the, 66
Sugar Question, Commentary on the, 49
Swimming Experiment on the Thames, 323

TARIFF, The Custom House System, 262
Taxation, the difficulty of Modifying our System of, 342
Temperance Convention, 108
Thames, Plan for Lighting the River, 198
Thunder Storm in the Metropolis, 166
"Times" Testimonial in the Royal Exchange, Opening of the, 119

VAN AMBURGH, the Beast Tamer Reported Death of, 91
Verrier's Planet, 266
Victoria Park, 35
Vienna, Treaty of, 337
Votes of Thanks, &c., carried to excess, 390

WADE, COLONEL, Sudden Death of, 370
Warner's, Captain, Long Range, Failure of, 355
Waterloo-road, Illicit Distillery under, 402
Wellington Great Statue, 21, 67, 105, 166, 190, 213, 224, 231, 310, 330
Westminster, The New Palace at, Report of the Fine Art Commission, 219
Westminster Bridge, 67, 135, 151, 182, 395; Re-opening of, 407
Wetherell, Memoir of the late Sir Charles, 125
Whale Caught in the Thames, 190
White, Frederick, Case of, (See "Flogging"
Windsor, Poor of, Her Majesty's New Year's Gifts to, 378
Woburn Abbey, Theatricals, 407

YARBOROUGH, The Funeral of the late Earl of, 240

CHRONOLOGY OF REMARKABLE EVENTS.

JUNE TO DECEMBER, 1846.

JUNE.

25.—The severest earthquake ever known, at Smyrna.

26.—Extreme cold at Stockholm: vegetables perished.

27.—The Royal Assent given by Commission to the Corn Bill.—Intelligence of the Coronation of Pope Pius IX., at Rome, on the 21st.—Three men killed on the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway works.—Vesuvius in terrific eruption.

28.—Opening of the Lewes and Hastings Railway.

29.—Resignation of the Peel Ministry announced in both Houses of Parliament.—The New Corn Bill came into operation: at Liverpool, alone, upwards of 200,000 quarters of Bonded Corn released.—Amicable Settlement of the Oregon Question announced by Sir R. Peel, in the House of Commons.—Two persons killed at the Balcombe Station on the London and Brighton Railway.

30.—Opening of the Leeds and Bradford Railway.—A police constable murdered at Dagenham, in Essex.—Intelligence of hostilities at the Cape of Good Hope between the colonists and Kaffirs.—News of the continued eruption of Mount Hecla (April 15.)—Miguelite movement in Lisbon.

JULY.

1.—Account received of the almost entire destruction of St. John's, Newfoundland, by fire, on June 9.—Ibrahim Pacha, on a visit to the metropolis.—Rejoicings frequent throughout the country on the passing of the Corn Bill.—Suicide of two brothers at Nottingham.—The New Pope (Pius IX.) walked through the streets of Rome, and otherwise made himself very popular.

2.—Great fire at Soham, Cambridgeshire—£5000 damage.—Meeting of the General Council of the Anti-Corn-Law League at Manchester, when it was resolved to suspend active operations. A public meeting also held to raise a fund to indemnify Mr. Cobden, M.P.

3.—A new Administration formed by Lord John Russell.—Grand Banquet to Ibrahim Pacha, at the Reform Club, Pall Mall.—The New American Tariff passed the House of Representatives by 114 to 95.

4.—The Stratford Jubilee Cup sold by auction for £40 8s. 6d.—Treaty of Commerce signed between Holland and Belgium.—Cost of the Commission appointed by Government to inquire into the potato disease, £19,000.

5.—Balances in the Exchequer, £7,351,788 15s. 6¾d.: on July 5, 1845, £6,641,519 1s. 10¾d.—The thermometer at 97¼ in Paris.—Terrific storm in Somerset and Devon, and in London.—Revenue return: £575,599 increase on the quarter; total revenue of the year, £50,056,083.—Treaty of Reciprocity ratified between England and Prussia, against literary piracy.

6.—Lord Cottenham took his seat as Lord Chancellor.—Death of Lord Chief Justice Tindal, aged 70.—News of great meetings in the United States, on the war with Mexico; and of an attempted revolution in Chili.—The New Whig Ministry received their seals of office.—Renewal of the Repeal agitation by Mr. O'Connell.—Monterey, in Mexico, captured by the Americans.—The English fleet, under Sir T. Cochrane, attacked Borneo.

7.—News of the butchery of 500 Arabs by the French troops in Algeria.—News of repeated fires in Trinidad, and an earthquake in Grenada.—News of the blockade by the Americans of the Mexican ports on the Atlantic.—The Foundation Festival of a Society in London for rescuing alleged lunatics from unjust confinement.—The Cobden Testimonial Fund amounted to £25,000.—Intelligence of the burning of the St. Louis Theatre at Quebec, on June 12; forty-five persons burnt.—Marriage of the Grand Duchess Olga of Russia to the Prince Royal of Wurtemburg.

8.—Lord John Russell re-elected M.P. for the City of London.—A penny subscription opened in the metropolis for a testimonial to Sir R. Peel for his advocacy of Free-Trade measures.—The new Whig Ministry announced.—News of incendiary fires throughout Hungary; of a tremendous hurricane in Russia; and of the wilful burning of a village near Vienna, in an election feud.—Fatal accident on the Great Northern Railway of France; fourteen persons killed.—Rosenberg, near Breslau, partly destroyed by incendiaries.—Serious riots at Canton between the Chinese and the British.

9.—Forty-three persons drowned in the East Wheal Rose lead mine, near Truro, by the rush of water during a storm.—News of continued hostilities in Kaffirland.—Masonic Festival at Bolton, on Lord Ellesmere's election as Grand Master.

13.—The new Whig Ministry took their seats in both Houses of Parliament.—Mdlle. Rachel first appeared at the St. James's Theatre.—Great Meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society at Newcastle-upon Tyne.—The Earl of Besborough, the New Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, arrived in Dublin.—Mont Blanc ascended by Count de Bonilli.

14.—Several persons convicted at Paris, of aiding the escape of Prince Louis Napoleon from Ham.—News to May 16, of continued hostilities between the Cape Colonists and the Kaffirs.—News of conflicts between the settlers and natives in New Zealand.—Two men convicted at the Oxford Assizes for a murder committed in 1842.

15.—Inquest at Hounslow on a soldier alleged to have died from flogging. Verdict, on Aug. 1, "Died from the effects of a severe and cruel flogging."—The Brussels Opera Company appeared at Drury Lane Theatre.

17.—The Chevalier Abbé Stewart assassinated between Ancona and Singaglia, in the Papal States.

18.—A portion of the Orleans and Vizeron Railway sunk; as did also a tunnel on the Amiens and Boulogne Line.—Accident on the Eastern Counties Railway; twenty persons injured.—Census taken of Paris; population, including suburbs, 1,200,000.

20.—Lord John Russell submitted to Parliament his new plan for the regulation of the Sugar Duties.—Treaty of Navigation between Austria and Russia.

21.—News of Revolution in Mexico.—Intelligence of 213 persons killed and wounded by the blowing down of some barracks at Loodianah, on May 21.—Third Annual Meeting of the Archæological Institute, at York.—M. Massien, the celebrated deaf and dumb professor, died at Lille.

22.—Opening of the London and Richmond Railway.—The cotton-spinning factory of Messrs. Orr and Underwood, Paisley, destroyed by fire; estimated damages, £23,000.—Three men killed, and several others injured by lightning, on the Munich and Augsburg Railway.—Collision between soldiers and the inhabitants of Cerene, in the Romagna; several persons killed.

24.—Oppressive interference with the costume of the Polish Jews, by a Russian ukase.

25.—Political amnesty by Pius IX., setting 2000 persons free.—Louis Bonaparte, Count of St. Leu, and ex-King of Holland, died of apoplexy at Leghorn, in his 68th year.—Christening of the Princess Augusta Helena Victoria, third daughter of her Majesty and Prince Albert.

28.—News of continued hostilities between the colonists and natives of Kaffirland. The New Sugar Duties Bill passed in the House of Commons, by 265 to 135.—Grapes ripe in France.—Death of Sir George Murray, aged 74.

29.—Anniversary of the Kilwinning Papingo, celebrated with great éclat.—Lall Sing's expedition against the Dewan of Mooltan, unsuccesful.—Another (the seventh) diabolical attempt made on the life of King Louis Philippe, by one Joseph Henri, who was instantly arrested.—A Comet discovered by Mr. Hind at Mr. Bishop's Observatory, Regent's Park.—Verdict of manslaughter returned by a Coroner's jury against an engine-driver on the Eastern Counties Railway.—Violent shocks of earthquake at Ems, Frankfort, and Cologne—Mr. and Mrs. Cobden left Brighton for France.

30, 31.—Prince Albert visited Liverpool to found "the Sailor's Home:" grand procession and great rejoicing.—The Goodwood Cup won by Grimston.—Vera Cruz declared in favour of Santa Anna.

AUGUST.

1.—Death of Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore, in his 51st year.—Tremendous storm in London and its environs, and various parts of the country; damages to Palaces alone, £4500.—Faber's Speaking Automaton exhibited in London.—The snow melted on the summit of Mont Blanc.

2.—Alarming religious disturbances in Madeira: Dr. Kalley's books and papers burnt by the mob.

3.—Baths and Wash-houses for the Labouring Classes opened at George-street, Euston-square.—Opening of the Nottingham and Lincoln Railway.—The British Archæological Association met at Gloucester.

4.—To this date, 3,000,000 dollars received from the Chinese Government.—Grand Protectionist Banquet to Lord George Bentinck, at Lynn.—Corporal punishment in the Danish army almost prohibited.—Serious riots at Cologne.

5.—The Lord Mayor commenced his view of the Thames from Kew to Oxford, which terminated on the 8th.—Letters of this date mention 10,000 persons to have been cut off by cholera at Kurrachee, between the 14th and 30th of June.

7.—Great Temperance Convention in Covent Garden Theatre.—Continued hostilities at the Cape.

8.—The Sugar Duties Bill read a third time and passed in the House of Commons.—General failure of the potato crop in Ireland.—Two men killed by lightning at Belfast.—Several spots observed upon the sun: one 25,000 miles diameter.

10.—News of the defeat of the French troops at Tahiti.—A negro stated, in the Brazil journals, to have found in Bahia, a diamond worth £45,000.—Attack of Arabs on grounds near Aden; repulsed with slaughter.

11.—The elections terminated in France; majority for Ministers, 121.—News received from India of the surrender of the Fort Kote Kangra, on May 28.—The Duke of Wellington declared in the House of Lords that he hoped to live to see military flogging abolished.—The Cambria made the passage from Halifax, U. S., to Liverpool in nine days.—A speed of 75 miles per hour attained on the London and Croydon Atmospheric Railway.

13.—The Castle of Walga, near Dembetza, plundered by a band of 200 peasants.—The rich Convent of Servites, near Prague, about this date, entirely destroyed by fire.

14.—A volcano discovered on Saddle Island, in the Red Sea.—Parliament voted £20,000, towards the enlargement of Buckingham Palace.—Violent earthquake at Leghorn, 59 persons killed.—Palestine in a state of famine, by the rivers and streams being dried up.—Accounts in the Berlin papers of the recent ascent of Mr. Green, Jun., in a new balloon there; 40,000 persons present.

15.—A woman killed by her fellow-servant at the Guildhall Coffee-house.—The Scott Monument, at Edinburgh, inaugurated with great ceremony, this being the anniversary of the poet's birthday.—A conspiracy to overthrow the Ministry discovered and frustrated at Madrid.—Santa Anna arrived at Vera Cruz, from Havana.

17.—Death of Sir Charles Wetherell in his 77th year.—Shocks of earthquake at Macon and Lausanne.—The French Chambers opened by King Louis Philippe.—A large flight of locusts passed over Sunderland.—A League formed in the metropolis for the supression of Slavery.—The Sugar Duties Bill read a third time, and passed, in the House of Lords.—The Government Plan for the Relief of Distress in Ireland introduced in Parliament, by Lord J. Russell.

18.—The Queen and Prince Albert left the Isle of Wight on a cruise to the Western Coast, and returned on the 24th.

19.—News from the Cape of the defeat of the Kaffirs at Fish River, in June last.—Some persons poisoned in the metropolis, by eating the berries of the deadly nightshade.

20.—Terrific hurricane at Rugby: large trees uprooted.

21.—Five persons killed by the bursting of a steam-boat boiler above Leynora, U. S.

22.—A shopkeeper at Southampton fined £80, for having more gunpowder on his premises than the law permits.—Opening of the three Public Parks at Manchester.—The number of deaths by the late earthquake at Leghorn 70.

24.—The Marquis of Normanby, the newly-appointed Ambassador at the Court of the Tuileries, arrived at Paris.—The Birmingham Musical Festival commenced: brilliantly attended.—Total amount of capital authorised to be raised for Railways this session, upwards of £146,000,000.—The potato disease appeared at Havre.—Bishop Luscombe, Chaplain to the British Embassy at Paris, died at Lausanne.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert visited Guernsey.—Abd-el-Kader declared against the Emperor of Morocco.—Destructive fire in the Jewish quarter of Adrianople.

25.—Five men killed by the explosion of a powder-mill in Argyleshire.—The Potato Disease appeared in various parts of France.—The Paris Constitutionnel newspaper sold for 336,000f.—The Swiss Diet held at Zurich prohibited any further reception of the Jesuits.

26.—Frightful accounts of cholera following the use of diseased potatoes in Ireland.—The works of the Sala silver mines (Stockholm) destroyed by fire.

28.—Anniversary of the Irvine Archery Meeting.—Account of several engagements between the Russians and Circassians: Russian villages burnt, and 200 men killed, &c.

29.—Parliament prorogued by Royal Commission.—Col. Thornton, E.I.C.S., committed suicide at the Marylebone Police Station-house, where he was in custody on a charge of passing a forged bank-note.—Prince Albert's birthday celebrated at Osborne by an entertainment given to all the workmen in her Majesty's employ.—A wretch at Versailles suffocated his own father with the fumes of charcoal, to obtain 200f. in his possession.—First trip on the Rouen and Havre Railway.—Destructive fire in Leipzig.

30.—The Earl of Shrewsbury's Roman Catholic Church, at Cheadle, Stafford, consecrated with great splendour.

31.—The Bishop of Calcutta embarked at Portsmouth, on his return to his diocese.—The potato crop in Sweden attacked by disease.—Two persons killed by the fall of a chandelier at the Hamburg Theatre.

SEPTEMBER.

1.—The Queen and Prince Albert embarked at the Isle of Wight on a cruise to Jersey.—Grand Free-Trade Banquet given to Mr. Cobden, at Bordeaux.—Great excitement in Madrid, on account of the approaching marriages of the Queen and her sister: opposed by the Progesista party; resignation of Senor Isturitz.

2.—The Queen and Prince Albert visited Jersey, and were received with great enthusiasm.

3.—The Pope determined to commence a railway from Rome to Naples.—The Queen Dowager took possession of Cassiobury, Herts.—Disturbances at Ancona.

5.—A man committed for trial for murder by selling the poisonous berries of the deadly nightshade.—Death of Lord Metcalfe, aged sixty-two.—The Queen and Prince Albert visited St. Michael's Mount and Penzance.

6.—Eight men killed by fire-damp in a coal-mine near Charleroi.—Tumults in Gallicia and Cracow.—Severe shocks of earthquake at Trinidad, on the 6th and 13th.

7.—Three schoolboys drowned while bathing in the sea, at Middlethorpe, Lincolnshire.—The parapet of Westminster Bridge taken down, and horse traffic stopped.—Part of the old Palace of Bridewell discovered in Bride-lane.

8.—Splendid reception of the Pope at Rome; 100,000 persons present.—Trinity College, at Perth, founded.

9.—The British Association for the Advancement of Science met at Southampton; the meeting attended by Prince Albert.—Important news from the River Plate; a sharp attack by the Gorgon and Gassendi steamers on San Lorenzo.—The Musical Festival commenced at Hereford.—Tremendous storm at Bordeaux.

10.—Sir George Arthur, the ex-Governor, returned from Bombay.—News of the French garrison being driven out of Tahiti.—During the recent Session of Parliament the Royal Assent was given to 570 bills.—Miguelite movements in Portugal.—Death of the Earl of Yarborough, at Vigo.

11.—Great Free-Trade Meeting at Marseilles.—General Taylor reviewed his troops for his Mexican campaign.

12.—Extensive fire at Adrianople.—Distressing drought around Naples: water sold at the price of wine.—Two porters killed by the breaking of a crane at the Oxford Railway Station.—A new steam-yard commenced at Moricetown, Devonport.—Four men killed by the fall of a tunnel on the South Devon Railway.

13.—A steam-ship grounded in the river over the Thames Tunnel, and remained there till the tide flowed.

14.—The intended Royal Marriages announced to the Spanish Cortes.—The Eighth Italian Scientific Congress opened at Genoa.—Joseph Henri sentenced to the hulks at Toulon, for shooting at Louis Philippe.—Sudden death of Mr. Justice Williams.—The Count de Montemolin and Cabrera escaped from Bourges

15.—Professor Schönbein's Gun Cotton first publicly exhibited to the British Association at Southampton.—The Crown Hotel, near Berne, burnt; six inmates perished.

16.—Mr. Smith O'Brien, M.P., continued his Repeal agitation in Ireland.—A whale, 12 feet long, caught in the Thames, between Blackwall and Greenwich.—The Doncaster Great St. Leger won by Sir Tatton Sykes.

19.—The Count de Montemolin and Gen. Cabrera arrived in London.—The new Regency of Schleswig installed.—The brig Clifton, and six of her crew, lost on their voyage from Newcastle to London.

20.—Successful experiments with Schönbein and Boelcher's cotton powder at Mentz.—Destructive hurricane at Newfoundland.

21.—Severe distress and impending famine in Ireland.—Two men killed by a train on the Great Western Railway.

22.—Intelligence from New Zealand to April 25: continued hostilities of the colonists with the natives.—News from India: the north-west very unsettled.—The Great Britain steam-ship run ashore in Dundrum Bay, on the east coast of Ireland: 185 passengers on board.—Four Progresista journals seized at Madrid.

23. King Louis Philippe relinquished his proposed visit to England: the Montpensier marriage excited great interest at Paris and Madrid.—News from the Cape: the Kaffir war almost extinct.—The Testimonial Fund for Mr. Cobden amounted to nearly £80,000.—The South Sea Missionary ship, John Wesley, launched at Cowes.—The North Staffordshire Railway commenced at Stoke-upon-Trent.—The Bill charging with fraud and forgery, Captain Richardson, the railway director, ignored at the Central Criminal Court.—Great part of the Croydon Railway Station burnt.—A new planet discovered by Dr. Galle, at Berlin, from the calculations of Le Verrier.—A new comet discovered at Rome.

24.—The foundation-stone of the new church of St. Nicholai, at Hamburg, laid.—Scientific Congress at Frankfort.

25.—The Menai Tunnel Suspension Bridge commenced.—A schooner run into, and foundered in the Irish Channel; three only of the crew saved.—More than 8000 persons ruined by the late earthquakes in Tuscany.

26.—Death of Thomas Clarkson, the philanthropist.

27.—The English Fleet cruizing between Cape St. Vincent and Trafalgar.—Railway opened from Lucca to the Baths of Pisa.—News of the death of Count Louis Plater, one of the last companions in arms of Kosciusko.

28.—Death of the Earl of Waldegrave.—Terrific thunderstorm at Constantinople: several persons killed by lightning.—The Dukes d'Aumale and Montpensier left Paris for Madrid.—Six men killed by an explosion in a coal-pit at the Clyde Iron Works.—Nine persons killed by the fall of three arches on the Aberdeen Railway.—Riot and bloodshed at Dungarvan.

29.—The great Wellington Statue removed from Mr. Wyatt's foundry, with great ceremony, and raised the next day to the summit of the Green Park Arch.—The Marquis of Normanby protested to M. Guizot, against the marriage of the Duke de Montpensier with the Infanta of Spain.—Incendiary fires in Burgundy and other parts of France.—The Great Britain steam-ship still ashore in Dundrum Bay.

30.—A woman and child murdered, and suicide of the murderer, at Eltham, Kent.—Alarming provision riots in Paris.—Mr. Smith O'Brien restored to the Commission of the Peace for Limerick.—The Chartist agitation revived in London.—The Prince de Joinville and his fleet returned to Toulon from the Mediterranean.—Great preparations for the Royal marriages at Madrid: 6000 persons employed.—The Chesterford and Newmarket Railway commenced.—Western Greece in an unsettled state, under Coletti's administration.—Terrific tempest in Sicily; eight lives lost.

OCTOBER.

2.—Death of the Baron de Bode.—The Montreal papers stated seventeen persons to have been drowned near Cedar Island.

3.—The Dukes of Montpensier and Aumale entered Spain.—Madame Anna Bishop made her début at the opening of Drury-Lane Theatre.—Naples and other parts of the territory visited by dreadful storms; seven villages destroyed by inundations near Messina, and fifteen persons killed.—Treaty of navigation ratified between Austria and Naples.

4.—Fatal conflict between the police, soldiers, and the people, at Castleconnell; three lives lost.—The higher Pyrenees of Pau entirely covered with snow.—Reschid Pacha appointed Grand Vizier at Constantinople.—Cost of the Poor Law Commission, 1846-47, £59,200.—The King of Prussia gave £120,000 for forming a vast winter garden in Berlin.—Candia declared independent by the Pacha.

5.—Opening of the Hull and Bridlington Railway.—Increase upon the Quarter's Revenue, £539,064.

6.—The Tring, Reading, and Basingstoke Railway Company declared bankrupt.—News from the Cape: defeat of the Kaffirs by the Governor.—Unfavourable accounts from Scinde: famine and pestilence.—The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland authorised several great public works, for the employment of the people.—Ald. Sir G. Carroll elected Lord Mayor; Ald. Wood again rejected.—Railway opened from Delft to the Hague.—Three men killed by a fire-damp explosion in Haigh Moor Pit, near Wakefield.

7.—Serious riots at Geneva.—Great storm at Naples: 7 persons killed.—Austrian Gallicia, except Balkowina, placed under martial law, by Count Stadian.

9.—A soldier died at Aberdeen aged 111 years.—Great rise of the Nile, and destruction of crops on the banks.

10.—A robbery detected at Rugby by aid of the electric telegraph.—Marriages of Queen Isabella of Spain to Don Francisco d'Assis; and of the Infanta to the Duke de Montpensier; solemnised at Madrid.—Death of Lady Anne Hamilton, aged 80.

11.—A Prayer read in churches and chapels for relief from the existing dearth and scarcity.—Death of Mr. Bond, the Westminster Police Magistrate.—The Bavarian Government decreed the suppression of all journals from Jan. 1, 1847, and resolved to publish a daily State Gazette.—Tremendous hurricane on the 10th and 11th at Havana.

12.—Three persons killed by a foul air accident at iron works at Walker, near Newcastle.—Opening of the Great North of England, Clarence, and Hartlepool Junction Railway.—A counter-Ministerial movement at Lisbon, revoking most of the Palmella policy.—The King of Bavaria commenced building a large Picture Gallery for the people, at his own expense.—The town of Key West, Mexico, nearly destroyed by a hurricane.

14.—Intelligence from New Zealand, to May 17: continued conflicts between the colonists and the natives.—The Great Britain steamer still in Dundrum Bay.—The Pope ordered the clocks to be regulated from one to twelve instead of twenty-four, as hitherto.—Grand Dinner to Mr. Cobden, at Madrid.

15.—The Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway commenced.

16.—Royal bull-fight at Madrid, of surpassing splendour.—Dreadful hurricane near Munich: a village destroyed.—Insurrection in Portugal; disturbances at Lisbon.

17.—Destructive overflow of the Loire, in the south of France: two suspension bridges and several houses destroyed.—Lord Kilworth's splendid schooner yacht Wandering Spirit wrecked off Kinsale.

18.—Skiddaw, Helvellyn, and Scawfell, capped with snow.—Amnesty proclaimed in Spain: bull-fights and balls, to celebrate the Royal marriages.

19.—Riot among the peasantry at Mallow.—The Queen and Prince Albert visited the Queen Dowager, at Cassiobury.—Severe earthquake at Gallipoli.—Another comet discovered by Mr. Hind.

20.—Fruit-trees blossomed, for the second time this year, in Norway.—Inauguration at Stockholm, of the Statue of King Charles John of Sweden.

23.—Sir Henry Pottinger gazetted, in addition to Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, Commissioner for Settling the Frontier Dispute.

24.—Great meeting at Fermoy on the distress in Ireland.—The Russians successful in the War of the Caucasus.

25.—The Atmospheric Railway first tried in France at St. Germain, with success.—Further accounts of the disasters in France, from the overflow of the Loire; a magnificent railway viaduct, which cost 6,000,000 francs, destroyed at Orleans.—Riots at Saragossa.

26.—The Great Western arrived from New York, with the Hon. Mr. Bancroft, the newly appointed Minister to St. James's.—Pacific news from Scinde.—Meeting in London to petition Ministers to open the ports.

27.—Bread riots in Cork.—Colossal marble statue of O'Connell set up at Dublin.—Fanny Elssler kisses the feet of the Pope, at Rome.—Cholera raged at Bagdad.

28.—News of continued hostilities with the Kaffirs.—A chimney completed at Wigan, 420 feet high.—The oldest farmer in France died lately at St. Maurice-de-Girard, aged 108.—The splendid Abbey of Dissentis, Canton Grisons, entirely destroyed by fire.—The cholera at Bagdad, &c., had carried off 30,000 victims.

29.—The Duke and Duchess of Montpensier arrived at Pau.—Death of Marshal Bourmont, in Anjou.—Three persons killed by a boiler explosion at Ashton-under-Lyne.

30.—The Queen of Portugal assumed absolute power as long as the rebellion lasts: the Royal troops routed the insurgents, with great slaughter.—A pensioner died at Tullyrone, Armagh, aged 115 years.—Marriage of Duke of Bordeaux with the sister of the Duke of Modena.—Grand banquet at Brunswick in honour of L'Abbé Ronge.—The Corunna mail plundered by brigands.

31.—The Epoque newspaper sold in Paris, for £8,100—Further disasters from inundations in the South of France.

NOVEMBER.

1.—Sabbath passenger traffic discontinued on the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway.—A policeman murdered by a woman at Bristol.—Destructive inundations in the Tyrol.

2.—The poet Tegner died in Sweden.—Grand banquet to Mr. Cobden, at Seville.—Sixteen men killed by an explosion in the silver mine of Idria, Laybach.—Admiral Duperré died at Paris.—A rule granted in the Court of Queen's Bench for a criminal information by a Poor Law Commissioner against Mr. Ferrand, M.P.

3.—Fifty persons tried at Dungarvan for rioting; all discharged except the ringleader, who was sentenced to imprisonment.—A village destroyed, and 23 persons drowned, by the overflow of the Aurach, in France.

4.—News of the capture of Monterey, by General Taylor, on Sept. 24.—Provision riots, murders, and outrages frequent in Ireland.—The Garrick Theatre, Goodman's Fields, destroyed by fire.—Intelligence of peace in New Zealand.

5.—A National Anti-Poor Law Provident and Benevolent Union formed in London.—Coal and a new port stated to have been discovered in Western Australia.

6.—Convention between Russia, Prussia, and Austria, for the destruction of the Independence of Cracow.—Fifty men killed, and 80 injured, by the fall of a chimney, 250 feet high, at Constantinople.

7.—Imposing ceremony of taking possession of the Lateran Church at Rome.—The Jews of Warsaw forbidden to wear their beards and ancient costume.—Continued insurrection in Portugal.—The Diplomatists accredited at the French Court offered their congratulations on the Duke de Montpensier's marriage; Lord Normanby absent.—Gun cotton tried at Nanterre, with complete success.

8.—Consecration of the new Protestant church of Panthemont, in Paris.—Financial panic at Berlin.—Intelligence from Constantinople of the murder of 200 Nestorian Christians by the Khurdes.

9.—News of a terrific hurricane at Charleston, U. S.—At the siege of Monterey, the Americans lost 700, and the Mexicans 1500; Santa Anna appointed Commander-in-Chief.—Lord Mayor's Day celebrated; her Majesty's Ministers present at the Guildhall Banquet.—A double tower opened at Mountpatrick, as a testimonial to Father Mathew.—John Ronge performed Divine service at Weimar to 800 German Catholics.

10.—The Gazette contained the long expected Army and Navy Brevets.—Rising against the Jesuits in parts of Italy.—Grand banquet to Mr. Cobden, at Cadiz.

11.—A woman committed to Newgate for a burglary at Ealing.—An anti-machine factory riot at Annaberg, in Saxony.—Grand dinner and ball at Rome, in honour of the Pope.

12.—The Bey of Tunis arrived at Toulon.—News of the discovery of a sulphur-mine at Guadaloupe.

14.—Tampico taken by the American squadron.

15.—Friar-lane Chapel, Nottingham, twice fired by an incendiary.—A poor widow died of starvation in Mile-end New-town.—Cholera, in Asia Minor, stated to have carried off some 40,000 persons, and 4000 at Bagdad.

16.—Lord John Russell elected Lord Rector of the University of Glasgow.—Great distress in the highlands and islands of Scotland.—Great fall of snow in St. Petersburg: ice in the Neva.—The Russian troops obtained great advantages over Shamyl, in the Caucasus.—Free-Trade Treaty concluded between Holland and Russia.

17.—The missing Deputy Postmaster of Barnet accused of several forgeries.—The Gloucestershire agriculturists meet at Cirencester to petition for the abolition of the Malt-Tax.—Fire-damp explosion near Birmingham; 19 men killed.—The repeal of the Tea Duty agitated at Liverpool.—A railway opened to Bedford, from the North Western Line.—Corn riots in various parts of France.—Three persons killed by a collision of trains on the Austrian Northern Railway.—Proclamation of the incorporation of Cracow with Austria.—850 houses burnt at Salonica.

18.—News from the Cape; Sir Andries Stockenstrom retired from the command; surrender of Kaffir Chiefs.—Surrender of Monterey completed.—A woman died in Crawford-street, of starvation, by neglect of the parochial authorities.

20.—Intelligence of renewed hostilities in India; rebellion in Cashmere and Nepaul.—Two men died from starvation at Castlehaven, Myross.—Tremendous gale on the Western Coast.: many vessels lost.—Great fire at Gravesend: 40 houses and other buildings burnt.

21.—Grand entertainment given to Gen. Kalergi, by the Greek community in London.

22.—The Conde de Montemolin arrived in London.—The Bey of Tunis arrived in Paris.

23.—Five men killed in a powder-mill explosion, near Baltimore.

24.—News of the re-commencement of hostilities at Monte Video, on Sept. 15.—The rule for a Criminal Information against Mr. Ferrand, M.P., made absolute.—Mr. Alderman Gibbs nonsuited in the Walbrook Churchwarden suit.—Seven men killed by a fire-damp explosion in a coal-mine near Preston.—A mail coach stopped for plunder near Orleans by three highwaymen.—Smart earthquake in the centre of Scotland.

25.—A man sentenced to transportation for life, at the Central Criminal Court, for forging a Bank Stock transfer.

26.—Alarming corn-riots in the south of France.—Carlist movement in Spain.—A Free-Trade Association established at Cadiz.—Loss of the American steamer Atlantic, off Boston; 45 persons drowned and killed.

27.—Riot at Boulogne, in consequence of the embarkation of sheep and oxen for England.

29.—The thermometer in London 12 degs. below freezing point.—Ministerial crisis at Madrid: resignation and return of Isturitz. Great fire in the Government Offices.

30.—The Repeal agitation continued: O'Connell claimed arrears of "Rent."—Last day for depositing Railway plans with the Board of Trade; but few new lines proposed.—The Copley gold medal awarded, by the Royal Society, to M. Le Verrier, the discoverer of the New Planet.—The insurgents defeated in Portugal: departure of Palmella.

DECEMBER.

1.—Captain Warner's "Long Range" tried, and proved an entire failure.—The Great Britain remained in Dundrum Bay.—A vast waterfall, 150 ft. high, discovered in Canada.—The Queen and Prince Albert visited the Duke of Norfolk, at Arundel Castle.—News of movement of Mexicans at Tampico, to oppose General Taylor at Monterey.

2.—The foundation-stone laid of St. Philip's Church, Manchester.—The occupation of Cracow much discussed at Paris.—News of continued hostilities between Mexico and the United States.—General Taylor still at Monterey.—Alarming accounts of the cholera in Ceylon.—Mr. Justice Patteson decided the Queen's servants to be free from arrest.—Lord Maidstone defended in the Court of Exchequer, an action brought for wines, &c., by Mrs. Crockford, on the ground that the Club was a common gaming-house; verdict for plaintiff.

3.—News from Sydney: Sir C. Fitzroy, the new Governor, arrived Aug: 2.—The commander of the French troops, M. Bruat killed at Tahiti.—Overland Mail: Cashmere and Mooltan more tranquil.—The Glenelg Indiaman and two steamers seized by the Treasury for taking part in the expedition of Gen. Flores to the Ecuador. A woman died at Toulouse, aged 105.

4.—M. Guizot gave a grand entertainment to the Bey of Tunis, and 2000 guests.—Lord Palmerston protested to the Courts of Vienna and St. Petersburgh against the incorporation of Cracow into the Austrian Monarchy.

5.—A train on the Great Western Railway ran 53 miles in 56m. 20s.—Reduction of the duty on tea agitated in the metropolis. Fire in the Shannon Irish steamer, at Plymouth.

7.—Opening of the Bury and Ipswich Railway.—Return of the 31st from India.—Earthquake at Amlwch, in Wales.

8.—The Smithfield Club Cattle-Show, the most extensive yet known.

9.—Meeting of farmers in London, to agitate the Repeal of the Malt Tax.—Alarming accounts of the disturbed state of Ireland: deaths by destitution, outrages, &c.—The Emperor of Russia nearly drowned in his route to Warsaw.

10.—Intelligence from New Zealand: the natives defeated.—Grand Funeral of Col. Swales, at Portsmouth.

12.—Attempt to assassinate the Archbishop of Vienna, by his servant.—News of the bombardment of Tobasco, by the United States squadron, Oct. 25: the occupation of California, by the Americans, not peaceful.

13.—The thermometer at Paris 13 deg. below freezing point.—Flixton Hall, Suffolk, destroyed by fire.—Intense cold at Vittoria: thermometer 18° below freezing, Fahr.

14.—In the Court of Queen's Bench, a verdict of £100 against the printer of the Spectator newspaper, for a libel on the Society of British Artists.—Mr. Cobden reached Perpignan, on his return to England.

15.—Opening of the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway.

16.—Riots in various parts of France, owing to the high price of bread and provisions generally.—The Bey of Tunis declined to visit England, as he could not be received as a Sovereign Prince.—The French Consul recalled from the Mauritius, for insult to the English Admiral there.—No fewer than twelve fires occurred in different parts of London.—The Liffey frozen over at Dublin.

17.—Death of Mr. John Bellamy, many years house keeper of the House of Commons.—The thermometer 12 deg. below freezing point, in London.

19.—Alarming public distress in France.—Bread as dear in Brussels as in the great scarcity of 1816.

21.—Considerable excitement in the Common Council Elections, owing to a dispute between that Court and the Court of Aldermen.

22.—The Tercentenary of Trinity College, Cambridge, celebrated with unusual magnificence.—The National seized in Paris.

24.—Westminster Bridge (closed since Aug. 15,) re-opened to the public.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JANUARY 9, 1847.—SUPPLEMENT.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

BEST. LELOIR. SC. & PARIS.

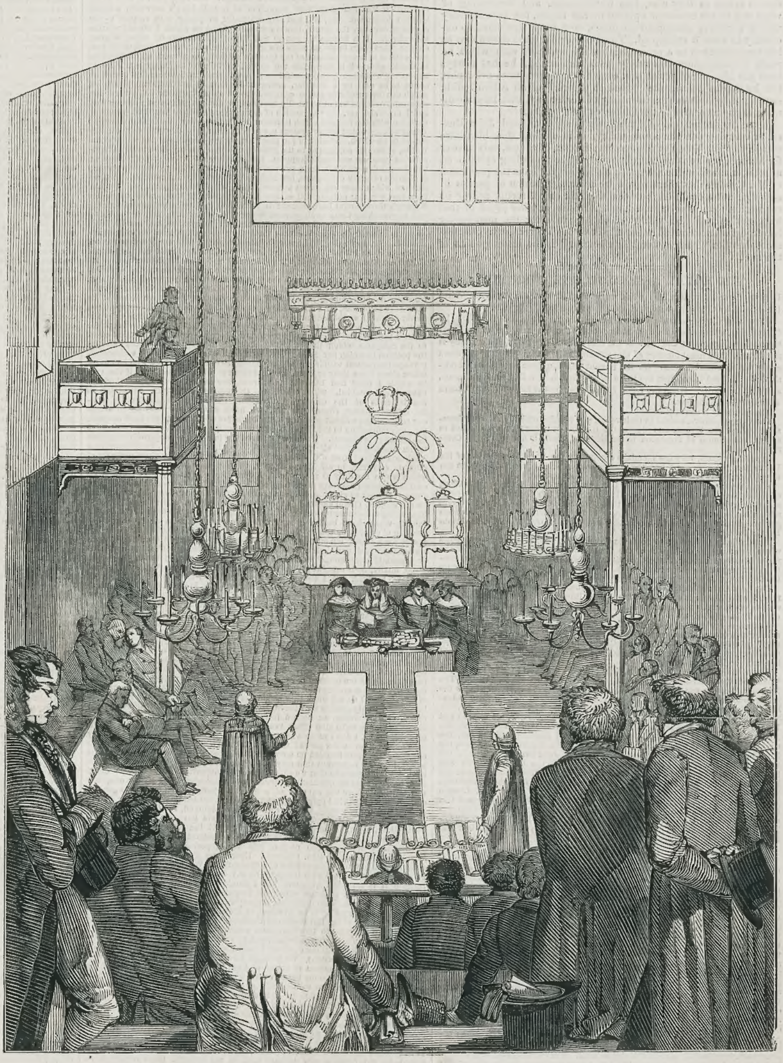
No. 218.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 4, 1846. [Sixpence.

THE RESIGNATION.

ASSUREDLY, nothing exhibits the advantages of a Constitutional Government in a stronger light, than the popularity that, in England, is not unfrequently possessed by a falling Minister. He may be prostrated by the combinations of party; but, beyond them, he has a support and consolation in the applause of the people. Though deprived of office, the influence of his name is as great as before—perhaps increased, rather than diminished. Under a perfect despotism, where the favour of the Sovereign is the "only source of power," deprivation of office is deprivation of everything, wealth and life included; as the history of many a Persian Vizier and Turkish Pacha abundantly demonstrates. Where the Government is equally despotic, and the nod of the ruler equally potential, but where a varnish of civilisation and refinement has been drawn over the institutions of barbarism, as in Russia, the fall from office is equally the indication of the withdrawal of the Imperial countenance; and, though the bowstring is not applied in the Oriental fashion, yet the Minister is politically and socially annihilated: he is exiled to his estates, if he escape Siberia; and, in the salons and parties of the Capital, his name is uttered no more—no one dares speak of the man annihilated by the Imperial frown; no public opinion, no general sympathy, supports a dismissed official, who there "falls like Lucifer," never to rise again, save, perhaps, by a caprice of the same power which degraded him. In England and France, on the contrary, the influence of a name may be as great in opposition as in office: the arena of debate is equally open to the Minister's rival as to the Minister himself; the will or opinion of the Sovereign being but a secondary consideration. By the degree of support from without, alone, are Statesmen great in countries where all are not debased to the condition of puppets moved at the will of one.

Never has there been a more complete illustration of the popularity that may be preserved when office is gone, than that given by the Parliamentary proceedings of Monday evening last. Sir Robert Peel formally announced the resignation of himself and his colleagues. The scene was an impressive one, even in its attendant circumstances, apart from the consideration of the causes that make it one of the great turning points of our Parliamentary History. The House of Commons was crowded in every part within, and surrounded without by an unusual multitude; and could both bodies have been polled for their opinion, we believe the vast majority would have expressed regret at the retirement of the Premier. There was no exultation, no air of triumph in his open opponents, who would profit by the event: they had wrought no great victory of principle, achieved no signal overthrow, and were but subsidiary and secondary personages in the last act of the drama. Perhaps, too, present success was somewhat shadowed by the sense of future difficulties. If there was a feeling of exultation in any quarter, it was in the ranks of the Premier's former supporters, who may have tasted in that hour of the "fierce joy" of vengeance gratified. But we are confident that the general feeling was one of regret at the event, accompanied by a conviction that it was unavoidable. The comparatively little interest that seemed to be taken either in the persons, opinions, or future course of the succeeding Ministry, was also remarkable. All the ideas usually associated with the fall of a Statesman—weakness, defeat, misfortune, and consequent contempt for the person and his actions—were completely reversed. The incident of the hour was the acknowledgment of a political failure, but the effect of it was that of success and triumph.

The memory of the settlement of the great controversy of modern times, which no other man could have accomplished, was alone present to the minds of all, excluding altogether the thought of a minority and a defeat. The rising party was thrown into the back-ground; all eyes were for the "well-graced actor" who was leaving the stage; and were but "idly bent" on those who were to "enter next." The dramatic interest that the experienced Parliamentary tactician threw over the scene justifies a comparison drawn from the theatre itself. Never was any public act more skilfully per formed. Many questions might have been asked, which, truly answered, would have shown that the Premier himself had hastened his own fall. With such abundance of good intentions towards



THE ROYAL ASSENT GIVEN BY COMMISSION TO THE NEW CORN BILL, IN THE HOUSE OF LORDS, FRIDAY, JUNE 26, 1846.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Ireland, why introduce this terrible Coercion Bill, which has estranged all parties? But there was no disposition to analyse what wore the appearance of a political martyrdom.

The brief review, too, of the five years of Sir Robert Peel's Government was calculated to disarm criticism; he is a fortunate Minister; affairs could not well be worse than they were during the last days of the Whig Ministry; at that worst point he acceded to power and they immediately mended. The skies relented, and the harvests were good; he boldly thrust his hand into every man's pocket where there was a chance of finding anything, and by the very simple expedient of taking money wherever he could find it, converted deficiency into surplus; it was a feat of courage rather than skill, but it was successful, and success, in the opinion of the mass, atones for everything. His commercial changes, small at first, produced results that emboldened him to proceed to greater; in these, too, success attended him, though the doctrine and principle on which he proceeded were not his own. At home there was superabundant speculation, and consequent employment, the accumulated wealth of thirty years of peace being invested in improvements that fed and clothed millions; abroad he was not less fortunate; between France and England a good understanding has been preserved, in spite of the efforts of that insane party among our neighbours who regard war as the regenerator of the world, and make the bayonet the instrument of man's temporal salvation. In the East our Government has shown both its moderation and its vigour; slow to enter into a quarrel, its exertions were gigantic when once forced to action, and a series of victories threw round the English name yet greater glory. In the West, where the gamblers of party were putting the peace of the world in hazard, our Government promptly, and at the right moment, stated its last terms of arrangement of the Oregon Question, and they were accepted; the intelligence of the settlement of this dispute—vexatious and irritating to both countries—arriving the very day before the fall of the Government, and in time to figure advantageously in the valedictory address of the Minister!

It is impossible to say how much of success in human affairs is the result of chance and what is called luck, and how much is to be attributed to prudent management; we are large believers in the adage that "Fortune is conduct;" with less decision, less attention to events as they rose, less watchfulness, and forecasting of what will be the course of opinion in the future, the Peel Ministry would not have attempted so much, nor have succeeded so decidedly in what it attempted. The Premier has often shown that he has been mistaken in a principle; but the accuracy with which he reads circumstances has rarely been impeached; he has always been the Minister of action and events; others announce principles, but he applies them; the "bookish theoric" of an Adam Smith, expanded by the changes in society of a later day, finds its embodiment in the measures of the Conservative Premier.

From his declaration of a readiness to support Lord John Russel in carrying out the same policy, it is evident that his future course will not be one of obstruction; he can, of course, only answer for himself, but he is a good exponent of the prevailing opinion of, at least, a considerable section of his followers. Thus the prediction of Mr. Cobden that there would be an amalgamation of parties in action, if not a coalition between them in office, seems nearer its realization than was expected, and furnishes another proof of that keenness of political vision which has won for the member for Stockport an acknowledgment from two of the greatest rival statesmen, that the "Manchester Manufacturer" is the leading spirit of the age!

THE ROYAL ASSENT TO THE CORN BILL.

In part of our impression last week we announced that the Royal Assent had been given, by Commission, to the Corn Importation Bill.

Upon general occasions, the ceremony of giving the Royal Assent to Bills, by Commission, attracts very little attention; but when the measure to be sanctioned is an important one, as was the case last week, considerable curiosity is manifested. The usual number of Commissioners is three, but it is increased according to circumstances. On the present occasion there were four Commissioners—the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Earl of Haddington, and Earl Dalhousie. When the Royal Assent was given to the Reform Bill, there were five Commissioners.

The ceremony is thus performed.

The Commissioners, attired in their robes, and wearing cocked hats, seat themselves under the throne, and desire the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to summon the House of Commons to the House of Peers, to hear the Royal Commission read.

In ordinary cases, very few members accompany the Speaker to the bar of the House for this purpose; but the attendance on Friday (last week), when the Royal Assent was given to the Corn Bill, was rather numerous.

When the members of the House of Commons have come to the bar, the Clerk of the House reads the Commission. The purport of this document, which emanates directly from the Queen, is, that, "it not being convenient, for divers reasons, to be present in our Royal person at Westminster," authority has been given to certain dearly beloved Councillors to give the Royal Assent to certain Bills in the Queen's name.

The Clerk, in proceeding to read the Commission, makes a pause and bows when he comes to the names of the Commissioners who are present. As the name of each is mentioned, the Commissioner raises his cocked hat, in acknowledgment that he has accepted the duty. When the Clerk has finished reading the document, he says, "Signed by the Queen with her own hand."

The Lord Chancellor then intimates that, in obedience to the Commission just read, the Royal Assent will be given to several Bills, and that the Clerk will proceed to pass them in the usual form. The Clerk then rises, and reads the titles of the Bills seriatim.

As soon as the name of the first bill is announced, another Clerk comes forward, and turning towards the members of the House of Commons, says, "La Reine le veut" (the Queen desires it), and the Clerks having made a bow to the Commissioners, one of them says, "Soit fait comme il est desiré," and thus the bill becomes the law of the land.

Upon the present occasion, the first bill was the Corn Importation Bill, to which the Royal Assent was given in the manner we have described. The Strangers' Gallery was crowded, and there was an evident anxiety to witness the performance of the last duty which gave the Royal sanction to a measure calculated to have such an important influence upon the destinies of this coun try.

The Royal Assent was also given to the Customs Duties Bill, the London and York Railway Bill, the North British Railway and Branches Bill, the Scottish Midland Junction Railway Bill, the Colchester and Sudbury Railway Bill, the Great North of Scotland Railway Bill, the East Lincolnshire Railway Bill, the Liverpool, Manchester, and Newcastle-upon-Tyne Junction Railway Bill, the Birkenhead, Lancashire, and Cheshire Railway Bill, the Great Grimsby and Sheffield Junction Railway Bill, the Humber Ferries Bill, the Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Bill, the N. and S. Wales Railway Bill, the Portsmouth Harbour Bill, the Liverpool Docks Bill, Northumberland Docks Bill, Lincoln Waterworks Bill, Warwick Waterworks Bill, Stafford Gas Bill, Hartlepool Gas Bill, Great Grimsby Gas Bill, Birmingham Improvement Act, Liverpool Improvement Bill, Newark Improvement Bill, York Improvement Bill, Newcastle-upon-Tyne Improvement Bill, Salford Hundred Court Bill, Leith Roads Bill, Rye and Derwent Drainage Billl, Carey's Estate Bill, &c.

The Late Mr. B. R. Haydon.—On Tuesday a meeting of gentlemen took place at the chambers of Mr. Sergeant Talfourd, in Sergeant's-inn, to devise some means of providing for the widow and daughter of the late Mr. Haydon. Among the gentlemen present were, Lord Morpeth, Sir J. C. Hobhouse, M.P., Dr. Bowring, M.P., Mr. W. Hamilton, Count D'Orsay, the Rev. Dr. Croly, Mr. Sergeant Talfourd, and Mr. Jerdan. Lord Morpeth was called upon to preside, and his Lordship, in common with every gentleman who took part in the proceedings, expressed his deep concern at the deplorable death of Mr. Haydon, and his sympathy with that unfortunate gentleman's widow and daughter, who, in consequence of the embarrassed state of Mr. Haydon's affairs, are left in a state of utter destitution. Several resolutions were proposed and adopted, with the object of securing a permanent provision for Mr. Haydon's widow and daughter. Mr. Sergeant Talfourd read a letter he had received from Sir R. Peel, expressing his regret that the pressure of public business would prevent him from attending the meeting, and stating that the Queen had been pleased to grant Mrs. Haydon a pension from the Civil List of £50 a-year. The right hon. Baronet requested, that in the event of a subscription being determined upon, his name might be put down for £100 as a contribution from his private purse. It was stated that Lady Peel had assigned a pension of £25 a-year to Mrs. Haydon out of a fund over which, from her position, she has control; and that Sir R. Peel, having found that a son of Mr. Haydon, who held a situation in the Customs, was of sufficient standing to receive promotion, immediately gave him a step in rank. The prompt generosity evinced by Sir R. Peel in promoting the welfare of this unfortunate family was warmly eulogised. Lord Morpeth, Sir J. C. Hobhouse, Mr. Sergeant Talfourd, and Mr. W. Hamilton, were appointed trustees of the subscription. The subscriptions announced at the meeting (including Sir R. Peel's contribution of £100) amounted to upwards of £400.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The Settlement of the Oregon Questions.—Lord Brougham put some questions to the Earl of Aberdeen as to the progress of the dispute between England and the United States, in answer to which that noble Earl made a statement in effect the same as that of Sir R. Peel in the House of Commons. The Earl of Aberdeen added—"Gratifying as this intelligence is, I feel it is but an act of duty and justice, as well as a pleasure, that I should bear the tribute of my testimony to the most friendly and conciliatory course which has been adopted by the United States Minister in this country. (Hear, hear.) That gentleman I have long known, and long had reason to esteem in official intercourse 15 or 16 years ago; and I am perfectly certain that, by every means in his power, he has contributed to this result. I am well assured that there is no person in this house, or in the country, who more cordially participated in the feeling of satisfaction which it is fitted to produce than Mr. M'Lane."

THE MINISTERIAL RESIGNATIONS.

The Duke of Wellington made a brief announcement of the resignation of the Ministers; and it was arranged that, although no measure of importance should be brought forward, in the present state of the Government, yet that the House should sit daily, as a matter of convenience.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

The expected announcement of the resignation of the Ministry created considerable excitement to-day. The avenues to the House were lined with people, and by five o'clock the House itself was excessively filled. Many Peers were present, and a novel, if not unprecedented, sight was exhibited in one of the side-galleries—two ladies being present, connected, it is said, with the suite of Ibrahim Pacha. The benches below the bar had not a vacant space, a large number of Peers and members of the corps diplomatique being present. Amongst them were the Earl of St. Germans, Lord Grosvenor, and Lord Dalhousie. One general feeling of interest in the Ministerial announcement seemed to pervade the numerous assembly, which at half-past five o'clock presented a very animated spectacle.

At the suggestion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer the Sugar Duties Bill was read a third time and passed.

RESIGNATION OF THE MINISTRY.—SIR ROBERT PEEL'S SPEECH ON LEAVING OFFICE.

Sir R. Peel, at half-past five o'clock, entered the house amid profound silence, and took his seat. In a few moments he rose and spoke as follows:—"Mr. Speaker,—Sir,—I feel it to be my duty to avail myself of the earliest opportunity of notifying to this House that, in consequence of the position of her Majesty's Government, and especially in consequence of that vote to which the House came on the night of Thursday last, by which they refused to give to her Majesty's Government those powers which they deemed necessary for the repression of outrage and the protection of life in Ireland, her Majesty's servants have felt it their duty to tender their resignation to a gracious Sovereign. The resolution to tender that resignation was the unanimous resolution of her Majesty's servants, adopted without hesitation. Sir, if I had any complaint to prefer with respect to the course pursued by the House, this is not the occasion on which I should venture to prefer it. It is impossible not to feel that that occasion by which a great change takes place in the councils of a great empire, affecting, for weal or for woe, the welfare of many millions of the Queen's subjects, in almost all parts of the habitable globe—it is impossible not to feel, that that is an important, I might almost say a solemn occasion—and it is not on such an occasion that one word ought to be said by a Minister, acting in homage to constitutional principles, which can by possibility revive controversies of an acrimonious character. Sir, such controversies would be wholly unsuited to the magnitude of this occasion, and I must also say, the provocation of any such controversy would be wholly at variance with the feelings which influence me in addressing this House. (Cheers.) These feelings would rather prompt me to acknowledge with gratitude the many occasions on which, speaking of the great body of the gentlemen on this side of the House, at periods antecedent to the present session, I and my colleagues have received a generous and cordial support. These feelings also would rather prompt me to acknowledge with gratitude the occasions on which, from gentlemen opposite, in oblivion of party differences, her Majesty's Government has received, for measures of which those gentlemen approved also, a cordial support; and I trust, therefore, Sir, that nothing will escape me in explaining the course which her Majesty's Government have thought it their duty to pursue which can run the risk of provoking those controversies which I do deprecate. Sir, her Majesty has been graciously pleased to accept that tender of resignation, and her Majesty's servants now only hold their offices until their successors shall have been appointed. Sir, I said that, if I had complaints to prefer, this would not be the occasion on which I would prefer them; but I must also say, that I did not propose those measures connected with our commercial policy at the commencement of this session without foreseeing that, whether those measures succeeded or failed, they must cause the dissolution of the Government which proposed them; and, therefore, Sir, I rather rejoice that her Majesty's Government have been relieved from any doubt by an early decision of this House, as to the course it would be their duty to pursue, for I do not hesitate to say that, even if that vote had been in our favour, I would not have consented to hold office by sufferance or by the evasion of any principle. (Great cheering.) I believe that it is not for the public interest that a Government should remain in power unable to give practical effect to the measures which they consider necessary for the public welfare; and, in the position in which her Majesty's Government was placed, by the withdrawal, perhaps the natural withdrawal of the confidence of many of those who had heretofore given them their support, I do not think it probable that even if the vote to which I refer had been in our favour, her Majesty's Government would have been enabled, with credit to themselves and with advantage to the interests of the country, to continue in the administration of public affairs. (Great cheering.) Sir, we have advised her Majesty to accept our resignations without adopting that alternative which we might have adopted, viz., recommending to the Crown the exercise of its prerogative, and to dissolve the present Parliament. We have preferred the immediate tender of resignation to the adoption of that alternative. Sir, I do not hesitate to say, speaking with a frankness which I trust will offend no one, that, if her Majesty's Government had failed in carrying, in all their integrity, those measures of commercial policy which it was my duty to recommend, I don't hesitate to say that there is no exertion I would not have made (cheers) in order, if not to insure their ultimate success, at least to give the country an opportunity of pronouncing an opinion on the subject. (Loud cheers.) In that case, I should have felt myself justified in advising a dissolution, because I think that the continuance of doubt on such a subject would have been a greater evil than resorting to a constitutional expression of opinion by the people of this country. (Cheers.) But there is no necessity for a dissolution on this ground:—Those who dissented from those measures have withdrawn their opposition, and I am bound to say it was not a factious or unseemly opposition, to them: simply protesting against them, they have given, finally, their consent to those measures; and those measures having passed into law, I do not feel I should have been justified, for any subordinate consideration, for the interest of the Government merely, in advising the exercise of the prerogative to which I refer, and dissolving the Parliament. (Hear.) Because I feel strongly this,—that no Administration is justified in advising the exercise of that prerogative unless there be a fair, reasonable presumption, even a strong moral conviction, that, after a dissolution, they will be enabled to administer the affairs of this country through the support of a party sufficiently powerful to carry their measures. (Cheers.) I do not think a dissolution justifiable for strengthening a party. I think the power of dissolution is a great instrument in the hands of the Crown, and that there is a tendency to blunt that instrument if it be resorted to without necessity. Though for the purpose of enabling the country to decide whether we were justified in proposing those measures of commercial policy which we did propose at the commencement of this session, I do not think that would have been sufficient ground for a dissolution. The only ground for dissolution would have been a strong presumption that after a dissolution we should have had a party powerful enough in this House to enable us to give effect practically to the measures which we might propose. Now, I don't mean a support founded on mere temporary sympathy with our position on the part of those who, otherwise, are opposed to us; I do not mean a support founded on a concurrence on one great question of domestic policy, however important that may be; I think we ought not to dissolve without having a full assurance that we should have the support, not of those who differ from us on almost all questions of public policy, agreeing with us in one, but that we should have the support of a powerful party united to us by a general concurrence of political opinion. (Cheers.) And I am bound to say, that in the general division of parties, and after all that has occurred, I did not entertain a confident hope that a dissolution of Parliament would have given us that support. (Hear, hear.) I must also say that, after all the excitement which has taken place, and after the stagnation of trade consequent upon our protracted discussions, it did appear to us that this was a period when it would not be judicious to take such a step. (Cheers.) Upon these grounds we preferred instant resignation to the alternative of a dissolution. We were left in a minority on a question connected with Ireland. (Hear.) Now I should lament, not merely because it is an Irish question, but I should most deeply lament if it could be thought that the measure which we proposed for the repression of outrage in Ireland was an indication that her Majesty's servants held any different opinion with regard to the policy to be pursued in Ireland from that which I declared towards the close of the last session of Parliament. (Hear, hear.) To the opinions which I then avowed—to those opinions which had a practical effect given to them by the Charitable Bequests Act, and by the additional vote for the endowment of Maynooth—to these opinions I, now about to relinquish power, entirely subscribe. (Great cheering.) We brought forward that measure, believing that resistance to the contagion of crime, and the vigorous repression by law of the offences which disgrace some parts of Ireland, were not measures calculated permanently to improve the social condition of that country; but we thought they were measures which could be taken in conjunction with others necessary for the purpose of giving effect to legislation upon that subject. (Hear hear.) The House has, however, decided, and I am not about to impeach their decision. I only deprecate any inference, which would be unjustifiable, that, because we proposed those measures, which some call measures of coercion, which we call measures for the protection of life, therefore our views with regard to the policy to be pursued towards Ireland have undergone any change. Speaking for myself, I do not hesitate now to say, that, in my opinion, there ought to be established between England and Ireland a complete equality (great cheering) in all civil, municipal, and political rights. (Renewed cheers.) When I say complete equality, I don't mean—because I know it is impossible—to have a literal equality in every particular. Here, as in matters of more sacred import, it may be that "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life;" I speak of the spirit, and not of the letter, in which our legislation, with regard to the franchise and other privileges should be conducted. (Hear, hear.) I mean, there should be a real, substantial equality in political and civil rights (cheers); so that no person, viewing Ireland with perfectly disinterested eyes, and comparing its franchise with the franchise either of England or Scotland, should be enabled to say, "A different law is enacted for Ireland; and, on account of some jealousy or suspicion, Ireland has curtailed and mutilated rights." That is what I mean by equality of political franchises. Does any gentleman think I am making a reserve? (Cheers, and cries of "No, no.") I speak of the spirit in which we should legislate. I think it ought to be impossible to say that there is a different rule, substantially, with regard to civil or municipal franchise in Ireland from that which prevails in England. (Cheers.) Now, Sir, with regard to our Executive Administration in Ireland, I think the favour of the Crown ought to be bestowed in that country, and the confidence of the Crown, without reference to religious distinctions. (Loud cheers.) It has not been from entertaining a different opinion that there may be, in our case, the appearance of partiality. Where we have taken the opportunity of manifesting confidence in some Roman Catholics, I cannot say that justice was always done to our motives, nor has the position of the individual, in accepting favour from us, been altogether such as to create an anxiety for the repetition of similar favours. (Hear, hear.) Those who succeed us may have different means of carrying that principle into execution; but if they do act upon that principle, and bestow the favour and confidence of the Crown without reference to religious differences of opinion, they shall hear no complaint from me on that ground. (Loud cheers.) Then, Sir, with respect to the spirit in which our legislation should be conducted; adhering to all the opinions which I have expressed on the greater and more important points of Irish policy, yet I must say I, for one, am prepared to co-operate with those who feel the present social condition of the people in respect to the tenure of land, and the relation between landlord and tenant, to be one that deserves our immediate and most cautious consideration. (Cheers.) I think it may be impossible, by legislation, to apply any immediate remedy to the state of things which unfortunately prevails in that country; but, even if the benefit is remote, if it is of a permanent character, so far from being deterred from measures calculated to afford a remedy, the distant period at which the benefit may be derived ought to operate as no discouragement to us to apply our minds most seduously and impartially to the consideration of the subject. (Loud cheers.) Again, with respect to legislation on all those matters connected with the tenure of land and the relation of landlord and tenant—while upholding the rights of property, which I believe you will find no advantage in violating, yet, on the whole, I think the course we have taken during this session of extreme pressure of public business is a sufficient proof that there has been no disinclination on our part to consider that subject. (Hear, hear.)

"Neither will there be any disinclination to co-operate with those to whom the practical administration of affairs may be committed. (Cheers.) Sir, I have reason to believe that the noble Lord the member for the city of London has been commanded by her Majesty to repair to her for the purpose of rendering his assistance in the formation of a Government. Sir, I presume the general principle upon which the Government formed by the noble Lord will act, so far as a commercial policy is concerned, will be the continued application of those principles which tend to give us a freer commercial intercourse with other countries. (Loud cheers.) If that be the policy which will be pursued, as I confidently expect it will be, I shall feel it to be my duty to give to that Government, in pursuance and execution of that policy, my cordial support. (Immense cheering.) I presume, therefore, that her Majesty's Government will adopt that policy—and that, if other countries choose to buy in the dearest market, it will be no discouragement to them to permit us to buy in the cheapest. (Cheers.) I trust that they will not resume the policy which they and we have felt most inconvenient, namely, haggling with foreign countries, instead of taking that independent course which we believe to be conducive to our own interests (cheers), trusting to the influence of public opinion in other countries, that our example, with the practical benefit we derive from it, will at no remote period insure the adoption of the same course, rather than hoping to obtain commercial privileges as an equivalent for the reduction of particular duties. (Loud cheers.) Sir, when I say I presume that these general principles will influence their commercial policy, I do not, of course, mean to say that the adoption of these principles is at once to over-rule every moral consideration, and at once to subject every part of the inhabitants of this empire to unequal competition with other nations. I speak generally as to the tendency of our commercial policy, and I trust that every step that is taken will be towards the relaxation of restriction upon trade. I, for one, shall not urge upon them a hasty and precipitate adoption of principles, sound in themselves, if they are likely to incur the risk of a great derangement of the great social system. I shall bear in mind, that great experiments have been recently made, under the present Administration; that the surplus amount of revenue is smaller than I could wish it to be, consistently with the permanent interests of the country; and, while I offer a cordial support, in enforcing the general principles of commercial policy which have received the sanction of Parliament in the present session, I shall not urge them to any such simultaneous and precipitate adoption of them as may be either really injurious to interests, from special circumstances entitled to some continued protection, nor shall I urge them to any such rash and precipitate adoption of them as would incur the risk of deranging the finances of the country. Speaking thus, I am bound to say, that I am rather indicating my own intentions and the course I shall pursue, than that I have had the opportunity of conferring with others and speaking their sentiments. I cannot doubt, however, that those who gave their cordial concurrence to the measures which I proposed will be ready to give their general acquiescence and support to measures of a similar character to be proposed. (Loud cheers.) Sir, I do not know that it is necessary that I should make any other declaration than those I have made. I wish to draw no invidious contrast: I wish to make no unseemly allusions; but I cannot surrender power without making at least this observation—that I do hope, during the five years for which power has been committed to our hands, neither the interests nor the honour of this country have been compromised. (Cheers.) I think I may say with truth that, during that period, the burden of taxation has been equalised, and the pressure which was unjust and severe has been removed from many classes of her Majesty's subjects. (Cheers.) I think I may say with truth, that many restrictions upon commerce, injuriously affecting the trade of this country, have been remoued. (Cheers.) I think I may say that, without at all interfering with legitimate speculation; without at all paralyzing or deranging the credit of the country, stability has been given to the monetary system of this country (cheers), through the cordial support which again (without reference to party distinctions) the measures I proposed with regard to the Bank of England, the joint-stock banks, and the private banks of this country, received in the year 1843. (Cheers.) Sir, I trust also that the stability of our Indian Empire has not been weakened by the policy we have pursued; and that the glory and honour of the British arms, both by sea and land, in every part of the world, have been maintained; not through our exertions, but through the devoted gallantry of the soldiers and sailors of this country. (Cheers.) Sir, although there have been considerable reductions, great reductions made in the public burdens, yet I have the satisfaction of stating to the House that the national defences of this country have been improved both by sea and land, and that the army and navy are in a most efficient state.

"I trust I may also congratulate the House, that, notwithstanding the great reductions in the fiscal burdens of the country, our finances are in a prosperous and buoyant state; and that, on the 5th of July next, the return which will be made to this House will be, that, notwithstanding the reduction of taxation, the increased consumption of articles of Customs and Excise, and the general prosperity of the people, have supplied the void which might otherwise have taken place. (Cheers.) Sir, lastly, I think I may say that, without any harsh enforcement of the law, without any curtailment either of the liberty of the subject or the liberty of the press, speaking of Great Britain, there has been as much of obedience and submission to the law, as there ever was at any period of our history. (Cheers.) Nay, I will say more: in consequence of the greater command of the necessaries and minor luxuries of life; in consequence, too, of confidence in the administration of the law, there has been more of contentment—less of seditious crimes—less necessity for the exercise of power for the repression of political outrage, than there ever was at any antecedent period in this country. (Cheers.)

"I said, lastly,—but I have received one topic, on which I also think I may, without any unseemly boast or invidious contrast, say a few words. I think I may take credit to her Majesty's Government, at least to that distinguished member of it, less prominent, perhaps, in debate, than others, but as deserving of public honour and public credit for the exertions which he has made in the maintenance of peace—(loud cheers)—I mean my noble friend the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs—(loud cheers),—he has dared to avow that he thinks in a Christian country there is a moral obligation upon a Christian Minister to exhaust every effort before incurring the risk of war. (Loud cheers.) But while he has not shrunk from the avowal of that opinion, I will in justice to him say this—it is perfectly consistent with that opinion, as to the moral obligation of maintaining peace while peace can be maintained with honour, that there never was a Minister less inclined to sacrifice any essential interest, or to abate anything from the dignity and honour of this country, for the purpose of securing even that inestimable blessing. (Cheers.) Sir, I do hope that we leave the foreign relations of this country in a satisfactory state—(loud cheers)—that, speaking not only of France, but speaking of the other great powers of Europe, there is confidence in the intentions of this country, and a real desire on the part of the Governments of other powers to co-operate with us in the maintenance of peace. (Cheers.) Sir, it is that mutual confidence in the honour and intentions of public men which most facilitates the maintenance of peace. We come in conflict with France in distant parts of the world; there are heated partizans naturally and justly jealous of the honour of their respective countries; quarrels, small in themselves, might be magnified by the spirit of jealousy, and a too nice rivalry about national honour might be easily fomented into a cause of war, desolating nations, unless the councils of the great powers were presided over by those who, feeling peace to be the true interest of the civilised world, are determined that the heated passions of angry partisans shall not involve their respective countries in war. (Loud cheers.) Sir, if anything could have induced me to regret a decision on the part of the House, prematurely terminating the existence of the Government, it would have been the wish that we should have survived the day when intelligence might be received from the United States (loud cheers) as to the result of, perhaps, our last attempt to adjust those differences between this country and the United States, which, unless speedily terminated, might have involved us in war. The House will probably recollect that, after we had offered arbitration, and that offer had been rejected, the President of the United States sent a message to the Houses of Congress in that country, which led to discussions with regard to the termination of that convention which provided for a temporary adjustment of our differences,—at least, for a temporary avoidance of quarrel,—and enabled the two countries jointly to occupy the territory of the Oregon. Sir, the two houses of the American Congress, although advising the President of the United States to signify to this country, as he was empowered to do, the termination of the existing convention, by giving a year's notice, added to that advice, which might, perhaps, have been considered of an unsatisfactory or hostile character, the declaration that they advised the notice for the termination of the convention to be given, in order that it might facilitate an amicable adjustment of the dispute. We thought the addition of these words by those high authorities, the expression of a hope that the termination of the convention might the more strongly impress upon the two countries the necessity of mutual adjustment—we thought those expressions [illegible] renewal by either country of the attempt to settle this difference. We did not hesitate, therefore, within two days after the receipt of that [illegible] of a wish expressed by the Houses of Congress that efforts might be made for the peaceful termination of these disputes, although the offer of arbitration had been rejected,—we did not hesitate to do that which, in the present state of the dispute, it became essential to do,—not to propose renewed and lengthened negotiations, but to specify frankly and at once what were the terms on which we could consent to a partition of the country of the Oregon. (Cheers.) Sir, the President of the United States, I must say, whatever might have been the expressions heretofore used by him, and however strongly he might have been personally committed to the adoption of a different course, wisely and patriotically determined at once to refer our proposals to the Senate—that authority of the United States whose consent is requisite for the termination of any negociation of this kind; and the Senate, again acting in the same spirit, has, I have the heartfelt satisfaction to state, at once advised the adoption of the terms we offered them. (Loud cheers.) Sir, perhaps, from the importance of the subject, and considering this is the last day I shall have to address the House as a Minister of the Crown, I may be allowed to state what are the terms of the proposals we made to the United States on the Oregon Question. In order to prevent the necessity for renewed diplomatic negociations, we sent a convention, which we trusted the United States would accept. The first article of that convention was to this effect—that,

> From the point on the 49th parallel of north latitude, where the boundary laid down in existing treaties and conventions between Great Britain and the United States terminates, the line of boundary between the territories of her Britannic Majesty and those of the United States shall be continued westward along the said 49th parallel of north latitude to the middle of the channel which separates the continent from Vancouver's Island, and thence southerly through the middle of the said channel, and of Fuca's Straits, to the Pacific Ocean; provided, however, that the navigation of the said channel and straits, south of the 49th parallel of north latitude, remain free and open to both parties.

Those who remember the local conformation of that country will understand that we proposed the continuation of the 49th parallel of latitude till it strikes the Straits of Fuca; that it should not be continued across Vancouver's Island,—thus depriving us of any part of Vancouver's Island, but leaving us in possession of the whole of Vancouver's Island. Sir, the second article of the convention we sent for the acceptance of the United States, was to this effect—that,

> From the point at which the 49th parallel of north latitude shall be found to intersect the great northern branch of the Columbia river, the navigation of the said branch shall be free and open to the Hudson's Bay Company, and to all British subjects trading with the same, to the point where the said branch meets the main stream of the Columbia, and thence down the said main stream to the ocean, with free access into and through the said river or rivers, it being understood that all the usual portages along the line thus described shall in like manner be free and open. In navigating the said river or rivers British subjects with their goods and produce, shall be treated on the same footing as citizens of the United States, it being however, always understood that nothing in this article shall be construed as preventing or intended to prevent, the Government of the United States from making any regulations respecting the navigation of the said river, or rivers, not inconsistent with the present treaty."

SIR ROBERT PEEL then stated, amidst great cheering, that on his return from his mission to her Majesty that day, he had had the satisfaction to receive a despatch from Mr. Pakington, the British Minister at Washington, addressed to Lord Aberdeen, stating that the President had agreed to adopt the advice of the Senate, and to accept the terms proposed by the Government without any alteration. The right hon. Baronet proceeded in these words:—

"Thus, Sir, these two great nations, impelled, I believe, by the public opinion, which ought to guide and influence statesmen, have, by moderation—by the spirit of mutual compromise, averted that dreadful calamity of a war between two nations of kindred race, and common language (loud cheers), the breaking out of which would have involved the civilized world in calamities to an extent it is difficult to foresee (not one year—probably not one month of such a war, but would have been more expensive than the whole territory that had called it forth); but they have averted that war, I believe consistently with their true interests—consistently with perfect honour on the part of the American Government, and on the part of those who have at length closed, I trust, every cause of difference between the two countries. (Loud cheers.) Sir, I may say, also, to the credit of the Government of this country, that, so far from being influenced in our views in regard to the termination of these disputes about the Oregon by the breaking out of the war with Mexico, we distinctly intimated to Mr. Pakenham, that although unexpected events had occurred, it did not affect in the slightest degree, our desire for peace. (Cheers.) Mr. Pakenham, knowing the spirit of his Government, being aware of the occurrence of these hostilities, having a discretionary power in certain cases, if he had thought this offer would have been likely to prolong negotiations, or diminish the chance of a successful issue, yet wisely thought the occurrence of Mexican hostilities with the United States was not one of the cases to which we had adverted, and therefore most wisely did he tender this offer of peace to the United States on his own discretion, and the confidence of his Government. Now let me say, and I am sure this House will think it to the credit of my noble friend, that on the occurrence of these hostilities between Mexico and the United States, before we were aware of the reception which this offer on our part would meet with, the first packet that sailed tendered to the United States the offer of our good offices for the purpose of mediating between them and the Mexican Government. (Loud cheers.) Sir, I do rejoice, therefore, that, before surrendering power at the feet of a majority of this House, I had the opportunity of giving them the official assurance that every cause of quarrel with that great country on the other side of the Atlantic is terminated before we retire from office. (Loud cheers.) Sir, I feel that I have now executed the task which my public duty imposed upon me. I trust I have said nothing which can by possibility lead to the recurrence of those controversies I have deprecated. Whatever opinions may be formed with regard to the extent of the danger with which we were threatened, I can say with truth that her Majesty's Government, in proposing these measures of commercial policy, which have disentitled them to the confidence of many of those who heretofore gave them their support, were influenced by no other desire than the desire to consult the interests of this country. (Cheers.) Our object was to avert dangers which we thought were imminent, and to avoid a conflict which we believed would soon place in hostile collision great and powerful classes in this country. (Cheers.) The love of power was not a motive for the proposal of these measures; for, as I said before, I had not a doubt that, whether these measures were accompanied with failure or success, the almost certain issue must be the termination of the existence of this Government. Sir, I am not sure that it is not advantageous for the public interests that this should be so—I admit that the withdrawal of confidence from us by many of our friends was a natural result; and I think that, when proposals of such a nature are made, apparently at variance with the course which Ministers heretofore pursued, and subjecting them to the charge or taunt of inconsistency—upon the whole, it is advantageous for this country, and for the general character of public men, that the proposal of measures of that kind under such circumstances should entail that which is supposed to be a fitting punishment—namely, expulsion from office. I, therefore, do not complain of it; anything is preferable to attempting to maintain ourselves in office without a full measure of the confidence of this House. (Cheers.) I said before and I said truly, that in proposing those measures I had no wish to rob others of the credit justly due to them. Now, I must say, with reference to the hon. gentlemen opposite, as I say with reference to ourselves, neither of us is the party which is justly entitled to the credit of them. There has been a combination of parties, and that combination, and the influence of Government, have led to their ultimate success; but the name which ought to be associated with the success of these measures is not the name of the noble Lord, the organ of that party, nor is it mine. The name which ought to be, and will be, associated with the success of those measures, is the name of a man who, acting, I believe, from pure and disinterested motives, has, with untiring energy, by appeals to reason (loud cheers), enforced their necessity with an eloquence the more to be admired because it was unaffected and unadorned (cheers);—the name which ought to be associated with the success of those measures is the name of Richard Cobden. (Loud and protracted cheering.) Sir, I now close the address which it has been my duty to make to the House, thanking them sincerely for the favour with which they have listened to me in performing this last act of my official career. Within a few hours, probably, that power which I have held for the period of five years, will be surrendered into the hands of another—without repining—I can say without complaint—with a more lively recollection of the support and confidence I have received than of the opposition which, during a recent period, I met with. (Loud cheers.) I shall leave office, I fear, with a name severely censured by many honourable gentlemen, who, on public principle, deeply regret the severance of party ties—who deeply regret that severance, not from any interested or personal motives, but because they believe fidelity to party engagements, the existence and maintenance of a great party,—to constitute a powerful instrument of Government; I shall surrender power severely censured, I fear again by many honourable gentlemen who, from no interested motive, have adhered to the principle of Protection as important to the welfare and interests of the country; I shall leave a name execrated by every monopolist (loud cheering from the Opposition), who, from less honourable motives, maintains Protection for his own individual benefit (continued cheering); but it may be that I shall leave a name sometimes remembered with expressions of good will in those places which are the abode of men whose lot it is to labour, and to earn their daily bread by the sweat of their brow—a name remembered with expressions of good will, when they shall recreate their exhausted strength with abundant and untaxed food, the sweeter because it is no longer leavened by a sense of injustice." (Loud and vociferous cheering, during which the right hon. Baronet resumed his seat.) When the cheering had subsided,

SIR R. PEEL again rose and said—I have received a communication from the noble Lord whose services have been required by her Majesty, and I trust, in conformity with his wish, the House will unanimously support the motion I shall now make, namely, that the House, at its rising, do adjourn till Friday next. (Cheers.)

Lord PALMERSTON said he wished it to be understood that his silence was not to be considered as a retraction of the opinions he had formerly given upon some parts of the policy of the right hon. Baronet.

A few brief remarks were made by other hon. members, and the motion for the adjournment till Friday was then agreed to.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

On the motion of Lord Brougham, the Protection of Justices Bill was read a third time and passed. The Bankruptcy Act Amendment Bill was also read a second time.

SUGAR DUTIES.—On the motion of the Duke of BUCCLEUCH, the Sugar Duties Continuance Bill was read a second time. The standing orders having been suspended, the bill then passed through Committee, and was read a third time and passed.

Their Lordships then adjourned until Thursday.

HOUSE OF LORDS. THURSDAY.

Some messengers brought up private bills from the House of Commons, which were received by the Earl of Shaftesbury as Deputy Speaker.

There were very few Peers present. The Ministerial benches were vacant, with the exception of the seats occupied by Lord Ellenborough and Lord Hawarden.

THE NEW MINISTRY.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE stated that he had been authorised to mention that Lord John Russell had received her Majesty's commands to form a new Administration; and, under these circumstances, he suggested the postponement of the bill to prevent the union of the sees of St. Asaph and Bangor.—The Earl of POWIS consented to postpone the bill till the 20th instant.—After a short pause, the House adjourned at half-past five till Friday.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"F. D. C" will see, by our solution, that mate cannot be given as he suggests.

"P. T. C."—Having taken up "Q's" Queen, "B." is bound to the move; and the game, as you represent the position, must be drawn.

"G P." —The prospectus of the new Chess Journal, put forth by the Members of the Berlin Club, will be found at full length in the current Number of the "Chess Player's Chronicle."

"L. S. D." Mate can actually be given in the two first moves of the game.

"W. S. F."—In a selection of entertaining Positions published by Mr. Lewis in 1827, you will find several of his own invention.

"P. P." The bust of La Bourdonnais may be got at Deville's, in the Strand. Rules for playing Chess by four persons are to be had at Sherwin's, Chess-men Turner, Queen-street, Lincoln's Inn.

"Juvenis."—We cannot devote the limited space allotted to this department of the Paper to solving problems which have appeared in other periodicals. Solutions of the six positions you have forwarded would occupy a whole column. The first move of Mr. Bolton's beautiful problem on the wrapper of the early numbers of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle" is Q to K B 4th, the Kt then takes Q P, and mate follows, play as Black may.

"A Member."—A copy of Ghulam Kassim's work on Chess is rare now. We doubt your obtaining one in England. Your subscription for the "Berlin Chess Magazine" must be paid in advance to Messrs. Williams and Norgate, of Covent-garden.

GAME BETWEEN MR. STAUNTON AND CAPTAIN KENNEDY, THE FORMER GIVING PAWN AND TWO MOVES.

Remove Black's K B P from the board.

WHITE. (Capt. K.)	BLACK. (Mr. S.)
1. K P two
2. Q P two	Q Kt to B 3rd
3. Q B to K Kt 5th	Q P two
4. K P one	Q B to K B 4th
5. Q Kt to B 3rd	Q to Q 2nd
6. K B to Q Kt 5th	Q R P one
7. B to Q R 4th	Q Kt P two
8. B to Q Kt 3rd	K P one
9. Q Kt to K 2nd	Q Kt to Q R 4th
10. Q B P one	Q Kt takes B
11. P takes Kt	Q B P two
12. K Kt to B 3rd	P takes P
13. K Kt takes P	Q B to K Kt 3rd
14. P to Q Kt 4th	Kt to K 2nd
15. Castles	Kt to K B 4th
16. Q R to Q R 5th (a)	K B to K 2nd
17. Q to Q 2nd (b)	Castles (K R)
18. B takes B	Kt takes B
19. K R to Q R sq	Kt to Q B 3rd
20. Kt takes Kt	Q takes Kt
21. Kt to Q 4th	Q to Q Kt 3rd
22. Kt takes Q Kt P	K R to K B 4th
23. Q to Q 4th	Q to Q sq
24. Kt to Q 6th	K R to K B sq
25. Q R takes Q R P	Q R to Q Kt sq
26. P to Q Kt 5th	Q to K Kt 4th
27. P to Q Kt 6th	B to K R 4th
28. Q to K third	Q takes Q
29. P takes Q	B to K 7th
30. Q R to Q R 7th	Q R takes P, on Q Kt 3rd
31. Q R to Q Kt 7th	Q R to Q R 3rd
32. K R to K sq	Q R to Q R 7th
33. K R P one (c)	B to Q 6th
34. P to K 4th	P takes P
35. Kt takes P	K R P two (d)
36. Kt to K Kt 5th	B to Q B 5th
37. Q R to Q Kt 4th (e)	K R to Q B sq
38. K R to Q sq (f)	Q R to Q R sq
39. Q Kt P one	B to K 7th
40. K R to K sq	Q R to Q R 7th
41. Q B P one	K R to Q sq
42. Q R to Q Kt 7th (g)	K Kt P one
43. Kt takes K P	K R to Q 7th
44. Q R to K Kt 7th (ch)	K to R sq
45. R takes K Kt P	B to K Kt 5th
46. Kt to K B 4th (h)	B to Q 8th
47. K P one	B to Q B 7th
48. Q R to K Kt 5th	Q R to Q R sq
49. K P one	Q R to K sq
50. Kt takes K R P
And Black resigned.

(a) Well played. From this point it seems impossible for Black to save the Pawn.
(b) It w[illegible] very [illegible] White [illegible] to take the Bi[illegible]
(c) [illegible] the pawn [illegible] White [illegible] piece, he would have been mated.
(d) This is badly played, as it permits the Kt to take up a very harassing position.
(e) A good move.
(f) Threatening to win the Bishop on the next move.
(g) Intending to take the K Kt P (ch), and afterwards K P with the Kt.
(h) Had the Bishop been taken, Black would evidently have drawn the game.

BETWEEN THE SAME PLAYERS.

WHITE. (Capt. K.)	BLACK. (Mr. S.)
1. K P two
2. Q P two	Q Kt to B 3d
3. K Kt to B 3d	K P one
4. Q B P two	Q P two
5. K P one	B to Q Kt's 5th (ch)
6. Q Kt to B 3d	K Kt to K 2d
7. B to K Kt's 5th	Castles
8. Q B P one (a)	Q to K sq
9. Q B to K 3d	Q to K R 4th (b)
10. B to Q 3d	Q Kt's P one
11. P takes P	Q R P takes P
12. Castles	B takes Kt (c)
13. P takes B	K Kt to K B 4th
14. K R P one	K R P one (d)
15. Q R P two (e)	Q B to Q 2d
16. Q to K 2d	Kt takes B
17. P takes Kt	Kt to K 2d
18. B to Q B 2d	Kt to Q B 3d (f)
19. Q to her 3d	Q to K B 4th
20 Q takes Q	P takes Q
21 Kt to K R 4th	Kt to K 2d
22. B to Q 3d	K Kt P two
23. Kt to B 3d	B takes P
24. Kt to Q 2d	Q Kt P one (g)
25. R to K B 2d	Q B P two
26. Q R to K B sq (h)	P takes P
27. Q B P takes P	Q Kt P one
28 B takes K B P	Kt takes B
29. R takes Kt	R takes R
30. R takes R	R to K B sq
31. R. takes R (ch)	K takes R
32. P to K 4th (i)	P takes P
33. Kt takes P	B to Q B 7th
34. Kt to Q 2nd	B to Q 6th (k)
35. K to B 2nd	K to his 2nd
36. Q P one	B to B 7th
37. Kt to Q B 4th	Q Kt P one
38. K to his 3rd	K R P one
39. K Kt P one	K R P one (l)
40. P takes P	P takes P
41. K to K B 4th	B to Q 6th
42. Kt to Q Kt 2nd	B to K B 8th
43. K to Kt 4th	B to K Kt 7th
44. Q P one (ch)	K to his 3rd
45. K takes P	B to Q B 3rd (m)
46. Kt to Q 3rd	P one
47. Kt takes P	K takes P
48. Kt to B 4th (ch)	K to his 3rd
49. K to Kt 5th	B to Q Kt 4th
50. Kt to Q R 3rd	B to Q 6th
Drawn game.*

(a) This is an objectionable move. It not only loses time at an important moment, but permits Black to f[illegible] his pieces on the Queen's side.
(b) The second player has now a very well-developed game; far better, indeed, than is usually obtainable by the giver of these fearful odds. This is partly owing to his opponent's feeble play at moves 7 and 8.
(c) It is imperative to take off this Knight, which would otherwise obtain an offensive position at his 5th square.
(d) Tempting White to "fork" the two pieces which would have given the advantage to Black.
(e) He prudently refrains from advancing the K Kt P two, foreseeing that the enemy would instantly capture the Bishop.
(f) A lost move, which arose from Black having inadvertently touched the Knight.
(g) To prevent the advance of White's Q B P.
(h) He would have played very ill in taking the offered Q B P.
(i) Well played; the only move, it would appear, to save the Kt.
(k) That the Kt should not be moved to Q B 4th.
(l) [illegible] Pawn is on a diagonal, at command of the White Bishop.
(m) White would, evidently, win here, if the Black King took his Pawn.

CHESS IN FRANCE.

GAME LATELY PLAYED BETWEEN MR. B G——, OF THE ST. GEORGE'S CHESS CLUB, AND MR. KIESERITZKI.

BLACK. (Mr. K.)	WHITE (Mr. G.)
1. K P two	Q B P two
2. K B to Q B 4th	K P one
3. Q Kt to B 3d	Q R P one
4. Q R P two	Q Kt to B 3d
5. K Kt to B 3d	K Kt to K 2d
6. Castles	K Kt to his 3d
7. Q P two	P takes P
8. Kt takes P	K B to Q B 4th
9. Q B to K 3d	Q to Kt's 3d
10. Q R P one	Q Kt takes P
11. Q Kt to R 4th	Q to B 2d
12. Kt takes B	Kt takes B
13 Q Kt P two	Kt takes B
14 P takes Kt	Q P one (a)
15 Q Kt to his 3d	Castles
16. Q to K R's 5th	Kt to K 4th
17. K R to B 4th	Q to B 6th
18. Q R to K B sq	Q takes K P (ch)
19. K to R sq	K Kt P one
20. Q to R 4th	B to Q 2nd
21. K R to B 3rd	Kt takes R
22. R takes Kt (b)	K Kt P one (c)
23. Q to K Kt 3rd	Q takes K P
24. Q takes P (ch)	Q to K Kt 3rd
25. Q to K 7th	K to R sq
26. Q takes B	K P one
27. Kt to B 5th	Q to Kt 5th
28. Q takes Kt P	K R to K Kt sq
29. K Kt P one	Q R to Q Kt sq
30. Q to her 5th	Q R to Q Kt 4th
31. Q to her sq	K P one (d)
32. Q to her 4th (ch)	Q R to K 4th
33. R to K B 4th	Q to K 7th (e)
34. Kt takes Q P	White resigns.

(a) Q Kt P one would have been preferable [illegible]
(c) Was this move a part of Black's calculation? [illegible]
(e) The latter moves are not up to the average play [illegible]

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 19.—By M. D'ORVILLE.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R 3rd	K at Q Kt 4th
R at Q B sq	Q at K R 6th
Kt at K 6th	R at K Kt 8th
Kt at K 5th	Kt at K B 6th
P at Q R 5th	Kt at Q R 3rd

White moves first, and mates in 3 moves.

No. 20.—By the SAME.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R sq	K at Q 4th
Q at K R 6th	Q at Q R 2nd
R at Q B 6th	R at K R sq
B at Q Kt 7th	R at Q B sq
P's at Q 4th and Q R 3rd

White plays, and mates in 3 moves.

No. 21.—By the SAME.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q Kt sq	K at his sq
R at Q R 7th	Q at her 7th
B at Q B 4th	R at Q R 7th
Kt at K Kt 8th	Kt at Q 4th
Kt at K 6th	Kt at Q B 2nd
	P at K B 2nd

White playing first, mates in 3 moves.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No. 127.

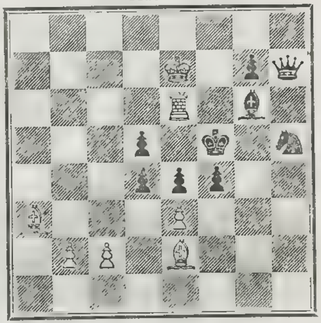
In the diagram of this clever position, the printer, unluckily, inserted a black Bishop at King's 4th, which entirely vitiates the Problem. The reader is requested, in setting up the pieces, to omit this Bishop, and find the required solution in four moves.

PROBLEM No. 128.

BY C. STANLEY, Esq., Brighton Chess Club.

White to play first and mate in five moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

ELECTRIC PHENOMENON.—A remarkable, but, unhappily, a disastrous, phenomenon occurred a few days since on the Marseilles and Avignon Railway, at a short distance from Arles. The rain fell heavily, and the lightning was vivid, though unaccompanied by thunder. Twenty-four men, employed on the railway, had taken shelter in a guard house near the termination of the rails of the Durance line. A sudden explosion was heard; the electric fluid had fallen on the rails, and, on reaching the end, not finding the soil soft enough to enter, had forced its way into the guard house. A young man, of two-and-twenty, was struck dead on the spot, and the others were more or less hurt. One young man remained for nearly an hour in a complete state of lethargy.

MONSTER TRAIN.—The Eastern Counties had an excursion train, from Yarmouth and Norwich, on Monday last. Upon the arrival of the train at Shoreditch Station, it consisted of fifty-one carriages, all quite full, drawn by two of the most powerful engines of the company. The number of passengers (exclusive of children under three years of age, amounting to about 200, who travelled free,) was 1871, making a total of more than 2000 persons.

DESTRUCTION OF ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, BY FIRE.

Accounts have been received of the almost total destruction of St. John's, Newfoundland, by an awful conflagration, which broke out on the morning of the 9th June.

The fire broke out at half-past nine o'clock on the morning of the [illegible] June, in the workshop of Mr. H[illegible], cabinet-maker, Chittleworth-street, and in a short time, spread in all directions with frightful rapidity. It soon crossed to both sides of Queen-street, and came raging towards Water-street in a fiery torrent. It now became apparent, from the increased force of the fire and wind, that nothing could save Water-street, the fire-engines not having the least effect. The stone premises of Messrs. James and W. Stewart, being well built and protected with iron shutters, it was thought, might have stayed its progress for a time; but, being surrounded on three sides by wooden buildings, viz. J. Rogerson and Son, Victoria Hotel; and Messrs. C. F. Bennetts and Co.; as well as their own wooden stores in the rear, they were, in a very short time, surrounded by fire, and the inmates, cut off from other retreat, had to escape from the wharfs in boats and vessels, after having rolled into the water about 100 tuns of seal oil from the wharfs and stores. The fire now became awfully intense and terrific; the oil vats of Messrs. C. F. Bennett and Co., and Messrs. Stewart, with their contents, together with many other combustible materials, and about 150 puncheons of molasses, being all on fire at once, the effect may be conceived, but cannot be described; and, to add to the danger, at this moment three vessels were discovered to be on fire, viz.—the Elizabeth Marget, Rozelle, and Royal William, which, with exertions, was got under before the flames arrived at any height.

The scene, as now witnessed from the water, was awfully terrific—masses of raging fire ascending high in the air, then stretching forth and seizing everything within its reach; but still unshackled, rushing on with destructive energy.

Sir John Harvey and the military were on the ground very early, just as it appeared in Queen street. He did all in his power, with his staff and the military, to arrest the flames; but it was soon apparent that all human efforts were vain. The military and town engines kept in front of the fire, taking up positions where they thought a stand might be made, but it was all in vain—nothing could withstand its awful advances; stone stores, wooden stores, slated and covered with sheet iron, seemed not to make the least difference, and apparently did not a moment stay its progress; and at six o'clock the whole of the town, with the exception of the lanes and parts of Gower-street, was prostrate in ashes.

Sir John Harvey called a council on the morning of the 10th, and also summoned a public meeting, when a committee of relief was appointed for the daily consideration of urgent claims. He also convened the House of Assembly for the 16th ult., to take into consideration the state of the country, and to place such a portion of the revenue as it might see fit at his disposal.

The following is a detailed account of the property consumed:—

STREETS BURNED DOWN.—All east of Newman and Co.'s on both sides Outer-street, to William Roslin's, Maggotty Cove. All east of Hutching's new houses and Brazils houses on both sides of Duckworth-street, to the Ordnance-yard. On the town side of Gower-street, and east from Calery-street to Cochrane-street, and above Gower-street up the King's-road, half way to the Military-road. All the fishing-rooms from Maggotty Cove to Crow's Nest, three rooms only left to chain lock, Warden-roof near the brick arch-work of the powder magazine. All the fishing rooms to Crow's Nest (Harvey Wuking's room).

CASUALTIES. One man burned; one artilleryman killed and another wounded, in the act of blowing up Messrs. G. and N. Stabbs' premises.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS DESTROYED.—Old Episcopal church, court-house, gaol, sheriff's house, British North American Bank, colonial treasury and savings' bank offices, custom-house, ordnance store and wharf, Exchange-buildings, post-office, office of road commissioners and board of control, office of light-house commissioners, all the printing-offices, nunnery, convent, school-house, Marine Insurance Company, theatre, roof powder-magazine.

PRINCIPAL MERCANTILE HOUSES DESTROYED.—Hounsell, Schink, and Co.; Stabb, Rin, and Co.; Wm. Grieve and Co.; Wilson and Macneill; Robert Alsop and Co.; Rennie, Stuart, and Co.; Wm. Warren, jun.; Boyd and M'Dougal.; Peter Rogerson and Co.; James Wm. Stewart; C. F. Bennett and Co.; J. H. Warren; Langley and Tissier; P. and W. Carter; W. E. Taylor; Shea and Murphy; Thos. Glenn; John M'William; E. and N. Stabb; Pierce Grace; John and James Kent; R. O'Dwyer and Co.; Neil M'Dougall; Begg, Ker, and Co.; Bowring Brothers; R. and J. S. Rutherford; Mathew Stewart and Co.; M'Bride and Kerr; Richard Howley; Samuel Mudge; Warren Brothers; Baine, Johnston and Co.; Wilson and Co.; James Clift; S. G. Archibald, R. F. Trimingham and Co.; James Fox and Co.; Robert Prowse; W. and H. Thomas and Co.; J. M. Rendell and Co.; Gilbert Clapp; J. B. Baines and Co.; Job Brothers and Co.; Hunter and Co.; Tobin and Co.; John O'Donnell; John Omara; Laurence O'Brien and Co.; James Douglas and Co.; Michael Foley; Parker and Gleison; James Morris; Nicholas Gill; G. F. Bourn; John Cussack and Sons; Walter Dillon; Dunscomb and Harvey; Robinson, Brooking, and Co.; John Brocklebank; William Boden; Michael Nowlan.

(From the St. John's Morning Courier of the 12th of June.)

The extent of the burnt district is two whole streets, each fully a mile long, besides detached buildings, and the extensive stores on the wharfs. Besides the public buildings which we have enumerated, the following have been destroyed: The Legislative Hall, Sheriff's house and offices, office of Registrar of Deeds and Clerk of Supreme Court, Police-office, Post-office, Law Library, office of the Board of Control, office of the Commissioners of Pilots and Lighthouses, Mechanics' Hall, M'Mateo's circulating library, and the St. John's reading room. Only three bakeries are left, and one smith's shop. In fact, everything is gone, except the dwellings of, at the utmost, one-third of the population. Twelve thousand individuals are now houseless, numbers of them crowded into the houses of their friends in the part of the town that has escaped, and the remainder in the public edifices left, and in the tents. The total extent of the loss we cannot yet estimate, but from what we have heard we cannot put it down under a million sterling. Notwithstanding the immense loss, it would have been much greater if the fire had taken place a month earlier; but at least two-thirds of the spring importations have gone to the outports and the fisheries, for which our merchants will receive returns in the fall.

Great as was the calamity of the Quebec fires last year, ours is infinitely greater.

---

* The above two games are part of a little match just concluded at Brighton between these players, which terminated in favour of Mr. S by the odd game only.

NEW FORTIFICATIONS, PORTSMOUTH.

The merchants' establishments were saved in Quebec; they are destroyed here with the exception of one. Could we exhibit the desolation of the place, we know it would speak more eloquently than anything we could urge. Two long lines of streets, now distinguished only by forests of chimneys, the smoke and flame still issuing from the cellars, the wharfs burnt to the water's edge, and the greater part of the population huddled together on the barrens and elsewhere.

About seven o'clock in the evening the work of destruction may be said to have been completed, so that in ten hours and a half our town was almost entirely destroyed, and the moon rose in cloudless splendour, throwing her mild light on a homeless population, who stood viewing with intense anguish the smoking ruins of their habitations. Besides the two men that were killed, we have heard of another aged man, who had contrived to save his bed and some valuables, and while struggling along to a place of safety with a load too heavy for his strength, fell down and expired. And doubtless accidents have occurred of which we have not yet heard.

It is but justice to his Excellency the Governor to state that he remained in the vicinity of the fire till a late hour.

The Nunnery Schoolhouse took fire, it is supposed, from some articles in a state of ignition having been carried into it. It soon burnt to the ground, and communicated the fire to the Nunnery, which was speedily reduced to ashes. At Messrs Bowring Brothers, they put a great part of their goods on board a vessel at their wharf, which caught fire before she could be hauled out, and all was consumed. Their loss is very heavy, £4000 insured.

A cold night succeeded a day eventful to the inhabitants of St. John's, and far the greater portion of them spent it under the canopy of heaven; the open ground in front of Government House down towards Gower-street, was occupied by numerous family groups sitting beside the portion of their furniture saved from the flames. It was a sad sight to see shivering mothers endeavouring to shelter their little babes, and to hush them to sleep; while the cries of the older ones for food, had in many cases to be answered by, "wait till daylight, and we shall try to get some for you."

A great number of mercantile establishments were destroyed, besides those we have named; were we to attempt a complete list, we should have to name every firm except the solitary one of Messrs. Newman and Co., which is the only one now in St. John's that has either a store or an office, except the stores on the south side of the harbour.

Our brethren of the press have suffered heavily, every printing-office in the town was burnt.

Several merchants saved part of their stocks by shipping them on board vessels We have heard that Messrs. Job Brothers, and Co., and L. O'Brien and Co., saved most of the stock of dry goods in this way; the most of the vessels got out of the harbour so as to be out of danger from the embers blowing about. We never saw a fire spread with such awful rapidity; the flames seemed actually to leap from above end, he willed and commanded all the officers and soldiers not to pass it, (the bust,) without putting off their hats! We live in more temperate times, roof to roof, and the noise of the burning mass could be compared to nothing that we ever heard, except the roaring of the cataract of Niagara. The crash of falling materials was heard above the deep sound of the advancing flames, as roof after roof fell in at short intervals. We regret to have it to state that much pilfering was carried on, especially towards evening, and that provisions were taken away in boats-full from some of the premises at the lower end of the harbour.

We have been favoured by a Correspondent with the annexed plan of the town of St. John's. The tinted portion, nearly the whole of the place, is in ruins, including the long and valuable stack of wharfs projecting into the harbour.

No. 1, in the Plan, shows Bigg's Stores in Water-street, on which were ranged nearly all the stores. 2. Mrs. Ewings', where Mr. Bigg lodged. 3. House in which the fire broke out, at a cabinet maker's, by melting glue. 5. School, and 6, Nunnery, both which were burnt from some of the bedding and the furniture deposited therein for safety, having ignited in the transit, unknown to those who carried them to the spot. 6. Scotch Kirk. 7. Wesleyan Chapel. 8. Roman Catholic Cathedral. 9. Government House. The Stores at the south-eastern extremity of the Plan (belonging to Messrs. Newman), were the only ones saved.

NEW FORTIFICATIONS AT PORTSMOUTH.

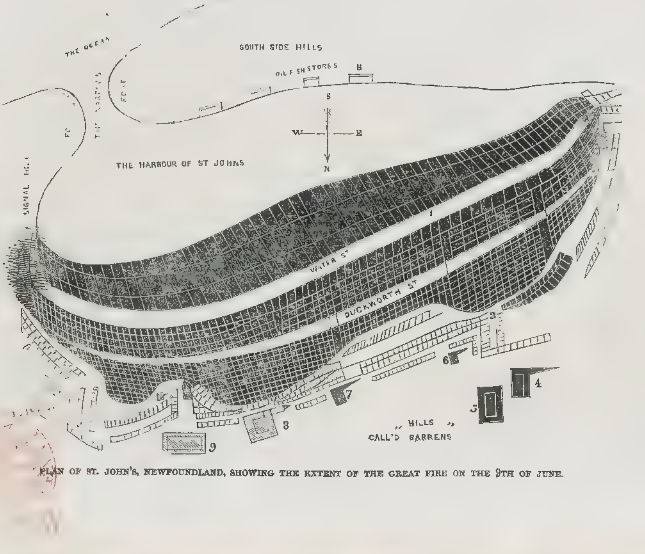
EXTENSIVE alterations and additions to the fortifications of Portsmouth are now in progress: among these is the erection of immense mortar batteries, of which we have engraved a specimen.

In the course of these improvements it will, in all probability, be requisite to remove the loyal memorial engraved in the annexed column. It now occupies a circular niche in the centre of the northern front of the edifice, which, before the dissolution of the Priory of God's House, was the residence of the Governor of Portsmouth; at a later period, it was converted into a powder-magazine for the garrison, and used as such for many years. This building will now, it is said, be removed.

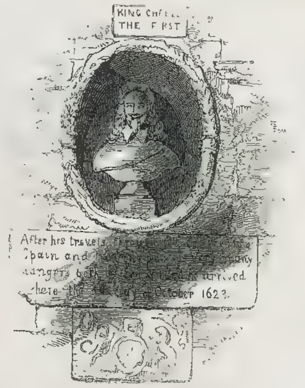
The memorial is a brass bust of Charles I., richly gilt, encircled by a wreath of laurel and oak; and in basso relievo below, are the Royal arms. The small slab above the bust, with the name, seems of modern date. The following inscription was on a square stone:—"King Charles the First: after his travels through France and Spain, and having passed many dangers both by sea and land, he arrived here the 4th day of October, 1623: there was the greatest applause of joy for his safety throughout the kingdom that was ever known or heard of." The bust was regilt in 1814, and the inscription somewhat altered.

The bust was the work of the celebrated artist, Hubrecht le Sueur; for, in the expenses of the Exchequer for the year 1635, June the 26th, appears the following issue:—"For the image of his Majestie's own head, in brass, for the town of Portsmouth, at the rate of fifty pounds, by Hubrecht le Sueur, made and delivered by his Majestie's command."

There is likewise in existence a document addressed by General the Lord Viscount Wimbledon to the Mayor of Portsmouth, in 1635, enjoining his Worship to remove all Inn signs that obstruct "his Majestie's figure or statute; that do not only obscure his Majestie's figure, but outface it;" his Lordship adding that to the though we are not the less respectful to Royalty; so that we hope to see the Royal bust fittingly provided for on its removal.



PLAN OF ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, SHOWING THE EXTENT OF THE GREAT FIRE ON THE 9TH OF JUNE.



BUST OF CHARLES I, AT PORTSMOUTH.

THE WAR IN NEW ZEALAND.

IN our late impression last week, we stated that, by the arrival of the ship Augustina at Penzance, papers from Launceston, of the 28th of February, had been received. Through the medium of Hobart Town, accounts have been received at Launceston from New Zealand, announcing the capture of the Pah occupied by the Chiefs Kawiti and Heki, on the 11th of January, after a cannonade which had breached it in several places. The loss sustained in the attack on our part was twelve killed and thirty wounded The Governor Grey was present at the attack, and, after driving the aborigines out, he published a proclamation offering a general amnesty, which appears to have been accepted by all but Heki, who had burned another Pah, and had retreated into the bush with his tribe.

The New Zealander, of January 24, announces that the two insurgent Chiefs, Heki and Kawiti, had been so dispirited by the capture of their Pah, or intrenched village, on the 11th of January, that they had prevailed on Nene, who had acted against them in favour of the British Government, to proceed to Auckland, in order to intercede in their behalf. They threw themselves wholly on the mercy of the Governor, and expressed themselves ready to resign their lands, and allow him to dictate the terms on which peace and order should be restored. It was understood that Governor Grey would not confiscate their lands, and that a full pardon would be granted. According to the New Zealander, Nene would return to the Bay of Islands, and peace would soon be permanently established in that district. The blockade would have been removed from the northern ports on the 1st of February, and the customs re-established. Two hundred troops would remain there, with the Racehorse and Osprey, men-of-war

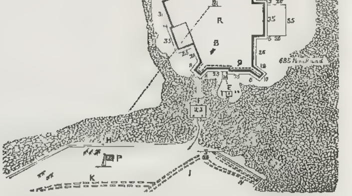
We have been favoured by a Correspondent with the annexed Plan of Kawiti's Pah, and the operations of January 11.

A The Flag-staff, afterwards knocked down by a 32-pounder shot fired by Lieut. Bland, R.N. of H M S. Racehorse
B. 12-pounder gun taken at Kororarika, belonging to the boat of H. M. S. Hazard, afterwards disabled from a shot from E
C 3-pounder gun taken at Kororarika, but was not brought into play.
D Kawiti's House
E. The Outer Stockade, consisting of one 18-pounder gun belonging to North Star, one 12-pounder howitzer belonging to Elphinstone, and two 24-pounder mortars—distance about 150 yards.
F The Inner Stockade, consisting of two 32 pounder medium guns belonging to North Star and two 24 pounder mortars—distance 300 yards.
G Stockade round Tomatie Walker's encampment
H. Breastwork in front of Military Encampment, and one 32-pounder medium gun belonging to North Star, one howitzer and one light 6-pounder field piece belonging to Castor one 24-pounder and one 12-pounder rocket tube belonging to North Star—distance 800 yards.
I The Naval Encampment.
K. The Military Encampment
L That part of the wood where the heaviest fire was kept up by the Natives while retreating and endeavouring to carry off their killed and wounded
M. The largest Breach made, and by which the Naval and Military entered the Pah.
N. The Warry, or that occupied by W M. Pengelly and H H. Garrett.
O The gate by which our forces got out of the Pah and were killed by the Rebels
P Union Jack hoisted the day we knocked down Kawiti's flag.
Q. Trenches dug about four feet deep.
R. All round the Flag-staff they had Warry's and large holes dug under ground in which they used to retire directly we began to fire.
S. Naval Mess Warry.



PLAN OF KAWITI'S PAH, NEW ZEALAND.

Annexed, too, are translations of Kawiti's Letters to the Governor and to Archdeacon H. Williams, in suing for peace.

Rua-peka-peka, Sept. 24th, 1845.

Friend Mr. Williams how do you do? I have a feeling of love towards you, you say peace must be made, and I agree to it, for I will not always disregard your word, and if peace is made with me it will be made with the land also. (Signed) KAWITI

Rua-peka-peka, Sept. 24, 1845.

Sir the Governor, how do you do? I am willing that peace should be made; many Europeans have been killed and many Natives also have been killed; you have said that I must be the first to begin peace making; now this is it, I now agree to it, this is all I have to say, it ends here. From me (Signed) KAWITI

From the Rua-peka-peka, November 29th, 1845.

Sir Governor, Salutations to you; formerly I was a good man to the Europeans, but the "Nagepuhi" (i.e. Waka) who are so eager to fight with me, they are the people who formerly killed Europeans. If this war were solely yours and the Natives had not taken part in it with you our peace would have been made; but as for Natives fighting—perhaps it cannot be made straight because "Waka" is constantly naming his dead, you do not understand this. Waka fighting is not for your dead; No, it is for those who were killed long ago on account of Hao of "Tuohiu Tihi" and Pooka. These were killed long ago. Sir Governor, the thought is with you regarding Waka that he return to his own place to Hokianga. Do not be hasty about the land; land is heavy (enduring) but man is light (perishable). Friend, I have no desire to write to you, but you have ability to write if you are pleased with my letter Sir, if you say that we shall fight it is well; if you say cease it is well, but do not say you will yield some portion of your thought From me From KAWITI.

Rua-peka-peka, November 29th, 1845.

Friend Governor.—Salutations to you; my respect for you is great, your letter reached me on Friday. This is your kindness which has come into my presence and I behold it; now hearken to my words to you. I am striving about (or for) my land, the Governor or Government is striving for my land that he may obtain it, perhaps your sentiments are the same. Sir Governor, you have said that peace may be made. Yes! peace may be made (or let peace be made) but I am not willing to give up that place the "Katore" which is demanded to be given up because that place the "Katore" does not belong to me. The right is with the people of the "Kowa Kowa," with Matiu, with Hami, now you understand I will not give up that place. That is the whole of my saying on this subject Here also is the word, Sir Governor. I will not quite say (distinctly) to you let peace be made; it is for you distinctly to make peace; will you write your letter that I may see your words? That is all mine (the whole of my letter), this is the end of mine to you.

(Written on the back of the letter.)

This is all my regard for you, do not suppose that there will be another ending; this is the ending, this is all my communication. From me From KAWITI

Karetu, January 19th, 1846.

Friend—O my esteemed friend the Governor,—I salute you great is my regard for you; this is the end of our (yours and mine) converse which I give now to you. Friend Governor, I say let peace be made between you and I, because I am filled (satisfied or have had enough) of your riches (cannon balls), therefore, I say, let you and I make peace; will you not? Yes! This is the termination of my war against you; friend, this was my object in going to "Karetu" to see Pomare to make peace with you. This is the end of mine to you It is finished.

To my esteemed friend
To the Governor (Signed) KAWITI.

Within eight days after the Pah was taken and burnt to the ground

GRAND REVIEW IN HYDE PARK ON MONDAY LAST.

REVIEW OF THE HOUSEHOLD TROOPS IN HYDE PARK.

ON Monday there was a grand field-day in Hyde-park, the respective regiments of Household Troops, at present stationed in London, assembling therein, for the purpose of being inspected by the Commander-in-Chief, in the presence of his Highness Ibrahim Pacha and suite.

The regiments reviewed consisted of the First Life Guards, under the command of Colonel the Hon. H. F. C. Cavendish; the Royal Horse Guards, under the command of Colonel Bouverie; the First Battalion Grenadier Guards, under the command of Colonel Lascelles; the Second Battalion Grenadier Guards, under the command of Colonel Boldero; the First Battalion of the Coldstream Guards, under the command of Colonel C. A. Shawe; and the First Battalion of the Scots Fusilier Guards, under the command of Colonel Knollys.

All the above regiments arrived on the ground from their respective quarters before ten o'clock. The cavalry under the command of Major-General the Hon. E. Lygon, C.B., and the infantry under Colonel Berkeley Drummond.

At half past ten the infantry took up their position in contiguous columns, at quarter distance, facing Grosvenor-gate, the cavalry occupying the right flank.

The morning was delightfully fine and the Park was densely crowded with spectators.

At five minutes before eleven o'clock, a slight stir among the crowd, near Grosvenor-gate, gave notice of the approach of the Pacha, and immediately afterwards his Highness rode into the square attended by Sami Pacha, Col. Bonfort, M. Nubart, and Major Dickson. His Highness was attired in a superb military costume, and rode a white charger.

The Pacha and his party arrived on the ground rather before the Commander-in-Chief, but his Highness, observing the approach of the gallant Duke, accompanied by his staff, at the further extremity of the Park, turned his horses' heads towards them, and the parties met half way, where an interchange of courtesies took place.

The Commander in-Chief was accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince George, and a brilliant staff of officers, among whom were the Marquis of Anglesey, Viscount Combermere (the Commander of the field), Lord Fitzroy Somerset, Military Secretary; Sir John Macdonald, Sir Charles Dalbiac, Viscount Seaham, the Earl of Uxbridge, &c. His Excellency the Swedish Minister, and Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence were also observed among the staff

The staff having taken up their position, the whole of the troops saluted, the several bands playing a few bars of the national anthem.

His Highness Ibrahim Pacha, then, at the invitation of the Commander-in-Chief, and attended by Sami Pacha, and the other members of his suite, rode forward and inspected the troops, passing up and down the line, and subsequently returning to their original position.

The cavalry then marched past in slow time, and were succeeded by the infantry. The same movement was then performed in quick time; after which the troops retired to the north-western corner of the Park, near Kensington Gardens, where they were followed by the staff, and went through a great variety of evolutions in very admirable style. During these evolutions a great deal of firing took place, and the display altogether, saving the absence of artillery, was far more imposing than usual.

The evolutions completed, the troops took up their station in line, facing the staff, which had now resumed its original position, and with a general salute, the bands playing the National Anthem, the interesting proceedings of the day terminated.

The Duke of Wellington and Ibrahim Pacha were both loudly cheered on leaving the Park. As the staff retired, the troops fired three volleys with admirable precision.

GRAND FETE AT SION HOUSE.

ON Tuesday, the Duchess of Northumberland gave the third and last of a series of delightful fêtes at Sion House, Isleworth. The festivities were, as usual, participated in by a very brilliant circle of the fashionable world. The Duchess of Cambridge, attended by the Lady Augusta Cadogan and Baron Knesebeck, arrived at five o'clock, and were received by the noble hostess in the grand hall; when her Grace led the way from the vestibule and gallery, to the lawn on the river front of the mansion, where a numerous brilliant party had assembled, including the Duke of Wellington, the Archbishop of Canterbury and Mrs. Howley, &c.

At a few minutes after six, a picturesque group, attired in Eastern costume, were observed wending their way across the lawn towards the south front of the villa. A moment more discovered that his Highness Ibrahim Pacha and suite had just disembarked from a gaily caparisoned barge which was seen dropping down the river.

The Earl of Powis and Colonel Clive, accompanied by the Duke of Wellington, immediately advanced to welcome the illustrious strangers

The Pacha appeared pleased to meet the veteran and gallant Duke; and, after exchanging courtesies with the Earl of Powis and Colonel Clive, his Highness accompanied them within the villa, where he was introduced to the noble host and hostess

Shortly afterwards, the Pacha partook of a superb déjeûner in the print room, at which covers were laid for ten—the Duchess of Cambridge, Ibrahim Pacha, attended by Colonel Bonfort and M. Nubart; the Duke of Wellington, the Marchioness of Aylesbury, the Earl of Powis, and the Austrian Ambassador, the circle being completed by the noble host and hostess.

A déjeûner was served at the same time to the general company, in the corridor, on the south front of the mansion.

Sir Robert and Lady Peel arrived together about half-past six o'clock.

The performances of the Ethiopian Serenaders and the band of the Royal Horse Guards were continued alternately until nearly seven o'clock, at which hour dancing was commenced in the great saloon.

Those who did not join in the dance, found ample amusement in promenading the beautiful grounds of the villa, and inspecting the magnificent conservatories, both of which are just now seen to the greatest possible advantage. Our artist has engraved this truly delightful scene.

The Pacha took his departure shortly after seven o'clock, having previously, through M. Nubart, expressed to the noble host and hostess the high gratification his visit had afforded him

The Duchess of Cambridge and the Duke of Wellington retired shortly before eight o'clock, but the festivities were kept up by a very considerable section of the company until nearly ten.

[illegible]AND'S FETE AT SION HOUSE, ON [illegible]

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—M. PERROT most respectfully informs the Nobility, Subscribers to the Opera, his Friends and the Public, that his BENEFIT will take place on THURSDAY NEXT, JULY the 9th, 1846 [illegible] formed (for the first time this season), Donizetti's celebrated Opera, ANNA BOLENA. Henry VIII., Sig Lablache, Percy Sig. Mario [illegible] Sir Harvey [illegible] Mdlle. [illegible] Jane Seymour, Mdlle. Corbari; and Anna Bolena, Mdme [illegible]

After which will be presented [illegible] Act of Donizetti's Opera, LINDA DI CHAMOUNI. Linda, Madame [illegible] Mdlle. Brambilla; Carlo, Sig. Corelli; Il Marchese [illegible]

In the course of the evening [illegible] successful New Grand Ballet, entitled [illegible] and the Celebrated Pas de Neuf. [illegible] Mdlles. Honore, Demelisse, Cassan, James. [illegible]

S[illegible] the Grand Ballet, ALMA, con[illegible] the admired Pas de Fascination. Mdlle. Cerito and M. Perrot [illegible]

A [illegible] which will be [illegible] PAS DE TROIS, M. Perrot, Mdlle. L. [illegible] Madame Petit Stephan [illegible] admired TARANTELLA, Mdlle. L. Grahn and M. Perrot.

And an entirely new BALLET D'IVERTISSEMENT, in three tableaux, by M. Perrot [illegible] Music by Sig. [illegible] LE MAITRE [illegible] DANS L'EMBARRAS; the scenery by Mr. [illegible] Principal Characters by Mdlle. Lucile Grahn, Mdlles. Honore, Cassan, Demelisse, James, Julien, Lamoureux, Mdlle. L. Taglioni, M. Gosselin, and M. Perrot.

Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven o'Clock, the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven.

MASQUERADE AT VAUXHALL.—The Second of the Season will take place on MONDAY, JULY 13, upon the same scale of splendour that called forth the admiration and approbation of upwards of 7,000 persons on Monday last, who appeared chiefly in costumes of the richest and most expensive description. It has been pronounced by many noblemen and gentlemen to have been the best they have ever seen in this country. The proprietors have come to the determination of making the next even better, and have engaged an extra Military Band, to play in the Ball-room, which will be again thrown open and tastefully decorated with evergreens and choice exotics.

The Gardens and the Rotunda Theatre will be beautifully illuminated; and previous to the commencement of the Masquerade, TOURNIAIRE'S TROUPE will appear in the Circle, and perform some astonishing Acts of Equitation. The Quadrille and Brass Bands will play in the Grand Orchestra and before the Pavilion. Ladies' Tickets, 7s. 6d.; Gentlemen's, 10s.; which will be ready for delivery on Monday next. Doors open at Ten o'Clock.

[illegible] OPEN EVERY NIGHT EXCEPT SATURDAY. ADMISSION, TWO SHILLINGS. DOORS OPEN AT EIGHT O'CLOCK.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, July 5.—Fourth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 6.—Old Midsummer Day.—Adam Smith died, 1790.
TUESDAY, 7.—St. Thomas à Becket.—Oxford Act and Cambridge Commencement.
WEDNESDAY, 8. Edmund Burke died, 1797.
THURSDAY, 9.—Bourbons restored, 1815—Massacre in Madrid, 1834.
FRIDAY, 10. Mercury sets at 9h. 22m. p. m.
SATURDAY, 11.—Oxford Trinity Term ends.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge for the Week ending July 11

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.	M. h. m.	A. h. m.
11 34	0 0	0 4	0 33	0 59	1 27	1 50	2 14	2 40	3 5	3 30	3 53

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Puschek."—A Memoir and Portrait of this Singer has been published in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, No. 211. He has left London for Germany.

"Taglioni."—This danseuse is separated from her husband.

"Moderate Means." Apply to any respectable Music Publisher for the names of Teachers who charge moderately. Hullah's Singing Classes would be a good beginning.

"Importun." The question is not very clearly stated. If the Liberals as a body had joined the Protectionists against the Corn Bill, Sir R. Peel would, no doubt, have been in a minority.

"C. O.," Chelmsford.—The Coercion Bill was brought in by Earl St. Germans, as Secretary for Ireland, in the House of Peers.

"Z. A. Z." should address his inquiries to the Keeper of the Royal Academy.

"R. B. H. S." The prices of the Pit and Gallery Stalls are fixed.

"Cavendish"—Either Pacha (Paka) or Pasha.

"A Subscriber," Wales. There are three newspapers published in the Isle of Man: the Manx Liberal, Manx Sun, and Mona's Herald.

"Fix" Ellesmere Port. Consult any Almanack.

"M. S. J."—The York Hotel, Dover.

"De Courcy" should try a weak solution of gum in water.

"Appointment in the Revenue."—The branch is not stated.

"J. M. E.," Upper Gower-street.—We shall be glad to see the Sketches.

"Enquirer."—"Taylor's Shorthand, improved by Harding;" or "Pitman's Phonography."

"G. P. L.," Jersey.—See Illustrations of the Channel Islands in a former Number of our Journal.

"H. Y.," Stamford, should appeal to the Income Tax Commissioners.

"H. N."—A second notice should, doubtless, be issued.

"C. W." The lines on the lamented death of Mr. Haydon do not reach our standard of poetical merit.

"H. G.," Swindon.—We should write Dutch Pink without a hyphen. Imitating, not merely writing, another person's name is forgery.

"An Anxious Enquirer," Flowerdale.—We cannot speak as to the professional respectability of the parties in question.

"Balæna."—The Newport mentioned, in the account referred to by "Balæna," is in Shropshire. We have never met with any well authenticated account of a pike weighing 100 lbs. Conrad Gesner, in his "Natural History," tells a story of a pike weighing 350 lbs. having been caught at Heilbron, in 1497. Mr. Yarrell, in his "History of British Fishes," speaks of a pike weighing 61 lbs., caught in Loch Ken, in Galloway; and of another, weighing 79 lbs., caught in Loch Lomond: he does not, however, cite any authority for the fact. The weight, 140 lbs., of the Salmo Amethystinus of Lake Huron, we consider to be merely an on dit; but we remember having read a detailed account of the capture of a species of salmon weighing 90 lbs. in the Straits of Makinnac, at the head of the same lake. A salmon weighing 83 lbs. was sold by Mr. Groves, of Bond street, about 1821. A salmon weighing 69 lbs. was caught in the Tweed, with the rod, by the Earl of Home.

"Amy." "Hamilton's Catechisms;" and then read the great theorists: the eldest is the best player of the names specified.

"Louisa."—Miss Masson no longer sings in public. Miss Bassano gives Singing Lessons. The son of a Clergyman is eligible, and two brothers may enter together.

"Mario." We have no register of his birth.

"Bs."—"Ultramontane" is a term applied to countries which lie beyond the mountain: thus, France, with regard to Italy, is an ultramontane country.

"W. P.," Kingsland, is thanked.

"G. B."—We are not aware of the circumstance.

"A Constant Reader" may learn the price of Wood Engraving Tools at Fenn's, Newgate-street.

"A. B. Z." "Valerius," a Roman story, is by Mr. J. G. Lockhart.

"A. A. C." A few more fine Engravings from this Season's Exhibitions will appear in our Journal.

"R. J. E." The question is beset with difficulties.

"Elise," St. Heliers.—The Portrait of the Lady named has been appended to more than one of her works.

"A Constant Reader."—The address of the Master-General of the Ordnance is 86, Pall Mall.

"A Three Years' Purchaser" had better apply to a Solicitor.

"J. P.," Portsmouth.—"The Book of the Farm; or the Farmer's Series," published by the Useful Knowledge Society.

"H. S. M.," Fairlie.—See the little work entitled "The Language of Flowers."

"W. C.," Newport. Declined.

"J. E. R." is thanked; but we have not room for the "Dissuasions."

"P. P." The copyright of the Picture suggested has already been disposed of to a Print-publisher.

⁂ COMPLETION OF VOL. VIII. OF THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. With our Number for Next Week will be presented to our Subscribers, Gratis, the Title-Page and Indexes to Vol. VIII., with a Chronology of the Remarkable Events of the last Six Months.

BOOKS RECEIVED.—Soyer's Cookery.—Leontine, by Mrs. Maberly.—The Plough, Vol. 1.—Hints on Angling, by Palmer Hackle, Esq. Bedford's Chart of Westminster Abbey.—History of the Punjab and the Sikhs.—Voices from the Crowd, by Dr. Mackay.—The Parlour Novelist: Clarence. James's Works, Vol. 8: Darnley.—The European Library: Guizot's Lectures on Civilisation, 2 vols.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 4, 1846.

THE NEW WHIG MINISTRY.

IN our late edition, last week, we were enabled to announce that it was the intention of Sir Robert Peel to resign, in consequence of his defeat upon the Coercion Bill. By the advice of Sir Robert Peel, her Majesty sent for Lord John Russell, to confer with him upon the formation of a new Administration. Lord John Russell accordingly proceeded to Osborne House, to receive her Majesty's commands. The noble Lord returned to Chesham-place on Wednesday afternoon, and, after a very brief delay, his Lordship succeeded in forming his Ministry. We are indebted to the Times of yesterday for the following account of this important event:—

With a promptitude and a facility that contrasts strangely with the protracted and fruitless negociations of last December, Lord John Russell's Ministry is already arranged. Our readers may depend on the following list:—

THE CABINET.

Lord Chancellor	Lord Cottenham
President of the Council	Marquis of Lansdowne
Lord Privy Seal	Earl of Minto
Home Office	Sir George Grey
Foreign Office	Viscount Palmerston
Colonial Office	Earl Grey
First Lord of the Treasury	Lord John Russell
Chancellor of the Exchequer	Mr. Charles Wood
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster	Lord Campbell
Paymaster-General	Mr. Macaulay
Woods and Forests	Viscount Morpeth
Postmaster-General	Marquis of Clanricarde
Board of Trade	Earl of Clarendon
Board of Control	Sir John Hobhouse
Chief Secretary for Ireland	Mr. Labouchere
Admiralty	Earl of Auckland
Secretary at War	Mr. Fox Maule

NOT OF THE CABINET.

Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland	Earl of Besborough
Commander-in-Chief	Duke of Wellington
Master-General of the Ordnance	Marquis of Anglesey

We believe we may say that Lord John Russell has spared no pains to increase its strength by the addition of new elements. On receiving her Majesty's commands to form a Ministry he sought an interview with Sir Robert Peel. The ex-Premier received him with every sign of cordiality, gave him a general promise of assistance, and undertook that he would not oppose any measures Lord John might bring forward, simply because they proceeded from that quarter. To this he added expressions, the force of which may have been overrated, but which implied the absence of all wish for a return to power. On this, it is said, Lord John ventured to ask for what he considered a fair pledge of Sir Robert's sincerity. He requested that the ex-Minister would acquiesce in three of his late colleagues, whose names our readers will probably anticipate—Lord Dalhousie, Lord Lincoln, and Mr. Sidney Herbert, accepting seats in the new Cabinet.

To this Sir Robert Peel is stated to have replied, that he felt unwilling to interfere in so delicate a matter, that he would offer no opposition, but could certainly not recommend a step which would be liable to unfavourable comment, as indicating a too great tenacity of office on the part of those youthful statesmen.

Lord John Russell returned on Wednesday from Osborne-house, charged with an expression of her Majesty's wishes that the Duke of Wellington would still continue in command of the army. To this request his Grace yielded a dutiful compliance, in conformity with his views under somewhat similar circumstances in [illegible]. At the same time he said that he considered his political life now ended, and that he should now never open his lips in Parliament, except on subjects connected with his office. Lord John Russell hereupon felt himself encouraged to make the same request he had previously made with imperfect success to Sir Robert Peel. The Duke at first returned much the same answer as his late colleague. He was subsequently, however, induced to give his consent to a letter, of which Lord John sent copies to the above-mentioned three members of the retiring Cabinet. Their replies left Lord John Russell no hope of their assistance as members of his Government—for the present at least.

IF the "fifty-four, forty" men of the United States are strong even in a remote proportion to the noise they have made in Congress and elsewhere, then is the case of President Polk desperate, and his chances of being a second time elected, infinitely small. If he traded on the fury of the war party, the "whole ticket-men," the everlasting smashers of all things British, he is bankrupt of political capital: the good sense of the bulk of the citizens of America has defeated him, and he has done at last what he should have done at first, and what everybody foresaw must be done—accepted that settlement which seems a fair and equitable compromise. It is the penalty attached to extreme declarations, that the force of events often compel those who make them to recede from their position, with some appearance of discomfiture. If this is, to some extent, the case with the American Government at present, the fault is their own, for having imported into the Cabinet the froth and fustian of the Hustings, and indited State papers, or what seemed such on this side the Atlantic, with the sound and fury of Election harangues. No Government should be made accountable for the rashness and absurdity of some of those who may support it: but the bombast and blasphemy (we will not quote the speech we allude to, which disgusted every Christian who read it) that were uttered on this question, have never been equalled, except, perhaps, by some of the effusions of the Jacobin Club in Paris, in the maddest period of the Revolution; they were, to use the mildest epithet of blame, extremely foolish; and in this some consolation was to be found; it was impossible such men could represent the judgment and practical good sense of the American people. So it has proved; the press of both countries, has been the truest index of public opinion; and, in the United States, was far more moderate in tone, apparently conducted with more statesmanlike wisdom, than was exhibited by the Government itself. From the beginning of the agitation we have always affirmed that a war between two nations so closely allied as England and America, about a piece of barren territory, not worth, as Sir Robert Peel observed on Monday, a month's war expenditure, was a thing too monstrous to be possible: we were sure there must exist a strength of public opinion sufficient to make it an impossibility. Wars of boundary are essentially wars of barbarism; next to them come wars of succession; we hope mankind has seen the last of both: blood and gold enough has been wasted in conflicts on the questions, What is to be governed? and Who is to govern it? It were sad indeed if two of the most advanced nations of the world should fall back into the old madness of the Edwards and Henrys. In the absurdity of the war we had the strongest hopes of the continuance of peace, and we are most happy to find we are not disappointed. The Senate has accepted the "ultimatum" of the English Government, making the parallel of 49 deg. the boundary, with the navigation of the Columbia, free to both parties. Taking the propositions that at different times have been made on each side, we believe this will be found a fair and satisfactory arrangement. we may now go on as usual; cotton may be grown, and sold, and spun, witout apprehensions that some sudden act might have raised the "blood-boltered" spirit of war to stand like a monster between the two nations, forbidding all contact save for mutual destruction.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

IBRAHIM PACHA.

On Monday, at half-past ten, the Pacha and suite left Mivart's to attend the review in Hyde Park. His Highness was attired in the same splendid uniform that he wore on the occasion of the inspection of the troops in St. James's Park, soon after his arrival in this country. He rode a beautiful piebald charger, which was caparisoned with a superb Imperial General's horse furniture. The Pacha and party returned to the hotel at two o'clock, and was loudly cheered by a large concourse of persons. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge called on the Pacha in the afternoon. The Pacha dined at his usual early hour, and afterwards went out with Sami Pacha and suite. He visited the western suburbs, and saw the ascent of the balloon at Cremorne gardens. His Highness was subsequently to honour the Countess Poulett, by his company at her Ladyship's ball.

At two o'clock on Tuesday, his Highness, attended by Major C. Dickson, and accompanied by Sami Pacha, Colonel Bonfort, and M. Nubart, left Mivart's Hotel for Fulham, there to embark on board the state barge of the Lord Mayor. The water bailiff and other officers of the corporation received the Pacha and suite at the place of embarkation with every mark of distinction. The Pacha and the several members of his suite witnessed the aquatic sports of the Thames regatta, with evident gratification. Having remained nearly two hours, his Highness and suite departed for Sion House, to attend the Duchess of Northumberland's fête champêtre. His Highness reached Sion House at six o'clock. He closed his visit shortly before eight o'clock, and arrived at his hotel at nine o'clock. The Marquis of Anglesey called on the Pacha during his absence yesterday afternoon. On his Highness' return he complained of a slight cold, and in consequence retired early to rest.

On Wednesday, at noon, Colonel P. Campbell, R.A., had an interview with the Pacha, at Mivart's Hotel. At one o'clock Ibrahim Pacha, attended by Major C. Dickson, and accompanied by Colonel Bonfort and M. Nubart, proceeded by way of Pimlico to the Chelsea Waterworks. On the arrival of the party they were received by the principal officials of the company, who attended on the Pacha during the inspection of the works. His Highness was shown the basins, and the enormous filterers, when he partook of a glass of the purified water. He expressed himself pleased by his visit, and on retiring repaired to the Royal Botanical Gardens, in the Regent's Park, where he arrived at half-past two o'clock. His Highness and suite shortly after dined, and for the remainder of the evening the Pacha enjoyed his cigarette and hoka in the beautifully arranged garden in the rear of his apartments.

RETURN OF THE COURT.—Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the royal suite, returned to Buckingham Palace, on Thursday, from Osborne House, Isle of Wight.

WINDSOR. Thursday evening. (From our own Correspondent).—Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent will take her departure to-morrow, from Frogmore, for Clarence House, St. James's. It is rumoured here, that the Court will probably visit Windsor in the course of the ensuing week, but, from the present unsettled state of affairs in the political world, the period of her Majesty's stay at Buckingham Palace is extremely uncertain. The whole of her Majesty's private Band, who reside at Windsor, have been commanded to be in attendance at Buckingham Palace, this evening, in the event of their services being required.

LADY JOHN RUSSELL.—Lady John Russell, who has been suffering from delicate health, is considerably better. Her ladyship and the youthful members of Lord John's family are staying for a short time at Mr. Arthur Eden's villa, at Wimbledon.

PARTY AT BEAUFORT HOUSE.—The Duke and Duchess of Beaufort gave a magnificent entertainment on Wednesday evening, at Beaufort House, to their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge and the Duchess of Gloucester. The Duchess afterwards had an assembly, at which a brilliant circle of the aristocracy congregated.

DEPARTURE OF SIR ROBERT PEEL FOR DRAYTON MANOR.—Sir Robert Peel, Lady Peel, and family, left town on Wednesday for his seat, Drayton Manor.

ARISTOCRATIC MARRIAGE.—The preliminaries for the marriage of Lord Seaham and Miss Edwards are nearly settled, and the nuptial ceremony will take place at no distant day. Lord Seaham is the son of the Marquis of Londonderry by his second marriage, and is heir to the large estates of his maternal grandfather, the late Sir Henry Vane Tempest. The English Earldom of Vane will also descend to Lord Seaham on the demise of his father. Miss Edwards is daughter to Sir John Edwards, who formerly represented a Welsh constituency in Parliament.

NEW TITLES.—The Gazette of Tuesday has the following official notifications, dated Whitehall, June 27: The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignities of Viscount and Earl of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto the Right Honourable Lord Francis Egerton, and his heirs male, by the names, styles, and titles of Viscount Brackley, of Brackley, in the county of Northampton, and Earl of Ellesmere, of Ellesmere, in the county of Salop. The Queen has also been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a Baronet of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to the following gentlemen, and their respective heirs male: viz. The Right Hon. Thomas Frankland Lewis, of Harpton Court, in the county of Radnor. John Somerset Pakington, of Westwood Park, in the county of Worcester, Esq. John Gladstone, of Fasque and Balfour, in the county of Kincardine, Esq. William Feilden, of Feniscowles, in the county palatine of Lancaster, Esq. William Verner, of Verner's bridge, in the country of Armagh, and of Inismagh, in the county of Tyrone, Esq. Sir Moses Montefiore, of East Cliff-lodge, in the Isle of Thanet, and county of Kent, Knight.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE LICENSED VICTUALLERS' SCHOOL.

Among the many charitable institutions of the metropolis, the Licensed Victuallers' occupies a very prominent station. Its funds are distributed carefully, a great many children are educated and comfortably provided for; and, altogether, it is really a most excellent Institution.

The anniversary dinner in aid of the School took place on Wednesday at the White Conduit Tavern, Pentonville, and was attended by upwards of 2000 members and friends of the Institution. Sir Felix Booth, Bart., was announced to have presided, but he was compelled to be absent from severe indisposition; and considerable éclat was given to the meeting by the attendance of the Lord Mayor, who very kindly consented to preside, although necessarily a very short notice was given. The children educated at the school in Kennington were in attendance; and, after dinner, two of the senior boys recited a poetical address, suitable to the occasion, and the girls sang an appropriate hymn. The children afforded a most gratifying spectacle.

After the usual loyal toasts had been given,

The Lord Mayor, in proposing "Prosperity to the Licensed Victuallers' School," made a very sensible and feeling speech, in which he alluded to the fact that £132,246 19s. 8d. had been distributed from the permanent fund of the Incorporated Society of Licensed Victuallers, in weekly allowances; and said that Ibrahim Pacha, if he were present, could scarcely believe such a statement. That distinguished stranger, had he been there, would have made himself acquainted with the foundation, administration, and progress of this valuable Institution; and the object which he had in view must thereby have been greatly aided, namely, the good of his own country and the benefit of his own people. The amount distributed (his Lordship continued) from the subscription fund was £113,645 7s. 5d., and from the charity-box £4704 4s. The total amount was no less than £250,596 11s 1d. His Lordship spoke in very warm terms in commendation of the Institution; and, in replying to the toast of his health, which was proposed by Mr. D. W. Wire, he mentioned that the subscriptions up to that evening had amounted to nearly £2000. The amount was afterwards stated to be £1902 10s., including a donation of 20 guineas from the Lord Mayor.

Mr. Williams took the chair subsequently, the Lord Mayor being obliged to retire at an early hour.

From the report of the society, it appears that the total number of children admitted into the school since its establishment is 1061, of which 251 have been apprenticed, 447 sent to service, and 206 taken by relations and friends. There are now in the school 121, and the Governor and Committee have announced that they intend to admit 25 children in addition to the number already mentioned in the establishment.

RAILWAY TERMINI IN THE METROPOLIS.

The Commissioners appointed to investigate the different projects for establishing railway termini within the metropolis, have published a very long Report, containing their views upon the subject. These views are embodied in the following summary:—

1. That on the north of the Thames no railway now before Parliament, or projected, be permitted to come within the limits described in our instructions.

2. That if at any time hereafter it should be deemed advisable to admit railways within those limits, this should be done in conformity with some uniform plan, carefully laid down under the authority of your Majesty's Government, and sanctioned by the wisdom of Parliament; and that under no circumstances should the thoroughfares of the metropolis, and the property and comfort of its inhabitants be surrendered to separate schemes, brought forward at different times, and without reference to each other.

3. That on the south of the Thames, either the North Kent Railway be permitted to have its terminus in Union-street, and to join the terminus of the South-Western Railway, at Waterloo-bridge; or, that the South-Eastern Railway be permitted to extend to Waterloo-bridge; accordingly as one or other of these lines may, upon a comparison of their general merits, receive the sanction of Parliament, and subject, in either case, to the conditions which we have pointed out in this report.

4. That the extension of the South Western Railway to London-bridge be permitted, subject to the conditions pointed out in this report.

5. That a communication between the railways approaching London on the north and south sides of the river, and a connexion between them and the docks, being desirable, this should be effected by a railway encircling the metropolis, crossing the Thames at some point west of Vauxhall-bridge, and not coming within the limits of our inquiry on the north side of the river.

RECEPTION OF SIR ROBERT PEEL ON MONDAY NIGHT.—During the brief sitting of the Houses of Parliament, on Monday night, a large concourse of persons assembled in front of the House of Commons, anxious to learn the determination of Ministers. On the adjournment of the House of Commons considerable impatience was manifested by the crowd for the appearance of Sir R. Peel. The right hon. Baronet, however, did not leave the House by the members' entrance, but by the passages which afford a means of exit through Westminster-hall into Palace-yard. This circumstance having been communicated to the crowd (which included many well-dressed persons), they rushed in a body to Palace-yard, and, on their arrival there, Sir Robert, leaning on the arm of Sir G. Clerk, was just emerging from the hall. The ex-Premier was saluted with loud and enthusiastic cheering, and a large portion of the crowd closing round him accompanied him through Parliament-street to his residence in Whitehall-gardens, cheering him repeatedly during his progress. Sir Robert seemed much gratified at his reception, notwithstanding the somewhat rude and inconvenient pressure to which he was subjected by some of his more eager and enthusiastic admirers.

THE LIVING OF ST. PANCRAS.—The Rev. Thomas Dale, Vicar of St. Bride's, is to be presented to the vicarage of St. Pancras.

THE NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT.—Another Report has been issued by the Committee appointed by the House of Lords to inquire into the building of the two Houses of Parliament, in which they state that, after hearing evidence, the Committee are of opinion that the only impediment to the preparation of the new House of Lords for the commencement of the Session of 1847, arises from a delay in the arrangement for warming and ventilating the apartment according to the views of Dr. Reid. That the architect has expressed his willingness to undertake the warming and ventilation of the new House upon a plan of his own, and on his own responsibility. That the Committee are convinced that, if this proposal of the architect be not accepted, the occupation of their new House by the Peers will be postponed to an indefinite period.

ANNIVERSARY OF HER MAJESTY'S CORONATION. Sunday was the eighth anniversary of her Majesty's Coronation. In honour of the day, the Royal standard was hoisted in the usual places, and, at one o'clock, salutes were fired from the Park and Tower guns, at Woolwich, Tilbury Fort, &c. The vessels in the river were also gaily dressed in colours.

REJOICINGS AT THE PASSING OF THE CORN-BILL.—The provincial journals contain accounts of various manifestations of public joy at the passing of the Corn-Bill. Flags and banners were exhibited, with appropriate inscriptions, the bells were rung, and in some places barrels of ale were distributed to the crowd.

THE LEAGUE. A meeting has been held at Manchester, at which most of the leading members of the League were present; and, after some discussion, it was agreed that the act of dissolution should be postponed, to be rendered coeval, perhaps, with the expiry of the Corn-laws, in 1839; but that its operations and functions should at once be suspended, and that its affairs should be wound up with as little delay as possible. It was also distinctly understood that, in case of future emergency, the League should be called into active operation without delay, otherwise, the suspension of its operations to continue till its dissolution. A resolution to this effect was then passed. It was then agreed that there should be no further call beyond the twenty per cent. paid by the subscribers on their respective subscriptions. It is stated that Mr. Cobden expressed himself in favour of an immediate dissolution of the League.

RELEASE OF BONDED CORN UNDER THE NEW ACT AT LIVERPOOL.—Monday, being the first of the operation of the new measures, was a busy day at the Liverpool Custom-house. The duty received up to the close of the day, was about £35,000 above the daily average receipts from this source. A very large quantity of grain of all sorts—say upwards of 200,000 quarters—must, therefore, have come at once into the market in Liverpool alone.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

Royal Assent.—Their Lordships met at four o'clock, when the Royal Assent was given by commission to the following and several other bills:—The Sugar Duties Continuance Bill, the Superintendent of Convicts Abolition Bill, the Railway Companies Dissolution Bill, the Friendly Societies Act Amendment Bill, the Exeter and Exmouth Railway Bill, the Glasgow Harbour Railway Bill, the Dundee and Arbroath Extension Railway Bill, the Great North of Scotland (Eastern Extension) Railway Bill, the Edinburgh and Northern Extension Railway Bills, the Scotch Grand Junction Extension Railway Bill. The Lords Commissioners were, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Earl of Haddington, and the Earl of Shaftesbury.

On the motion of Lord Brougham, the Bankruptcy Acts Amendment Bill was read a third time and passed.

A few petitions were presented, and the House adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

THE NEW MINISTRY.

The House met again to-day, and the Speaker took the chair at a quarter before four.

Mr. Tufnell then immediately moved for new writs for the following places, in the room of those members who now form part of the Government, and who having accepted office, have necessarily vacated their seats.

For London, in the room of Lord John Russell, who had accepted the office of First Lord of the Treasury.

For Tiverton, in the room of Lord Palmerston, who had accepted the office of Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

For Devonport, in the room of Sir G. Grey, now Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department.

For Halifax, in the room of Mr. C. Wood, who had accepted the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer.

For the West Riding of Yorkshire, in the room of Lord Morpeth, who had accepted the office of Chief Commissioner of Woods and Forests.

For Taunton, in the room of the Right Hon. Henry Labouchere, who had accepted the office of Steward of the Chiltern Hundreds.

For Nottingham, in the room of Sir J. C. Hobhouse, Bart., now President of the Board of Control.

For Edinburgh, in the room of the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay, Paymaster-General of her Majesty's Forces.

For Worcester, in the room of Sir T. Wilde, now her Majesty's Attorney-General.

For the borough of Dungarvan (Ireland), in the room of the Right Hon. Richard Lalor Sheil, who had accepted the office of Master of the Mint.

For Perth, in the room of the Right Hon. Fox Maule, who had accepted the office of Secretary at War.

The writs were all ordered to be issued.

For Plymouth, in the room of Lord Ebrington, appointed a Lord of the Treasury.

For the Leith District of Burghs, in the room of Mr. A. Rutherfurd, appointed Lord Advocate of Scotland.

For Kirkcudbright, in the room of Mr. T. Maitland, appointed Solicitor-General for Scotland.

A long discussion took place respecting the Irish Great Western Railway (Dublin to Galway) Bill. Mr. French moved the re-committal of the Bill, but the proposition was rejected by 138 to 26.

Some private business was then disposed of, and at a quarter to eight o'clock, the House adjourned till Monday.

Privy Council.—No summonses for a Council for the reception of the seals of office from the members of the late Administration have yet been issued, but it is expected that her Majesty will hold a Privy Council on Monday next, when the new Ministers will be formally installed into office by the delivery of their respective seals.

The Testimonial to Mr. Cobden.—A meeting was held on Thursday, in the Town Hall, Manchester, to originate a tribute to Mr. Cobden, and it was attended by some of the most wealthy men of that town. The Mayor of Manchester presided; and a resolution that a testimonial be raised was moved by Mr. R. H. Greg, seconded by Mr. Brown, of Liverpool; and carried. A committee to carry the resolution into effect was then adopted, but no sum was named as the amount. Several letters read, however, expressed a hope that it would not be less than £100,000, and Mr. John Brookes, in a letter naming that sum, requested to have his name put down for £500. Alderman Potter announced a donation towards the testimonial from J. and L. Phillips and Co., of £1000.

Opening of the Leeds and Bradford Railway.—The formal opening of this railway took place on Tuesday last. The event occasioned an immense assemblage of people to witness the departure of the trains (three in number), the commencement of an era by which two of the most important towns in Yorkshire are to be more closely linked together. Soon after two the trains returned to Leeds, and a little before four the directors and other parties interested in the line sat down to a sumptuous dinner in the Music Hall. G. Hudson, Esq., occupied the chair, and John Waddingham the vice-chair.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

It is well known to all who have watched late events, that a spirit of insurrection, similar to those deep inward volcanic workings which periodically agitate the earth, has lately prevailed all over the Continent—beginning in Poland, traversing Germany, and scarcely at this moment extinct in Spain and Italy. France for once felt no responsive throb; but now, as I predicted, the King and leading Minister, in consequence of the change of Administration in England, experience something like that uneasy lurch which captains and pilots of political vessels know to portend a storm. It is true some of the season-sick Ministers are quitting Paris for the recovery of their health, where the heat has been so great and the change of costume so absolute, that you would think yourself in the streets of Jamaica, amongst the planters. M. Cunin Gridaine, the Minister of Commerce, is going to Vichy, where his cure will, perhaps, be marred by the probable presence of the Arch Enemy, M. Thiers; the Minister of the Navy carries his gout to Aix, in Savoy; and M. Duchatel, the future Premier of France, goes to the more fashionable and distant waters of Ems; whilst the Minister of Finance is content with the home salines of Coutrexeville. But the King, daily more violently attacked as maintaining against the Charter the Presidency of Council; and M. Guizot, who has always thought his fate linked to that of Sir Robert Peel, are too anxious about the example set in England, to quit the Capital. As to the gayer part of the political and diplomatic circles, their favourite topic, this week, has been the judicious foresight of Lord Normanby. They assert that the noble Marquis, relinquishing the future government of Ireland, having made an amicable arrangement with Lord Beauvale, and got a positive promise of the Embassy to the Tuileries from Lord John Russell, came over a fortnight since, on his way to dispose of his palazzo at Florence; and that in Paris, he got himself shown over the official edifice which serves as an hotel to the English Embassy. The noble English residents laughed at the openly professed intentions of Lord Normanby at that time, which they considered as mere bantering on his part, but which now assumes a most startling and original air of veracity. The elections form, however, the most absorbing topic, and give rise to the oddest tricks and contrivances. It is but three days since that Mr. C—, a very prim, slim, and effeminate member of the Chamber of Deputies, was summoned to his native district by a letter, supposed written in the name of his friend the Mayor, and telling him his election was perilled from some misrepresentations made as to his votes and opinions, and demanding his immediate presence. The Deputy immediately took his departure; not, however, before the wag who had written the aforesaid epistle had managed to affix to the coat of the very short-sighted gentleman an inscription in which Fragile figured in letters a hand's breadth. You may imagine the laughter of the rustic electors, duly apprised of the trick, and summoned to meet him, and the rage of the Deputy. Mr. M— B—, another anxious aspirant to re-election, has resorted to rather novel means of propitiating the electors. He travels about on his canvass with a magnificent chariot, splendidly emblazoned, and with no less elegant servants, horses, and harness; and this carriage is followed by a gig, a taxed cart, a saddle horse, and a donkey. In the towns, he flashes conviction on the electors in his carriage; proportioning his means of conveyance to the position and prejudices of his constituents, and riding into the poorest villages, as he would into Jerusalem, his asinine steed, exciting less envy and testifying his humility and sympathy with the poor. Nowhere is the opinion of your quondam statesman, Canning, "that it is better to appeal to the nonsense than the sense of the country," more deeply felt and practised than with us.

You are gradually absorbing in London, all our great visitors, and many of our celebrities. Amongst the latter may be mentioned the celebrated Théophile Gautier, who has written successful dramas, travels, feuilletons, and ballets enough to fill a library. At the very moment they are trying to give a new charter and constitution to the Théatre Français, Rachel leaves us for your shores, and hurries on the ruin of the Institution. On her way to you, she has packed a little matter of 105,000 francs profits; at Liege she earned 2[illegible],000 francs, at other Belgian towns in proportion. She is absolutely the only tragic actress left in France. As to actresses of high comedy, the last left us in the shape of Mdlle. Plessy, now one of the fairest subjects of the Czar—an unrepentant runaway. It happens unfortunately, that there are no playwrights to compensate by their inspiration for the want of good performers. Another comedy "The Speculators" has just failed at the Théatre Français; the country no longer produces us recreative literature, but Roman feuilletons, and poetry of small calibre. No poets of any eagle flight now appear; but the number of self-taught poets [illegible]. At Agen, you find the famous hairdresser poet, Jasmin, singing in the language of the ancient troubadours; at Nismes, you have a baker poet, Jean Rebout; at Nevers, Magu, a weaver poet; At Rouen, Beuzerville, a whitesmith; and in the Var Poncy, a plasterer; besides many other poets of the same stamp. This is a literary growth of France which has always been equally rife. The origin of the vaudeville itself is due to a mechanic of the town of Vire, in Lower Normandy, who used to compose stanzas called vaux in old French, to popular airs.

A very amusing instance of the application of geology has taken place here. It had been observed that a great deal of earth and mould of divers colours were nightly deposited near certain bridges of Paris, and the police were puzzled beyond measure at this inexplicable circumstance. At last, a geologist being applied to, said that this earth was from strata at the Eastern Barrier of Paris; and the police, being set on the watch in that direction, found the midnight excavators, who had dug a prodigious hole under the foundations of a house, near the barrier, to introduce into Paris wine, without paying the excise duty.

FRANCE.

The resignation of the Peel Ministry has, of course, created considerable excitement, not to say regret, in Paris. For this event, however, every one was fully prepared, from the result of the division on the Coercion Bill, on the previous Thursday, which was known in Paris by telegraphic despatch on Friday.

On Saturday the Stock and Share Market was much more steady than it had been for several previous days, and there was a decided tendency to a rise, especially in the prices of railway shares.

The Journal des Débats, which is the chief organ of the French Ministry speaks of the fall of Sir Robert Peel with evident regret, but as an event which was unavoidable, and remarks upon the extraordinary circumstance that the very men who were voting against him, could not avoid launching out in his praise. "Each of his adversaries," says the Débats, "before condemning him by his vote, praised him in words, and in a manner demanded pardon of him for the blow which he was about to strike. Mr. Charles Buller, Mr. Sheil, and Mr. Cobden, three of the most important men in the House, thought it their duty thus to justify the vote they were about to give." The Débats then remarks:—"If ever it could be said that the Legislature is not the exact representative of the country, it is assuredly in the present case. It is certain that at the present moment Sir Robert Peel is the most eminently popular man in the whole of Great Britain. The illuminations which are to hail the final abolition of the tax on bread will show on all the buildings of the great towns the name of the great Minister who has left that democratic reform as a legacy to his country. In a few days we may expect to see addresses of congratulation pouring in upon the fallen Minister, and the commercial towns voting him thanks." The Débats concludes by saying that "the successors of Sir Robert Peel can be pointed out at once;" and that "in the list of the new Ministry, Lord John Russell and Lord Palmerston will necessarily occupy the first place." Our contemporary, however, thinks that "it will not be very easy for the illustrious chief of the Whig party to complete his Administration in a way that will satisfy the exigencies of the times and circumstances;" and that the next election may produce unexpected results.

THE UNITED STATES.

AMICABLE SETTLEMENT OF THE OREGON QUESTION.

News of a most important and gratifying character has been received by the Hibernia, viz., the settlement of the dispute about the Oregon territory. A treaty, signed by the representatives of America and England, had passed the Senate, affirming the treaty by a majority of 38 to 12.

The terms of this treaty are officially explained by Sir Robert Peel in his speech on Monday night, to which we refer our readers.

On the 10th ult. President Polk sent a message to the Senate, in its executive capacity, relating to the Oregon question; it enclosed, for the approbation of that body, a form or proposition for the basis of a treaty from Mr. Pakenham. The terms were inadmissible, of course, by Mr. Polk himself, as he has pledged himself irrevocably for "the whole to 54 minutes 40 seconds," but as he wished to save himself from responsibility on the subject, he laid the matter before the Senate for consultation and advice. The Senate debated the subject during the 10th, 11th, and 12th, with closed doors; on the evening of the 12th they agreed, by a vote of 38 to 12, to advise the President to conclude a treaty with the British Government upon the terms offered.

This treaty has happily been concluded, and this vexed question, which threatened to involve war and bloodshed, has been peaceably arranged.

The Correspondent of the Philadelphia North American, writing from Washington, says:—"The message of the President is very characteristic of the man, and of his course as executive. It is neither resolute, patriotic, nor generous in its tone, and he requires a constitutional majority of two-thirds before agreeing to enter upon the formation of a treaty. The whole of the New York papers agree in representing the satisfaction of all classes in the commercial cities as most complete: there was one universal feeling of pleasure at this source of contention being at last removed. Stocks rose some two or three per cent. on the receipt of the first report of settlement on Saturday the 13th. The Senate adjourned on the evening of the 12th over till Monday the 15th, when their vote was formally given to the President, and a treaty entered into forthwith."

The Great Western steamer had arrived at New York after a good passage. The Caledonia steamer had reached Halifax in 12½ days.

The news from the seat of war in Mexico is not important. The next demonstration of General Taylor was to be upon the city of Monterey, some 90 miles from Matamoras. It is the chief city of New Leon, and commands the entrance of the table lands, in the interior of Mexico, through the passes of the Sierra Madre. He expected that he would reach Monterey by the 1st of July, but this the want of the means of transport had rendered impossible. The blockade of Vera Cruz had commenced; the British mail steamers were to be allowed to enter and leave as usual, but they were to carry only specie and letters.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Official despatches have been published, dated Cape Town, April 29, detailing some military operations consequent upon the commencement of hostilities in Kaffirland.

The first engagement took place on the 16th April, on that part of the frontier called Burn's Hill, a missionary station, situated in front of the Gorges of the Amatola Mountains, where the enemy were assembled to the number of about 2,000, all armed with muskets. They were repulsed wherever the troops, under Colonel Somerset, who commanded, could reach them; but after he had retired to an encampment below Amatola, they reassembled in large bodies, and attacked the encampment left at Burn's Hill, under charge of Major Gibson, of the 7th Dragoon Guards, and surrounding his position during the night, Major Gibson, in consequence, sent back for a strong reinforcement, which Colonel Somerset sent immediately on the receipt of the request. However, before the reinforcement arrived, Major Gibson moved upon a drift of the river Keiskama, on the left bank of which the encampment at Burn's Hill was situated, and, being only able to form an advance of rear-guard, left the whole of the line of waggons, containing his ammunition and baggage, unprotected. In this situation they were immediately discovered and attacked by the enemy, who easily cut the line in two, taking out the oxen from one of the waggons and drawing it across the road, thus checking the movement of all behind it. Major Gibson now found himself, with the rear-guard, attacked on all sides by great masses of Kaffirs, and was compelled to retreat to Burn's Hill, and again put his men in position. The advanced guard, with the first division of the waggons, after some hesitation, proceeded to cross the drift of the river, and at this moment Colonel Somerset arrived with reinforcements, which enabled Major Gibson to secure and bring off his ammunition waggons; the enemy had carried off the oxen belonging to the baggage waggons, which were consequently abandoned. The whole force being again united on the right bank of the Keiskama, Colonel Somerset moved towards the Chumie, still followed and harassed by the enemy. Here, on the left bank of the Chumie, he encamped for the night of the 17th.

On the morning of the 18th, he decided on retiring to Block Drift, lower down, and on the right bank of the river. The enemy, to the number of 3,000 men, followed him from the time he left the ground, and made dispositions to attack him, which they soon did, in the rear and on both flanks at the same time. Under these trying circumstances they crossed the river, bringing safely to the right bank 1,800 head of cattle, with their baggage and ammunition waggons, on which the Kaffirs pressed eagerly, as on the preceding day at Burn's Hill. Colonel Somerset closed his despatch from Block Drift, by stating that he had established his camp at that fort, after having given the enemy a severe beating, with very severe loss to themselves. The casualties of this day, during these very difficult and hazardous operations, afford a measure of the Kaffirs' power as an enemy in battle. They amount to one officer wounded (since dead), two men killed, and three wounded. On the 17th, also, when Major Gibson was attacked by so great a body of the enemy, and compelled to fall back on Burn's Hill, abandoning the waggons, one man had his arm broken, and a man was killed. And during the repeated conflicts with the whole of Sandilla's forces among the ravines and woods of the Amatola, on the whole of the 16th, three men were killed and six wounded. In the night attack on Major Gibson's camp, four men were killed and four wounded. The loss of the baggage waggons, under Major Gibson's escort, on the 17th, arose from the movement taking place about an hour and a half too early, in compliance with Colonel Somerset's instructions. No engagement had taken place subsequent to the 18th of April, though the Kaffirs had mustered in considerable bodies, and had entered the colony towards Lower Albany, or in front of Graham's Town, and had succeeded in carrying off cattle. The frontier was looked upon as being in imminent danger; and the Governor, Sir Peregrine Maitland, had proclaimed martial law to be in force over the whole colony.

A subsequent arrival from the Cape of Good Hope has put us in possession of news from the frontier, of several days later date, at which period the Kaffirs and the British continued hostilities, without the most remote appearance of their termination, unless military succour were promptly rendered. The colony is in a most deplorable condition, left as it is to a handful of troops, against hordes of daring barbarians. Indeed, if we may place reliance upon the statement of a Fingoe, who had escaped from the bush, it was the fixed intention of the Kaffirs to make an attack upon Graham's Town. Several engagements had taken place, in the most of which the Kaffirs had been successful. A gallant little affair however occurred at Salem, where the enemy (300 in number) were soundly beaten by the inhabitants, consisting of a few young men, who exhibited the most determined bravery.

Mr. Cobden.—Mr. Cobden will not engage in any public business whatever for the next twelve months or more. He remained in London to vote on the Corn Bill, though advised, for the sake of his own health, by his personal friends, not to do so. Writing to a gentleman in London from Manchester on the 28th of June, he says:—"I have left town for the session; and for a year, at least, the claims of private duties, and the necessary attention to my health, will prevent my taking any part in public life."

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Frankfort Journal of the 26th ult. states that the new Government of Cracow will be composed of three directors. Austria will send Mr. ex-President Schindler; Russia, the ex-Director of Police, Microszewski; and Prussia the Senator Victor Kopft.

A Dorsetshire paper speaks of a wonderful old man, John Edwards, who is upwards of 107 years of age, and lives in a cottage in the Wilton-road, near Salisbury, who was on Thursday (last week) observed at work in a hay-field near his residence.

Mr. John Duncan has just arrived in London from Dahomey, on the West Coast of Africa. Mr. Duncan brings with him the earnest proposal of the King of Dahomey, the most powerful and sagacious chief on the West Coast of Africa, for a treaty for the abolition of the slave-trade.

It is said that Sir R. Peel has made permanent provision for the son of the late B. R. Haydon, Esq., by appointing him to the situation of landing-waiter in the Customs.

An Irish paper asserts that Heki, the New Zealand chief, who has given such opposition to the British authority in that colony, is a native of the county of Tipperary. His real name is Hickey. He emigrated from Ireland some years ago, and was shipwrecked on the coast of New Zealand, and taken into the interior of the island by a hunting party of the natives, and sold as a slave to one of the chiefs, who adopted him as his son, got him tattooed, and gave him his daughter in marriage. On the death of the old chief, his Irish son-in-law was chosen as his successor, on account of his skill in war. Previous to the elevation to the high rank he now holds, he changed his name from Hickey to Heki, the latter harmonizing better with the language of the aborigines.

A letter from Constantinople, dated June 10, says:—"The murderers of Sir Lawrence Jones have been tried at Constantinople. They have not been acquitted, as, according to Mussulman law, though proved guilty, they ought to have been, but, out of compliment to England, have been condemned to three years' imprisonment. In the Turkish Courts, it requires the evidence of two Mussulmans to convict a Mussulman of any crime, and as this evidence was no on this occasion producible—that is by English prosecutors—of course the murderers, though the Greek escort of Sir Lawrence Jones witnessed distinctly against them, and though the property of Sir Lawrence was found on their persons and in their possession, have only been sentenced to a captivity of three years, which may be eventually reduced to one of three months. Had two Mussulmans witnessed against them, they would have suffered capitally. The members of the tribunal declared themselves that they had not a shadow of doubt of their guilt."

A letter from Beaune (France) states that the vines are at present nearly as far advanced as in the warmest years, 1842 for instance. The fall of rain on the 18th and 19th ult. was considered most advantageous for the swelling of the grape, which presents a fine appearance. The hay crop in the same neighbourhood has been abundant, and the corn crops look well.

The Weser and Cologne Gazette states that the projected Constitution for Prussia is at last framed, and would shortly be published. States-General are to be established, and the provincial States are about to obtain some new prerogatives. The States-General are to meet every three years.

The eruption of Mount Hecla still continued, according to the latest accounts of the 15th of April. The pillars of fire rose from three new craters to the height of 14,000 English feet, and were broader than the largest river in the island, the Pierrsen. The lava has already formed several high hills. Pieces of pumice-stone, or scoræ, weighing two cwt., were thrown to a distance of a league and a half. The ice and snow which covered the mountain for many centuries are wholly melted, and the river Rangen has, in consequence, frequently overflowed its banks.

A letter from St. Petersburgh of the 12th June, says:—"The Emperor and Empress left Warsaw on the 9th. The Emperor will remain some time in town at the Anitschkine palace, to take the reins of the Government which he had entrusted to the Grand-Duke, heir apparent, during his absence. The Empress will proceed direct to her beautiful country seat of Yelaguine."

Holland, says a Paris letter, seems about to shake off the species of lethargy in which she has indulged for now a long period. The Dutch fleet, stationed at Flushing, was to be formed into three divisions, and to sail on the 1st of July; the first for North America and the Gulf of Mexico, for the protection of the national interest during the war between the United States and Mexico; the second for Batavia and the Indian Seas; and the third for the Mediterranean (the coast of Egypt and Syria.)

Letters from Athens of the 20th ult. mention that the King and Queen of Greece, with Prince Wasa, had returned from their tour in the Morea. Brigandage had increased to an alarming extent in Greece. The brigands had, at Megara, even stopped the King's horses and baggage, and only delivered them up on receiving all the money the grooms had upon them. It was stated that a despatch had been received by the Russian Ambassador with instructions to follow the course pursued by the English Ambassador. There had been several earthquakes in the country, and it was said that the damage done at Calamata had been considerable.

One of the last Ministerial acts of Sir Robert Peel was the recommendation of Mr. M'Culloch to her Majesty for a pension of £200 for the services he has rendered by his writings on political economy. This act of kindness was entirely spontaneous.

The Levant Mail has arrived with accounts from Constantinople of the 17th, and Malta of the 22nd June. The Sultan had arrived at the Therapea from Varna by sea, and his presence was the signal for public rejoicings. The Persian dispute had not been settled.

The ceremony of the Coronation of Pope Pius IX. took place on the [illegible]. His Holiness went in great state from Monte Cavallo to the church of St. [illegible]. In his carriage were seated Cardinal Pignatelli, Archbishop of Palermo, and Cardinal Monico, the Patriarch of Venice, and everywhere on his passage he was saluted with the loudest acclamations.

A letter from Rome, of the 18th, says, that when Cardinal Falconnieri came to kiss the feet of the new Pope, his Holiness said to him:—"Your brother is in exile for a political cause; he may return."

Some parts of Sicily have been lately visited by dreadful tornados, which have caused considerable damage to the plantations to the westward of the island, tearing up trees by the roots, and driving everything before them. In a [illegible],000 olive trees only a few dozens are remaining.

A letter from the Hague, dated June 29, says:—"The serious apprehensions that the long-continued drought would do much injury to the standing crops have been happily dispelled by the welcome rains which have fallen in this country and in the neighbouring States. The hot weather has continued in some parts from 30 to 40 days without any interruption, and given occasion to unfavourable reports respecting the corn, and the re-appearance of the disease in the potatoes, which, as far as the neighbouring districts are concerned, we are happy to be able to refute."

The Commerce says that the Duke Decazes will, at Copenhagen, meet the Russian Diplomatist, Count Benkendorff, to lay down the bases of a reconciliation between the Court of the Tuileries and St. Petersburgh, and that the Prince de Joinville and the Duke d'Aumale will shortly pay a visit to the Neva.

An article from Warsaw, dated the 20th ult., and published by the Universal Prussian Gazette, informs us that the Emperor of Russia has expressed his satisfaction at the order which reigns in the capital of Russian Poland, and distributed rewards to the police.

A silk manufactory has just been established in Bruges, by M. Grosse. Only black silks will be manufactured there.

Several of the German journals state that the King of Prussia has finally resolved to convert the meetings of the Provincial States into assemblies of States-General, and to give them certain constitutional powers, such as voting taxes, contracting loans, &c. Nothing official, however, on this subject has yet been published.

SUMMER.

Summer! Summer! glorious Summer!
Father of earth's teeming treasure,
To our northern climes no comer
Half so welcome, King of Pleasure.
Thou o'er-fillest Autumn's measure,
Mantling with the purple vine—
Thou rejoicest rural leisure,
Crowning Ceres' sheaf with blessings,
'Neath the breeze's soft caressings
On the banks of Seine or Rhine.
Glorious Summer!

Lo! thou comest, plenty-freighted!
Glad thy coming to the mower.
Husbandry, with hope elated,
Hails the guerdon of the sower;
Waves the golden grain before thee—
Waves the zephyr's pinion o'er thee.
Far away from regions sterile,
'Whelming flood, Sirocco's peril,
Softly here thy smile may beam
On the Thames' imperial stream.
Glorious Summer!

Summer! Summer! joyful season,
First-born of th' Eternal's smile,
When it linger'd Eden's trees on
Yet unsoiled by serpent's guile.
Light enfolds thee as a vesture,
Graceful languor's in each gesture:
Manna feeds thy dews of morning,
Verdant copse or dale adorning—
Bounteous is thy noontide splendour;
Blest thy twilight, calm and tender
Glorious Summer!

See! with joys begirt, reposes
Flora on her throne of roses
Summer brings her triumph-hour,
Summer greets her every flow'r,
Blushing on the river's border,
Where the rowers, in fair order,
Now commence the manly race
For vict'ry every nerve they brace!
On they fly like swallows skimming,
O'er the waves thy praises hymning—
Glorious Summer!

Summer! Summer! Beauty's daughters
Whilom, 'neath thy sultry glow
Loved to seek the lucid waters,
Where the woodland fountains flow.
Chase-fatigued, there might Diana,
With her nymph attendants, lave;
Or in Po or Guadiana.
Sport along the wooing wave.
Summer! Summer! hear our song
We hail thee well, and wish thee long—
Glorious Summer!

Glorious to Britannia's sceptre,
Summer! now indeed thou glowest—
Peace is Mankind's best preceptor;
Peace and Plenty thou bestowest.
Sleeps the warrior's rusting sabre,
Laughs the swarthy son of labour;
Sails the barque on Freedom's pinion—
Reason sways the Mind's dominion
And hence we pour the votive song,
To hail thee well, and wish thee long:
Glorious Summer!

SUMMER.—DRAWN BY WILLIAM HARVEY.

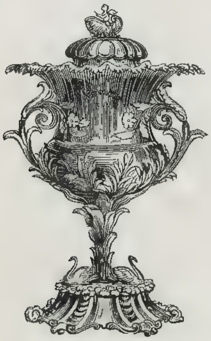
THAMES GRAND REGATTA.

SCULLERS' MATCH.

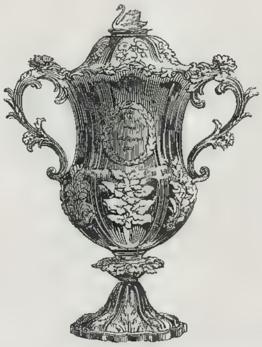
NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE THAMES REGATTA.

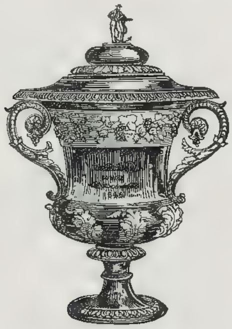
Once more upon the waters"—yesterday in the north, to-day in the south—a step, a pleasant step, from the Tyne once again to the Thames. With the present week commenced the great Metropolitan Regatta, a truly national sport, which, some dozen years since, began well, progressed with every anniversary, and may now be pronounced worthy of its position. With the exception of two minor provincial meetings—the one at Winchester, the other at Carlisle—the turf has done the sporting state no service during this current se'nnight, and, as far as relates to the capital, all has given way to the oar, and well it was entitled to be the general cynosure. No where, surely, has a more gallant pageant, or one more



THE GOLD CHALLENGE CUP.



THE SILVER CHALLENGE CUP.



THE TRADESMEN'S PLATE.

THE REGATTA FAIR, PUTNEY.

characteristic, been seen in modern times. Tournaments, we are assured, were fine things, but if they bore any possible resemblance to the passage of emasculated mopsticks done at Eglinton Castle not very long since, after the best existing authorities upon jousts and chivalry, the lists would be, to the eyes of this generation, "a sorry sight."

Give us a company of hale, hearty youths in their "buff," or as near it as propriety permits, instead of gentlemen got up regardless of expense—all finery and feathers. Put our semi-naked crews into their rakish, mischievous-looking craft, each with "a lurking devil in his eye"—set a troop of knights-errant against them caparisoned cap-a-pie for the tourney, and we'll lay any odds you like the tough ash fashioned like a paddle shall beat a forest shaped like a skewer. As fine a review of proper men as could be wished for was exhibited on the river on the three first days of the present week. The Thames Regatta drew to it, of course, all the "crack" rowing clubs within any negotiable distance. Alma Mater rushed to the goal, as did hosts of other hands, amateur as well as professional; for the apportioning of the prizes had been most judiciously carried out. But, singularly enough, in the accounts of this most popular festival given in the daily papers, no mention whatever was made of the locality of the goal! It might have been at Greenwich, or at Westminster, or at Richmond—not a word was said of its whereabouts.

To begin, therefore, at the beginning, the starting point was just above Putney-bridge, the course being thence up to Hammersmith—save in one instance, when it was down stream. At this spot were assembled the Committee of Management—their guests—the grave City Signiors, headed by the Lord Mayor in the State Barge—Ibrahim Pacha—the Royal Thames Yacht Club Band—in fact, all the lions of the fête. There, too, as the Derby horses in front of the Grand Stand at Epsom, the wager boats gave sample of their quality. They flew backward and forward—their views springing to their devoir—in such wise as we are fain to think our artist has pourtrayed them in his Sketch of one of the Matches. And this hint reminds us how many there were, and of the necessity for at once entering upon an epitome of the sport—to give its details would occupy the whole of our sheet.

On Monday, then, the Amateur Pair-oars Match (we are, of course, speaking of the final and deciding heat in all cases, where there were heats) was won by Messrs. Strutton and Lambert. The Watermen Scullers' Match for fifty guineas, by W. Pocock, a brilliant race; the Watermen's Prize Boat, four-oar Match, by Doyle and Prince; and the Apprentices' Match for a Coat, Badge, and Freedom, by George Pocock. Tuesday, like the preceding day, was very fine, with fresh breezes. It was the grand day of the three, bringing together all the grandees and big-wigs—and a gorgeous spectacle it was. The first contest was for the Amateur Scullers' Match for the Silver Challenge Cup, won by the Messrs. Barton, Cambridge University. The Landsmen's Four-oar Match by the Lambeth crew; the Watermen's Pair-oars Race, for 60 guineas, by R. and T. Coombes; the Strangers' Plate, of 50 sovs, for four-oared boats, open to all the world, by the Oxford watermen; the Champion Scullers' Match, for £25, by Robert Newell; and the chief issue of the day, the Grand Challenge Cup, for eight-oared boats, by the Thames Club, by a liberal three boats' lengths. The last day of this great rowing treat was less propitious in the affair of weather, but the sport was quite first-rate. It began with the Champion Four-oar Race, open to all the world, which the Unity crew won, backed greedily against the field. The Amateur Four-oars Match, for the Silver Challenge Cup, was won, after a close brush with the Oxford University Boat Club, by First Trinity, Cambridge. The Tradesmen's Challenge Plate Match, the Lambeth Aquatic Club carried off. The Eight-oars Scratch Match—prizes, silver medals for the crew—Messrs. Sheppard, Haydes, Hind, Boglehoe, Lambert, Hawk, Jay, Turner, and Penfold, coxswain, won, and this brought (accompanied by certain ceremonials) the Thames Regatta for '46 to a worthy finish. Such scenes as these tell the present condition of a country far more truthfully than the jugglery of politicians; show us a people at their sports and we'll read ye the history of their social position. A state at issue with fortune lacks citizens with open hands and hearts.

THE PRIZES.

The Gold Challenge Cup, open to amateurs with eight-oar cutters, is a handsome silver gilt vessel, with a Cupid rowing in a Nautilus shell on the lid: the body of the Cup is burnished and ornamented with flowers, corn-ears, &c., and supported by swans at the base. It was designed and made by Mr. Prior, of Newington-causeway. Its value is 150 guineas; and it is a very creditable work of art.

The Silver Challenge Cup, for four-oar boats, is ornamented with scrolls and arabesque edges, in chased silver. Valued at 80 guineas; weight, 90 oz.

The Tradesman's Plate, for four-oar boats, is a silver cup burnished, with ornaments in relief, and a sailor leaning on an anchor upon the lid. These two, with the other prizes, were manufactured by Messrs. Makepeace and Watford, of Serle-street.

To each of the crews of the victorious boats was presented a silver oar, in a morocco case; with a little silver rudder to the coxswain; and the little tribute in gold to the fortunate competitors for the Gold Challenge Cup.

Besides the above is a smaller Cup for pair-oar boats, presented by — Layton, Esq.; and a Coat and Badge, with freedom of the City, for watermen's apprentices, by E. Morris, Esq. The amount of prizes, we believe, exceeded 800 guineas.

The Regatta has been a very successful one. The Races regarded with most interest were the great Eight-Oar Match between the Universities and the Thames Crew—the latter winning; the Four-Oar Watermen's Match, open to the world—Newell's crew winning; the Match between Newell, Pocock, and Phelps, for the 25 sovs., in which Newell was again conqueror; and the struggle for the Silver Challenge Cup, in which there was much good rowing, especially between the Trinity Cambridge boat, and the Thetis Club.

THAMES GRAND REGATTA.

FIRST DAY.—MONDAY.

The first day of the Thames Regatta, like the first day of every other meeting which is to be succeeded by two others, is but the prelude to something greater.

There were, however, no less than ten races upon the list, and of these were six which, from the nature of the selection, could not fail of being attractive.

Amateur Pair-Oar Match for Two Presentation Silver Cups.

First Heat.

Mr. Conant, St. John's College, Oxford Mr. Stapylton, Merton College, Oxford	(Purple)	0
Mr. J. Allen, Mr. P. E. Dodd, Ariel Club	(Green)	0

Second Heat.

Mr. Strutton, Mr. Lambert, Thames Club	(Yellow)	1
Mr. Woolstenholme, Mr. Vincent, Trinity College, Cambridge		2

Yellow won by three or four lengths.

Watermen Scullers' Match, for 50 Guineas.

First Heat.

Cooke, Hungerford	(Red)	1
Leach, Lambeth	(Purple)	2

Second Heat.

Pocock, Lambeth	(Light Blue)	1
F. Lett, Lambeth	(Yellow)	2

Watermen Prize Boat Pair Oars' Match.

First Heat.

Williams and Collier	(Black)	1
Doyle and Prince	(Green)	2

Second Heat.

H. Campbell and R. Barrow	(Red)	1
H. Long and Joseph Smith	(Purple)	2

It was a poor race. Red took the lead, and won by several lengths.

Amateur Pair Oars' Match.

Final Heat.

Messrs. Strutton and Lambert	(Yellow)	1
Messrs. Woolstenholme and Vincent	(Light Blue)	2

Won by two lengths.

Apprentices' Match, in one heat, for a Coat, Badge, and Freedom, presented by Evan Morris, Esq.

George Pocock	(Light Blue)	1
C. J. Campbell	(Purple)	2

Three others started. It was a very well contested race, and the young men deserved much credit for their rowing. Won by three lengths.

Watermen Scullers' Match.

Final Heat.

W. Pocock	(Light Blue)	1
Cooke	(Red)	2

Won by half a length.

Final Heat for Watermen's Prize Boat Match.

Doyle and Prince	(Green)	1
Williams and Collier	(Black)	2

Won by a length only.

SECOND DAY. TUESDAY.

Many heavy engagements depended upon the issue of this day's races:—There were no less than twelve upon the list, and of the number eight were first-rate.

Upon a moderate calculation there were, at least, 50,000 persons present. The Bishop of London had given permission for respectable persons to enter his extensive grounds on the Middlesex side of Putney-bridge. The towing path on the Surrey shore, along the course, a mile and a half at least in distance, was almost impassable, whilst the Thames was covered with pleasure-boats filled with company, who partook of the gratification incident to this great national pastime.

The Maria Wood state barge was moored a few yards below the Regatta Committee boats; and, at three o'clock, the Lord Mayor, accompanied by the Sheriffs and civic authorities, took his seat on board of her. Shortly afterwards his Highness Ibrahim Pacha and suite arrived, and were entertained on board the state barge. The Regatta Committee waited upon him with the magnificent prizes for the various victors, and his Highness expressed his admiration of them. After witnessing the three first races, he left in the Lord Mayor's state barge, to join the party given by the Duke of Northumberland at Sion House. He appeared much pleased with the racing, and was received throughout the aquatic course with loud cheers.

Amateur Scullers' Match for the Silver Challenge Cup and Silver Wherry—the latter presented by Messrs. Makepace and Walford.

First Heat.

Barton, Cambridge University	(Pink)	1
Russell, Cambridge University Rooms	(Light Blue)	2

Second Heat.

G. Peacock, Ariel Club	(Green)	1
T. H. Fellows, Leander Club	(Red)	2

Landsmen's Four Oar Match for various Money Prizes

Lambeth Crew	(Green)	1
Hammersmith Crew	(Pink)	2

A splendid race, won by a quarter of a length.

Second Heat.

Wandsworth Crew	(Yellow)	1
Chelsea Crew	(Purple)	2

Watermen's Pair Oar Match for 80 guineas.

First Heat.

John Doubledee, Lambeth Kipping, Hungerford	(Black)	1
Charles Campbell, Westminster-bridge Kelly, Fulham	(Light Blue)	2
Perry, Lambeth Braithwaite, Hungerford	(Stripe)	3

Amateur Sculler's Match.

Final Heat.

Barton, Cambridge University	(Pink)	1
G. Peacock, Ariel Club	(Green)	2

Watermen's Pair-oared Race for 80 guineas.

Second Heat.

R. Coombes, Millbank T. Coombes, ditto	(Red)	1
R. Doubledee, Lambeth T. Goodrum, Millbank	(Green)	2

Strangers' Prize of 50 sovs, open to all the world. Four-oared boats.

Oxford Watermen	(Purple)	1
Bristol Crew	(Red)	2

Champion Scullers' Match, £25. Open to all the world.

Robert Newell, Horslydown	(Red)	1
W. Pocock, Lambeth	(Light Blue)	2

For an instant, only, they were together: although the greatest artistes of the day, they made a very hollow race. Newell, who defeated Clasper, at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, last week, went away with the lead, and did as he pleased with them throughout. Pocock, who took the second place at starting, and kept it throughout, played much such another game with Phelps, who really rowed very hard throughout.

The Grand Challenge Cup, for eight-oared boats.

The Thames Club, London .. 1

R. J. Walmesley, stroke	4. Webb
7. Strutton	3 Blake
6. Playford	2. W. Field
5. Robinson	1. H. Field

Walmsley, steerer.

Eton and Westminster (Oxford) .. 2

W. H. Milman, stroke	4. F. M. Wilson
7. W. A Heygate	3. H. E. C. Stapylton
6. W. Winter	2. P Burton
5. J. W. Conant	1. W. C. Stapylton

Mr. Haggard, coxswain.

Landsmen's Final Heat.

Lambeth	(Green)	1
Wandsworth	(Yellow)	2

Watermen's Pair-oar Match.

Final Heat.

R. and T. Coombes	(Red)	1
R. Doubledee and Goodrum	(Green)	2

THIRD DAY.—WEDNESDAY.

This great aquatic meeting was brought to a close on Wednesday. The sport which had been selected for the finishing day consisted of the great four-oared races, with a "scratch" eight for a finale.

The sport commenced at half-past four o'clock, with

The Champion Four-oar Race, for 100 guineas. Open to all the world.

First Heat.

The Fishermen's Crew, Lambeth .. (Green) 1

J Grant	E. Miney
W. Hosier	R. Hearne

J. Lewis, coxswain.

The Chelsea Crew .. (Purple) 2

G. Sheppard	J. Hammock
T. Holmes	T. Chettels

C. Bikker, coxswain.

Second heat.

The Unity .. (Red) 1

R. Coombes, Millbank (stroke)	R. Newell, Horselydown
W. Pocock, Lambeth	John Phelps, Fulham

D. Coombes, Millbank, coxswain.

The Old Fox .. (Light Blue) 2

R. Doubledee, Lambeth	C. Campbell, Westminster-bridge
J. Doubledee, Lambeth	J. Leach, Lambeth

G. Campbell, Westminster-bridge.

Amateur Four-Oars Match for the Silver Challenge Cup.

First Heat.

Oxford University Boat Club .. 1

Mr. Stapylton	Mr. Wilson
Mr. Conant	Mr. Milman

Hazzard, steerer.

The Ariel Club (green) .. 2

Mr. Peacock (stroke)	2. Mr. Frisby
3. Mr. Dodd	1. Mr. Allen

C. Rowland, coxswain.

Second Heat.

First Trinity Boat Club .. 1

Mr. Vincent	Mr. Woolstenholme
Mr. F. George	Mr. Cloves

Holland, steerer.

The Thetis Club .. 2

Mr. Harrison	Mr. Farrell
Mr. Robinson	Mr. Soames

———, steerer.

The Tradesmen's Challenge Plate Match.

Lambeth Aquatic Club	(Red)	1
Sceptre Club	(Light Blue)	2

Champion Four-Oars Match.

Final Heat.

Unity	(Red)	1
Old Fox	(Light Blue)	2

Amateur Four-Oars.

Final Heat.

First Trinity, Cambridge	1
Oxford University Boat Club	2

Won by two lengths.

A "scratch" match with eight-oar boats wound up the sport. The winning crew were Messrs. Sheppard, Haydes, Hind, Boglehoe, Lambert, Hawk, Jay, Turner, and Penfold (coxswain). The prizes for the crew were silver medals.

After forming a procession, the prizes were presented at French's stand on the cricket ground.

TATTERSALL'S.

Monday.—A tolerably full room, and all the staple events of the season in betting, but on so small a scale that we need only submit the customary list of market prices.

LIVERPOOL CUP.

5 to 1 agst Mendicant (t)
8 to 1 —— My Mary (t)
12 to 1 —— Yardley (t)
15 to 1 agst Cranbrook
15 to 1 —— Satyr
15 to 1 —— As-you like-it
18 to 1 agst Intrepid (t)
18 to 1 —— Robin Burns (t)

GOODWOOD STAKES.

15 to 1 agst The Hero (t)
20 to 1 —— Jack Cade
20 to 1 —— Jenny Wren
25 to 1 —— Plenitude
25 to 1 agst Petitioner
30 to 1 —— Giantess
30 to 1 —— Orion
30 to 1 —— Jonathan Wild (t)
33 to 1 agst Red Rover
35 to 1 —— Pic-Nic
40 to 1 —— Brother to Sir Henry (t)

ST. LEGER.

6 to 1 agst Sir Tatton Sykes
7 to 1 —— Pyrrhus the First (t)
8 to 1 agst Brocardo (t)
21 to 1 —— Fancy Boy

DERBY.

6 to 1 agst Kent's lot (bar Mr. Gratwicke's) (t)
30 to 1 —— Sister to Cobweb c
30 to 1 agst Van Tromp
40 to 1 —— Red Hart (t)
40 to 1 —— King of Naples (t)
40 to 1 agst Old Port
45 to 1 —— Marpessa c (t)
50 to 1 —— Crozier (t)

Thursday.—We again have a list to present that almost rivals the railway column from Capel-court, whether we look at its length or the transactions upon which it is founded. Many were named "but few were backed;" we need not therefore do more than submit the general averages up to the close of the betting.

JULY STAKES.

5 to 1 agst Marmora colt (t)
5 to 1 —— Galata filly (t)
6 to 1 agst Cossack (t)
10 to 1 —— Eldon (t)

LIVERPOOL CUP.

5 to 1 agst Mendicant (t aft. off)
10 to 1 —— My Mary (t do.)
11 to 1 agst Satyr (t)
11 to 1 —— The Conjuror
13 to 1 agst Highwayman
20 to 1 —— Intrepid
20 to 1 —— Rowena

GOODWOOD STAKES.

11 to 1 agst The Hero (t)
15 to 1 —— Camera Obscura (t)
20 to 1 —— Jenny Wren
25 to 1 —— Petit oner
25 to 1 agst Giantess (t)
25 to 1 —— Orion (t)
25 to 1 —— Jonathan Wild (t)
25 to 1 —— Glossy
25 to 1 —— Maynooth
30 to 1 agst Footstool (t)
33 to 1 —— Chimney (t)
35 to 1 —— Bold Archer (t)
40 to 1 —— Bro. to Sir Henry
Even on 12 agst the Field

ST. LEGER.

5 to 1 agst Sir Tatton Sykes
6 to 1 agst Pyrrhus the First (t)

DERBY.

40 to 1 agst Old Port (t)
45 to 1 —— Red Hart (t)
50 to 1 agst The Raiver (t)
50 to 1 —— Gabbler (t)
50 to 1 agst War Egale (t)
50 to 1 —— Epirote (t)

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR JULY.

THE COMIC HISTORY OF ENGLAND. BY G. A. A'BECKETT. NO. I.

[We quote a few passages from this new work, evincing the author's nice perception of the ludicrous.]

Considering it unprofitable to dwell on those points, about which all writers are at loggerheads, we come at once to that upon which they are all agreed, which is, that the first inhabitants were a tribe of Celtæ from the Continent: that, in fact, the earliest Englishmen were all Frenchmen; and that, however bitter and galling the fact may be, it is to Gaul that we owe our origin. We ought, perhaps, to mention that Cæsar thinks our sea-ports were peopled by Belgic invaders, from Brussels, thus causing a sprinkling of Brussels sprouts among the native productions of England. . . . . . The name of our country—Britannia—has also been the subject of ingenious speculation among the antiquarians. To sum up all their conjectures into one of our own, we think they have succeeded in dissolving the word Britannia into Brit, or Brick, and tan, which would seem to imply that the natives always behaved like bricks in tanning their enemies. The suggestion that the syllable tan, means tin, and that Britannia is synonymous with tin land, appears to be rather a modern notion, for it is only in later ages that Britannia has become emphatically the land of tin, or the country for making money. The first inhabitants of the island lived by pasture, and not by trade. They as yet knew nothing of the till, but supported themselves by tillage. . . . . Cæsar, who might have been so called from his readiness to seize upon every thing now turned his eyes, and directed his arms upon Britain. According to some he was tempted by the expectation of finding pearls, which he hoped to get out of the oysters, and he therefore broke in upon the natives with considerable energy. Whatever may have been Cæsar's motives, the fact is pretty well ascertained, that at about ten o'clock one fine morning in August—some say a quarter past—he reached the British coast with 12,000 infantry, packed in eighty vessels. He had left behind him the whole of his cavalry—the Roman horse-marines—who were detained by contrary winds on the other side of the sea, and though anxious to be in communication with their leader, they never could get into the right channel. At about three in the afternoon, Cæsar having taken an early dinner, began to disembark his forces at a spot called to this day the Sandwich Flats, from the people having been such flats as to allow the enemy to effect a landing While the Roman soldiers were standing shilly-shallying at the side of their vessels, a standard-bearer of the tenth legion, or, as we should call him, an ensign in the tenth, jumped into the water, which was nearly up to his knees, and addressing a claptrap to his comrades as he stood in the sea, completely turned the tide in Cæsar's favour. After a severe shindy on the shingles, the Britons withdrew, leaving the Romans masters of the beach, where Cæsar erected a marquee for the accommodation of his cohorts. . . . . . The general who cemented the power of Rome—or, to speak figuratively, introduced the Roman cement among the Bricks or Britons—was Julius Agricola, the father-in-law of Tacitus, the historian, who has lost no opportunity of puffing most outrageously his undoubtedly meritorious relative. . . . . After the usual amount of slaughter, one Wiglaff mounted the throne, which was in a fearfully ricketty condition. So unstable was this undesirable piece of Saxon upholstery that Wiglaff had no sooner sat down upon it than it gave way with a tremendous crash, and fell into the hands of Egbert, who was always ready to seize the remaining stock of royalty that happened to be left to an unfortunate sovereign on the eve of an alarming sacrifice. . . . . Alfred's practice of telling the time by burning candles was ingenious, but could not have been always convenient. It must have been very awkward when a thief got into one of the candles, thus exposing time to another thief besides procrastination. After Alfred's invention of the lanthorn, it might have been worn as a watch, in the same manner as the modern policeman wears the bull's-eye. . . . . Edward, who acquired the name of the Martyr, was accordingly crowned at Kingston, where coronations formerly came off; but he did not long survive, for hunting one day near Corfe Castle, he made a morning call on his mother-in-law, Elfrida, and requested that a drop of something to drink might be brought to him. As Elfrida was offering him the ale in front, her porter dropped upon him in the back, and inflicted a stab which caused him to set spurs to his horse; but falling off from loss of blood, he was drawn—a lifeless bier—for a considerable distance.

VILLAGE LIFE.

In the human bee-hive, there was not a quieter cell than Holmesdale; and, were its "short and simple annals" subjected to the most stringent examination, not an event would be discovered in its secret history, save such ordinary ones as are incident to humble life. Never had the lords of the manor been implicated in high treason, nor had they expressed even a wish to interrupt the Protestant Succession. No plot to take the Tower first, and afterwards rob the Exchequer, could be traced to the "Chequers;" and, whilst the stocks rose and fell, Doctor Faunce sate quietly in his sanctum; and none accused him of being accessory to the ups and downs in public securities. In that pleasant farce called "Love Laughs at Locksmiths," an old gentleman remarks that "they did nothing but die at Tadcaster." Now, in Holmesdale, they properly considered that there were other passages in life more agreeable than the last one; and much love was made, and a little marriage followed. Nor was the village without its gossip and its scandal. If Emma Smith exhibited at church that Sunday a mousseline de laine, and the next one a new Dunstable, Julia Thornhill wondered where the money came from to buy these envied articles? If Julia Thornhill was found whispering with Corporal O'Tool, when the said Julia should have been in bed, why Emma Smith "would say nothing, but she could guess pretty well what these whisperings would end in."—Bentley's Miscellany.

MISS HELEN FAUCIT.

Miss Helen Faucit's impersonations are nature itself; but they are nature as it appears to the poet's eye—nature in its finest and most beautiful aspect. She possesses in an eminent degree the physical requisites for her art—a person graceful and dignified, a voice supremely fascinating in its "most silver flow," yet equal to the expression of the most commanding passion—a face gifted peculiarly with that "best part of beauty, which a picture cannot express—no, nor the first sight of the life,"—a face, wonderful indeed, in the magic and variety of its expression. Along with these she possesses a complete command of all the resources which intelligence gathers from experience, and an obvious familiarity with the treasures of art, which has strengthened and exalted strong natural perceptions of the graceful and beautiful in form and motion. But greater than all these is the spirit by which they are vivified and swayed; the lofty impulses, the commanding powers of thought and feeling, the inspired energy, the pure taste, the exquisite ladyhood of nature which are conspicuous in all Miss Faucit's personations. It is such visions as she presents that bless the dreams of poets; and happy are we, who, in this dull mechanical time, have seen with our waking eyes a reality fair as imagination may picture.—Dublin University Magazine.

HOPE AND HEAVEN. BY THE REV. J. FITZGERALD.

When Care its shadow throws
  O'er life's dull evening, dark'ning all the past,
Hast thou, my soul! no balsam for thy woes?
  In Heav'n thou hast.

When o'er the heart of woe,
  The chilly breezes of despair have swept,
Say, what relieves the bosom's stormy flow?
  'Tis when thou 'st wept.

Yet 'mid the gloom that lowers
  O'er the dark dream of life's eventful even,
A light still lingers in yon cloudy bowers;
  That hope 's in Heaven.

When friends and kindred fall,
  Like fluttering leaves upon th' autumnal blast,
Hast thou no hope 'mid Nature's funeral?
  In Heaven thou hast.

Dolman's Magazine.

STREETS OF LONDON.

Mr. Mackinnon (in his "History of Civilization") dwells with satisfaction on the improved aspect of the public streets. The picture is pleasing. If a second Gay were to give us a second Trivia, he would be obliged to find new actors and new accidents. Mr. Duncombe incurs no peril of being rolled down Holborn-hill in his way to a soiree at the Freemasons' Hall; and Mr. Rogers apprehends the onset of no Mohawk, emerging in all the fierceness of impunity, from the alleys of Pall Mall. But think of the thousands who pine and starve in the very shade of our palaces! Think of the destitute families who toil out the fire of life and hope for their miserable wages of water and bread! Think of the darker industry in evil, of the thousands and tens of thousands, who, in our magnificent thoroughfares and squalid recesses, by night and day ply their sad variety of trade, in plunder and guilt; picking pockets or bartering souls! Alas! is this civilisation? Wonderful changes are still in store; the wheel is going round. The darkness will follow the light; and the evening and the morning will make the day. It is not to be expected that England will escape the vicissitudes of Athens, of Rome, or of Venice. The subterranean fire glows in the deep laboratory of Time. The promise of a fine noon must not deceive us into luxury and indolence. Lisbon had rejoiced in sunshine when the earthquake overwhelmed her. England, with all her beauty of civilisation, may disappear from the eye by a catastrophe not less tremendous, though accomplished by a different operation. Other kingdoms, not less splendid, have been visited by the Divine judgments when they despised the Divine laws; and may even now be seen, by those who look back into the mist and gloom of remote ages, involved in flame and sinking in thunder.—Fraser's Magazine.

THE JESUITS.

The following remarkable and prophetic words were uttered by George de Bronsvel, Archbishop of Dublin, in 1558, respecting the order of the Jesuits: "There is a fraternity which has lately sprung up, under the name of Jesuits, which will seduce many; the members of which, living, for the most part, like the Scribes and Pharisees, will attempt the abolition of all truth. They will succeed; for these people assume a variety of shapes: with Pagans they will be Pagans; with Atheists, Atheists; with Jews, they will be Jews: with Reformers, Reformers;—and all this, for the purpose of learning your intentions, designs, hearts, and inclinations; and so making you like the fool who said in his heart, there is no God. These people are spread over the whole earth; they will be admitted into the counsels of princes, who, however, will not be therefore the more wise; such influence will they gain over them, that, unconsciously, their hearts and most hidden secrets will be revealed. This will happen because they have abandoned the law of God and his gospel, by their neglect of them and their connivance at the sins of princes; nevertheless, God, in the end, for the vindication of his laws, will promptly destroy that society, even by the hands of those who have most supported it and made use of it, so that in the end it will become odious to all nations. They will be in a worse condition than the Jews, they will have no fixed place on the earth, and a Jew will be more favoured than a Jesuit."—The Union Magazine.

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The season terminated on Monday last with the Eighth Concert, and a more glorious programme was never executed. It opened with one of Haydn's finest Symphonies, the No. 8 in E flat. This was superbly performed: the observance of the light and shade was most remarkable. Blagrove had the violin variation, and gained great applause by his rich tone and high finish: a disposition was, indeed, manifested to encore the movement. Pischek then sang the opening air of "Faust," in Spohr's opera of that name—"Liebe est;" omitting, however, the clever recitative. He was rapturously encored, his voice being in excellent order and his falsetto most exquisite. Madame Pleyel was next in rotation, and was well received both by band and audience. She did not create any very great sensation in the introduction; and it is curious that there was similar apathy when she played it at the Bonn Beethoven Festival, in August last: but when she came to the March in Weber's "Con[illegible]" for that was the piece she at once enlisted the sympathies of her hearers; and from that to the end, it was, to borrow Mr. Bunn's saying, "a blaze of triumph." Greater excitement has been rarely witnessed; and she received the unusual honour of an encore in a full concerto. She repeated the last movement, taking it at an unexampled pace, and yet never losing sight of distinctness in the passage-playing. No description can do justice to her style of rendering this "Concert-Stück." To appreciate it fully, she must be seen, with her digital velocity and marvellous energy—tempered, however, with the most delicate and volant touch. The orchestra appeared to be as much in raptures as the company; and all cheered lustily. Mendelssohn's fairy-like and picturesque overture, "A Midsummer's Night's Dream," concluded the first part; and, although objection was taken to the speed, it was our impression that it was never rendered so finely before, not even under the composer's own bâton. The inner parts stood out superbly; and the fluttering and flitting of the fairies, with the "roaring" of Bottom, were as palpable in the mind's eye as if before us with scenic illusion

The C Minor Symphony opened the second part. This was the work that at the first hearing, in 18[illegible]4, provoked the hilarity of an English band, as "wild, discordant, and incomprehensible." We have arrived at more enlightened times, when the Mass in D and the Posthumous Quartets are now comprehended. The opening Allegro, in which the subjects are so curiously distributed amongst the instruments, was carefully rendered. The delicious Andante—one of the most pathetic movements ever penned—was given with impassioned feeling, the violoncelli sustaining the prominent motif magnificently. In the grotesque Scherzo, Costa retarded the time of the trio, and an inc[illegible] the fugue for the basses. The stately finale—certainly for colossal grandeur and gorgeous imagery, without a rival—went off most astounding[illegible], and quite electrified the audience. Amongst the connoisseurs it was universally admitted that the C Minor was never interpreted with more zeal, energy, and precision. After Miss Birch and Pischek had sung the touching duo from Paer's "Agnese"—the opera founded on Mrs Opie's tale of "Father and Daughter," in which Ambrogetti, and, subsequently, Tamburini so distinguished themselves—Sivori played the only Violin Concerto that has been composed by Mendelssohn. It is in three movements, the first being, perhaps, a little too long, and overscored. There is a clever cadence, not at the close, but in the middle of the Allegro. The Andante is a melodious piece of writing, in which Sivori's cantabile expression told well. The finale is a light sparkling theme of the bolero kind, and was admirably hit off by this eminent executant, who was deservedly applauded for his exertions. Miss Birch appeared after this Concerto, to sing Spohr's scena from "Faust," "Si lo sento," which was energetically given; and the scheme closed with Weber's "Der Freyschütz;" the audience stopping to hear this noble overture, and to bestow three cheers on Costa, the Conductor, who has gained such glory for himself and for the Society during the eight concerts of the season.

On retiring to the Director's Room, Mr. Anderson, the Hon. Treasurer, in their name, addressed the gifted Composer: and, after expressing the warmest acknowledgments on the part of the Society for his services, handed over to Mr. Costa, amidst the loudest cheers of the whole band, a handsome salver, with the annexed inscription. —

Presented to Michael Costa, Esq., by the Philharmonic Society of London to mark their estimation of his zeal and exertions, during the Society's Concerts in 1846.

Mr. Costa, in returning thanks, declared that he had only performed his duty after the signal honour of being appointed Conductor of a society which had achieved so much for art and artists. He should look upon the testimonial as one of the most flattering incidents in his professional career. He begged to thank the orchestra most sincerely for their support—without the aid of good troops, no commander could be successful, and he had every reason to be satisfied with the reception he had met with at their hands. With such talents he claimed merit beyond that of enthusiasm for the effective execution of the works of the best masters. Mr. Costa was much applauded at the close of this address, and his health was then drunk with three times three, and one cheer more. Thus has terminated one of the most glorious seasons in the annals of the society. The career of Costa has proved beyond a doubt that he is one of the greatest conductors if not the greatest in the world. When he was first nominated, it was argued that, although he had created the opera orchestra, and rendered it, by his great abilities, unrivalled in Europe, he would be incapable of directing classical music. Our readers are aware that we took the opposite view. We contended that, if Costa could give such a colouring to the flimsy productions of the modern Italian school, he must succeed with the inspirations of the mighty masters in a greater degree. In short, we reduced it to a rule of three question:—If Costa can effect so much with bad music, what must be accomplished with good m[illegible] The very first concert established our case. He has, by the force of genius, beaten down all opposition, and it has been acknowledged by all the factions in London—for music, unfortunately, is split into factions—that the great symphonies and overtures of Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Weber, Cherubini, Mendelssohn, Onslow, &c., have never been so superbly rendered as under Costa's direction. Another enormous advantage gained by the society and art, which is so intimately wound up in its prosperity, is that the vocal music has been accompanied to perfection. As to the concerto players, they have been in the seventh heaven, as, this season, the Conductor established that a real piano was to be obtained from an English band. Individually, we rejoice heartily at Costa's signal triumph, because one of our most favoured and beloved theories that our instrumentalists were the first in the world, if properly conducted, has been gloriously established.

It is now no longer an indiscretion, perhaps, to announce a very interesting fact, which redounds in the highest degree to the honour and musical intelligence of Prince Albert. It was acting on the advice and recommendation of the Prince Consort, that Mr. Costa accepted the post of Philharmonic Conductor. A special debt of gratitude is, therefore, due to his Royal Highness from every true amateur and independent artist, for his tact and knowledge in appreciating so accurately the great qualities of the Neapolitan musician, who, having been naturalised, and so long a resident in this country, will not think it is, to be hoped, of accepting the tempting offers now made to him from the Continent. Mr. Costa has raised two orchestras here to the highest pinnacle of fame, and neither the public nor the profession can afford to lose him.

CONCERTS.

Madame De Dietz and Mdlle. Bochkoltz. Mdlle. De Dietz is pianiste to the Queen of the French and the Queen of Bavaria; and Mdlle. Bochkoltz is a clever vocalist, who coalesced to give one of those guinea ticket matinées, at the residence of a private person, which, attended with little expense, and having a good connection, realises, perhaps, more for the bénéficiaires than high-sounding concerts. This affair took place on Monday morning, at the residence of W. A. Mackinnon, Esq., M.P., 4, Hyde Park-place, and was fashionably attended. Madame De Dietz played with much ability in Hummel's Pianoforte Septuor, aided by Sainton, Willy, Ehrmann, Jarrett, &c. Mdlle. Bochkoltz afforded evidence of her artistical qualities as a singer. Mdlle. Goldberg, Herr Pischek, Herr Goldberg, Madame Hennelle, and Signor Felice Planque, were the other vocalists. Mr. Talexi and Mr Willy, jun., were the accompanyists; and one great merit in the programme was its brevity.

Madame D'Eichthal.—This lady is harpiste to the Empress of Russia and the Queen of Bavaria. She gave a Matinée Musicale on Monday, at 76, Harley-street, assisted by Signor Emeliani as violinist, and Herr Drechsler as violoncellist. Benedict and Mühlenfeldt officiated as accompanyists; and the vocalists were Mdlle. Vera, Mdlle. de Ruppin, Mdlle. Stoepel, Mdlle. Lang, Signori Marras and Ciabetta. The scheme was of the usual quality, and calls for no remark, except to notice the mass of musical mediocrities who rush into this country every season, to the exclusion of our own clever singers.

Miss Macirone This promising composer's songs, for Miss Bassano, Hoelzel and Pischek, have been universally praised in the notices of her Morning Concert by our contemporaries; and we are happy to join in the general eulogium. She has abilities as a pianiste, but scarcely sufficient to justify a public performance. A M.S. Duet, by Brinsley Richards, "Now Moonlight Gems the Silvery Sea," sung by Miss Bassano and Mr. Bodda, was well received by the numerous auditory

Madame Oury. This accomplished pianiste gave a very agreeable Matinée Musicale on Tuesday, at the residence of T. Fitzherbert, Esq., 23, Hanover-square. She performed Beethoven's Trio in C Minor, with Sivori (violin), and Casella (violoncello); Prudent's Don Pasquale Fantasia, Liszt's Hungarian Melodies, and a piece by Weber. Here was music of every school, but Madame Oury is great in all she undertakes. Her executive skill is of the first order, and she combines excellent taste, great intelligence, and impassioned feeling, with her mechanical gifts. Her playing has been for some years the admiration of the chief musical towns of Germany, France, Russia, &c. The vocalists were Mdme. Caradori Allan, Mdme Thillon, Mdme. Mortier de Fontaine, Signor Marras, and Herr Pischek. Benedict and Jules de Glimes were the accompanyists, and Godefroid and Casella played harp and violoncello pieces. There was a fashionable attendance

The Musical Union.—At the Seventh Meeting on Tuesday afternoon, Madame Pleyel distinguished herself in the classical school by a fine performance of Beethoven's Sonata in F, for piano and violin, with Vieuxtemps. The scherzo was encored, and the whole sonata much applauded. Haydn's Quartet in C, No 77, with the celebrated national air "God Save the Emperor" was played by Vieuxtemps, Deloffre, Hill and Rousselot, and the scheme wound up with Beethoven's masterly Quintet in C, executed by the same artists, with the addition of Nadaud as second tenor. The Duke of Cambridge and a numerous assemblage of rank and fashion were present. The Illustration in our last number is thus noticed in Mr. Ella's interesting Record. "The Illustrated London News of Saturday last, contains a well executed sketch of the artists, who performed at our sixth meeting (Vieuxtemps's, Deloffre, Hill, and Piatti) with a short account of the origin and objects of this Society."

The Distin Family These unrivalled performers on the Sax Horns, gave a Concert on Tuesday night at Sadler's Wells Theatre, which was full in every part. Mr. Distin was encored in the Trumpet fantasia in the "Soldier Tired," a marvellous exhibition of skill. His execution, with his four sons, of the Quintet on themes from "Lucia" was another exquisite specimen of their talents. Pischek was rapturously encored in his popular songs; and Miss Bassano, Miss Hawes, and Mr. John Parry were similarly complimented. Mr. Kiallmark was the accompanyist; and, in addition to the artists already mentioned, there were Mdme. Hennelle, the Misses Williams, Miss Messent, Miss M. O'Connor, Miss Rovlore, Mrs. Weiss, Mrs. Macfarren; Messrs. King, Weiss, Calkin, Bodda, and Mr. F. Smith, as vocalists; and as solo players, Mr. F. Chatterton, Harp; Mr. Lavigne, Oboe, Mr. Pratten, Flute; Miss K. Loder, Pianiste, and Mr. Sedgw[illegible], Concertina.

Mdlle. Judine.—This pianiste is a young and promising pupil of Mosche[illegible] She gave an Evening Concert on Wednesday at the Hanover-square Room, which [illegible] crowded to excess. Mdlle. Judine had a full orchestra, with Willy as first [illegible], and Moscheles as conductor. She performed Beethoven's Concerto in E [illegible]t, with Sivori, the Sonata in F, for piano and violin, by the same composer, with Moscheles; Thalberg's Duo on "Norma" themes, for two pianofortes; and a MS. Fantasia, on themes from Verdi's "Lombardi" and Donizetti's "Pasquale," composed by Moscheles. Mdlle. Judine has great executive facility; w[illegible] she has to acquire is colouring and a good touch. Kellerman (the violoncellist) M. Godefroid (the harpist), and Sivori, played pieces. The vocalists were Mdme. Caradori Allan, Mdme. Hennelle, Mrs. Macfarren, Miss Hawes, Mdlle. Goldberg, Mdme. Thillon, Mdme. Knispel, Mr. Bodda, Signori Marras and Alfredi, Herrn Hoelzel and Pischek, and John Parry. The programme was judiciously made up from all schools.

Madame de Lozano and Don J. de Ciebra.—These Spanish artists coalesced in a Morning Concert on Wednesday, at the Hanover-square Rooms, under the patronage of the Earl of Clarendon, so long our able Minister at Madrid. Madame de Lozano has a fine voice, of extensive compass and a dramatic style. She sang Mariani's "Stanca di più," which was written for Grisi, and is introduced in Rossini's "Otello," with much ability, and her Spanish ballads were full o[illegible]vacity. The two Ciebras played on their guitars with marvellous skill, warming the hearts of the Iberian dames who filled the room. There was Rossini's overture to "William Tell," arranged for sixteen players on eight pianos, but it went badly. Even if the piece had been properly rehearsed, the effect could only be a charivari, just like the squadron of guitars at the close of the concert. The vocalists were Mdlle. de Ruppin, Madame Mortier de Fontaine; Mr. Handel Gear. [illegible] Ribas played a solo on the flute, and Mr. Suberberg a violin solo. Pilotti was [illegible] accompanyist

Mr. Lucas's Musical Evenings.—At the Third Concert of the second series, on Wednesday, the scheme comprised Haydn's Quartet, No. 6, of Op. 50; Onslow's Quartet, Op. 32; Beethoven's Quartet, Op. 127; and Onslow's Quartet, Op. 2[illegible]. The executants were Sainton and Blagrove (first and second violins alternately), Tolbecque and Hill (tenors), Lucas (violoncello), and Howell (double bass). The playing was, of course, excellent; but Lucas's execution of the second movement of Op. 25, by Onslow, which is obligato for the violoncello, was particularly conspicuous. The last meeting takes place on Wednesday.

Mr. Parish Alvars. This celebrated harp-player and composer gave a Morning Concert at the Hanover-square Room, on Thursday, for the principal purpose of having his first Grand Symphony played in this country. A full orchestra, chiefly selected from the Philharmonic band, conducted by Costa, was engaged. The work opens with a movement Largo, leading to an Allegro of great breadth and vigour; an Andante follows, with a charming subject, sustained by the violoncelli. The Scherzo is remarkable for its quaintness and its elegant treatment. The Finale is grand and imposing. The Symphony was immensely applauded by the connoisseurs, who seemed quite struck with the superb writing and its startling effects It is symmetrical in construction, and the amplification of the themes admirably carried out. Madame Dulcken executed Mr. Alvars's Pianoforte Concerto (which was played at the Seventh Philharmonic Concert), with great brilliancy. She has improved vastly in her reading of this fine composition; and the last movement came out with twice the force. Mr. Alvars performed the Andante and Rondo of his Harp Concerto in E flat, his Fantasia on themes from the "Montecchi," and a charming Serenade and Studio. He displayed all his unrivalled executive resources. The vocalists were Madame Hennelle, Herr Pischek, and Signor Marras.

MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

Opera at Drury-Lane Theatre.—The past season is highly creditable to the lessee's management. Mr. Bunn has brought out four original operas "The Fairy Oak," by Mr. Forbes; "Maritana," by Mr. Wallace; "Don Quixote," by Mr. Macfarren; and "The Crusaders," by Benedict. He has also produced two English versions of foreign operas—namely, Auber's "Crown Jewels" and Flotow's "Stradella." Three ballets, written for the theatre, have been represented "The Marble Maiden," by Albert and M. St. Georges, the music by M. Adam: and "The Island Nymph" and "Imelda," two ballets by Barrez. Of Continental ballets there were two importations—"The Devil to Pay" and "Paquita." The principal dancers who appeared during the season were Adèle Dumilâtre, Flora Fabbri, Mdlle. Sali, Mdlle. Potier, Mdlle. Guerinot, Madame Giubilei, Mdlle. Louise, Mdlle. Adèle, Mdlle. Maria, Madame Petit Stephan, and Carlotta Grisi; M[illegible]t, M. Silvain, M. Mathis, M. Desplaces, the Viennese children, M. Barrez, [illegible]ordot, &c. The vocalists were Madame Thillon, Miss Romer, Miss Rainforth, Miss Poole; Messrs. Harrison, Allen, King, Weiss, Borrani, Phillips, Stretton, Burdini, &c. There was one spectacle of the "Princess Changed into a Deer," which was only represented one night. The pantomime of "Harlequin Gulliver," with the Risleys, proved highly attractive. The season was very fluctuating. "Maritana" and "The Devil to Pay" were the best hits, and the "Crusaders" stands next. "The Fairy Oak," "Don Quixote," "Stradella," and the "Crown Jewels" did nothing for the treasury; and the hot weather setting in, at the period of Carlotta Grisi's engagement, caused the theatre to be quite deserted. On the whole, Mr. Bunn has entitled himself to the thanks and confidence of the public, by his activity, spirit, and enterprise. The choral department has been much improved under Mr. Tully's direction. The orchestra, lacking a good Conductor, has not been so fortunate, and is susceptible of great improvement—although it must be borne in mind that, to obtain a good working band for opera and ballet, six nights in the week, is no easy matter. Additional players have been sometimes engaged during the first representations of new works, but have been subsequently withdrawn. We are glad to learn that there has been no loss on the season, and, but for the heat, a large profit would, no doubt, have been realised. Every amateur must desire the prosperity of Drury-Lane Theatre, as the only one for national operas we possess. Mr. Bunn had [illegible]gned an engagement with Jenny Lind in Berlin, in 1845, but the Swedish Nightingale has refused to fulfil it, on the ground of being unable to acquire the English language. The lessee had also agreed with Donizetti for the composition of an opera expressly for Drury-Lane Theatre, but the imbecility of the composer was another disappointment to the Manager's expectations. His determination, however, to elevate the character of his lyrical establishment is equally entitled to the warmest eulogium

The Brussels Company.—A great sensation has been produced in the musical circles, by the announcement that the Belgian Company of operatic artists, who afforded such delight last season by their performances, will commence a series of twenty representations at Drury Lane Theatre, on the 15th instant, under the direction of M. Haussens. In addition to the talent of last year, M. Massol, the distinguished baritone of the Académie Royale de Musique, will appear. The notices last year, in the Illustrated London News, of this unrivalled Company, will have prepared our readers for the great treat in store for them.

M[illegible]ent to Weber.—Sir George Smart and Mr. Benedict are collecting [illegible]ons in aid of the fund now raising in Germany, to erect a monument to Weber, at Dresden, the place of his birth, and where he is now buried. It is proposed to celebrate the inauguration of the Statue by a festival like that in honour of Beethoven, at Bonn. We agree with the Morning Chronicle, that a public performance of Weber's works ought to be given in this country, in aid of the Monument

Criticisms on Beethoven Mr. W. Gardiner, the Author of the "Music of Nature," has forwarded to us a copy of the interesting paper read by him before the Leicester Literary and Philosophical Society, on the Inauguration of the Statue of Beethoven, at Bonn, which Mr. Gardiner attended. We have to thank him for his honourable mention of our presence there, but he forgot to add that our Augu[illegible] numbers were filled with interesting illustrations of that memorable [illegible]y, from sketches taken on the spot by our artists. In Mr. Gardiner's lec[illegible] here is a curious passage pointing out the early notices of Beethoven's works, which were pronounced by a living critic to be "incomprehensible stuff" Mr. Gardiner declares that it was twenty-seven years after he became acquainted with the genius of Beethoven, that any public notice was taken of his compositions.

The Birmingham Festival.—Staudigl will arrive on the 10th of August, for this great meeting, and it is expected will also sing at the Hereford gathering. Mendelssohn's "Elijah" is now quite ready, Mr. Bartholomew having completed the adaptation to English words. Staudigl will sing the music of the "Prophet."

Donizetti.—This great composer has been removed from the asylum near Paris, to Bergamo in Italy. His mind is utterly gon[illegible]

Herr Pischek left London yesterday for Germa[illegible].

THE LATE MR. HAYDON.

The melancholy circumstances of the death of this eminent artist were amply [illegible] in our Journal of last week. Our present purpose is to place upon record the leading incidents of his life, which painfully exemplifies, in most of its phases, the poet's "fitful fever."

Benjamin Robert Haydon was descended from one of the most honourable and ancient families in the west of England the Haydons of Cadhay and Woodbury, in Devonshire, who intermarried with the present Lord Paulet's ancestor, Sir Amyas Paulet

His great-grandfather, Gideon Haydon, was killed whilst hunting; and, having died intestate, his affairs were left in a deranged state: the Cadhay property was thrown into Chancery, and the family became, comparatively speaking, a reduced one.

The subject of this [illegible] l. R. Haydon, a well-established [illegible] [illegible]hter of the Rev. Benjamin Cobley, Vicar of Dodbrooke, Devon; whose son, [illegible]s Cobl[illegible], late of Odessa, signalised himself at the siege of Ismael. [illegible] an [illegible], Haydon evinced a strong passion for pictures and drawing, which were his constant amusement. At 10 years old, he was placed at Plymouth [illegible]. Dr. Bidlake, who, being himself a man [illegible]us, and possessing a great taste for painting, encouraged the youthful [illegible]don in his love of drawing; and, as a reward for diligence and attention to his studies, the reverend gentleman used to indulge his pupil by admitting him to his painting-room, where he was allowed to pass his half holidays.

At the age of 14, he was sent to the Plympton St. Mary School, under the Rev. W. Hayne, and here he completed his education, in the same Grammar School in which Sir Joshua Reynolds acquired all the scholastic knowledge he ever received. On the ceiling of the school-room was a sketch drawn by Reynolds with a burnt cork; and it was young Haydon's delight to sit and contemplate this early production of the great master. Whilst at this school, he expressed a wish to join the medical profession; but the sight of an operation, performed at the Plymouth Hospital, at once deterred him, so shocked was he at the sufferings of the patient. When he left the Plympton School, after a stay there of about two years, he had not decided what profession he should pursue; and, whilst at home, in this unsettled state, his mind was never at rest, but he was constantly employed in drawing or painting, and reading hard. About this time, Reynolds's "Discourses" attracted his attention, and fixed his resolution on painting; and, as one step to acquiring eminence, he resolved to study anatomy.

With these aspirations, he left Plymouth for London on May 14, 1804; and entered his name as a student of the Royal Academy. With great forbearance, he resolved to draw and dissect for two years before he began to paint; and his skill and application were soon noticed. Prince Hoare introduced him to Fuseli. So hard did Haydon study at this period, that he sometimes did not leave his room for a fortnight; and his attendance was so close at the Royal Academy, that Fuseli once said to him, "Why, when do you dine?" Haydon's account of his introduction to Fuseli, is very characteristic: "Such was the horror connected with his name," says Haydon, "that I remember perfectly well the day before I was to go to him, a letter from my father concluded in these words: 'God speed you with the terrible Fuseli.' Awaking from a night of awful dreaming, the awful morning came. I took my sketch-book and drawings, invoking the protection of my good genius to bring me back alive, and sallied forth to meet the enchanter in his den! After an abstracted walk of perpetual musing, on what I should say, how I should look, and what I should do, I found myself before his door in Berners-street——1805." Haydon was shown into his painting-room, full of Fuseli's hideous conceptions: he adds: "at last, while I was wondering what metamorphosis I was to undergo, the door slowly opened, and I saw a little hand come slowly round the edge of it, which did not look very gigantic, or belonging to a very powerful figure, and round came a little white-faced lion-headed man, dressed in an old flannel dressing-gown, tied by a rope, and the bottom of Mrs. Fuseli's workbasket on his head for a cap. I was perfectly amazed! there stood the designer of Satan in many an airy wheel plunging to the earth, and was this the painter himself?—certainly. Not such as I had imagined when enjoying his inventions. I did not know whether to laugh or cry, but at any rate I felt that I was his match if he attempted the supernatural! We quietly stared at each other, and Fuseli kindly understanding my astonishment and inexperience, asked in the mildest voice for my drawings. Here my evil genius took the lead, and instead of showing him my studies from the antique, which I had brought, and had meant to have shown him, I showed him my sketch-book I did not mean to show him, with a sketch I had made coming along, of a man pushing a sugar-cask into a grocer's shop. Fuseli seeing my fright, said, by way of encouragement, 'At least the fellow does his business with energy.' From that hour commenced a friendship which lasted till his death."

In 1807, when Haydon was in his twenty-first year, he sent his first work to the Royal Academy Exhibition—"Repose in Egypt;" or, as it stands in the Catalogue, "Joseph and Mary Resting with Our Saviour, after a Day's Journey on the Road to Egypt." This was purchased by Mr. Thomas Hope; and, we believe, to this day, is in the Collection at the Deepdene, in Surrey. Such was brilliant patronage for a beginning; and it stimulated the young painter to a much higher effort

Thus we see that Haydon left his father at almost the age of boyhood, came to London by himself, and pursued his plan of study, the result of his own conviction, without a master, (for he resisted the wishes of his father to put him under Opie); persevered in spite of ridicule and sneers, and assertions of his insanity; and painted his first picture before he had studied the art two years.

In January, 1808, he began his "Dentatus"; but, while engaged on it, he was admitted to see the Elgin Marbles: the consequence was, that he rubbed out the whole of what he had painted, and recommenced on a new principle which he deduced from these admirable sculptures. He now worked with intense enthusiasm: to imbue his mind with the spirit of the Marbles, he drew from them for ten, twelve, and even fifteen hours at a time. The "Dentatus" was finished in the Spring of 1809. It was purchased by Lord Mulgrave, long before it was completed: this did not, however, operate as a prestige at the Royal Academy; for, the treatment which this work received from the Committee of 1809, led Mr Haydon into antagonism with the Academicians for the remainder of his career. The loss of a good position for this single picture embittered the painter's after-life. "By vote," he tells us, "the picture was hung in the Great Room, in Mr. Fuseli's presence. The Committee promised Mr. Fuseli it should remain there. He went out of town; and, in the interval, they re-voted, took the picture down, and placed it where there was then no window. By this conduct, my prospects were blighted for the time; and, it was not till I sent the same picture, the year after, to the British Institution, where it was hung at the head of the room, and got the great prize, that I regained the confidence of Lord Mulgrave."

This was followed by worse treatment. "I then put down my name for an Associate," says Haydon, "and was refused; and, coming in contact with the Academicians, I perceived a fear of historical painting" The "Dentatus" was a commission; for Haydon, in his "Vindication of Sir Joshua Reynolds," communicated, under the signature of "A.," to the "Annals of the Fine Arts," in 1819, writes "Haydon would have been ruined by them (the Academicians) in 1809, had not his picture been a previous commission, which saved him from the consequences of the unjust behaviour of the council of that year." The "Dentatus" merited all the distinction it received; it is mostly well drawn, and the story is cleverly told: it was very correctly copied and engraved by William Harvey, a pupil of Bewick, and who, in 1817, became a pupil of Haydon, with a view of improving himself in drawing, and thus further qualifying himself for the profession of a designer on wood. (See "The History of Wood Engraving," Illustrated London News, vol. iv., p. 357.) In this picture are heads of Wordsworth, Keats, and Hazlitt

Haydon's hostility to the Academy now waxed fast and furious; and most manfully he maintained the contest in the Examiner newspaper, in the "Annals of the Fine Arts," and, indeed, wherever his complaints could reach the public. He cited the disputes of the Academy with Reynolds, Barry, Opie, and Wilkie, to prove that his case was not a rare one; and that, to use Reynolds's assertion, "there was a party in the Academy who had objects incompatible with the advance of the art."

With energies undaunted, Haydon now resolved to try his fortune unaided by the Academy. Some munificent patrons of Art rallied round him: Sir George Beaumont commissioned him to paint a subject from "Macbeth" "a glory to its possessor and one of the greatest ornaments to his gallery," says a critic of the day: "so powerful in expression, and colour, and effect, so glorious in composition and energy, so great in all the great essentials of a picture, that it truly astonished us."

His next great picture was the "Judgment of Solomon," bought by Sir W. Elford and Mr. Tingcomb, for £700. While painting this work, Haydon entered into a controversy on the Elgin Marbles with Mr. Payne Knight, one of the Directors of the British Institution: this gave great offence; and, when the painter had been four months at work on the "Solomon," he was left without resources; but, by selling successively, his books, prints, and clothes, he was enabled to go on with his picture. At length, after a labour of two years, and by a closing exertion of painting six days, and nearly as many nights, the picture was completed, and exhibited in Spring Gardens, with great success. The Directors of the British Institution then showed their sense of Haydon's genius by a vote of 100 guineas, and all ill-feeling was forgotten. For this work, Haydon was presented with the freedom of the borough of Plymouth, says the vote, "as a testimony of respect for his extraordinary merit as an historical painter; and particularly for the production of his recent picture, 'the Judgment of Solomon,' a work of such superior excellence, as to reflect honour on his birthplace, distinction on his name, lustre on the art, and reputation on the country."

Miss Mitford addressed to the Painter the following Sonnet on this Picture -

Tears in the eye, and on the lips a sigh!
Haydon, the great, the beautiful, the bold.
Thy Wisdom's King, thy Mercy's God unfold?
There art and genius blend in unison h[illegible]
But this is of the sou[illegible]
Of grief dwells here grief cast in such a mould
As Niobe's of yore. The tale is told
All at a glance. "A childless mother I!"
The tale is told, and who can e'er fo[illegible]
That e'er has seen that visage of despair
With unaccustomed tears our cheeks are wet,
Heavy our hearts with unaccustomed care,
Upon our thoughts it presses like a debt.
We close our eyes in vain, that face is there.

Mr. West, on seeing this picture, was affected to tears, at the figure of the pale, fainting mother

After so much toil and suffering, some relaxation was necessary: accordingly, in the summer of 1814, Haydon visited Paris, in company with Wilkie. There he studied in the Louvre; and, after an absence of two months, commenced his great picture of "Christ's Entry into Jerusalem:" but his progress was long retarded by ill health, and the weakness of his eyes; and for a time he was compelled to discontinue his labour, and remove from London.

At this period, may be mentioned his "Alexander Returning in Triumph after having Vanquished Bucephalus," purchased at 500 guineas, by the Earl of Egremont; and his "Venus and Adonis," bought for 200 guineas, by Lord de Tabley.

In 18[illegible]6, Haydon returned to the controversy with Mr. Payne Knight, on the Elgin Marbles; the painter had the great authority of Canova on his side, and is considered to have demolished the theories of the dilettante. From the poet Goethe, too, Haydon received a gratifying testimony to his elucidation of these great works: this was on the receipt of drawings of the Theseus and the Fates, made at the British Museum, by Haydon's pupils, Messrs. C. Bewick and C. Landseer, for the poet. Writing to Haydon, he says:—

You must feel great satisfaction to have had it in your power to bring your pupils acquainted with such excellent models, as those which your country of late has had the g[illegible] fortune to acquire [illegible]ose of us at Weimar, who love and admire the arts, share your enthusiasm for the remains of the most glorious period, and hold ourselves indebted to you for having enabled us to participate in such a degree, in the enjoyment and contempl[illegible]n of those works by means of such happy copies. I have the honour to be, &c., W. Goethe.

In the spring of 1819, considerable interest was excited in the metropolis by the [illegible]ibition of a Series of Drawings, executed at the British Museum and the Gallery of the British Institution, by Mr. Haydon's pupils. The exhibitors were Bewick, Thomas and Charles Landseer, Webb, and Chatfield. We may here [illegible]ention other distinguished pupils of Haydon. Eastlake was his first pupil "I watched," says Haydon, "and guided his progress with the affection of a brother, in his drawing, dissection, and painting." There were, besides, Lance and Harvey, Maclise and Cope; and Haydon used to claim Edwin Landseer "I understand," he says, "that Edwin Landseer denies his obligations—I used to deny mine to Fuseli—these are the presumptions of youth."

In 1820, Haydon completed his great work of "Christ's Entry into Jerusalem," begun in 1814, and exhibited it almost per se in Old Bond-street: it drew crowds of visitors, it was shown at Edinburgh with equal success; and it was re-exhibited in London in 1829.

Our painter now appeared to be in a fair way for fame. Keats addressed a sonnet to him on his elucidation of the Elgin Marbles:

> Haydon! forgive me that I cannot speak
> Definitively on these mighty things
> Forgive me, that I have not eagle's wings,
> That what I want I know not where to seek:
> And think that I would not be over meek
> In rolling out up-followed thunderings,
> Even to the steep of Heliconian springs,
> Were I of ample strength for such a freak—
> Think, too, that all those numbers should be thine,
> Whose else? In this who touch thy vesture's hem?
> For when men stared at what was most divine
> With browless idiotism, otherwise phlegm—
> Thou hadst beheld the Hesperian shrine
> Of their star in the east, and gone to worship them.

Wordsworth likewise penned this majestic tribute to his genius:—

> High is our calling, Friend! Creative Art
> (Whether the instrument of words she use,
> Or pencil pregnant with ethereal hues)
> Demands the service of a mind and heart,
> Though sensitive, yet in their weaker part
> Heroically fashioned—to infuse
> Faith in the whispers of the lonely Muse,
> While the whole world seems adverse to desert.
> And oh! when Nature sinks, as oft she may,
> Through long-lived pressure of obscure distress,
> Still to be strenuous for the bright reward,
> And in the soul admit of no decay,
> Brook no continuance of weak-mindedness—
> Great is the glory, for the strife is hard.

Nor were there critics who hesitated to place Haydon in comparison with Raffaelle A writer in the "Annals of the Fine Arts," maintains that Haydon's first picture (the "Repose"), in colour, drawing, expression, light, and shadow, will bear comparison with any of Raffaelle's painted at the same age; that the figure of Dentatus is equal to any Raffaelle ever executed in the heroic style; that for his "Judgment of Solomon" Haydon ranks, in powers of invention, equal with Raffaelle, and that in the treatment and conception of this subject, he is superior to Poussin, Rubens, and Raffaelle. Still, this writer does not compare Haydon "on the whole with Raffaelle on the whole: he only wishes to show that the nature of Haydon's genius is not inferior to Raffaelle's, period by period, and picture by picture, as far as Haydon has gone."

Stimulated by such high praise, Haydon renewed his application for admission to the Academy; but in two successive elections, he did not receive a single vote! This treatment drew from him indignant complaint: "for twenty-one years," writes he, "there has not been an affection that they (the Academicians) have not lacerated—an ambition they have not thwarted—a hope they have not blasted a calumny they have not propagated a friendship they have not chilled or a disposition to employ me they have not tampered with." All was, however, of no avail; though his friends and the public sympathised with Haydon's position, the rules of the Academy were preserved inviolate. Amidst all this strife, with the "Jerusalem" on hand, he began two other pictures of the same high class, "Christ in the Garden," and "Christ Rejected." He also found time to join in a vehement controversy about the Elgin Marbles; and, in conjunction with Hazlitt, to write an admirable treatise on Painting, for the "Encyclopædia Britannica."

In 1821, Haydon married. His professional prospects, about this time, began to wane; and he lost patronage as much from the controversial position he occupied before the public as from the objectionably large size of his pictures. His affairs got into confusion; he was considerably in debt; and he became an inmate of the King's Bench Prison. While here, in July, 1827, the burlesque scene of a "Mock Election" was enacted. "I was sitting in my own apartment," writes the painter, "buried in my own reflections, melancholy, but not despairing at the darkness of my own prospects, and the unprotected condition of my wife and children, when a tumultuous and hearty laugh below brought me to the window. In spite of my own sorrows, I laughed out heartily myself when I saw the occasion." He sketched the picturesque scene, painted it in four months, with the aid of noblemen and friends, and the advocacy of the press in exciting the sympathy of the country. "To the joint kindness of each," wrote Haydon, "I owe the peace of the last five months, without which I never could have accomplished so numerous a composition in so short a time." The picture proved attractive as an Exhibition; still better, it was purchased by King George the Fourth for £500, and it was conveyed from the Egyptian Hall to St. James's Palace. A committee of gentlemen now undertook to adjust Mr. Haydon's affairs with the proceeds of this exhibition, and the painter was restored to the bosom of his family.

As a companion to this picture, he completed, in October, 1828, "Chairing the Members, a Scene from the Mock Election." This was exhibited at the Bazaar, in Old Bond-street, in the above year: it was purchased by Mr. Francis, of Exeter (says the "Athenæum"), for 300 guineas. It was scarcely equal to the companion picture, which, by the way, had been remarked on, as Haydon thought, severely. "By some critic," he writes, "it was considered rough and coarse in execution; his Majesty thought otherwise."

In 1830, Haydon completed two pictures of a very opposite class—the "Death of Eucles" and "Punch," as they have been termed, "the high tragedy and low arce of painting." They were exhibited with success, but did not readily find purchasers, and the "Eucles" was disposed of by raffle in fifty shares of ten guineas each, the winner being, we believe, the keeper of the Dulwich Gallery. Sir Walter Scott took considerable interest in the "Eucles" disposal; and, to the mention in his "Diary" that he had sat to Haydon for his portrait, Scott appends this kindly note:

> He is certainly a clever fellow, but too enthusiastic—which distress seems to have cured in some degree. His wife, a pretty woman, looked happy to see me—and that is something. Yet it was very little I could do to help them.

In 1831, Haydon painted for Sir Robert Peel "Napoleon Musing at St. Helena," a picture which is best described by the epithet "suggestive" (Athenæum memoir): its execution is far inferior to its conception; yet of this picture Haydon painted four copies, the second for the Duke of Devonshire, and the third for the Duke of Sutherland. It has been engraved, and was popular as a print. He painted a work of the same character, "The Duke on the Field of Waterloo," a picture of less merit than its companion.

Next year, Haydon produced his "Xenophon and the Ten Thousand First Seeing the Sea from Mount Theches," a picture in the grand heroic school. Like the "Eucles," it was disposed of by raffle: we last saw it in the library of the Russell Institution, to which Society it was presented by the late Duke of Bedford, in 1830 This picture was exhibited in Piccadilly, with "Waiting for the Times," purchased by the Marquis of Stafford, and since engraved. There were, also, in the same room, "The First Child," "Reading the Scriptures," "Falstaff and Pistol," "Achilles Playing the Lyre," &c

About this time, Haydon overcame his early spirit "inimical to the supremacy of portrait," and, by necessity, took to portrait-painting; his price for a whole-length being 150 guineas: he had, however, but few sitters, and the adoption of this branch of his art was a profitless change.

The passing of the Reform Bill, at length, suggested a labour of far greater magnitude—the Great Banquet at Guildhall, a commission from Lord Grey. it contains some 300 portraits, if we remember rightly, for all which the personages sat to the painter. It was a thankless scene to paint, and could scarcely be expected to add to the reputation of any artist. The picture was exhibited in St. James's-street in 1834, but excited very little interest. It was then removed to Howick Hall; and the sketches were purchased by Lord Spencer, and hung up in the corridor at Althorp. The "Reform Banquet" was engraved, but unsuccessfully.

In September, 1835, Haydon delivered his first Lecture on Painting and Design, at the Mechanics' Institution: he tells us that he gloried in the air of defiance with which he was watched, as he proceeded, the applause increased, and he concluded his lecture amidst such a burst of enthusiasm as had not often been witnessed on art. He appears to have anticipated interruption; for in his first volume of his Lectures, since published, he refers to his heart-beating anxiety on the above occasion. He says: "From the oppression of the authorities in art, without any cause, and my subsequent resistance and opposition to them, I had brought on myself the enmity of all those who hoped to advance in life by their patronage; loss of employment, from their continual calumny, brought loss of income; the rich advanced loans to finish great works, they were persuaded by the authorities not to purchase; the usual consequences of debt and incompetency followed; and, perhaps, no man ever appeared before a public assembly with such a load of unjust accusation, abominable falsehood, or determined opposition, as I did on that night." He so far succeeded in his object—"to implant sound principles of High Art in the public mind"—that he repeated his Lectures in Edinburgh and Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Bath, Leeds, Hull, Leicester, Newcastle, and Warrington; at the London Institution, the Royal Institution, and the University of Oxford. The Second Volume of these Lectures has been published but a few weeks· they are more biographical; but the biographies (of Fuseli and Wilkie) illustrate principles of art laid down in the first volume.

We must now return to the few remaining pictures. In 1843, Haydon produced "Curtius Leaping into the Gulf," which was exhibited at the British Institution. It will be found engraved, from a drawing made by the painter, in No. 49 of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

To the Royal Academy Exhibition of last year, he contributed his "Uriel and Satan," from Milton: it is engraved in No. 163 of our Journal. We quote the accompanying criticism

"Mr. Haydon, in this picture, has studied Fuseli to some purpose. In the figure of the 'stripling cherub,' he has had his eye on the old masters; but his picture (and he will thank us for our criticism) is altogether out of place in the present Exhibition. 'How hard it is upon us,' was the remark of a great painter, who had studied his art more deeply than many of his brethren, 'the better fitted we become for the company of the great masters, the less fitted are we for the walls of a modern exhibition.' Mr. Haydon is said to be a martyr to the higher branches of his art. He paints on great principles, and aims at nothing but what is Epic and exalted. We wish his success was commensurate with his endeavours. He is often feeble, too often exaggerated; but his conceptions are not unfrequently very fine. We would direct attention to his 'Napoleon at St. Helena,' in the possession of Sir Robert Peel It is an indicative picture, with indifferent execution, but the sentiment is everything. Napoleon has his back towards you—you see, in short, nothing but his back, his folded arms, a barren rock, a boundless sea, and a sail at a distance. It is, in a word, the history of Napoleon, with a fine moral at the end."

To the Westminster Hall competition of the same year, Haydon sent two cartoons—"The Curse," and "Edward the Black Prince." They neither gained prizes nor approval, and the artist considered himself wronged by the Commission and the public. it was the very ground upon which he sought to be tried, and the result was unworthy of his genius.

Haydon's last pictures formed the recent Exhibition at the Egyptian Hall, fresh in the memory of the reader from being detailed in our volume just completed. We have there, too, engraved one of the paintings—"The Banishment of Aristides." The Exhibition proved a failure. the tone of the advertisements betrayed the painter's disappointment, and, doubtless, tended to bring about his awful exit Yet, amidst all his depression of spirits, anxiety, and distress, he laboured at his Art to the last: he had been working at a picture of "Alfred and the Trial by Jury," on the morning of his death!

The painful recital which has already appeared in our Journal, will preclude our saying more.

We have appended to this hasty sketch (for his life would fill a large volume) a portrait, engraved from a very finely painted portrait by Mr. Thomas Henry Illidge, of Bruton-street; and not hitherto engraved. There is a fine bust of our lamented painter, by Park, which has been prefixed to the recently published volume of the "Lectures."

THE LATE MR. B. R. HAYDON.—FROM A PAINTING BY MR. T. H. ILLIDGE.

THE PUBLIC PARKS, MANCHESTER.

WE are happy to learn that these very salutary additions to the recreations of the people are nearly completed The subscriptions for the purpose amount to nearly £44,000; being about £40,000 from the manufacturers and artisans; £3000 the Government grant; and £[illegible]000 the munificent contribution of Sir Robert Peel.

We have engraved a view of "Peel's Park," named after the Premier, on account of his having resided here when last in Manchester. The principal features of this Park are a drive round the Walness meadows, inclosing a large area; a pleasant walk near the river; a lawn, with maypole, &c.; archery butts, a spacious flower garden, within a belt of trees, laid out in walks, lawns, and parterres, in which are evergreens, flowering shrubs, azaleas, &c., a few American plants, and evergreens. Several large trees have been moved from the plantation to the centre of the Park and have all stood very well. The drive is 18 feet wide round the Park; and at the extreme end is the Gymnasium.

The Lodge, at the main entrance, is built; and the mansion close by is to be fitted up as refreshment-rooms. The entire Park was purchased for £10,375: it contains 32 acres, and is situate in Salford, one mile from Manchester Exchange.

The two other Parks are called "The Phillips' Park" and "Queen's Park;" the former, on account of Mr. M. Phillips, the representative of Manchester, and who, with his family, were the largest contributors to the Park's fund. It is situate one mile and a half from the Exchange, on the Ashton road, contains 31 acres, and cost £6200. The area is tastefully laid out in walks and play-grounds; and has several rustic bridges.

"The Queen's Park" is two miles from the Exchange. The well-wooded character of these grounds give them already a park-like appearance; the gardens are well stocked, and the picturesque combination of wood and water will make this a favourite resort with the public. The committee paid for this property £7250: it contains 30 acres.

In addition to the purchase-money for the respective properties, it should be mentioned that several thousand pounds have been expended in re-laying out the grounds, and providing for them appropriate embellishments.

MANCHESTER PUBLIC PARKS.—"THE PEEL" PARK.

ANGLING NOTES FOR THE MONTH.—BARBEL.

ANGLING NOTES FOR THE MONTH.

Artificial flies for Angling, are, as regards their form or make, of two kinds. First, hackles or palmers; and second, winged flies. The first kind are without wings, and they are called hackles in consequence of their being made of long slender feathers, such as those of a cock's neck, which are generally termed hackles; and they have obtained the name of palmers from their resemblance to the palmer, or hairy worm. Hackles are usually named from their colour, as "the black hackle," "the red hackle," "the grouse hackle;" while of winged flies, "their name is legion," some being called after the name of the insect which they are supposed to resemble, some named from the month in which they are held most killing, some from their colour, some from the material of which they are made; while others are honoured with the name of their inventor. Some novices in Fly-fishing, both young and old, seem to attach great importance to the name of a fly, and devote themselves to the study of the rigmarole nomenclature of flies, as if the wearisome list should be got by heart before attempting to catch a trout. The "book" is well thumbed, but as the rod is spared the fly-rod, not the birch—the consequence is, that the child is spoiled, and never attains to the degree of M.A. Master of Angling—as long as he lives.

Artificial flies for Trout-fishing, whether winged or hackles, may be conveniently classed under four general heads, according to their predominant colours. 1. Grey flies, the type or standard of colour being the feathers from the back of the mallard, or wild drake. 2. Brown flies, the type being the feather of the grouse, pheasant, woodcock, or wren. 3. Red flies, the type being the red hackle of a cock's neck. 4 Dun flies, the type being the feather of a starling or a coot. Flies, properly dressed, according to the above types, will take trout in all parts of the world where trout are to be caught with an artificial fly. The other materials, besides feathers, required in making flies, are fur, silk, and wool of various shades, mouse-coloured, dun, foxy, ginger-red, and brown; and those are the best of their kind which absorb the least moisture. Of flies, either positively black or positively white, we have not taken any notice in the preceding list, as there is no difficulty in determining their standard of colour. White flies we never use, though we consider them to be of service in the dusk, when Angling in still water for large trout. Small, very small, black flies we have found to be of most service when fishing in small clear streams in summer

At this time of the year, trout begin to ascend to the upper parts of streams; and, except at the water-clearing, after rain, afford but little sport to the fly-fisher. They now enter the smaller tributary streams, when swelled by sudden rains. While the water is rapidly rising, it is almost needless trying for trout either with fly or worm; but, when it begins to abate, they will generally take the worm readily, more especially in small subsidiary streams; though the most killing of all baits, at such times, is prepared salmon-roe. When the water begins to clear, and the fish appear indifferent about the worm, the Angler should try with the fly, the ripples at the head of pools in the larger streams. We shall now leave the trouts alone for a while, as there are other fish to fry; but first—to catch them. Having dismissed the flies, we must now look after the larvæ, and exchange our "book" for a box of gentles.

The Gudgeon and Roach formed the Illustration, but not the subject, of our last paper; and here is now a Barbel waiting our notice. A handsome fish he is; and in the fashion, too, even if he were not in season, for he is bearded on the upper lip. "What pleasure can there be in catching such fish?" we hear some one exclaim. The accent is that of a north-countryman; and, turning round, we behold the face of an old friend, one of the stalwart family of Caird, who prides himself on "gripping like a vice, louping like a roe, dancing like mad," and on being the best fly-fisher in the North.—No pleasure, indeed, for you, Mr. Caird; but do not presume to answer for other people, lest they should turn round and decry some of your favourite amusements and indulgences.

In fishing for Salmon, you have to wade sometimes; and, even after you have been for two or three hours up to the middle in very cold water, you do not always succeed in catching your fish. You dance the Highland Fling with great vigour, and can tire the piper out in a reel—finding pleasure in what to many others would be a toil. The pleasure of the "gentle" Angler is not a whit the less because you despise it; and you do not lose your appetite for your oatmeal porridge and skim-milk, in consequence of its being distasteful to a town-bred gentleman who breakfasts off coffee and hot rolls. Though a dram of small-still whiskey, eleven over proof, is highly stimulating and comfortable, exceedingly in a damp morning among the hills, yet that is no reason why a man should despise the "poor creature," small beer, where nothing better is to be had. "Well; but these 'gentle' Anglers make such a fuss about their fishing." Some, indeed, may; ever talking of a simple amusement as if it were the serious business of their lives. but what then? Because a lump of exceedingly bibulous clay gets tipsy on small beer, is that any reason why "half-and half" should be forsworn? Not at all: but we must drop the subject, for it is difficult to be merry and wise over small beer. Your health, Mr Caird, in a tankard of foaming stout: and you, I dare say, will have no objection to do us justice in the remainder. We now feel quite invigorated, and shall finish off our Gudgeon and Roach in quick time

The Gudgeon is a small fish, the length generally being from five to seven inches. Gudgeons are gregarious, swimming in shoals, like minnows; they are to be found in most of the rivers in England, but appear to be most abundant in the Thames and the Lea. They are said to spawn twice a year, namely, in April and November; and they are Angled for from May till October. Their favourite haunts, in warm weather, are scours, or streamy parts of the water, with a gravelly bottom; and they bite at all times of the day from an hour after sunrise until an hour before sunset. In fishing for Gudgeon in the Thames, from a punt, it is usual to stir up the gravel at the bottom with a rake, in order to discolour the water, and bring the fish together; and also to throw into the water, from time to time, as ground bait, pieces of soaked bread and bran, mixed up with a little loose clay. The best bait for them is small red worms, though they also take gentles readily. The bait should just drag on the bottom; and the line should be either of fine gut or of a single hair. Use a light rod, and a quill float, and be not in too great a hurry to strike when the float first dips: where the Gudgeon nibbles, he will generally bite, if he be allowed time. The Gudgeon, though small, is very sweet eating: half a gross or so, nicely fried, make a very pleasant addition to the supper table

Roach spawn in May, and begin to be in season in July; but are best in the three last months of the year. In the Lea, as well as in other rivers, they are froqnently caught when Angling for Gudgeon, in July and August; though the season for Roach-fishing in the Thames, according to Mr. Hofland, "cannot be said fairly to have commenced till the middle of September." Considerable numbers, however, are caught there long before that time. The Roach, like the Gudgeon, is gregarious, and is to be Angled for with similar tackle. The Roach prefers the still and rather deep parts of the water; and the bait, instead of dragging on the ground, ought, when the water is clear, to be about six inches from the bottom. When the water is rather discoloured from rain, the bait should not be allowed to sink more than about four feet. The baits chiefly used are paste and gentles; and also small red worms, when the water is high, and when the weather becomes cold, at the latter end of the year. The paste may be made of a piece of new bread, soaked in water, and then worked up with the hands, till it becomes compact and doughey. A piece of paste about the size of a pea will be sufficient for a bait; and it is also advisable, when the water is clear, to put only one gentle on the hook. Be mindful to strike promptly, yet lightly, as soon as the float gives indication of a bite. Roach are not unfrequently caught weighing from one to two pounds; by far the greater number, however, of Roach caught in the Thames and the Lea do not average half a pound each. The Roach is a handsome fish, and some persons consider it very good eating, whilst others consider it very insipid

Barbel spawn in May; they are not good at that time, and it is questionable if they be much better at any other. Whatever may be their value for the table, there can be little question of their affording the Thames Anglers, between Richmond and Windsor, more sport than any other kind of fish in the river. Barbel are gregarious; and their usual haunts are deep holes, near locks and bridges, or by the side of a bank, at the foot of a streamy fall, where the current eddies much In such places, large Barbel are frequently caught by spinning a gudgeon, in the months of June and July, before the usual season of fishing for them at bottom, from a punt, commences. The season for bottom-fishing for Barbel appears to be later now than it was a century ago. In old books on Angling, it is set down as commencing about the latter end of May, and continuing till the end of August; whereas, at present, it can scarcely be considered as having commenced before the 1st of August; and, even for a fortnight after, the fish are generally very shy in taking the bait. The best month now is September, during which, in favourable weather, the Angler will seldom fail to have sport, provided that he moors his punt in a good "pitch," and be moderately skilful in the management of his tackle; for, though the Barbel often grubs a long time about the bait before he finally takes it, yet, when he feels the hook, he generally makes a sharp struggle for his life. What we have further to say about the Barbel will keep very well till our next, without any risk of spoiling, and even with a chance of improvement.

A. Y.

TOLL-HOUSE, NEAR GLOUCESTER, STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

GOLD; OR, THE HALF-BROTHERS.

A STORY OF LIFE IN THE MIDDLE STATION.*

BY CAMILLA TOULMIN.

CHAPTER I.

> How can we live without knowing life? Now it is only known on one condition: to suffer, work, and be poor; or else, to make one's self poor in sympathy and heart, and willingly participate in toil and suffering.—Michelet.

IT was a close and oppressive day towards the end of August, when, in the drawing-room of a large house, situated in one of the half fashionable streets of London, three persons were assembled: all were attired in mourning; and the lady bore the insignia of widowhood. Mrs. Sefton was really some three or four years above forty; but her petite and slender figure, her fair complexion, small regular features, and their pervading expression of goodness and gentleness had combined to retain for her a much more youthful appearance than is usual at that age. Standing beside her with one arm leaning on the marble chimney-piece, and the other hand placed from time to time protectingly on her shoulder, was a young man of about one or two-and-twenty. Trevor Sefton had soft grey eyes, like his mother, though now they were dilated, and looked dark from ill repressed indignation; and his waving hair was of the same sunny brown as the smooth braids which were just visible beneath the widow's coif. The imperishable beauty of a fine and noble expression was also his, with a symmetrical figure above the common height.

It would be difficult to imagine a more striking contrast than that afforded by his elder and half brother, who sat with some papers before him near a table opposite. He was a shorter, and somewhat thick set man, of about five-and-thirty, bearing about him all the characteristics which, on a superficial glance, we are accustomed to call "commonplace." And yet, on a narrower inspection, there was a degree of shrewdness in the small dark eye, and of hardness about the thin, compressed lips, which, taken with the general outline of head and face, proclaimed a cold, selfish, remorseless being, of a class which, it is to be hoped, for the honour of human nature, is not common.

"Certainly," said he; "certainly, Mrs. Sefton; if you choose to remain here another week or two, there cannot be the slightest objection to your doing so. The remark I made, and which your son has taken up so hastily, was not meant to offend, I assure you. But the fact is, I thought you would wish to meet the change in your circumstances as speedily as possible, by at once curtailing your expenses, and reducing your style of living to your narrower income. Besides, you are aware I intend selling off this old, ricketty, furniture almost immediately." And, as he spoke, he looked round with no slight contempt on the faded curtains and antiquated appointments, which told of a lengthened and constant service.

Mrs. Sefton also gazed, though mournfully, on objects which, if not associated with positive happiness, were at least endeared to her by youthful recollections and the memory of maternal affection.

"Mother," said Trevor Sefton, in the deep voice of strong emotion, "let us leave the house directly. I would not have you indebted another night for such hospitality, even to your husband's son—my father's heir. But Charles—Charles Sefton," he added, approaching the table, "it is necessary for my mother's sake that we clearly and exactly understand our real position."

The dark eye of the elder brother drooped for a moment, as he replied, "I have said I will allow Mrs. Sefton a hundred a-year."

"You mean to say," replied the other, with a calm but withering scorn, "that after having robbed my mother of the provision—mean as it was—intended by our father, you will place her at the head of your pension list, as the object, par excellence, of your most munificent charity?"

"Call my proposal what you please," returned he, with the meekness of a martyr; "I suppose she must live."

"I wonder you see the necessity."

"Brother, you would be witty; but you only plagiarize."

Trevor Sefton struck the floor sharply with his heel, for he was stung by the imperturbable coolness of the other, and for once could not control his temper; and then he rung the bell with that impetuous touch which is sure, in the generality of establishments, to bring a speedy answer.

---

* Were the following story appearing in a different form a Preface might be admissible. As it is I may perhaps be permitted to say, that in writing a story of Life as it is in the Middle Station, I have studiously avoided depicting any scenes which might change its style to that of the "fashionable novel;" relying on the sympathies of the many rather than on the morbid taste of the few, and appealing to that class which, of all others, should be the most proud of its "order." Since in this emotional, eventful, Transition Century, it comprises, or has supplied with scarcely an exception, the genius, the intelligence, the industry—in a word, the Mind of the Country

In following the fortunes of three or four individuals I can but show a few of those shifting scenes that make Life resemble a Kaleidescope; which presents a new combination at every turn. If they be recognised by the reader as truthlike, my ambition will be more than satisfied. C. T.

"Send your mistress's maid here, if you please; and order the carriage round in an hour," said he to the liveried servant who appeared.

His first impulse had been to send for some hackney conveyance; the second to uphold his mother's dignity to the last.

"Here, dear mamma, is Simpson," he continued, as the lady's maid entered the room, "will you give her instructions about packing your wardrobe?"

Unconsciously to herself the widow was comforted by the decided and almost cheerful tones of her son: and she seemed, by the look of tenderness she cast upon him as she yielded to his request, to thank him now and for ever for assuming the part of adviser and protector. Him who but a few weeks before would scarely have formed a day's engagement without asking her advice and sanction!

Mr. Sefton, the father of the "half-brothers," had been a wealthy stockbroker, and one of those individuals whose lives are recorded as a sort of pendant to that of Whittington or Guy, by those who see only virtue in worldly success, and know not that shrewdness and cunning, for a time, may ape some higher qualities. For many years he had been a person of sufficient importance, especially "on 'Change," to boast that he had come up to London with half-a-crown only in his pocket; hinting, in his autobiographical reminiscences, at the facility and enjoyment with which a prudent youth may live on seven shillings a week, and the certainty that Prudence—the one cardinal virtue which, in his opinion, incorporated every other—must lead to wealth, his sole idea of happiness.

Of course, his only conception of suffering was, what Carlyle calls, the "curious Hell of not making money." His narrow mind had been narrowed yet further by circumstances; by the worldly success which had followed his careful policy through the different phases of life—from the time that the half-clerk, half errand-boy of a dingy counting-house had proved himself a "great arithmetician," to the time, to the days, when his name was good for tens of thousands. He had married, early in life, the mother of his elder son, the daughter of a griping and unscrupulous trader—a man whose kindred spirit had enabled him to foresee, and chuckle over their—as he called it—prosperous future. The small fortune he received with his first wife formed the nucleus of Mr. Sefton's future wealth; but she was a self-willed shrew, who visited on him the pains and penalties a vixen alone can inflict. And when death released him from this bondage, he, in his turn, revenged himself for the wrongs of her temper, by enacting the part of tyrant to the gentle nature which Fortune conferred on him in the person of his second wife.

How Mary-Anne Norton, the young and gently nurtured, the gifted and the generous, ever became this second wife is one of those inscrutable mysteries beyond the power of human ingenuity to unravel. That the bride was portionless, and Mr. Sefton wealthy, had nothing to do with the matter, for she was not one to sell herself for gold or station. No; there must have been the common story of investing the ideal of the heart in an image of clay—that every-day delusion from which the victim is sure, sooner or later, to be awakened.

Hers had been for long years that worse than helot bondage, the doom of being indissolubly yoked to an inferior nature; inferior in its moral qualities and perceptions, I mean, for equality or unison of intellect is of much less importance in our close and home connections. As is ever the case in such unions, the lower character, utterly incapable of comprehending the thoughts, the feelings, the springs of action which moved the loftier mind, grew more and more suspicious and tyrannical as years rolled on, till whatever bonds of regard had once bound them, seemed link by link to have fallen away. The void in Mrs. Sefton's heart, however, had been amply filled by her son, her only child, in whom all the strong, and deep, and holy affections of her soul were concentrated. Worthy was he of her mother's love; but better let his actions speak for him, that describe what he was.

In due proportion, as the mother and son were blessed by their mutual affection—the result of their being congenial characters infinitely more than of the sacred tie between them—did Mr. Sefton lavish his favour and regard on his first-born. And this was natural: they too had congenial tastes, opinions, and pursuits; and, though one does not like to use the word affection as existing between two such selfish, worldly, unscrupulous beings, it is hard to find the exact term which might apply to the relations between them. If it were not grief Charles Sefton felt at his father's death, it was the nearest approach to that emotion he was capable of experiencing; and this, too, though he came into the possession of houses and lands, and the fine business, which, however, he had really, though not nominally managed for half a dozen years. Truly there was some fragment of a heart in his bosom, as there is, I firmly believe, in the most worthless and degraded of human beings, if we only knew how to get at it, and touch the spring which opens to better things.

When Trevor Sefton accused his brother of having robbed the widow, the facts were these:—During the lingering illness which preceded their father's death, he had had the sole control over his affairs; had dictated, there is little doubt, and superintended the execution of his will, and the very moderate—not to say mean—provision awarded to Trevor and his mother was made to depend on securities of that fluctuating nature that a change in the "money market" had rendered them utterly worthless. But the will was so carefully and precisely worded, and so legally executed, that there was no redress. Hence their destitution. Hence the scene I have endeavoured to depict.

As soon as Mrs. Sefton had left the drawing-room, Trevor took up his hat. He went to seek a lodging for himself and his mother. A really great mind always rises to meet great occasions when they present themselves, and this was assuredly one of those epochs in life which demand a heroism—though silent and enduring, rather than active—greater and more real than that which is often noised to the world, and glitters afterwards on the page of history. Trevor Sefton took a clear, but rapid survey of his position; and his conscience approved of the line he was pursuing. His mother must for the present accept the "bounty" offered by his elder brother. He was not yet sufficiently advanced in his profession, that of medicine, to earn one guinea by it; but he was thankful to Providence that the fees for lectures and all preliminary expenses necessary to the completion of his medical education, had been already paid. He felt that he was starting fair in the race; he was passionately attached to the study of anatomy, and he had the noble ambition of becoming a benefactor to his fellow-creatures through his noble, and—reverently be it spoken—godlike profession.

Now was there another earnest hope and desire woven with this long-cherished one—namely, to be the support and solace of his adored mother. Meanwhile, the first step was to secure a respectable home, though with due regard to their narrow income. This was done, without journeying very far, and without much difficulty. He engaged the second floor of a neat house, in a "quiet" street. To be sure, he might have had a "parlour" for the same money that he was to pay, and it is a word which sounds somewhat finer. But Trevor Sefton had already learnt one of the most important lessons in the world—namely, to eschew shams of all sorts—to Be, and not to care for the Seeming. The second floor was more airy, and at the same time more secluded; and then, to crown all, there was a little third room quite large enough for his own bed-chamber, and it would be such a comfort to be near his mother. Had he taken the "parlours," she would have slept down stairs, and he far away up in an attic. Now, there would be but a thin wall between them. They could speak from one room to another, he was sure; and so one idea led on to another, till he pictured himself "petting"—there is no other word so expressive—petting his mother, even as she had petted him from childhood upwards. Now waiting upon her with lover-like—no, more constant assiduity than that; and now fulfilling not a few of the duties of a lady's maid.

Very silly, perhaps some readers will say! More like the thoughts of a fond and foolish girl, than of a brave man. Is it so? Think again, good people. For my own part, I never knew a man—worthy to be called a Man—who had not a great deal of what is thought to be Woman's nature mingled in his composition

(To be Continued.)

Archaeological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland.—The Annual Meeting will be held at York, commencing on Tuesday, July 21st. Patron, the Archbishop of York. President, the Earl Fitzwilliam. An arrangement has been made with the Directors of the London and Birmingham and the Midland Counties Railway for the conveyance of Members between London and York, at reduced fares.

TERRIFIC THUNDER-STORM IN GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

On Thursday week, about noon, the City of Gloucester was visited by a violent storm of most vivid flashes of lightning, and instantaneous discharges of heavy thunder. Several persons were knocked down, and injured; but a far more serious catastrophe occurred at the turnpike toll house, on the Stroud road. The Gloucester Journal states:—"A great number of persons who were working in an adjoining field, and others from the neighbourhood, finding themselves suddenly in the midst of a storm, ran into the toll-house for shelter. Here at least fifteen persons had crowded, nearly as close as they could well stand, when, in the moment that they were congratulating themselves upon timely shelter, a flash of forked lightning struck a neighbouring tree, glanced thence into the house in the midst of the affrighted inmates, and, exploding with a terrific report, threw most of them to the ground, and shaking the building to its foundation, knocked out walls, windows, doors, &c., and covered the room, and the bruised and stunned people with some hundredweights of brick, plaster, and large and small fragments of rafters, door-posts, &c. As soon as the catastrophe became known, several of the neighbours and others ran to render assistance, when they found about one-half of the poor creatures lying in a state of insensibility in the midst of the ruins, and of the others, most of them were stunned and terrified so as scarcely to be conscious of anything around them. The toll-collector and his mother-in-law appear to have been partially stunned; but his wife and infant, who were in bed upstairs, miraculously escaped unhurt. Seven persons were picked up from among the ruins, most of them being insensible, and one or two, to all appearance, dead. They were carried immediately to the Infirmary, where they received prompt and able attention."

Our Artist has sketched the Toll-House as it appeared on Friday, after some portions of the building, loosened by the shock, had been removed.

We learn, also, that Mr. John Knowls, who was carrying a three-pronged fork, was thrown to the ground by the lightning, and was found nearly lifeless. His injuries were attended by severe nervous derangement, and by—what is not so customary—very excruciating pain.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

We have again had an opportunity of hearing and judging Verdi's music—two of his operas having been given last week at this Theatre; and with the greater effect that their massive music and splendid harmonies bring into relief the lighter compositions of the school which this composer and his followers bid fair to supplant. Of "Nino," and "I Lombardi," our opinion remains unaltered; though to the former composition we must give the palm of superiority, every time we hear it increasing our appreciation of the wonderful imagination and profound science, which characterise this opera as a true work of genius. The "Lombardi," with its slendid mise en scène and cast, and containing, as it does, exquisite morceaux, of that description which speedily find their way into the concert room and drawing-room, and are, therefore, the more certain of being truly appreciated on the stage—is, perhaps, still better calculated for general admiration. Its performance, on Saturday, was attended by one of the most crowded audiences of the season—thus doing honour to the discernment of the management in the introduction of a composer, two years ago, unknown in England, though enthusiastically admired abroad.

"Il Matrimonio" was given on Tuesday. A first performance of the music of this opera, after so long a habit of hearing works of a more modern stamp, hardly reveals all its beauties, but after one or two repetitions its charming melodies and the astonishing imagination and descriptive power which characterise the work produce the greatest effect upon the mind, and certainly nothing could be more admirable than its execution by the sextett of great singers who take a part in it. Here Grisi's Carolina, as we have said before, is an admirable performance. In the sentimental scenes with Mario, in her display of feminine spite against her shrewish sister, in the spirit with which she turns upon them all when pushed to the utmost by family persecutions, and in the naïveté with which she invests her whole impersonation, she is inimitable, and this may safely be pronounced one of her best comic parts. Castellan is somewhat too pretty and too gentle to make an apt representative of the envious Elisetta; but, even in this part, her usual tact, her musical genius, and delightful voice, stand her in good stead, while [illegible]ntholi brings in her powerful talent to fill up the picture. Of Mario and of the Lablaches, father and son, we have already spoken as they deserved. The latter in this piece acts excellently, while the music does not call for those extraordinary powers of voice, the lack of which alone prevents this talented artist achieving a very high place in lyrical art.

"Lalla Rookh" is still the favourite ballet at this theatre; and, now that practice has brought into due order all the varied elements of this composition, it may be pronounced one of the most perfect things of the kind produced for some time past. The revival of the little "divertissement," "La Bacchante," has also been highly successful. Nothing can be more effective and more classical than the grouping of the votaries of the "rosy god" in this composition; while the attitudes of Lucile Grahn, as she quaffs the vinous beverage, are models for a painter or a sculptor, being characterised by that poetical and ideal grace which give the great charm to her dancing.

HAYMARKET.

The two-act comic drama of "Borough Politics," produced at this house last week, is, we believe, from the pen of Mr Marston, a gentleman who wrote the tragedy of "The Patrician's Daughter," performed, during Mr. Macready's management, at Drury L[illegible]

The plot is exceedingly simple, turning on the rivalry of Nathan Thompson (Mr. Webster), a wealthy farmer, residing in the parish of Bambleton, and Doctor Neville (Mr. Tilbury), with respect to being elected mayor of the borough. In this quarrel, the wives, Mrs. Thompson (Mrs. Glover), and Mrs. Neville (Mrs. Stanley), of course, join; and the result is, to make miserable Frank Neville (Mr. Howe) and Fanny Thompson (Mrs. Edwin Yarnold), the son and daughter of the candidates, who are attached to each other, but compelled to break off the engagement in consequence. At length, however, Mr. Thompson, a good honest man, who has risen to great wealth by his industry, is so wretched, by the cares of position, and his wife so distressed at seeing her daughter so unhappy, that, in spite of the eloquence of Florid (Mr. Buckstone), the editor of the "Bumbleton Denouncer," and, in the cant words of this age, "the friend of independence and the poor man," who has urged the worthy farmer to the contest, he resigns all pretensions to the mayoralty, has all his old-fashioned comfortable furniture brought back to his gaudy drawing-room, and makes his child once more happy by giving her to Frank Neville.

All this, it will be seen, is most simply constructed; indeed, [illegible] might have been fatal to a piece written less agreeably, but the [illegible] particularly brilliant or epigrammatic, was [illegible] abounded in pleasant images and bits of nature. It was admirably [illegible] the performers. Mr. Webster was completely at home as the rough, right-hearted farmer; and the vulgarity of Mrs. Glover's Mrs. Thompson—she has been a cook—was inimitably portrayed. A quarrel between her and Mrs. Stanley was a rich piece of acting, on both sides. Mr. Buckstone's Florid was droll enough; but his speeches, comical as they were, had too much the appearance of having been brought in for the nonce. We must not omit to praise the graceful and natural performance of Mrs. Edwin Yarnold. Her confession of her love for Frank, to her mother, in which she speaks of having listened to his affectionate words, "until the ear's luxuries became the heart's necessities" [illegible] was much applauded.

The reception of the piece was perfectly unequivocal, and it bids fair [illegible] some time.

On Tuesday, Miss Cushman appeared, for the first time, as [illegible], in the musical drama of "Guy Mannering," and her performance was [illegible] thunders of applause. As we had anticipated, it was powerful, nervous, striking. All her strongest points, however, were, to our thinking, in [illegible] than her declamation. Her voice did not carry out the s[illegible] of age, which her artistic "making-up" gave rise to. It was too youthful [illegible] in which she would have spoken as Romeo. But we must add that the favourable impression which she made upon the house was most decided. She was loudly called for at the conclusion of the drama, and led on by Mr. Webster—an excellent Dandie Dinmont, by the way—to receive the fresh marks of approbation from the audience. There was nothing in the distribution of the other characters that calls for any particular remark, beyond the [illegible] Horton, as Julia Mannering, and the drollery of Mr. Farren, [illegible]. The house was very well filled.

FRENCH PLAYS.

The eminent tragic actress, Mademoiselle Rachel, will perform at this theatre for the first time on Monday next, in Corneille's tragedy of "Les Horaces." She is engaged for six representations only, and with her last performances the present season will terminate. The pieces produced will be "Les Horaces," "Phèdre," "Le Cid," "Bajazet," "Virginie," and "Jeanne d' Arc."

PRINCESS'.

A new transatlantic actress, Miss Virginia Monier, appeared here, as we had announced, on Saturday evening, as Mrs. Haller, in "The Stranger." Her début was decidedly very successful, and she may rank as a perfect actress, perhaps almost too much so. But as a paragraph has appeared in the papers, stating that on the first night of her performance she was suffering from severe indisposition, we will defer a lengthened criticism until next week, when we shall take an opportunity of again seeing her.

ADELPHI.

We much regret that we cannot chronicle the complete success of "The Devil of Marseilles," a three-act drama, played here for the first time on Wednesday evening. For the author, Mr R. B Peake, is a gentleman to whom the play-going public are under so many obligations; his name is associated with so many pleasant recollections; and he is himself so esteemed and respected by his brother writers, that, next to their own, there is no one, we are sure, whose success they would sooner hear of or chronicle. The chief fault of the piece, on Wednesday, was its length; which was too great in proportion to its action: and this we hope may be amended upon future representations.

The plot is of the true supernatural order—of the same class as those dramas formerly played at the old English Opera-house, an[illegible] which may be included, if we mistake not, Mr. Peake's own pieces of [illegible] "The Evil Eye," &c. The "Devil" is intended to [illegible] spirit of Avarice, but he has less to do with the action than many of his predecessors. Brissac (Mr. Cullenford), a rich merchant of Marseilles, has a ward, Clementine (Madame Celeste), who is in love with De Launay (Mr. Boyce), a young surgeon. This young man is the medical attendant of the Bagne, or convict hospital; and is poor and discontented with his station. He hears that a criminal, condemned for life to the Bagne, is dead, and he orders the body to be brought before him. Hereon the attendants bear in the presumed corpse of Cranon (Mr. O Smith), who subsequently comes to life, and confesses that his death was assumed, in order that he might effect his escape. He begs De Launay to keep his secret; and tells him, if he will aid his scheme, that he will make him wealthy. De Launay discovers that Cranon had formerly robbed a traveller of four hundred thousand francs, which he had buried on the sea-shore. Hearing this, the young surgeon determines to appropriate it to himself. He calls in the guard, gives Cranon into custody, and starts on his not very honourable intent. Cranon contrives to escape, but De Launay has got the treasure, and the first act concludes with the departure of Clementine, Brissac, and their household for Rio Janeiro. Cranon also gets on board the ship, as a seaman.

In the second act we are transported to Rio Janiero; but the scenes were here principally taken up with the jealous bickerings of Jean de l'Oye (Mr. Wright), and his wife Jacqueline (Miss Woolgar), to whom Captain Beausobre (Mr. Paul Bedford) is desirous of paying his attentions. We find, however, that Clementine still loves De Launay, and that Cranon is plotting with Scipio, a negro, (Mr. Munyard), and Maquas, an Indian (Mr. C. J. Smith), to get possession of some jewels belonging to Brissac. In the third act, a Portuguese merchant, Aveira (Mr. Charles Perkins) arrives, and is discovered to be the father of Clementine. He sees a bracelet on her arm, which once belonged to him. He finds it was given to her by De Launay, and the surgeon is directly accused of robbery. He learns that Aveira was the traveller whom Cranon had formerly plundered, and fresh suspicion falls upon himself. Meanwhile, Cranon and his accomplices have robbed Brissac's house, and have carried off Clementine to the woods with them, instigated by the demon. The rogues quarrel. Maquas poisons some wine, which Cranon and Scipio drink; and the Indian hastens the catastrophe by stabbing the negro. Cranon then shoots the Indian, and lastly dies himself from the poison; but not before everything is cleared up by the arrival of De Launay, Brissac and the other characters, just as the Devil sets fire to the forest.

We have given as clear a notion of the story as we could; but the plot, more especially in the third act, was somewhat intricate and obscure. The Demon had too little to do with its progress; hence, his appearance excited no interest, as the audience perceived no purpose in his antics; nor did Mr. Mitchenson throw sufficient intention or quaintness into the part. The best sustained character in the piece was Mr. O. Smith's, both as regarded his powerful acting, and the very [illegible] manner in which he was made up. His costumes were perfect pictures: every point was given, and every attitude conceived, with consummate skill; and his appearance as the dead body in the first act, highly effective. Mr. Wright and Miss Woolgar were as droll as usual, and, perhaps, a trifle more subdued in their acting, which was an advantage; and Mr. Paul Bedford was as amorous and musical as the author could have wished him to be. Madame Celeste had not much to do, nor was the character particularly suited to her. we prefer her in more strikingly melodramatic parts

The scenery, by Messrs Pitt and Johnstone, was admirably painted; and some very effective music was introduced by Mr. Mellon: indeed, the entire drama has been capitally put upon the stage.

At the fall of the curtain, there was some warm applause, tempered with disapprobation; and the piece was announced for representation, by Mr. Paul Bedford, every evening.

LYCEUM.

This house appears to be recovering its run of good fortune with the temperate weather, and the audiences are again numerous and fashionable. An exceedingly comical vaudeville was produced on Monday, called "The Loan of a Wife," and bids fair to prove as great a favourite as any of the pleasant trifles that have preceded it. A dramatic author, one Onesiphorous Sobjoit (Mr. A. Wigan), has a rich old helpless uncle (Mr F Mathews), from whom he has received supplies for some years by pretending that he is a married man with four children. He learns, however, one day, that his uncle, who has been for some time bedridden, has recovered the use of his limbs, and, to his horror, is coming up to town to see him. He is, therefore, driven to borrow a wife, and, procuring three instead of one, he confuses the old man terribly. The first of these is a pretty girl, Miss Jones (Miss Howard), who, however, soon elopes with her real lover. The second a horrible old woman, Mrs Bandanna (Mr. Meadows), who deals in cheap cigars and smuggled handkerchiefs; and the third, a Mrs Fitz-montemaur (Mrs. Woollidge), said to be a milliner, but who proves, in reality, to be the old uncle's deserted wife. There is a terrible riot in consequence of all these wheels within wheels, but at last the old man forgives his nephew, and even recommends him to get a real wife of his own instead of borrowing one.

If the incessant laughter and applause of the audience be the best proofs of success, then was this little piece very fortunate. It was acted to perfection by all we have mentioned; as well as by Miss Turner, who displayed much smartness in her assumption of Alphonso, the old man's son. We expect that it will be found a most advantageous addition to the Lyceum repertoire; more especially as it does not require the services of Mr. and Mrs. Keeley; and these clever artistes must often be in want, we conceive, of a little repose.

VAUXHALL.

The first Masquerade of the season took place here on Monday evening; and was a very great improvement upon former entertainments of the kind, both as to the manner in which the general arrangements were made, and the variety and style of the costumes. Three quadrille bands were constantly playing, all the evening; in the orchestra, the new dancing enclosure, and the old ball-room; and their exertions were well responded to by the dancers, who kept up the quadrilles and polkas, with good-humoured spirit, until some little time after daylight. It is something to say, that up to this period, nothing like a "row" occurred to upset the general hilarity of the evening, and by those who recollect the scenes of dreary brutality invariably presented by the masquerades in England, but half a-dozen years back, the advantage of this change will be readily acknowledged.

M Tourniaire's troupe of equestrians danced a quadrille in the circus, and the programme of amusements generally appeared to give the greatest satisfaction to the crowd of revellers who filled the "Royal Property"

COLOSSEUM.

On Saturday afternoon, his Highness Ibrahim Pacha and suite visited this splendid establishment, and was conducted by Mr. W. Bradwel. to the "Panorama of London," Conservatories, Glyptotheca, Swiss Cottage, Classic Ruins, and Camera, &c, with every portion of which his Highness expressed his admiration and delight. In the evening, the Pacha came to view the "Panorama of London by Night," the various atmospheric effects of which much astonished his Highness. He afterwards visited every part of the establishment a second time, and, having partaken of some refreshment, and his cigar, he retired, stating, if his engagements permitted, he should again visit the Night View of London before he left London The Colosseum was exceedingly crowded by groups of elegantly-dressed ladies; Saturday being the most fashionable evening of the week at this establishment.

GRAND REVIEW AT WOOLWICH.

The long-anticipated review of the Royal Horse Artillery took place on Thursday. From an early hour in the morning, the Waterman's and Woolwich Company's boats were crammed with cargoes of visitants, in order to have a glimpse of his Highness Ibrahim Pacha.

At nine o'clock, carriages were in readiness to receive the Pacha who was attended by Sami Pacha, Colonel Bonfort, M. Nubart, and Major C Dickson, when they at once proceeded to Hungerford pier, and embarked on board the Dryad steamer. On her casting off from the pier, he was loudly cheered by the numerous spectators, which he politely acknowledged. On the passage down, the usual demonstrations took place from the numerous crews of the vessels lying at anchor. At half-past ten o'clock the Dryad arrived off the dockyard, when his Highness was received by a guard of honour. The celebrated band of the Marines struck up the National Anthem upon his Highness landing, when he at once proceeded to view the Laboratory, and other objects of interest in the Arsenal.

From thence his Highness proceeded to view the Repository. This having taken considerable time, his Highness at once proceeded to the Common, where the Horse Artillery, with the field batteries, were in readiness to manœuvre in the presence of his Highness, who appeared extremely delighted with the whole operations, and the great rapidity and precision with which they went through their various exercises, and expressed his delight at seeing so many thousands of spectators assembled At eleven o'clock the mortar and howitzer practice commenced, which greatly surprised his Highness; and the whole of the troops went through all the manœuvres of a real engagement.

A déjeûner was given by the officers of the garrison, at which his Highness and [illegible] attended

At the close of the interesting proceedings, his Highness was pleased to express his approbation of the splendid body of men which that day he had seen exercised.

Legality of Sales of Railway Scrip in a Company Not Completely Registered.—The Court of Exchequer, in the case of Lawton v. Hickman, has confirmed the judgment of the same Court in the case of Young v. Smith. The present was an action for goods sold and delivered. The defendant pleaded that the goods and chattels were shares in a joint stock company, illegally sold after the 1st of November, 1844; and it set forth all the facts necessary for showing that the company was a company of the kind, and was not completely registered within the 7th and 8th Vict., c. 110 The plaintiff replied that the company was [illegible] the purpose of making a railway to be called the Grand Union R[illegible], under the authority of an Act of Parliament to be obtained for that purpose; and, therefore, that the sale of shares was not illegal. The defendant demurred to the replication, and the qu[illegible] the replication made the sale of shares legal. One of the causes of demurrer was, that the power required from Parliament for the purposes of the Company was not specified, and that the replication was therefore too general. The answer to that was, th[illegible]tion followed the words of the statute, and was sufficient [illegible], that the replication did not state that the creation of a railway was the sole purpose of the Company; but that was not [illegible]; the proviso in the statute did not in terms require that such should be the case; and the Court would not assume that the Company had any other object in view. To make that objection available, it ought to have been specially averred that the Company had some other purpose in view besides the formation [illegible]. Then it was objected that railway shares were not goods and chattels; but the Court did not consider this objection tenable, especially as such shares had in many instances been recognised as goods and chattels by the Courts. The intention of the Legislature most probably was to deal differently with railway companies from other joint-stock companies, and the special provision intended to apply to railways might have been omitted by accident. It certainly was not to be found in the act, and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to the judgment of the Court.

IRELAND

O'CONNELL AND THE WHIGS.

At the Repeal Association on Monday, a long letter was read from Mr. O'Connell, in which he develops his views upon the position of affairs now that the Whigs are about to return to office. The letter commences with a strong censure upon the Coercion Bill. Mr. O'Connell then gives his opinion that it is utterly impossible for a British Parliament to govern Ireland properly, and after detailing his usual account of Irish grievances, he gives this list of the measures which he believes the Whig Ministry must adopt in regard to Ireland:—

"Let no Englishman ask what we complain of. We have already declared, and declare again, that we complain of—1. A scandalously defective representation. 2. A grievously limited and defective franchise. 3. Miserably defective corporate reform. 4. The monstrously oppressive Church Establishment for the use of the few.

"We require the redress of these grievances, and, in addition—5. A literary and religious education for each persuasion, free from the power of any other Justice to all—ascendancy to none. 6. An absentee tax, sufficient to secure the residence, or to compensate for the absence of the landed proprietors. 7. The establishment of the 'tenant right.' 8. Compensation for valuable improvements made by the occupying tenant. 9. Abolition of ejectment for non payment of rent, unless under a lease of 31 years at the least. 10. Abolition of the power of distraint, unless there be a lease of 21 years at the least. 11. Total abolition of the power of distraining growing crops. 12. The institution of county boards instead of the present inadequate and blundering county grand jury system.

"Such are the measures of relief for Ireland which the new Ministry will be required to carry out."

Mr. O'Connell does not appear to have much confieence in these remedies, for the letter concludes by stating that the only hope for Ireland is "the Repeal of the Union."

Mr. Smith O'Brien then made a speech about his recent incarceration, justifying the course he had adopted. He said the time had now arrived for a cordial union of the friends of Ireland, for the purpose of seeking a restoration of her local Legislature. He protested against any amalgamation with the Whigs. Ireland should be governed by Irishmen, and by laws made in Ireland.

MURDER AND OUTRAGES.

On Saturday morning last, as a farmer, named Kelly, with his son, were proceeding to the fair of Callaghan's Mills, in the county Clare, they were fired at by three men, almost simultaneously, from behind a low wall. The first shot grazed the father's head, the son received the second in his groin, and the third in his leg. The assailants then knocked down their victims, and fractured both their skulls. The father is reported to be dead. The son succeeded in escaping by the approach of a party of men going to the fair. The Kellys were attacked for having taken a farm from Mr. Matthew Reddan, about two years since, from which the former tenant voluntarily retired.

In the Clare Journal, from which the foregoing is abstracted, there is the report of an inquest held on the body of a young woman who was murdered by a man of between 60 and 70 years of age, whom she refused to marry. The following facts were given in evidence:—It appeared that an old man named Henry Lucas, between 60 and 70 years of age, a widower only two months, set his affections upon the deceased, aged about 18 years, and wanted to extract an oath from her that she would marry him. On the day mentioned, the 27th of April, Lucas placed the deceased upon her knees, and required her to swear she would marry him. She promised she would marry him, but she refused to take an oath, upon which he discharged a pistol at her, which wounded her in the neck, from the effects of which she died on Friday last. Shortly after the occurrence, Lucas surrendered himself to the police, acknowledging he murdered the deceased, and the policeman said he appeared so agitated that he "imagined he was out of his mind." Dr. Finucane, who was in attendance upon the deceased from the time of the occurrence, proved her death was occasioned by the wound, and the Jury returned a verdict accordingly.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

SUICIDE OF TWO BROTHERS, AT NOTTINGHAM.

A shocking event was discovered on Wednesday morning to have taken place at Nottingham—no less than the suicide of two brothers, named William and Samuel Collier, joiners by trade, and of the respective ages of forty and thirty-six, who were found at five o'clock in the morning in what is called Taylor's Rope-shed, suspended by the neck from one of the beams. An alarm was immediately given, and assistance procured, but it was evident they had both been dead several hours. The unhappy men must have been resolutely bent on self destruction. A brace was around the neck of one, and to this was attached a short piece of cord, which was fastened around the neck of the other, and from this cord both the deceased were discovered suspended from a beam in the barn, face to face, and with their feet only about four inches from the ground.

All kinds of rumours are afloat as to the cause of the unhappy affair. It should be stated, too, that the father of the deceased is missing, and surmises the most painful have arisen respecting his fate. The old man and his two sons, it appears, lived together in rather a respectable-looking house in Back-lane, very near the spot where the brothers put an end to their lives, but their mother being dead they had no housekeeper, managing principally for themselves. The brothers were seen by a neighbour on Tuesday morning on the outskirts of the town; and one of them asked whether he (the neighbour) had heard anything, and on his replying in the negative, one of the deceased answered, "You will do, then; we are in debt." It is said, however, that they not only lived in their own house, but that they also owned several others in the same street. They were both, too, members of money clubs, but were not in arrear with their payments, or at least only to a very trifling amount.

It is remarkable that the deceased were the same who were given into custody, three or four years ago, on a charge of cruel usage towards a sister, who is now confined in a lunatic asylum. The poor creature was found by the neighbours chained in a cellar, her hair and nails grown to an enormous length, and her body in a most pitiable state from sundry sores, with which, in fact, it was nearly covered. The affair made a great sensation at the time, and now, of course, all the circumstances are revived. It is said that the father's hat and coat have been found upon the premises. The bodies of the deceased were dressed quite as well as men of their calling usually are, and certainly presented no indications of extreme poverty. According to another report, the body of the old man had been found in a canal, about two miles from the town.

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE LANCASTER AND CARLISLE RAILWAY.—Last Saturday afternoon, Jackson Wilkinson, of Penrith, labourer, and Bernard Dean, also of Penrith, dealer in soft goods, were killed on the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway, near Plumpton Hall, about three miles north of Penrith. Wilkinson was the breaksman of the waggons, which were taken down by the steam engine from the ballast-pit near Kettleside, to the filling up of a boggy place in Plumpton Back-street, and he was conducting a train of waggons down the incline to the tip end, the engine having just been disconnected, when two of the foremost waggons ran off the rails and upset, and the two men being thrown off, the waggons ran over them, and literally crushed them to atoms. The bodies were removed to their respective homes, at Penrith. Mr. Robson, the superintendent of the Penrith district of the line, was present at the time, who states that the catastrophe was entirely accidental. Another man, it was rumoured the same afternoon, was missed on the same line, between Heskett and Carlisle, but the particulars have not transpired.

MURDER AND SUICIDE AT BRIGHTON.—The Brighton workhouse was, on Tuesday, the scene of a dreadful murder, committed on an infant, six months old, by its mother, who afterwards cut her own throat, and died almost instantly. The infant survived till four o'clock in the afternoon, when it expired; the murder was committed at ten o'clock in the morning. The name of the woman was Norman; she was about thirty years of age, and was the wife of a man now in the House of Correction, undergoing sentence for felony. The woman, Norman, had lately complained of pains in her head, and, owing to her being ill, did not get up with the other women. She sent for the child, which was brought to her, and immediately afterwards committed the shocking act, rushing out of the room with her throat cut. She previously requested that her other two children might be brought to her, but fortunately they were not in the way. The maiden name of the woman was Barker, and she was brought up by her uncle, Mr. B. Hammond, of Lime Cottage, Buckland, near Dover, Kent. Her husband is the son of Mr. Norman, of Glynde. At the Inquest, held on Wednesday, the jury returned a verdict that "the deceased destroyed herself and child in a fit of insanity."

LAMENTABLE ACCIDENT ON THE BRIGHTON RAILWAY.—On Monday afternoon an accident took place at the Balcombe station, attended with loss of life. It appears that a married lady named Murphy, was waiting the approach of the down train (which leaves London at two o'clock), for the purpose of proceeding to Hayward's-heath station, about five miles distant. The lady was crossing the rails to get to the station-house, at the time the down-train was in sight, and the sudden whistle produced such an effect on her that she fell on to the rails. The station-clerk, named Shaw, perceiving the lady's perilous situation attempted to drag her away, and stooped for that purpose, but before he could raise himself the buffers of the engine struck him on the head, and throwing him down, severed the head from the body. The body of the lady was shockingly mutilated and life was extinct. The husband was on the spot at the time. An Inquest was held on Tuesday, and after hearing evidence corroborative of the above statement, the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death" with a deodand of 1s on t[illegible] Shaw's head was severed in two, and the face dreadfully mangled. [illegible] female was less disfigured, but her face had been badly cut, and both her [illegible] Mrs. M[illegible]y was 32, and Shaw 64 years of age. Neither of t[illegible] family.

DEATH OF MR. HANDLEY.—Henry Handley, Esq., formerly M.P. for Lincolnshire, died on Monday, at Sir Edward Dering's seat, in his fiftieth year. He married (1825) the Hon. Caroline Edwardes, daughter of the present Lord Kensington, and sister to the Hon. Lady Dering.

OPENING OF THE LEWES AND HASTINGS RAILWAY.—The opening to Hastings took place last Saturday, according to announcement, and a considerable number of passengers availed themselves of the new mode of transit through that part of Sussex. The trains started and arrived at their destination without the occurrence of any incident worthy of remark; and the traffic has since proceeded with great regularity. The line is at present carried no farther than Bulverhythe, about half a mile from St. Leonard's; and horse vehicles are at present employed to complete the journey into Hastings and St. Leonard's. In a few weeks the works will be completed to St. Leonard's, which is to be the terminus. But the South-Eastern Company have a bill for continuing the line by means of tunnelling at the back of St. Leonard's into Hastings, and thence onward to Ashford.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

LADY BLACKETT.

Her Ladyship, who died on the 25th ultimo, was the only daughter of Sir Charles Miles Lambert Monck, Bart., of Belsay Castle, in the county of Northumberland, and wife of Sir Edward Blackett, Bart. of Matson Hall, in the same county. The paternal family of her Ladyship is of very ancient descent, it having been of distinction in the reign of Edward III. The original name was Middleton, but it was changed for that of Monck by the present Baronet, in compliance with the will of his maternal grandfather, the late Lawrence Monck, Esq., of Caenby, Lincolnshire. By her marriage Lady Blackett became also allied to a very old and respectable house. Her husband, Sir Edward Blackett, is a descendant of the Blacketts of Wylam, he being the sixth Baronet in direct lineage from a younger son of that family, who was created a Baronet in 1673. Julia, Lady Blackett, whose death we here record, was married to Sir Edward on the 1st of May, 1830 and leaves a young family to deplore, with her husband, her irreparable loss.

CAPTAIN TOKER, R.N.

Thomas Richard Toker was born in 1780; he was the son of the late John Toker, Esq., of the Oaks, Ospringe, Kent. He entered the Royal navy early in life, was made a Lieutenant the 20th December, 1800, and a Post-Captain the 4th December, 1813. He was Midshipman in the Defence at the battle of the Nile, and senior Lieutenant of the Colossus at Trafalgar; and he was, subsequently, on frequent occasions, actively employed in the service of his country, and was much regarded by his brother officers. Captain Toker died on the 27th ultimo, at his residence, 8, Kent-terrace, Regent's-part, in the 66th year of his age.

LA MARQUISE D' HARCOURT.

Sophia, Marquise d' Harcourt, whose accidental and melancholy death occurred last week, was the only daughter and heiress of Richard Bard Harcourt, Esq., of Aldbury, Herts., a descendant of Simon, first Baron and Viscount Harcourt, and was the widow of the Marquis d' Harcourt, C.B., a Major-General in the British service. Her husband, the Marquis, a French noble, to whom she was married on the 12th of June, 1800, was the well-known relative, friend, companion in arms, and legatee of the late Earl Harcourt. It is said that their intimacy, which lasted through life, arose from the Earl having taken his kinsman prisoner in battle, and having brought him to England, where the kindness and hospitality the latter experienced, induced him to make this his adopted country. He entered our army, and rose during the late war, with distinction, through the various grades, to the rank he held at his death. It is no less sad than singular that he also perished through an accident, being killed by a fall from his horse, at St. Leonard's Hill.

Pursuant to a provision in Earl Harcourt's will, £80,000 were, after the Marquis and Marquise's deaths, to be invested in land, and that, together with the Earl's St. Leonard's estates, to be entailed on the sons of the Marquis, and their heirs male, provided that the party who should succeed to the lands purchased with the £80,000, be not absent from England more than six months at one time, unless in the civil or military service of Great Britain, or travelling for education.

The Marquise's lamentable death was caused by her taking, on Monday, the 22nd ultimo, a vial full of laudanum, in mistake for another medicine. She survived the accident until the next morning only. Her remains were interred, on Wednesday, the 1st instant, in the family vault, in Aldbury Church.

The Marquise was universally respected and beloved, and her melancholy fate is deeply deplored. She leaves two sons; the elder of whom is the present Marquis; the younger is Captain William Harcourt.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Friday.—The present week's arrivals of English wheat having been very moderate the show of samples of that article here to-day was small, still however, owing to the immense foreign [illegible] pressing on the market free of duty, the demand was exceedingly dull, at a decline in the quotations of quite 1s per quarter. Foreign wheat commanded very little attention, yet, as the holders were tolerably firm, we can notice no alteration in value. In barley, very little was doing, at late rates. Superfine malt was quite as dear. In other kinds very few sales were reported. Oats, beans, and peas—the supplies of which were large—met a very dull inquiry, at barely stationary prices.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 3020; barley, 540; oats, 130. Irish: wheat, ——; barley, ——; oats, [illegible]. Foreign: wheat, 15,190; barley, 520; oats, 2450. Flour, 1380 sacks; malt, 2450 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s to 56s; ditto white, 47s to 59s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 41s to 48s; ditto white, 50s to 55s; rye, —s to —s; grinding barley, 24s to 27s; distilling, 27s to 29s; malting ditto, 30s to 32s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 56s to 60s; brown ditto, 50s [illegible] Kingston and Ware, 58s to 60s; Chevalier, 61s to 62s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire [illegible] and Cork, black, 21s to 25s, ditto, [illegible] per quarter [illegible] peas, [illegible] per quarter. [illegible] 28s per barrel.

[illegible] at the Custom House from Saturday to Wednesday last.

Saturday, 1st day.—Wheat, 48,734; oats, 16,415; barley, 520 quarters. Flour, [illegible] 723 cwt.

Monday, 2nd day.—Wheat, 76,380; oats, 22,583; barley, 600 quarters. Flour, 17[illegible]

Tuesday, 3rd day.—Wheat, 175,453; oats, 5042; barley, 2109; beans, 3580; peas, 315 quarters. Flour, 74,846 cwt.

Wednesday, 4th day.—Wheat, 284,891; oats, 20,[illegible]; barley, 92[illegible]7; rye, ——; beans, 1039; peas, 2757. Flour, 251,609 cwt.

The Seed Market.—Linseed cakes continue in steady request, at fully last week's quotations. In all other articles, next to nothing is doing.

Linseed, English, sowing, 54s to 57s; Baltic, crushing, 42s to 44s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 43s to 46s. Hempseed, 34s to 36s per quarter. Coriander, 11s to 15s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 10s to 14s; white ditto, 10s to 12s. Tares, 7s 9d to 8s 3d per bushel. English Rapeseed, £24 to £26 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £10 5s to £10 10s; ditto, foreign, £7 5s to £8 0s per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £6 5s per ton. Canary [illegible] to 48s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s; extra, 52s to 55s; white, 60s to [illegible] extra, up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 50s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 8d to 9½d, of household ditto, 7d to 8d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat 52s 2d; barley, 27s 4d; oats, 23s 6d; rye 32s 7d; beans, 37s 6d; peas, 35s 0d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 52s 10d; barley, 27s 9d; oats, 23s 6d; rye, 33s 0d; beans, 36s 2d; peas, 34s 4d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 5s 0d; barley, 4s; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 2s; beans, 2s 0d; peas, 2s 0d.

Tea.—Very little business has been transacted in this article during the present week, yet the quotations rule about stationary. Common sound Congou, 10d; and common Twankay, 1s 1d to 1s 3d per lb. The deliveries continue good.

Sugar.—Owing to the anticipated alterations in the duties, all descriptions of raw sugar have moved off slowly, since our last report, at a decline of 1s per cwt. The refined market has been quiet, 68s 6d to 69s for brown, and 69s 6d to 70s for standard lumps—being previous quotations.

Coffee.—On the whole there is rather more business doing in this market, and previous rates are well supported.

Rice.—A steady demand exists for most kinds of rice, and prices are quite as high as last advised.

Provisions.—We have to report a steady demand for foreign butter, at an advance in the quotations of 2s per cwt. Fine Friesland is now selling at 86s to 90s; and inferior qualities, 66s to 84s per cwt. Irish butter moves off freely, at 78s to 80s for Waterford landed; 80s to 82s for Cork, 78s to 80s for Limerick, and 78s to 81s for Kilkenny. For forward shipment, a good business has been doing. English butter is a free sale, at higher rates. Fine Dorset, 88s to 94s; Devon, 82s to 86s per cwt, and fresh 10s to 13s per dozen. Bacon is in good request, at 58s to 60s for choice parcels. There is a large consumption going on, and the market has a very fine appearance. Hams and lard, as well as most other kinds of provisions, are quite as dear.

[illegible] market is steady [illegible] Town Tallow, 39s to 39s 6d net cash. The supply of the latter is seasonably large.

Oils.—Seal Oil is held at higher rates. In other kinds, comparatively little is doing.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 0s to £4 0s; clover ditto, £4 5s to £5 15s; oat straw, £1 10s to £1 12s; wheat straw, £1 12s to £1 14s per load. New meadow hay £2 5s to £3 5s [illegible]

[illegible] In the private contract market, owing, in some measure, to the approaching public [illegible] little is doing, and the quotations are almost nominal.

[illegible] season for old potatoes having been brought to a close, we have no sales to report. New potatoes are in good supply, and steady demand, at from 8s to 18s per cwt.

Coals (Friday).—Adair's, 13s 3d; Original Tanfield, 12s 9d; Sidney's Hartley, [illegible]s; Lambton, 14s 9d; Stewart's, 15s; Eden Main, 14s 6d; and Tees, 15s per ton.

Hops (Friday).—From some parts of Kent, our accounts respecting the bine are not quite so favourable as last week; but, from Sussex and Farnham, they are very cheering. Hence the demand here is inactive, and prices are with difficulty supported. The duty is backed as high as £1[illegible]0,000. Sussex pockets, £5 5s to £6 6s; Weald of Kent ditto, £5 12s to £6 10s; Mid and East Kent ditto, £6 10s to £8 10s per cwt.

Smithfield (Friday).—In to-day's market, the supply of beasts was again moderately extensive. The attendance of buyers being somewhat on the increase, the beef trade was firm, and previous rates were well supported. We had on offer 80 oxen and cows from Holland, while the number of foreign sheep and lambs embraced 340, and of calves, 9 head. From Scotland, 40 Scots came fresh to hand. The number of sheep was tolerably extensive; yet the mutton trade was very steady, at extreme currencies. The same observation [illegible] applied to lambs, the general quality of which was good. In calves, a large business was d[illegible] at an advance of 2d per 8 lb. Pigs were dull, at late rates. Milch cows were selling slowly, at from £16 to £19 each.

Per 8 lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; second quality ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime large oxen, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 10d to 4s 0d; coarse and [illegible] 4s 0d; prime [illegible] pigs, 16s to 19s each. Beasts, 72[illegible]

Newgate and Leadenhall [illegible] well supplied.

Per 8lb. by the carcass.—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; large pork, 3s 4d to 4s 0d; inferior mutton, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; middling ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; veal, 3s 6d to 4s 6d; small pork, 4s 2d to 4s 10d; lamb, 5s 0d to 5s 10d.

ROBT. HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

There has existed a good demand for Money during the past week, arising principally from the settlement of the Corn and Tariff Bills. Duties on corn and goods which have remained in bond while those two important questions were pending, are now being daily paid, absorbing, of course, much ready money. The price, therefore, remains firm, at the rates which have been usual for the last two months.

The Market for British Securities opened with some animation on Monday, the settlement of the Oregon question having removed all probability of war. Consols closed at 95⅝ for the Opening, with a very firm market. This improvement was well maintained on Tuesday, and Consols at the close of business marked the further improved quotation of 95⅞. The unsettled state of the Ministry, and the financial prospect for some time to come, arising from a daily increase in the number of railways sanctioned by the Legislature, caused a slight reaction in prices towards the close of the week. This, coupled with the limited business done, caused a gradual decline. Consols leave off at 95¾ for the Opening, New Three-and-a-Quarter Cents. 96⅞, Reduced 95¼ to ½. The Exchequer Market still continues much depressed—large bills quoting only 11s. to 14s. premium, and small 14s. to 15s. premium. Bank Stock is 206½.

There has been little to occupy attention in the Foreign Market during the week. Mexican, on Monday, was a point worse, quoting 27, and has since receded to 26⅝ ¾, at which price it closes. Spanish Stock has scarcely varied, the Three per Cents. closing at 35⅛ ex dividend. The settlement—a very trifling affair took place on Tuesday; no alteration of prices, however, resulted. There has been no great disposition since to open new accounts, the following prices are therefore almost nominal:—Brazilian Bonds, Five per Cent., 8[illegible]; Granada, One per Cent., 20½; Mexican Bonds, 1837, Five per Cent., for the Account, 2[illegible]; Ditto, Deferred, 16; Portuguese Bonds, Five per Cent., 81; Ditto, Three per Cent., ex div., 48½; Spanish Bonds, Three per Cent., ex div., 35½; Venezuela Bonds, Two per Cent., 42¾; Belgian Four-and-a-Half per Cents., 97½; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents., 60⅜; Ditto Four per Cent. Certificates, 93⅞.

The only activity in the Share Market has been in North Staffordshire scrip. An advertisement appeared on Wednesday, signed in the name of the Secretary of the Company, calling a meeting to sanction an amalgamation with the Derby and Crewe line; and to accept jointly an offer of the London and Birmingham Railway. The scrip consequently advanced about 15s. per share. Towards the afternoon, however, a notice came down that the advertisement was unauthorised, and the signature of the secretary a forgery. An immediate reaction in price followed. With regard to bargains made in the Shares, the Committee of the Stock Exchange are awaiting some further evidence, before any decision is published. The general business of the market has been nearly limited to a few bargains in dividend-paying lines; while the trifling fluctuations will be seen by reference to the annexed list.—Amberg., Notting., Boston, and Eastern Junc., 1½; Birmingham and Oxford Junc., 3½; Buckinghamshire, ⅜ dis.; Caledonian, 9½; Ditto Extension, 1½; Derby and Crewe, 6¾; Direct Northern, 1⅛; Eastern Counties York Extension, 1⅝; Exeter, Yeovil, and Dorchester, 1½; Goole, Doncaster, and Sheffield, &c., ⅜ dis.; Grand Union (Nottingham and Lynn), ⅝; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 21½; Great North of England, New, 58; Ditto, New, 43; Great Western, 147; Ditto, Half Shares, 83; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 16½; Ditto, Fifths, 32½; Leeds and Bradford, 61; Leicester, Tamworth, &c., 1 dis.; Liverpool, Manchester, and Newcastle Junction, 1½; London and Birmingham, 224; Ditto Thirds, 63; Ditto Quarters, 29½; London and Blackwall, New, 4½ ex. in.; London and Brighton, —; Ditto Fifths, 41½; London and Croydon, 22½; London and South-Western, 78½; Ditto, New, 28¾; Ditto, New, 22; London and York, 1⅝; London, Salisbury, and Yeovil, 1⅛; Lynn and Ely, 12⅝; Manchester and Leeds, Quarters, 9½; Ditto, Fifths, 11½; Ditto, Sixteenths, 9⅝; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, ½ p; Midland, 149; Newcastle and Darlington Junction, New, 9½; Newcastle and Berwick, 25; Newark, Sheffield, and Boston, ⅞; North British, Half Shares, 11½; Ditto, Carlisle Ex., 1⅞; North Kent and Direct Dover, 1½; North Staffordsh., 4 p; Oxfd., Worcester, & Wolverhampton, 7¾ x in; Scottish Central, 15¾; Shrewsbury & Birm., 2⅝; Shropsh. Union, 1½ dis; South Midland ¾; dis; South Wales, 1½; Welsh Midland, 1; West Riding Union, 3¾ p; Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, 4½ dis; York and North Midland, 98½, Ditto, Scarborough Branch, 48; Ditto, Selby, 74½, Ditto, Extension, 34; Ditto East and West Riding Extension, 12½; Boulogne and Amiens, 12¾; Central of Spain, 1½; Louvain and Jemeppe, ⅝; Luxembourg, 2; Namur and Liege, 8⅜; Northern of France Constituted, 13⅞; Orleans and Bordeaux, 9½; Paris and Lyons Constituted, 6; Paris and Strasbourg Constituted, 4½; Sambre and Meuse, 4½; West Flanders, 3⅝; Australasia, 20½.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Consols did not vary in price yesterday, and closed at previous quotations. The Foreign Market was inactive; no variations worthy of quotation occurred. Shares were dull, and, in a few instances, a turn flatter.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JUNE 30.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, JUNE 26.

Royal Regiment of Artillery: Capt. and Brevet Major A. W. Hope to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Sandilands; Second Capt. W. B. Young to be Captain, vice Hope; First Lieut. E. W. Rodwell to be Second Captain, vice Young; Second Lieut. J. L. Bolton, to be First Lieutenant, vice Rodwell.

Corps of Royal Engineers: Lieut.-Col. E. Matson to be Assistant Adjutant-General.

Corps of Royal Sappers and Miners: Brevet Major J. Lynn to be Adjutant, vice Whitmore.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, JUNE 27.

Corps of Royal Engineers. First Lieut. R. M. Laffan to be Second Captain, vice Ford; Second Lieut. J. H. Smith to be First Lieutenant, vice Laffan.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, JUNE 29.

Royal Regiment of Artillery: Brevet Col. W. G. Power to be Colonel, vice Trelawney, Brevet Major J. L. Smith to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Power; Brevet Major W. H. Askwith to be Captain, vice Smith; First Lieut. S. D. Broughton to be Second Captain, vice Askwith; Second Lieut. J. R. Lugg to be First Lieutenant, vice Broughton.

ADMIRALTY, JUNE 23.

Corps of Royal Marines. Sergeant-Major W. Ruston to be Quartermaster.

DECLARATION OF INSOLVENCY.—G. Hornsby, Lesbury, Northamptonshire, builder.

BANKRUPTS.—J. WOOD, Luton, Bedfordshire, plumber. W. MOLYNEUX, Sandwich, Kent, innkeeper. W. H. HOUNSFIELD, Cardiff, Glamorganshire, draper. T. D. WEAVER, Liverpool, ship-broker. J. CLARKE, Plymouth, innkeeper. W. J. GEACH, St. Colomb Major, Cornwall, auctioneer. J. WATERHOUSE and R. SUTTON, Salford, Lancashire, calico printers. R. M'KIM, formerly of Liverpool, but now of Bombay, East Indies, merchant. JANE WRIGHT, Manchester, and late of Salford, licensed victualler. [illegible] Manchester and Whitefield, Lancashire, nankeen manufacturer. G. BURY, Handsworth, Staffordshire, surgeon. J. EVANS, Hereford, cattle-dealer. I. SANSOME, Coventry, [illegible] T. MELTON, [illegible] victualler.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—W. MITCHELL, Dewarsmill, farmer. R. M'LELLAN, Glasgow, innkeeper. W. GLASS, Glasgow, boot-maker. J. NEILSON and A. K. MURRAY, Paisley, printers. C. BOND, Inverness, newspaper proprietor. J. YELLOWLEES and SONS, Edinburgh, coach builders.

FRIDAY, JULY 3.

DOWNING-STREET, JULY 2.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Lieut.-Col. H. Despard, of the 99th Foot, and Lieut.-Col. R. H. Wynyard, of the 58th Foot, to be Companions of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath.

WAR-OFFICE, JULY 3.

[illegible] following further list of non-commissioned officers and privates of the Queen's army, [illegible] in the recent battles on the Sutlej, or who have subsequently died of wounds rece[illegible]

[illegible] Foot. P. Ambler, J. Barry, J. Beaumont, R. Bentley, C. Beresford, M. Blackburn, W. [illegible]r, W. Box, G. Boyce, W. Boardman, I. Bobbin, B. Broomhead, J. Brown, J. Burrell (alias W. Holmes), P. Calan, C. Chaloner, A. Colquhoun (corporal), E. Courtnay, J. Chapman, C. Cloe, C. Copeman, J. Corbett, Bernard Dailey, George Day, Patrick Dormody, William Duckham, William Duncan, Patrick Dumphy, John Donaughey, James Drew, J. [illegible] M. Davis, J. Deeran, D. Denny, C. Evan, A. Ellander, Corporal T. Evans, [illegible] E. Fitton, W. Flood, P. Frayne, F. Green, R. Green, W. Gaire, T. Goodier, W. Gates, J. Giles, G. Green, [illegible] Greenaway, T. Hadkinson, J. L. Harter, J. Hastowell, W. Balth, W. H[illegible], W. Hulam, D. Hodkinson, J. Harrison, W. Harrison, W. Head, A. Henry, R. Hodd[illegible] J. Houlahan, Sergeant J. Holmes, J. Howlett, W. Hunt, W. Hill, T. Illingworth, E. Johnson, J. Jackson, R. Jones, G. Jubb, M. Kelly, P. Keelan, J. Kehoe, C. Keele, H. Lane, J. Lewis, W. Lord, J. [illegible]cock, T. Langham, W. Lamer, M. Laughlin, Colour-Sergeant J. Marshall, P. M'Auley, M. M'Kenny, J. M'Crackin, J. M'Ken, T. M'Manus, J. Manhiany, T. Mellon, W. Mulholland, J. Murphy, P. Nolan, J. Neal, M. O'Connor, J. O'Donnell, R. Pincher, Drummer J. Parle, J. Rober[illegible] W. Reading, J. Rice, D. Rice, T. Ryan, J. Roebuck, G. Reed, G. Sands, W. Saunders, W. Sheldon, W. Snelton, Sergeant J. Smith, C. Smith, J. Smith, M. Smith, D. Sullivan, G. Sutton, J. Scott, W. Stanton, H. Stewart, T. Stewart, Colour-Sergeant J. Swaby, Corporal J. Te[illegible]dale, J. Toole, W. Toms, H. Taggert, J. Taylor, J. Warren, J. Watts, H. Webb, R. Whinyatts, C. White, J. Wier, Colour-Sergeant G. Wilkins, Corporal C. Witsey, H. Wilson, W. Winn, J. Woodcut, H. Watts, J. Wason, J. Weathers, J. Webb, W. Wills, J. Wilson, G. Watton, and T. White.

ADMIRALTY, JUNE [illegible]

Corps of Royal Marines—Sergeant-Major W. Ruston to be Quartermaster.

[illegible]

Corps of Royal Marines: Second Lieut. G. Webb to be First Lieutenant, vice Whiting; Sergeant-Major N. Austin to be Quartermaster.

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY THE QUEEN.

H[illegible]rdshire Militia: Capt. J. E. M. Kyrle to be Adjutant.

[illegible] Regiment of the Duke of Lancaster's Own Militia. Capt. H. Townsend to be Adjutant.

W[illegible]shire Militia: Capt. E. Davis to be Adjutant, vice Smith.

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY THE LORD-LIEUTENANT.

Cornwall. The Hon. J. C. W. Vivian to be Deputy Lieutenant.

INSOLVENT.—G. HORNSBY, Lesbury, Northumberland, builder.

BANKRUPTS.—M. GOODALE, Rutland-terrace, Hornsey New-road, Holloway, builder. W. ROUSE, Neptune-street, Rotherhithe, bread and biscuit baker. A. S. HOLL, Norwich, grocer. J. LORD, Sheffield, tanner. J. SENIOR, Salford, Lancashire, common brewer. J. DAVIS, Worcester, miller. W. WOOD, Liverpool, flat rope and patent hemp manufacturer. J. IRVINE, Paradise-street, Liverpool, ironmonger. J. DENT, Huddersfield, Yorkshire, cloth merchant.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. M. ROSS, Inverness, ironmonger. J. CAMBELL, Pais[illegible]prietor. A. BALFOUR, Edinburgh, printer. R. M'CUNN, Glasgow, merchant. W. [illegible] Keys Inn, Dalkeith, innkeeper.

BIRTHS.

At Doncaster, the Hon. Mrs. Holmes, of a daughter.——At Brompton, the lady of J. D. Hewett, Esq., of a daughter.——At Warborne, Hants, the lady of Sir J. Rivett Carnac, Bart. [illegible] At Chester-square, the Hon. Mrs. Hussey, of a s[illegible]——At Epsom, the lady of [illegible] Bogle, Esq., of a son and daughter.——On the 19th Jun[illegible] [illegible]anton Cottage, Budleigh Salterton, the lady of J. C. Moor, Esq., of a son.——At Bright[illegible], the lady of Major Cantley, Bengal Artillery, of twins, boy and girl.

MARRIAGES.

At Boxted, Suffolk, Sir Richard Gethin, Bart., to Frances W[illegible]ler, youngest daughter of [illegible] Weller Poley, Esq.——At St. James's Church, John Appleton, Esq., to Miss Eleanor Skelton.——At St. Peter's Church, Eaton-square, Walter Greene In[illegible] [illegible] Alfred Cutting, Esq.——At Cheshunt C[illegible] [illegible], daughter of the late Ezekiel Harman, Esq.

DEATHS.

At Matfen, Lady Blackett.——At Paris, Maria Dorothea, the wife of David Barclay, Esq., M.P.——At Stoke-n[illegible]ern, the Rev. Oswald Leycester, aged 84.——At Godalming, William Keen, Esq., bank[illegible]——At Bromley, Middlesex, Robert Young, Esq.——In Mecklenburgh-square, Henry Weston, Esq.——At Andover, aged 54, Sabina, wife of William Hawkins Heath, Esq.——At Belmont, Torquay, in the 78th year of his age, Honoratus Leigh Thomas, Esq., F.R.S.——At Circus-road, St. John's-wood, Mr. Thomas Banting, aged 72.——Mrs. Hanbury Leigh, of Pontypool-park, Monmouthshire.——At Paignton, near Torquay, in his 68th year, James Domville, M.D., formerly of Greenwich Hospital.——At Kidbrook-lodge, Blackheath-park, the Rev. George Robert Mountain.

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—LAST WEEK BUT ONE.—M. JULLIEN'S CONCERTS D'ETE.—Sivori, Sainton, and Vieuxtemps. Monday, July 6th, Solos, by Koenig, Baumann, &c., the British Navy Quadrille, &c. Tuesday, July 7th, Signor Sivori's Benefit. Wednesday, July 8th, Sacred Music, the 1st act of the Concert selected from the Creation, the Stabat Mater, &c., the 2nd act Miscellaneous. Thursday, July 9th, Mons. Sainton's Benefit. Friday, July 10th, the Principal Music of the Beethoven Festival. Saturday, Mons. Vieuxtemps' Benefit. The Concerts positively terminate on Saturday, July 18th. Promenade and Boxes, One Shilling. On Monday, July 20th, M. Jullien's only Grand Bal Masqué this Season.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W BATTY.—Under the Patronage of her most gracious Majesty the QUEEN, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and the Princess Royal.—Unparalleled success. Crowded nightly.—The best and most approved ventilated Theatre in London.—Fortieth Night of Our Asiatic Conquest.—On MONDAY, JULY 6, and during the Week, the Performances will commence with the Grand Military Spectacle of THE SIKH INVASION; or, Our Indian Victories of 1846, in which the whole resources of the Establishment will be brought forward. Magnificent Brass Band; and SCENES OF THE CIRCLE will prove more than usually attractive this week, introducing the French and British Professors in their various acts of Equitation. The whole concluding with a favourite Afterpiece. Box-office open from Eleven to Five. Stage Director, Mr. T. Thompson.

THE MUSICAL WORLD GRAND CONCERT.—Subscribers and the Public are informed that the FIRST ANNUAL CONCERT of the MUSICAL WORLD will take place on WEDNESDAY MORNING NEXT, July 8, at Two o'clock, in the Hanover-square Rooms, when the celebrated pianist, Madame Pleyell, will make her last public appearance this season. MM. Moscheles, Benedict, Vieuxtemps, Sivori, Sainton, Rousselot, Piatti, Hausman, Casella, Godefroid, Sloper, Misses Dolby, Bassano M and A. Williams, Madame Macfarren, &c., will also perform. Subscribers who have paid their subscription to Christmas, 1846, admitted free, and are requested to forward their names to the publisher, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's-lane, Charing-cross. Tickets, 7s. each, Reserved Seats, 10s. 6d.; of the Publisher, and Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street

PUBLIC BREAKFAST and MORNING CONCERT in CREMORNE GARDENS, CHELSEA, in preparation for WEDNESDAY, JULY 15th, 1846. No pen can describe the grandeur of scale on which this entertainment is being got up. Its title is "Ranelagh Revived; or, One Hundred Years Ago." Prospectuses may be obtained on and after Tuesday next, of every respectable Musicseller and Confectioner in the Metropolis.

NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—The TWELFTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, at their GALLERY, 53, PALL-MALL, near St. James's Palace. Admission, 1s.; Catalogue, 6.

JAS FAHEY, Secretary.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A new and Interesting Lecture, by Dr. RYAN, on the PHENOMENA and EFFECTS of HEAT and COLD at Half-past Three Daily, and on the Evenings of Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at Nine o'clock. Professor BACHHOFFNER'S LECTURES on NATURAL PHILOSOPHY, with brilliant experiments, Daily. MACINTOSH'S REVOLVING ENGINE, COLEMAN'S PATENT LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE for ascending and descending Inclined Planes, FARRELL'S ARCHIMEDEAN RAILWAY, the ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, all in action. PORTRAITS of distinguished men in the GOVERNMENT and ARMY of LAHORE, magnified by the OPAQUE MICROSCOPE. The OXY-HYDROGEN MICROSCOPE, exhibiting a fine Collection of Living Objects. A beautiful Picture of the CHAPEL in the CONVENT of St. CATHERINE, near Jerusalem, by Mr Charles Smith, is one of the Series of DISSOLVING VIEWS just introduced. On Mondays and Fridays, at Four o'clock, a Solo on the Violin, with Brooks's Patent Clavic Attachment. Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half price.

This day is Published, in One Volume post 8vo, Price 10s. 6d.,

ORIGINAL FAMILIAR CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN RESIDENTS IN INDIA. Including SKETCHES OF JAVA, &c.

William Blackwood and Sons, Edinburgh and London; and J. Hatchard and Son, J. Nisbet, and W. J. Cleaver, London.

JUST OUT, PRICE EIGHTEEN-PENCE,

THE COMING HOME.

A COMIC PANORAMA, DRAWN BY LEECH

London: ACKERMANN and Co., Strand; RENSHAW and KIRKMAN, 12, Budge-row; EWINS, Amen Corner; WESTLEY, 163, Strand, DORLING, Epsom; and all Booksellers.

TO ADVERTISERS.—DOUGLAS JERROLD'S WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, circulating amongst thousands of all classes, will afford an excellent opportunity to Advertisers. Advertisements, as far as possible, classified and inserted in leading places, according to priority of reception at the Office, 169, Strand, where prospectuses can be had, Gratis, or of any Town or Country Newsvender

DOUGLAS JERROLD'S WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, of the 18th of July, will contain the commencement of several Series of Papers of Social Importance and Entertainment, by himself and his Eminent Literary Associates; and, also a mass of News and Information well digested and arranged, suitable to family reading. Office, 169, Strand, where Prospectuses can be had, Gratis, or of any Town or Country newsvender.

REDUNDANT COPIES OF NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Just published, gratis,

THE MODERN BOOK-BUYER'S CATALOGUE; consisting of the Surplus Copies of valuable Modern Works, from the libraries of the nobility, gentry, literary institutions, book societies, &c., and offered at very reduced prices. Delivered gratis, or sent post-free, on receipt of two stamps.

Address, the "Librarian," British and Foreign Library, Conduit-street, Hanover-square.

Second Edition, with 535 Illustrations, 3 vols., 8vo., price £4 14s. 6d

MR. YARRELL'S HISTORY OF BRITISH BIRDS. Also, A SUPPLEMENT TO THE FIRST EDITION. 8vo., 2s. 6d.; royal 8vo., 5s., imperial 8vo., 7s. 6d.

By the same Author, A SECOND EDITION of a HISTORY OF BRITISH FISHES. 2 vols. 8vo., with nearly 500 Illustrations. £3

JOHN VAN VOORST, 1, Paternoster-row

TO ADVERTISERS and the MEDICAL PROFESSION.—The MEDICAL TIMES, published every Saturday, now circulates among 30,000 medical practitioners, and is daily extending. It is on the table of every respectable Literary Institution in the kingdom. From Mr. Mitchell's Newspaper Press Directory;—"The Medical Times occupies a position in the medical, analogous to that of the Times in the political, world. Is foremost of the medical journals for ability, energy, and success," and "is well known as the chief organ of the profession." Advertisements should be sent on or before Thursday, to the office, 49, Essex-street, Strand.

RE-ISSUE OF THE ILLUSTRATED SHAKSPERE.

KENNY MEADOWS'S ILLUSTRATED SHAKSPERE. Part 18 will appear on the 30th June, price Half-a-Crown.—"The Illustrations are the work of one who, having read through a poem, resolves to illustrate it; not by representing a part, but by bringing his own impressions into a single picture. The richness of Mr. Meadows's humour, and the justness of his conceptions, can scarcely be commended too highly."—Times. London: Wm. S. ORR and Co., Amen Corner; JAMES MCGLASHAN, Dublin; and J. MENZIES, Edinburgh.

THE ILLUSTRATED SHAKSPERE, in Separate Plays, Illustrated by KENNY MEADOWS, with Notes and Introductory Remarks by Distinguished Writers. Price Eighteen-pence each.—London: Wm. S. ORR and Co., Amen Corner; JAMES MCGLASHAN, Dublin; J. MENZIES, Edinburgh.

THE ILLUSTRATED SHAKSPERE

SUBSCRIBERS to KENNY MEADOWS'S ILLUSTRATED SHAKSPERE are respectfully informed, that after December it will be impossible to complete their sets, either of the Original Edition or of the Re-issue, as the work will then be made up into complete books. The Proprietors need not remark on this the only Illustrated Edition of our National Poet. It is a Gallery of Shakspere Portraits and Shakspere Scenes, executed with that zeal and love for the undertaking, without which there cannot be even a hope of success, and Subscribers who have seen a part of it can appreciate its value

London: WM. S. ORR and Co., Amen-corner; JAMES MCGLASHAN, Dublin; J. MENZIES, Edinburgh.

On the 30th inst., price One Guinea, Vol. I. of the re-issue of

THE ILLUSTRATED SHAKSPERE, Revised from the most approved Editions, with Annotations and Introductory Remarks on the Plays, by Distinguished Writers; a Memoir of Shakspere and an Essay on his Genius, by BARRY CORNWALL; with upwards of One Thousand Illustrative Engravings on Wood, and Thirty-five Etchings on Steel, designed by KENNY MEADOWS.

Vol II. will appear on the 30th of September, and Vol. III. on the 30th of December.

London: WM. S. ORR and Co. Amen-corner; JAMES MCGLASHAN, Dublin, and J. MENZIES, Edinburgh

NAPOLEON AT FONTAINEBLEAU, LE 31 MARS, 1814. PAUL and DOMINIC COLNAGHI and Co., 13, and 14, Pall Mall East, Publishers to her Majesty, beg to announce that they have made arrangements with Mr. DELAROCHE, by which they are enabled to continue the Exhibition of the above celebrated Picture at their Rooms during the whole of the ensuing week. The Engraving, in the line manner, now executing by Mr. FRANCOIS, at Paris, will appear towards the close of this year. Conditions of Publication:—Size of the Plate, without margin, 17½ by 13 inches. Prints—plain paper, £1 11s. 6d.; India, £2 2s. Proofs—plain paper, £3 3s.; India paper £4 4s. Artist's proofs, £8 8s. Subscribers' names received by the Publishers, 13, and 14, Pall Mall East, where a book is now open.

HOW TO LIVE. Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, AND AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.

By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c.

Sherwood, 23, Paternoster-row; Carvalho, 147, Fleet-street; Hannay, 63, Oxford-street; Mann, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand

SUPERIOR SCHOOL BOOKS.—BUTTER'S ETYMOLOGICAL SPELLING BOOK and EXPOSITOR; an Introduction to the Spelling, Pronunciation, and Derivation of the English Language. 92nd Edition. Price 1s. 6d. bound. BUTTER'S GRADATIONS in READING and SPELLING, upon an entirely new and original Plan, by which Dissyllables are rendered as easy as Monosyllables; with numerous entertaining and instructive Reading Lessons in prose and verse. 30th Edition. Price 1s. 6d. bound. Sold by Simpkin and Co., Whittaker and Co., Longman and Co., Hamilton and Co., London; H. Mozley and Son, Derby; Oliver and Boyd, Edinburgh, and J. Mc Glashan, Dublin.

READING AND BOOK SOCIETIES.

Now ready, in small Octavo,

HINTS FOR THE FORMATION OF READING AND BOOK SOCIETIES IN EVERY PART OF THE KINGDOM, ON A NEW AND IMPROVED PLAN.

This Plan, embracing the facilities afforded by the reduced postage, railroads, and steam vessels, will extend the accommodations of one of the largest Libraries of the Metropolis to the most distant parts of the Empire.—Sent gratis and post free, to orders enclosing two stamps, addressed Messrs. SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit-street.

Just Published, price 1s., the Fourth Edition (Translated from the Nineteenth French Edition

CONSTIPATION DESTROYED; or, Exposition of Natural, Simple, Agreeable, and Infallible Means, not only of Overcoming, but also of Completely Destroying Habitual Constipation, without [illegible] whatever (discovery recently made in France by M. Warton) followed by numerous certificates from eminent physicians and other persons of distinction. Free by post, 1s. 6d. Sold by JAMES YOUENS and Co., Tea Dealers, 45, Ludgate-hill, London, and by all Booksellers in the United Kingdom

A SCOTCH TWEED GOTHA JACKET FOR 30s.—This Jacket, which is well suited to be worn by Gentlemen when shooting, angling, in the library, or country ramble, is made to measure, in a first-rate style of fit and workmanship, for 30s.; best ditto, ditto, 38s.—At GRAVES'S, fashionable tailor and trowsers maker, 313, High Holborn

DIAMOND DUST, DIRECT FROM THE MINES.—Genuine DIAMOND DUST, for giving instantaneously the keenest edge to the bluntest razor or knife, is now regularly imported, and may be had at the Wholesale Depôt, 1, Angel-court, Strand, London, in rosewood boxes (with instructions), at 1s., 2s. 6d., 5s., and 10s. 6d. each; and at the various agents throughout the world. Either of the Boxes will be transmitted free to any part of the country. See "Bell's Life," of 6th June; "Family Herald," "Critic," and "Sportsman's Magazine," of 13th June. Agents admitted in all large towns.

TONIC ALE.—This splendid new description of Bottled Beer is now in high perfection. It is strongly recommended by the Faculty as possessing peculiar stomachic qualities, promoting appetite, &c. Sold in quart and pint bottles, secured by Betts's Patent Capsule. JOSEPH STOCKTON, Sole Agent, 51, Lambs' Conduit-street.

BED FEATHERS.

Mixed	1s. 0d. per lb.	Best Foreign Grey Goose ..	2s 0d per lb.
Grey Goose	1s. 4d.	Best Irish White ditto ..	2s. 6d
Foreign	1s. 8d	Best Dantzic ditto ..	3s 0d

HEAL and SON, 196, opposite the Chapel, Tottenham-court-road

AIR-GUNS and AIR CANES.—An entirely New and further Improved Assortment of these portable and silently-destructive weapons now on sale adapted by REILLY, Jun., for killing Rabbits, Rooks, Sea-fowl, &c., with ball, small bird, with shot, fish with harpoons, &c. &c., from 55s. each.—REILLY, Gun-Maker, 316, Holborn.

IF you want to enjoy a real luxury and to have a cup of rich highly-flavoured boiling Coffee every morning at breakfast, buy one of DEANE'S DOUBLY-REGISTERED STULOS COFFEE FILTERS. To be had at GEORGE and JOHN DEANE'S Stove, Fender, Sheffield Plate, Cutlery, and General Ironmongery Warehouse and Show Rooms, opening to the Monument, 46, King William-street, London-bridge.

PERVILE pretio vendere negotiari tutissime, et globus nivalis perinde cumulare procurritur; or, in other words, who sell the cheapest, trade securest, and, like the snow-ball, gather as they go. Acting ever faithfully on this favourite axiom, the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY can secure to the Public TEAS, in 6lb. bags, at 2s. 6d., 2s. 10d., 3s. 6d., and 3s. 10d. per lb; and COFFEE at 9d., 1s., 1s. 2d., and 1s. 5d., at the old warehouses, No. 9, Great St. Helen's-churchyard, City

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS and GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, kitchen ranges, fenders, iron bedsteads, fire irons, general furnishing ironmongery, tinned copper, iron and best tin cooking vessels, best Sheffield plate, and table cutlery, japanned trays, tea urns, ornamental iron and wire works, for verandahs, lawns, &c.; flower-stands. Every article is warranted, and marked at the lowest prices, in plain figures, for cash.—Adjoining the Baker-street Bazaar, 58, Baker-street, Portman-square.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, Fire-proof Safes, and Cash Boxes.—Chubb's New Patent Detector Locks give perfect security from false keys and picklocks, and also give immediate notice of any attempt to open them. Chubb's Patent Fire-proof Safes, Book-cases, &c., strong Japan Cash Boxes, and Deed Boxes, of all sizes, fitted with the Detector Locks.—C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very Low Prices, for Cash, by JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linen-Drapers to the Queen, at their Family Linen Wareroom, 26, Regent-street, two doors below Piccadilly Circus. Parcels above £5 sent throughout England carriage paid.

John Capper and Son's General Linen-Drapery Business, established for nearly Seventy Years, is continued in Gracechurch-street, without change

BAKER'S PHEASANTRY, Beaufort-street, King's-road, Chelsea.—By Special Appointment to HER MAJESTY and H. R. H. PRINCE ALBERT. Gold and Silver Pheasants; a great variety of ornamental Water-Fowl, including Black and White Swans, Pintail, Widgeon, Teal, Divers, &c., domesticated and pinioned; also, useful and ornamental Poultry, consisting of Malay, Spanish, Cochin China, Poland, Hamburgh, Surrey and Dorking Fowls; Pea-Fowl, in all their varieties. And at Messrs. BAKER'S, 3, Halfmoon-passage, Gracechurch-street. Some pure China Pigs

FOR EVENING DRESSES, LACE is now universally worn. See "Gazette of Fashion." DISON has a chaste and beautiful assortment of LACE DRESSES worthy Ladies' attention, and for these reasons—they are executed with great taste, the workmanship of the best; the workwomen employed paid liberally, and the prices moderate. Flounces, in black and white, at the extraordinary low prices of 10s. and 12s. each. Berthes in great variety. Black and white Scarfs, from 10s. each. The House for the Royal Mechlin Lace, so prized and adopted by her Majesty and the Court, is Dison's, No. 237, Regent-street, Laceman to the Queen

G. PALLISER and Co.'s PATENT PROTEAN RUMBLE. This useful, elegant, and compact Invention completely supersedes the old-fashioned Rumble, and clumsy turn-over seat. The simplicity of its construction is such, that, when closed, it stands erect as an Opera board, protecting the back panel of the Carriage; or may be laid down, and used as a footman's standard, and, when open, is a safe, strong seat for two persons. It can be applied to any of the above uses, or removed at pleasure, in a few moments; and is easily fixed to any four-wheeled carriage. To be seen, or lithographic drawings obtained, at the Patentees', G. Palliser and Co., 8, Finsbury-place, London.

COUNTY FIRE OFFICE, 50, Regent-street. Established 1807. It is respectfully notified to parties holding POLICIES in this Office, the renewals of which fall due at Midsummer, that the same should be PAID within fifteen days after Midsummer-day. The receipts are laying at the Head Office, and in the hands of the several Agents. The Terms of Insurance in the County Fire Office are upon the most liberal scale, and all claims are settled with promptitude and liberality. Full particulars will be immediately furnished to parties applying personally, or by post, to the Head Office, or to any of its Agents, who are appointed in all the principal towns of the United Kingdom

JOHN A. BEAUMONT, Managing Director

NEW and SPLENDID PARISIAN ESTABLISHMENT for PERFUMERY, GLOVES, and ARTICLES DE PARIS, 160, REGENT-STREET.—L. T. PIVER, Proprietor of the two largest Houses of the kind, 103, Rue St. Martin, Paris, and also at Brussels, begs most respectfully to inform the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public in general, that, for the splendid and unique London Establishment, he is in Partnership with LAUVERGNAT BROTHERS, who have been for twelve years at Houbigant. The great variety, quality, and cheapness, of L. T. Piver's Perfumery and Gloves (already patronised by all the Nobility), will an entire satisfaction to the customers that will honour them with their patronage.

GIBBINS' CREAM of ROSES and ROSEMARY.—This esteemed and elegant Article is most respectfully offered to the Public, by GIBBINS, Court Hairdresser and Perfumer (from Paris), 7, King-street, St. James's-square, as the most delicate and effectual Preservative of the Hair. Being a pomade, it will be successfully applied in promoting its growth and luxuriance

GIBBINS' EXTRACT OF ROSES AND ROSEMARY is a liquid made from the above-named plants, and when applied in washing the Hair, renders it soft and glossy; or, after illness, its astringent properties prevent the Hair from falling off.

No. 7, King-street, St. James's-square, London.

GOWLAND'S LOTION.—This well-known and highly appreciated appendage of the British Toilet has, for nearly a century past, maintained an unrivalled reputation as a perfect remedy for all impurities of the skin, together with the valuable properties of a preserver and sustainer of the complexion of the most genial nature, removing every trace of sallowness and discoloration, and promoting that transparency and brightness of the skin, which constitute the peculiar graces of a fine complexion.—"ROBERT SHAW, LONDON," is in White Letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is Genuine. Prices, 2s. 9d., and 5s. 6d.; Quarts, 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists.

PATENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS.—JOHNSON and CO., 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street, hatters to the Queen and Royal Family, inventors and patentees.—From the construction of the Patent Flexible Hats, the unpleasant pressure on the forehead is entirely removed; and by their extreme elasticity they are capable of accommodating themselves perfectly to the shape of the head; the crown, moreover, being ventilated, and the perspiration prevented from appearing on the outside of the hat, are additional advantages. As Ladies' Riding Hats, they are light and elastic, and will retain their position on the head without the least discomfort.—JOHNSON and Co., 113, Regent-street; and GRIFFITHS and JOHNSON, 2, Old Bond-street

BERDOE'S WATERPROOF OVER COATS, for the SUMMER. The reputation of these well known garments has been so long established that they now need no other recommendation. For quality, workmanship, style, a quiet, gentlemanly, and respectable appearance, lightness, convenience, moderate cost, durability, and especially for being really waterproof (and not so in name only), they are unquestionably still unrivalled, notwithstanding the numerous competitors their well-known extensive sale has produced. By royalty and a long list of noblemen and gentlemen of the highest rank and title they have long been patronized. Made only by W. BERDOE, tailor and over coat maker 69, Cornhill (north side), and shortly at 96, New Bond-street

METCALFE'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—Useful Inquiry.—For proof of the extreme durability, power of cleaning, and true economy, ask all who have used Metcalfe's Brushes. The Tooth-brush performs the highly-important office of searching thoroughly into the divisions, and cleaning in the most extraordinary manner; hairs never come loose. 1s. Peculiarly penetrating Hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russia bristles, which will not soften like common hair. Improved Clothes-brush, that cleans harmlessly in one-third the time. The new Velvet Brush, and immense Stock of genuine unbleached Smyrna Sponge, at METCALFE'S only Establishment, 130 B, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.

CAUTION.—Beware of the word "from" Metcalfe's, adopted by some houses.

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Watchmakers, No. 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, request the attention of purchasers to their stock of London-made PATENT LEVER WATCHES, which are manufactured by themselves in their own house. In silver cases, with the detached escapement and jewelled, the prices are four guineas and a half, six, and eight guineas each; or in gold cases, ten, twelve, fourteen, and sixteen guineas each. The very large stock offered for selection, includes every description, enabling a customer to select that which is more particularly adapted to his own use.

SILVER TEA SERVICES of New Patterns.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Working Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, respectfully inform their customers that they have recently finished a few new designs, in accordance with the present improved taste, and that they are sold at reduced prices from those customary in the trade.

Uxbridge Pattern.		Thalia Pattern
Strong Silver Tea-pot	£10 18 0	Strong Silver Tea-pot	£13 0 0
Ditto Sugar Basin	6 14 0	Ditto Sugar Basin	7 11 0
Ditto Cream-Jug	4 10 6	Ditto Cream Ewer	5 2 0
Ditto Coffee-pot	14 10 0	Ditto Coffee-pot	16 17 0
Complete	£35 12 6	Complete	£42 10 0

A [illegible] services may be seen in the Show Rooms [illegible] drawings, with the weights [illegible] part of Great Britain, Ireland, India, or the [illegible] per ounce

THE NEWLY-OPENED HOUSES.

(A BRIEF OUTLINE)

The extensive New Establishment of E. MOSES and SON is now open for the transaction of the various features of its business; and the Proprietors are anxious to state the principles upon which it is conducted, and the improvements under which it has opened. Bespoke customers have now devoted to them a spacious range of Show-Rooms, entered by a Private Waiting Hall, 84, Aldgate. There are also apartments for cutting and measuring and a select Waistcoat Room. Ladies are informed that a private Habit Room is likewise set apart, and E. MOSES and SON have made other additions, too numerous to name at present. The "Ready-Made" Department is at least four times its former extent, and its business will, consequently be despatched with much greater facility. This department occupies 85, and 86, Aldgate. The Hat Depôt is at 83, Aldgate, and is furnished with every description of Hats and Caps, of the best quality and fashion. The Hosiery Mart, 155, Minories, is equally distinguished for the worth and variety of its articles, from which the most satisfactory purchases are made. The Outfitting and General Clothing Department, 154, and 155, Minories, has equal recommendations, and is an important feature in the New Houses of E. MOSES and SON. Let it be remembered that "Economy! Economy! Economy!" is the maxim at the new Establishment, as it was at the old, and be it also remembered, that the Proprietors still adhere to the marking of the articles in plain-figured prices, from which no abatement can be made. Let it be borne in mind, also, that any articles may be exchanged, or that the price of the article may be returned, without the least hesitation. For particulars of Measurement, and other essential information, obtain the new book, entitled "Past, [illegible] had gratis, and post-free, of the Proprietors, E. MOSES [illegible]s, and 83, 84, 85, and 86, Aldgate, City, London [illegible]rs, Woollen-drapers, Clothiers, Hatters, Hosiers, Outfitters, and [illegible], regret to be obliged to guard the public against imposition; but, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood "of being connected with them," or it's the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons, they have no connection with any other house in or out of London; and those who desire genuine cheap clothing, should, to prevent disappointment, call at or send to the Minories or Aldgate, opposite the Church, City, London.

NOTICE. The entrance to the Bespoke Department is at 84, Aldgate.—No business transacted at this Establishment from sunset Friday evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is resumed till twelve o'clock.

THE "TIMES" ON PHOTOGRAPHY, April 22, 1846.—"A great improvement has been effected by Mr. BEARD. The portraits now exhibit a degree of boldness, and stand out with a relief greatly desiderated in all the earlier specimens of the art, while his method of colouring renders them agreeable and life-like."

Taken Daily, from Nine till Six, at 85, King William-street, City, where application for Licenses should be made; 34, Parliament-street, Westminster; and the Royal Polytechnic Institution, Regent-street.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house. Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

COINS of ANCIENT EGYPT, GREECE, and ROME.—PETER WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins and Medals, 46, Strand, London, has just published a short catalogue of his coins and medals, which can be had by post, by sending two stamps. Assignats of the French Revolution, 1s.; Ancient Roman Brass Coins, with good portraits of the Emperors, 1s. each; Pennies of the Conqueror, 2s. and 2s. 6d. each. Coins sent by post. Coins, &c., Bought, Sold, and Exchanged.

SYLPHIDE PARASOLS.—W. and J. SANGSTER beg to solicit an inspection of their PARASOLS for the Season, manufactured in Glacé and Moiré Silks of the most Elegant patterns yet offered to the Public. A large assortment of every other description of Parasols, including the Claremont, Marquise, &c. &c.—W. and J. SANGSTER, Patentees, 140, Regent-street; 94, Fleet-street; and 10, Royal Exchange.

LADIES' CAPS.—Just imported from Paris, a quantity of pretty Dress, Bonnet, and Night Caps, at less than Half the Price of even moderate milliners; also, at Half Price, superior French Capes, Canzous, Guimpes, Sleeves, Berthes, Collars, Habits, &c. &c., in endless variety. _ This advertisement only applies for the week.—MARTIN NUNN, 259, Regent-street.

LIGHTER and SOFTER than FLANNEL.—THRESHER'S INDIAN GAUZE WAISTCOATS, manufactured expressly for warm climates, are perfectly free from every irritating or disagreeable quality. They are manufactured by Thresher and Glenny, and can only be procured at the East India outfitting establishment, 152, Strand, London. It is very important to notice that every article is marked "Thresher's India Gauze," as no other material possesses the same absorbent qualities

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to Pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted. Millinery Rooms.

SELLING OFF, REAL VALENCIENNES LACE.

2500 Yds	Fine Edgings	from 6½d. to 12d. a yard
1700 do.	Do. Narrow Lace	from 15d. to 2s. 6d. a yard
750 do.	Do. Wide Lace	from 2s. 9d. to 10s. 6d. a yard.

Patterns sent to any part of the Kingdom.

Address—KING and SHEATH, 264, Regent-street, London.

EDUCATION, near town, where French is constantly spoken.—Terms, six guineas per quarter, include dancing, drawing, and books, together with a complete course of classical, commercial, and mathematical instruction. The system pursued excites such emulation that twenty prizes were obtained during the past half-year. Apply (if by letter, paid, to the Rev. A. B.) at Mr. Monger's, Baltic Coffee-house, 58, Threadneedle-street; or Mr Watson's, 86, Newgate-street

TROWSERS! TROWSERS!! TROWSERS!!!—A good fit in this garment can seldom be obtained.—R. GRAVES, Fashionable Trowsers Maker and Tailor, 313, High Holborn, after many years' experience and study, is enabled to assert, without fear of contradiction, that he can fit gentlemen with this garment better than any other person in London. The characteristic of his fitting is a gentlemanly style, with perfect ease for stooping, sitting, walking, or riding. A well-assorted stock of the newest designs to select from.—R. GRAVES, 313, High Holborn

HOCKIN'S PREPARATION OF SEIDLITZ POWDER IN ONE BOTTLE keeps in every situation. The dose can be apportioned to form a medicine, refreshing beverage, or saline draught, so as to suit all ages and constitutions.—It is the Tasteless Salt of a Natural Spring, and is the best Family Medicine. It instantly stops sickness, from whatever cause arising. A bottle of 12 to 30 doses, 2s. 6d.—C. HOCKIN, 38, Duke-street, Manchester-square.

FIRE AT ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND.—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ILLUSTRATED NEWS

SIR,—We beg to state that we have this day received information that the books, papers, and other valuable property belonging to the Bank of British North America, being deposited in one of our large Patent Fireproof Safes, were found perfect and uninjured upon the safe being opened in the ruins after the fire. We are, Sir, your most obedient servants, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard, July 1, 1846. C. CHUBB and SON.

SCARBOROUGH.—CROWN HOTEL, ESPLANADE, contiguous to the Saloon, Spa, and Cliff Bridge Pleasure Grounds. This beautifully situated and extensive Establishment, commanding an uninterrupted view of the sea, is now ready for the reception of Families. In addition since last season, a spacious Dining and Ball Room has been erected, which will render the house in every respect complete.—N.B. Hot, Cold, and Shower Baths in the house. Table d'Hôte at Five o'Clock during the season. An Omnibus and Cabs await the arrival of the Trains

THOUSANDS of SHIRTS for INSPECTION.—RODGERS and [illegible] Shirt Makers, Hosiers and Outfitters, [illegible] St. Martin's-lane and 29, New-street, Covent-garden, [illegible] that they keep for inspection and sale, an assortment of several thousand Shirts, including every description from a shilling [illegible] needle-work [illegible] Shirts [illegible] and Ladies' [illegible] Linen of every description [illegible] and other [illegible] Establishment

_ [illegible] the Address. Country Agents Wanted

REGISTERED PALETOT OF LLAMA CLOTH.—This Garment, mostly used as an Overcoat, is, during the hot weather, both in this country and abroad, worn without another coat; the same one will happily suit both purposes. To its gentlemanly appearance and moderate price, joined to the peculiar elasticity and lightness of the material, may be ascribed the cause of its being universally a public favourite. It can be bought only of the Patentees in London, and care should be taken to observe that whether supplied by Agents in the country or abroad, each are stamped on the inside, H., J., and D. NICOLL, 114, Regent-street, and 22, Cornhill

BUTLER'S TASTELESS SEIDLITZ POWDER, in one Bottle.—This useful aperient preparation, besides forming an equally efficient, and far more agreeable draught than that produced with the common Seidlitz Powders, is made in much less time, and with infinitely less trouble. To allay fever or thirst, a teaspoonful, in water, forms a most refreshing saline draught. Being inclosed in a bottle, it will remain uninjured by humidity during the longest sea voyage or land journey. Sold at 2s. 6d. the bottle (which is enclosed in a case, and accompanied by a measure and spoon), by the Preparers, BUTLER and HARDING, Chemists, 4, Cheapside, corner of St. Paul's, London; and may be obtained of J. SANGER, 150, Oxford-street; DAVENPORT and STEDMAN, 20, Waterloo-place, Edinburgh, and also of their Agents in every part of the kingdom. _ Be careful to order "Butler's" Tasteless Seidlitz Powder, and to observe the address

FOR FILLING DECAYED TEETH.—DALE'S ENAMEL, price 2s. 6d.—This preparation is confidently offered to the Public as the best material ever discovered for filling Decayed Teeth, which it effects without giving the least pain or inconvenience; becoming, in a short time, as hard and as durable as the tooth itself, and, by perfectly excluding the access of air, it arrests all further possible progress of decay. The preparation, before use, is in a soft state, and continues so for a short time, and it may, therefore, be used by any person with perfect facility, and is warranted to succeed in every case, however large the cavity.—Prepared by JOHN DALE, Analytical Chemist, Manchester. Sold in packets, at 2s. 6d. each, by most respectable Druggists and Medicine Vendors in the kingdom.—Directions for use are enclosed with each packet.—Wholesale agents, Messrs. MOTTERSHEAD and ROBERTS, Manchester; and BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon-street, London.

DENTISTRY.—Mr. GIDNEY, Member of the American College and Society of Dental Surgery, and for 16 years extensively known in Manchester as the "American Dentist," and for his easy and certain remedy for destroying the nerve when exposed and painful in decayed teeth, and his effectual manner of filling them with pure gold, so as to preserve them sound for life. He likewise performs every other necessary operation for the improvement and preservation of the human teeth. In his Artificial Teeth, he uses the best material, and ensures a complete fit and finish to his work. Mr. G. will, when called on, visit private families and public seminaries, to examine and advise on Dental subjects, between his hours of business, from Ten A.M. to Five P.M., at 225, Piccadilly, or at his family residence, at 2, St. George's-terrace, Gloucester-road, New Kensington.

Copy of a letter from Sam. L. Mitchell, M.D., L.L.D., &c.

Mr E. Gidney, New York, 16th Dec., 1828.

Sir,—I have perused with some attention your "Treatise on the Structure, Diseases, and Management of the Human Teeth," and think with the highly respectable Gentlemen who have written you favourable opinions, that the numerous views you have taken of the subject termed Dentistry, have shown your extensive acquaintance with its various details, your allusion as to the importance of the regular attendance of a Dentist, both in private Families and public Seminaries, is in my opinion worthy the highest consideration. Your collection of Dental Instruments surpasses every thing of the sort I have seen; their variety, fitness, and finish, filled me with agreeable surprise, and leaves no doubt of your skill and ability in the judicious use of them, may you go on and prosper. (Signed) S. L. MITCHELL

BRITISH COLLEGE OF HEALTH, NEW ROAD, LONDON.

CAUTION.

The Public on the Continent is particularly cautioned not to purchase MORISON'S PILLS except of merchants well known as to their respectability. This warning is deemed highly necessary on account of the numerous counterfeits of Morison's Pills, which are sold in various parts of the world, but more especially in the different States of Germany and the United States of America. Signed, MORISON, MOAT, and Co.

The Guide to Patients following the Hygeian System of Medicine may be had of all the Agents for Morison's Pills, price 2d

NERVOUS MENTAL COMPLAINTS.—Nervous or Mental Complaints are now Cured as certainly as water quenches fire. Groundless Fear, Inquietude, Irresolution, Failure of Memory, Pains in the Head, Giddiness, Blood to the Head, Delusions, Disinclination for Society, Study, Business; Thoughts of Self-destruction, Blasphemy, &c., and Insanity itself, are curable by this greatest of human discoveries. A PAMPHLET, illustrating the nature, symptoms, and cure of Nervousness, will be sent, post-free, to any address, on receipt of one stamp. Apply to Mr. WILLIAM ADAMS, 23, Doughty-street, Mecklenburgh-square

PURE NERVOUS or MENTAL COMPLAINTS CURED ONLY by Rev. Dr. WILLIS MOSELEY.—Pure Nervous or Mental Complaints were never cured by any, with certainty, till Rev. Dr. Willis Moseley cured himself; and he is the only person now who can cure Mental Disease as certain as bodily. Dr. W. M. has been in the habit of doing this for thirty years; and, out of 12,000 applicants in the last twelve years, knows not twenty uncured who have followed his advice. Depression of spirit, inquietude, sleeplessness, involuntary blushing, dislike of society, unfitness for study, loss of memory, delusions, thoughts of self-destruction, and insanity itself, are most speedily removed by the extra means of cure at his house, and with no less certainty, but not as soon, at their own. Means of cure are sent to all parts. A NEW PAMPHLET for NOTHING, with Cases, Testimonials, Symptoms, Cures, &c., will be sent to any address, and franked home, if one stamp is enclosed. At home from Eleven to Three.—18, Bloomsbury-street, Bedford-square.

IMPORTANT ORIGINAL DISCOVERY. To the NERVOUS Given away, a Work on the Treatment and Cure of Nervous Complaints, Groundless Fear, Mental Depression, Delusions, Blood to the Head, Dislike of Society, Confusion of Ideas, Want of Confidence, Blushing, Thoughts of Suicide, Languor, and every other symptom of Nervous Debility, are curable by this great discovery. Apply to Mr. HENRY NEWTON 7, Northumberland-street, Trafalgar-square, London, enclosing one postage stamp, for which the work will be forwarded FREE to every address. At home from 11 to 4 and 7 to 9. No consultation fee. The remedies sent to all parts of the world. References are permitted to numerous parties of high respectability, who have been effectually and permanently cured by Mr. Newton's treatment after trying all other means in vain

LONDON, Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid. SATURDAY, JULY 4, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 219.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 11, 1846. [Sixpence.
WITH SUPPLEMENT GRATIS.

THE OFFICIAL ELECTIONS.

THE past week has been fertile of political professions: promising has been the "very air of the time," but it has been preceded by so large a measure of performance, that the magnificence of prediction and protest is greatly subdued; never did so many candidates' addresses furnish so little of what may be called hustings' eloquence. Such latitude may be taken in treating of principles yet in debate, and measures still disputed and to be carried out, that a candidate is almost to be commiserated who is compelled to "go to the country," after the settlement of a ten years' controversy, and that settlement a final one. The old stock of political capital is "used up," and a new one has yet to be created, the old watchwords of party, "those spells upon the minds of men," have lost their power—the distinctions to which men have become accustomed are obliterated: the Guelph of Whiggism finds himself by the side of the Tory Ghibbeline, and is not startled by the juxtaposition. With the ranks blended together, the old line of attack changing, and the ancient signals available as rallying points no more, no marvel that there is a cessation of hostilities: from the Conservative host has gone forth the cry that was once more feebly raised by their foes; men can hardly distinguish clearly which is which—and, "when the trumpet giveth an uncertain sound, who can prepare him for the battle?"

No one can read the addresses of the candidates who, by the acceptation of office, are compelled to appear before their constituents, without being struck with the great want which has been induced by the "great fact." An Election Address, generally such a huge creature of bombast, is deprived of one of its chief topics of declamation; a whole world has been struck out of the political system, and men's eyes are as yet unused to the void. A sudden change in the orbit of that star, which men had mistaken for a fixed light, while, in reality, it was a very comet in the eccentricity of its course, has destroyed the planet that rolled on with us so long, its use disputed, its guiding power denied, but existing still, and, as existing, a continual subject of controversy. We are not yet reconciled to the loss: who, at the general election of 1841, when the Corn-Laws and the principle of Protection furnished nearly the whole ground of attack and defence, and spurred men on to the conflict which resulted in the victory of the friends and supporters of both, could have dreamed that, in the elections of 1846, they should be spoken of only in the past tense, as things abolished and overthrown, to waken animosities and animate to conflict no more? Yet this is the case; and all the addresses recently issued by the members of the new Ministry exhibit the quieting, reconciling effect of the removal of a great subject of dispute and the settlement of a question that has stood a siege as long as that of Troy. The sum and substance of all of them is congratulation on the accomplishment of the victory, though gained under another and unlooked-for chief, with a little excusable self-laudation on the score of superior consistency and foresight in those who predicted all that has now happened, years ago, and actually underwent official martyrdom in the cause, before they were enabled to triumph in opposition. Then comes a promise of dealing with the few relics of the old system, the mere fringes and tassels of the outworn and rejected garment, which it will be apparently for the Whigs to shear away; a few phrases of course, complimentary to the constituency, conclude the documents, each of which has an unusual resemblance to the other; in none can be found any single great question like those which of old divided men into contending hosts upon the battle ground of parties and politics. As the language of men is always a faithful index of the feeling of the time, so the calm and quietude of the constituencies are in perfect harmony with the absence of excitement in the appeals made to them. There is not enough difference between the two great parties to ground an Opposition upon; formerly it would have been quite impossible for a whole Ministry to have gone through the fiery ordeal of the hustings unscathed; it was a great point to baffle a holder of office in the attempt to regain his seat in Parliament; it was the heaviest blow that could be given to a new Government, inflicted at the most critical moment; the higher the office held by the individual, the greater the incentive to trip him up at the threshold. Yet now all the members of the Whig Government are re-elected unopposed! The approaching dissolution of the present Parliament may, to some extent, account for the comparative indifference exhibited; but much of it arises from the temporary fusion of parties, and the loss of the greatest cause of difference between them; the citadel having been surrendered, there is naturally a suspension of hostilities. But how long will the calm continue?

Not long, though the revival of the conflict of principles and parties in all their fierceness will not be immediate. Time awakens to activity quite as much as he bears away to oblivion. We shall be no more exempted from struggles and contests than our fathers, nor have we reason to hope that our lives will be less of a "warfare upon earth" than theirs; the most we can expect is that our battles will be fought in a better spirit, and that victory will bring no needless pain and humiliation to the vanquished. And what will be the subjects of dispute? As far as we can judge of the future by the tendencies of the present, we believe the controversies through which we have yet to pass will be rather on social than political questions. We have more than once remarked on this peculiarity of the time. As each great question that has divided the opinions of men is settled, others, which had till then been secondary, make their way to the front rank. Already do measures, which have long been talked of as desirable, begin to take shape as actual necessities.

The physical condition of the people of England alone presents many awful anomalies—problems, with the solutions of which the statesmen of the future must be prepared, or cease to be Leaders There is a growing consciousness of this fact; and signs are already visible of the action required to deal with it. One great statesman has done homage to the opinion of the time; his successor looks forward, evidently preparing for the questions that rise dimly and indistinct in the distance, their evils as yet more clearly perceived than the effectual remedies. Lord John Russell, in his address to the electors of the City of London, expressly says, "great social improvements are required," and particularises some of them—as Public Education, the Treatment of Criminals, the sanatory condition of towns and villages, the unexampled discontent and misery of Ireland. Do not these things present a field of exertion that will task the highest intellect and the strongest resolution? On these and other questions yet to arise, the attempt to remedy acknowledged evils will affect the interests of those who profit by them, and all the old cycle of resistances, hatreds, prophecies of ruin to the nation, accusations of corruption, blindness, and presumption, against the innovators, will be begun again. We must not flatter ourselves that we have entered on the Political Millennium, and that the demands on the energies of the improvers of their race will be no longer needed; the "chainers of the wheel" will never cease to exist, though the Car of Time rolls on in spite of them, and bears Improvement with it. The present political calm is for the moment only; as each of the great social questions of the future rises, it will become political, gathering round it the warring hosts, under other circumstances; they will have new names, and fresh badges of distinction, but the great battle will be the same. Some truths will be too self-evident, some practical measures too clearly necessary to be resisted; but the antagonism of human nature will always display itself in some shape or other; at the present moment, its spirit is not dead but sleeping.

THE REFORM CLUB BANQUET TO IBRAHIM PACHA.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

REFORM CLUB DINNER TO IBRAHIM PACHA.

On Friday, the 3rd inst., the members of the Reform Club entertained Ibrahim Pacha, and his suite, at a magnificent banquet, at the Club House, in Pall Mall.

The dinner was given by the members not only as a mark of their respect for a stranger illustrious alike for his talents and his position, but to do especial honour to him for the facilities afforded to the English traffic during the events in Syria, and for the improvements which have been effected by him and his father in Egypt. The compliment was enhanced by the invitation being conveyed through Sir Charles Napier, and it was at once frankly and warmly accepted

His Highness, attended by Sami Pacha, Colonel Benfort, M. Nubar, and Major C. Dickson, arrived at the Club House, in Pall Mall, precisely at ten minutes after seven o'clock, and was received by Viscount Palmerston, Sir Charles Napier, Mr. Bannerman, Mr. Bond, the Secretary, &c. The saloon was crowded by the members of the Club when the Pacha reached the Club House; and the corridor surrounding that splendid apartment was thronged by elegantly-dressed ladies. The band of the Scots Fusilier Guards welcomed the arrival of his Highness by playing the Sultan's March

Sir Charles Napier conducted the illustrious Pacha to the grand dining-room, followed by Viscount Palmerston and the leading members of the Club, and the suite of his Highness.

Edib Effendi, the Turkish chargé d'affaires, came shortly afterwards, and was ushered to the drawing-room, where the Pacha had already arrived.

The arrangements for the event were very complete; and it is scarcely necessary to say, the entertainment was served in a style of consummate splendour. The banquet took place in the spacious dining-room, covers being laid for one hundred and fifty-four guests. The table presented a splendid ensemble, and was principally illuminated from silver candelabra arranged along the centre, alternating with vases of the choicest flowers.

According to Eastern fashion, the centre of the tables was filled with pipes, grapes, and other choice fruits in profusion. The middle of the room was the seat of honour. Immediately facing his Highness was a large pyramid, bearing drawings of Mehemet Ali and Ibrahim Pacha, and opposite the chairman was a large ship. Our artist has chosen for his illustration this very splendid coup-d'œil

The repast was most sumptuous, and did the highest credit to the skill and taste of M. Soyer, the celebrated chef de cuisine. We subjoin the carte

Seize Potages.—Quatre à la Victoria, Quatre à la Louis Philippe, Quatre à la Colbert. Quatre à la Comte de Paris aux Légumes printaniers

Seize Poissons.—Quatre de Turbots Sauce à la Mazarine. Quatre de Saumons de Severn à la Crême, Quatre de Buisson de Filets de Merlans à l'Egyptienne, Quatre de Truites saumonées en Matelotte Marinière

Seize Relevés.—Quartre de Chapons à la Nelson, Quatre de Saddleback of Southdown Mutton rôti à la Soyer, Quatre de Poulardes en Diadème, Quatre de Saddleback d'Agneau rôti à la Sévigné

Cinquante-Quatre Entrees.—Six de Poussins printaniers à l'Ambassadrice, Six de Côtelettes de Mouton à la Reform, Quatre de Ris de Veau piqués en Macédoine de Légumes, Quatre de Petits Vol-au-Vents aux Laitances de Maquereaux, Quatre de Timbales de Riz aux Queux d'Agneau, Quatre de Jambonneau braisées au Vin de Madère, Quatre de Volaille farcies à la Russe aux Légumes vertes, Quatre de Pâtes chauds de Cailles à la Banquière, Quatre de Rissolettes à la Pompadour, Quatre de Grenadins de Bœuf à la Beyrout, Six de Côtelettes d'Agneau à la Vicomtesse, Quatre de Turbans Epigramme de Levereau au fumee Baron of Beef à l'Anglaise, Entree Pagodatique de Riz à la Luxor

Seize Rôts.—Quatre de Turkey Poult piques et bardes, Quatre de Canetons au Jus Bigarades, Quatre de Levereaux au Jus de Groseilles, Quatre de Gros Chapons au [illegible]

Cinquante-Quatre Entremets.—Six de Gelées Macedoine de Fruits au Dantzic, Quatre de Turbans de Meringues demi glacée, Quatre de Charlottes Prussienne, Six de Croquantes d'Amandes aux Cerises, Quatre de Galantines à la Volière, Quatre de Mirotons de Homard à l'Indienne, Quatre de Salades de Volaille à la Soyer, Quatre de Haricots verts au Beurre Noisette, Six de Tartalettes pralinees aux Abricots, Quatre de Pain de Pêches au Noy[illegible], [illegible] de petits Pois à l'Anglo-Française, Quatre de Gelées cristallisees à [illegible]

Relevés de Rôts.—La Crême d'Egypte, à l'Ibrahim Pacha, Le Gâteau B[illegible] à l'Admiral, Quatre de Jambons glacées en Surprise, Quatre de Manivaux de Champignons au Curaçao en Surprise, Quatre de Cotolettes en Surprise à la Reform, Deux de Meringues Chinois Pagoda aux Fraises

The Members of the Club having taken their seats at the table, the Pacha, punctually at half-past seven, passed from the drawing room to the dining room of the Club. Sir Charles Napier accompanied his Highness. The military band, as the distinguished guests entered the room, struck up "The Roast Beef of Old England."

The chair was occupied by Sir Charles Napier; upon whose right sat the Pacha (with his interpreter), and next to him Lord Palmerston. Amongst those present, in addition to the Pacha and his suite, we observed Edib Effendi (the Turkish chargé d'affaires), the Right Hon. Richard Lalor Sheil, Sir John Easthope, Mr. Mark Philips, M.P., Mr. T. S. Duncombe, M.P., Mr. W. Collins, M.P., Mr. Williams, M.P., Dr. Bowring, M.P., Mr. A. Hastie, M.P., Mr. J. Hume, M.P., Mr. T. Gisborne, M.P., Dr. Shaw, Sir Howard Elphinstone, Bart., M.P., Sir William Molesworth, Bart., M.P., Mr. M. Mitcalfe, M.P., Mr. J. Collett, M.P., Dr. Power, Mr. Morgan J. O'Connell, M.P., Mr. D. R. Ross, M.P., Dr. Prendergast, Mr. Chapman, M.P., Mr. Bellew, M.P., Mr. M'Gregor, the Hon. Captain Vivian, the Hon. C. Lawless, Mr. Muntz, M.P., Mr. H. G. Ward, M.P., Sir Percy Shelley, Mr. Drummond, Mr. Shafto Adair, Mr. J. T. Leader, M.P., Mr. Moffatt, M.P., Sir James Carmichael, Mr. J. Pa[illegible]es, &c. &c.

The band performed a variety of music during the banquet; and on the cloth being removed, a corps of professional vocalists enlivened the party by the singing of glees, &c.

Upon the cloth being removed, the "Non Nobis" was sung, when Sir Charles Napier rose to propose the first toast, "The Queen," which was received with loud cheering, and drunk with the usual honours. "God save the Queen."

The next toast was, "Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family." (Three times three.)

The Chairman then rose to propose the toast of the evening, "The Health of Ibrahim Pacha, and prosperity to Egypt." (Loud cheers.) Their illustrious guest was the son of one of the most remarkable men of this age, one who might be characterised as "the great Oriental Reformer," and the services he had rendered to his country were beyond all appreciation. As to their guest that evening, every gentleman present must have read the account of the wars in the East, and they well knew the gallantry which their honoured guest had at all times displayed. (Cheers.) They had no business to enter into the policy of the wars in which he had embarked, but whether the policy of those wars was right or wrong, their illustrious guest did right to obey the orders he had received. (Cheers.) He had proved himself a great soldier, and his plans had been attended with great success. But he had another, and perhaps higher, qualification much as he was to be praised in war, he was in peace an eminent agriculturist. (Cheers.) During peace he had governed Syria with great honour, and he had cultivated the arts and sciences, and had promoted the progress of agriculture, which he had followed with such energy as to be wholly unexampled. (Cheers.) He had also established order within his dominions; he had put down robbers, and European travellers now traversed freely, not only Syria, but all parts of his dominions. (Cheers.) The improvements which Mehemet Ali had introduced had received a willing co-operation from their illustrious guest. After all their quarrels in the East, his Highness had been received by the people of this country in a way which was, he believed, pleasant and agreeable;—(cheers)—still the honour of the first public entertainment had been reserved for the Reform Club, and he was sure that when he returned to his own country, he would tell his illustrious father how well he had been received in this country, and that this would be taken as a kind of repayment for the kind attention ever shown to Englishmen in Egypt, whether in peace or in war. (Loud cheers.) For he must allude to what all knew, that even when war waged in the East, the treaty with the Ottoman empire was held inviolate, and not a letter from our Eastern possessions was opened. (Great cheering, and cries of "No Graham in Egypt.") The Pacha of Egypt had thus shown an example worthy of the imitation of all European Powers for the manner in which he had conducted that unhappy war. Without further preface, he would propose "The health of their illustrious guest, long life and prosperity to him, and might he carry the experience he had gained in this country to the improvement of Egypt." (Loud cheers

Drunk with three times three

Ibrahim Pacha returned thanks. He was gratified with the honour which had been done to him, and he felt most deeply the reception he had met with in that Club and in the country. (Cheers.)

Viscount Palmerston rose with great pleasure to propose the next toast, "The Health of Mehemet Ali, and prosperity to Egypt." (Loud cheers.) He had been truly a great reformer and a great agriculturist in Egypt; and he hoped he might add, that though he was an agriculturist, he was not a Protectionist. (Cheers.) His Lordship concluded a most eloquent speech, referring to the character and genius of Mehemet Ali, and the identity of British interests with the prosperity of Egypt; and the toast was drunk with three times three, amidst great cheering.

The Pacha (through his interpreter) returned thanks, in the warmest manner, for the compliment they had paid to his father, and to the country of his birth (Cheers.) The prosperity of Egypt was what was nearest to his heart, and he trusted the close alliance between England and Egypt would conduce to the prosperity of each (Cheers again and again renewed.)

The Pacha's address was delivered in the most animated manner, and with great feeling, the company applauding with great enthusiasm.

Mr. D. Ross then gave "The health of the Representative of the Turkish Government. The Chargé d'Affaires returned thanks, trusting that the good will existing between England and the Ottoman empire would always be reciprocal.

The Chairman having proposed "The Army and Navy," for which Captain Vivian and Captain Lamont respectively returned thanks

The Chairman proposed "The health of her Majesty's Ministers," which was [illegible]ded to [illegible]

Viscount Palmerston, who trusted that the Ministers would receive the support of the people to those measures of progressive reform with which their existence was identified. (Cheers.) It was with no small satisfaction that they had seen the measures for which they had been turned out of office carried by the late Ministry [illegible] Mr [illegible] red to [illegible] sures on which her Majesty's present advi[illegible] And while he asked the support of reformers, [illegible]ey so much needed, he trusted the measures would be such as to merit [illegible]obation of every commercial and political reformer. (Great cheering.)

Mr. Ward proposed "The Health of the Lord Lieutenant (Lord Besborough), and Prosperity to Ireland." The toast was drunk with three times three, and acknowledged by Mr. Sheil, in a brilliant speech, which we regret we have not space to report.

The Right Honourable Gentleman then proposed "The Health of Sir Charles Napier." As soon as the applause had ceased, the gallant officer returned thanks; and, after some further toasts were proposed, his Highness Ibrahim Pacha, who seemed highly gratified with the proceedings of the evening, retired to the drawing-room, and partook of coffee. Several of the ladies, who had remained during the evening, were presented to his Highness, who, shortly after eleven o'clock, with his suite, closed his visit, and left for Mivart's.

His Highness expressed his obligations to the Members of the Reform Club for the magnificent entertainment they had given him.

M. Nubar communicated the Pacha's grateful sentiments as interpreter.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

We see from the Paris papers that the news of the formation of a Cabinet by Lord John Russell, which was received in Paris on Sunday, produced a very favourable impression, especially as the entry of Earl Grey and his friends showed that there was no truth in the report of a division in the Whig camp.

Our readers will recollect that we were able to announce the fact that the obstacle which before existed to a Cabinet of which Earl Grey and Lord Palmerston formed a part, had been removed.

The Débats considers the adhesion of Earl Grey a circumstance of great importance. "This fact," says our contemporary, "proves that the differences in the Whig party had been removed, and gives to the new Cabinet much more solidity and chance of durability. Considered in each of its members, the Administration of Lord John Russell is more than equal to all parliamentary necessities. It would be difficult to find, in so restricted a number, so many men of talent"

The Constitutionnel expresses its cordial wishes for the success of the new Ministry, and infers from the declarations of Sir Robert Peel, that Lord John Russell and his colleagues will find support from him and his party in all Liberal measures, and especially in regard to Ireland.

Mdlle. Rachel was expected to perform in London on Monday last, but a Lille journal, of the 4th, informs us that Mdlle. Rachel was attacked on the 3rd, after the play of "Virginie," with serious illness, resembling in many of its symptoms the Asiatic cholera, but her physicians have declared that she is free from that dangerous affliction.' A later account states that Mdlle Rachel was improving, and there were reasons to hope that a rapid convalescence would take place

The session of the French Chambers is closed. In France the session is not terminated, as in England, by a speech from the Throne The only ceremony observed upon the occasion is the reading the Royal decree declaring the session closed, which is communicated to each Chamber by the members of the Cabinet. On the present occasion the decree was carried to the Chamber of Peers by M Martin (du Nord), M. Guizot, and the Baron de Mackau, and to the Chamber of Deputies by General de St. Yon, M. Duchatel, M. Dumon, and M. Lacave-Laplagne. The two Chambers immediately afterwards adjourned.

A dreadful accident took place on Friday (last week) on board a steamer plying between Paris and Montereau. The boiler of the engine exploded with great violence, the engineer and two stokers were killed, and several passengers dangerously wounded

The Moniteur Algérien of the 25th ult. gives an account of an affair between the force under Colonel Eynard and a body of the enemy, consisting of 600 infantry and 50 cavalry, near Setif, on the 7th. The enemy was dispersed, after leaving more than 50 dead on the field of battle. The French had 4 killed and 1 wounded. On the 10th, the French attacked a large Kabyle force and dispersed it, after a combat of six hours. The loss of the Kabyles is said to have been considerable

The Sud of Marseilles states from Rome, that in a letter addressed by the new Pope to Count Rossi, the French Ambassador, is the following passage:—"Write to your King that I love him—that I love France—and ask him to show the same kindness to me as he did to my predecessor"

Accounts from Oran state that the French have taken a terrible revenge of the natives for the massacre of the French prisoners at Sidi-Ibrahim. Despatches have been received from General Cavaignac, the Commander-in Chief of the division of the army stationed at Djemma-Ghazaouat, which state that the Arabs, taking advantage of the temporary absence of the General, made a show of attacking some detachments of troops employed in repairing the road between Ghazaouat and the frontier. The troops immediately ceased working, and sent an express to General Cavaignac, with an account of the apprehended danger General Cavaignac immediately returned with the detachment under his command, and contrived to get the Arabs between his column and the sea, so that they could not by any possibility escape. He then attacked them fiercely, and the wretched horde of Arabs were butchered to a man. The greater portion were destroyed by the fire of the troops, and the remainder were driven into the sea, and drowned. The whole affair was a disgraceful butchery. Of the Arabs not a soul escaped 500 were destroyed. Of the French there does not appear to have been a man killed or wounded

The heat in Paris on Saturday and Sunday was excessive. On Sunday the thermometer of Fahrenheit rose to 97 With three exceptions, this is the highest degree of heat known in Paris during the last fifty years. In 1800, the thermometer reached precisely the same point as on Sunday In 1802, the ther[illegible]r stood one day, at two o'clock, at 39 5 10ths Centigrade (105 Fahrenheit), [illegible] 9-19ths (104 Fahrenheit). Since that [illegible]r that of Sunday. The weather, however, was much cooler on Monday.

THE UNITED STATES.

New York papers, to the 18th of June, have been received by the packet-ship Quebec. The only interest which they possess relates to the Oregon Question. In the House of Representatives, on the 16th of June, Mr. M'Dowell, of Ohio, moved a suspension of the rules, in order to introduce a resolution embodying a protest against the treaty in progress for a settlement of the Oregon Question. The resolution and preamble assume that this is a question proper for the action of the whole legislative power; for the attempt secretly to adjust the matter while the people and their representatives are ignorant of the terms, would be doing injustice to the rights of the people, and "consummated" no obligatory force upon them therefore,

"Resolved—That, in the opinion of the House, it is the duty of the Senate to postpone the further consideration and action upon the same, and submit it to the people for their action and consideration.'

The remaining resolutions censure the President and Senate for executive and senatorial supremacy, and for secret conclave, by which to hide their proceedings from the public under the midnight veil.

On his motion to suspend the rules, the yeas were 35, nays 156. So the motion was lost.

PORTUGAL.

Accounts from Lisbon, to the 30th ult., state that a Miguelite movement had manifested itself in the province of Tras-os Montes. At Montalegre, a small town near Chaves, Don Miguel had been proclaimed in due form by a party of armed men, who, on the appearance of a detachment of troops, immediately dispersed No fear was entertained in Lisbon of the result of the movement. Government had ordered the 7th Regiment of Infantry to be ready to march for Oporto, as a precautionary measure. Prompt measures were taken to check any further attempts of the Miguelites, and the Government place full reliance on the cordial support of all sections of the Liberal party.

Everything in Lisbon was tranquil.

MEXICO AND THE WEST INDIES.

The Tay steamer has arrived with accounts from the West Indies and from Mexico. It appears from the West India papers that a favourable change of the weather has occurred in many of the islands, too late, however, to repair the great damage the long-continued drought occasioned. The Barbadoes Standard states that they have had several showers. The rain appears to have been general; it continued to the end of the month

The Trinidad Standard estimates the probable amount of sugar lik[illegible] the home market, as the crop from that island for 1846, at 22,000 hhds., a decrease on the past year of 1265, and 2000 hhds. short of what might have been expected from the appearance of the crop at the commencement. The crop of the coming year, it is said, will prove a short one, probably not more than 17,000 hhds., arising from many untoward circumstances, especially the frequency of fires. These fires continue. In Naparina, the principal sugar district, a severe fire commenced (16th) on Friendship Estate, and swept Esperance, Cornita, Concord, Ne Plus Ultra, Mr. Navet's Mon Repos, and Mr. St. Andre's estates, and entered the suburbs of San Fernando: a change of wind saved the town. The fire ravaged an area of ground five miles in extent; a spark from a boiling-house chimney was the cause. A similar conflagration occurred the following day at Cedros, devastating the St. John, Union, Perseverance, and Lochamben estates; on the latter it destroyed canes sufficient to make 150 hhds. of sugar; the village fell a prey to the flames. Lord Harris, the Governor, exerted himself greatly during this severe visitation, in giving directions and using every effort to subdue the fires.

One or two slight showers had fallen in Grenada, but the severe drought in that island for the most part continued, and the estates are in a deplorable state. A smart shock of an earthquake was felt at Jamaica, but was unattended with damage.

The letters from Mexico are to the 31st of May.

The Mexican ports on the Atlantic were blockaded by the American squadron, and an attack on the castle of San Juan de Ulloa was expected immediately

The port of Mazatlan and city of Guadalaxara had both declared against the Government. The republic seemed to be fast verging on anarchy

Arista's army in the north was understood to have dispersed in great confusion

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS Monday

The New Lord Chancellor.—At five o'clock a large number of Peers were present, the members of the late Administration taking their seats on the Opposition benches. On the Ministerial side of the House, were Earl Grey, the Marquis of Lansdowne, Lord Campbell, Earl Minto, Lord Langdale, Lord Radnor, Lord Kinnaird, &c. On the Opposition side of the House were the Dukes of Buckingham and Richmond, Lord Stanley, the Earl of Mornington, Lord Roden, Lord Redesdale, Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Brougham, the Earl of Devon, &c. The new Lord Chancellor (Lord Cottenham) took his seat on the woolsack at a few minutes past five o'clock. He was congratulated by Lord Lyndhurst and several other Peers as soon as he had taken his seat. The Duke of Cambridge was in the House for a short period. He sat beside the Lord Chancellor on the woolsack, and conversed with him for some time. As the members of the late Government entered the House they were received with laughter by their colleagues and supporters on the Opposition Benches, and when Lord Brougham (who took his seat between Lord Lyndhurst and Lord Stanley) arrived, there was a general laugh, and cries of "hear, hear."

Nothing but private business was transacted, and it was arranged that the House should sit daily for the same purpose.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

THE NEW MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENTS.

On the motion of Mr. Tufnell, the Speaker was directed to issue his warrants to the Clerk of the Crown to make out new writs for the election of members to serve in Parliament for the following places, vacated by the acceptance of the several offices enumerated below by the late representatives:—

For the city of Chester, in the room of J. Jervis, Esq, who had accepted the office of Solicitor-General.

For the Southern Division of the county of Stafford, in the room of George Anson, Esq., commonly called the Hon. George Anson, who had accepted the office of Clerk of her Majesty's Ordnance.

For the Tower Hamlets, in the room of Charles Richard Fox, Esq., who had accepted the office of Surveyor-General of her Majesty's Ordnance.

For the borough of Greenwich, in the room of John D Dundas, Esq, who had accepted the office of one of the Commissioners for discharging the office of Lord High Admiral.

For the city of Gloucester, in the room of the Hon. Maurice Frederick Fitzhardinge Berkeley, who had accepted the office of one of the Commissioners for discharging the office of Lord High Admiral.

For the borough of Hertford, in the room of the Hon. William F. Cowper, who had accepted a similar office.

For the borough of Evesham, in the room of Arthur Marcus Cecil Hill, Esq., commonly called Lord Marcus Hill, who had accepted the office of Comptroller-General of her Majesty's Household.

For the county of Roscommon, in the room of the O'Conor Don, who had accepted the office of one of the Commissioners for discharging the office of Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain and Vice-Treasurer of Ireland.

For the borough of Richmond, in the room of Henry Rich, Esq, who had accepted a similar office

For the borough of Manchester, in the room of Thomas Milner Gibson, Esq., who had accepted the office of Vice-President of the Board of Trade.

On the motion of Mr Thornely, the issue of a new writ was ordered for the election of a member to serve in Parliament for the South Division of Lancashire, in the room of Lord Francis Egerton, now Earl of Ellesmere, called since his election to the House of Peers

Some private business was disposed of, and at six o'clock the House adjourned till the following day at twelve

HOUSE OF LORDS Tuesday.

Nothing of importance was done to-day, and, after sitting about an hour, the House adjourned till Thursday

HOUSE OF COMMONS Tuesday.

The House met to-day at twelve o'clock

New Writs.—New writs were ordered to be issued for the borough of Liskeard, in the room of Charles Buller, Esq, who had accepted the office of her Majesty's Judge Advocate-General. For the city of Edinburgh, in the room of William Gibson Craig, Esq., who had accepted the office of one of the Lords of the Treasury

A long discussion took place on the Birmingham and Oxford Junction Railway, and eventually the bill was ordered to be re-committed. The Newcastle and Carlisle Railway Bill was read a third time and passed; and the House adjourned, about four o'clock, till Thursday.

HOUSE OF LORDS. Thursday.

The House sat for a short time to-day, but merely for the transaction of private business, and nothing of importance occurred.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

The House sat at twelve o'clock to proceed with private business.

New Member.—Mr. M'Clintock took the oaths and his seat for the county Carlow, in the room of Mr. Bunbury, deceased.

New Writ.—On the motion of Mr. Tufnell, a new writ was ordered for Lichfield, in the room of Lord Alfred Paget, who had accepted the office of Clerk Marshal (Chief Equerry), in the room of Lord Charles Wellesley.

A great many bills (chiefly railway bills) were read a third time and passed; and at two o'clock the House adjourned till Friday, at twelve

RAILWAY COMMITTEES.

Very little has been done in the Railway Committees this week. There was, however, an important decision on Wednesday in Group XVII., in favour of the Manchester and Southampton Railway in its integrity from Cheltenham to Southampton. By this line, which, however, it is expected will take at least three years for its construction, a direct communication between the manufacturing districts of England and the port of Southampton will be effected without break of gauge

Now that anomalies in the Commons are less novel, they are diversifying the decisions of the Lords. Recently, a Lords' Committee on the Buckinghamshire (from Tring to Banbury) Bill declared the preamble not proved, on the ground, as stated by Lord Stanley, that the line, as an independent one, would not pay. Subsequently, the Duke of Buckingham moved the re-committal of the bill, for the purpose of considering the propriety of passing a portion of the scheme. [illegible]cted bill entered on this process on Wednesday, Lord Stanley in the chair, and that which a week ago was condemned was unconditionally granted

The preambles of the Blackburn, Clitheroe, and North Western, and of the Fleetwood, Preston, and West Riding, were also granted in the Lords.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Murder of a Policeman, at Dagenham, Essex.—A police-constable, named George Clarke, 313 K, has been murdered at Dagenham, Essex He had been but recently on that station, and was missed on Tuesday morning (last week). Not returning to his station at the usual time, much alarm was occasioned, as he was known to be a person of extremely correct habits, and much respected in the force. Day after day passed, but no tidings were heard of the missing man, and it was apprehended that he might have made away with himself. All the ponds and canals in the neighbourhood were dragged; all the copses and wood recesses carefully searched, but to no purpose. About half-past seven o'clock, on Friday evening, those engaged in the inquiry found a constable's staff on a part of the poor fellow's beat; and, following up the pursuit by such traces as offered themselves, a little further on they found his cutlass sticking in a hedge. It was covered with blood from the point to the hilt, and was somewhat hacked on the edge. Further traces led them into the midst of a corn-field, where the body of the murdered man was found, with his head mangled in a most shocking manner, evidently by some person or persons who had wrested his cutlass from him, and turned it against himself. His left eye was forced nearly out of the socket, and the utmost violence had been used. The spot where the body was found was a quarter of a mile from any thoroughfare, though still within the beat of the deceased. No clue to the motive of this outrageous murder has as yet been traced. An adjournment of the inquest took place, in order that further evidence might, if possible, be obtained

Thunder-Storm in the Country.—One of the most terrific storms of thunder and lightning that has occurred for many years passed over the lower part of Somersetshire and part of Devonshire, on Sunday morning last. At the town of Wellington, a melancholy accident was caused by the storm. A number of children were being instructed in the Sunday school connected with one of the dissenting congregations of the town, when the lightning struck the building. It would seem that it was attracted by the nails in some slates with which the school was faced, for a great number of these were torn down; the electric current then passed through a window, breaking away the framework, into the school. One young lad, named Edward Harcomb, was killed on the spot. A lad named Davey was struck senseless, and has remained so ever since; a third boy, named Lapcomb, was so severely hurt, that fears for his life are entertained, and two or three more children were thrown down, and more or less injured. A very violent storm of thunder and lightning, accompanied by a heavy fall of rain, passed over Windsor, between two and three o'clock on Sunday afternoon, in a south-easterly direction. The lightning (which was vivid in the extreme) and almost continuous for nearly half an hour) was accompanied by peals of thunder awfully loud and alarming. During the whole of Saturday and Sunday morning the heat was far more oppressive than it had been experienced in the town and neighbourhood for the past month, the thermometer in the Royal Gardens at Frogmore standing at 93 degrees in the shade

Destruction of Houses at Soham, Cambridgeshire.—In our late edition last week, we stated that a fire broke out on Thursday, at Soham, Cambridgeshire, and no less than 13 houses were destroyed. The damage is estimated at £5000 The number of persons rendered houseless by the calamity is 79. An inquiry has been instituted into the origin of the fire, the result of which is that two persons were apprehended, and having undergone an examination were remanded. Their names are Cornelius Harvey and his nephew, James Harvey, the former is a man of independent property, and the latter a grocer and mayor of the town.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

RE-ELECTION OF LORD JOHN RUSSELL FOR LONDON.

Wednesday having been fixed for the election of a member for the City of London, in the room of Lord John Russell, who has accepted the office of First Lord of the Treasury, vast crowds of persons were seen wending their way through the streets and alleys of the City towards Guildhall.

At eleven o'clock an immense crowd had assembled in front of the Hall, and, when the doors were opened, a tremendous rush was made by a highly-respectable crowd of eager electors.

At a quarter past eleven Lord John Russell arrived at Guildhall, and was received with the most enthusiastic and prolonged applause, and expressions of approbation both loud and deep. On his entering the Hall, he was received with the most vociferous cheering, which made the Hall ring again, and almost shook the venerable figures of the City gods, Gog and Magog. By half-past eleven o'clock the Hall was "crammed," and every jutting on which a hold could be maintained had a figure dangling from it. There could not have been less than 3000 persons present.

At twelve o'clock Messrs Chaplin and Laurie, the Sheriffs, appeared on the hustings, preceded by the Under-Sheriffs, City Marshal, and other civic functionaries. Lord John Russell was again received with most tremendous cheering.

Amongst those on the platform we observed J. A. Smith, Esq., M.P.; A. W. Robarts, Esq.; D. Salomons, Esq.; S. J. Loyd, Esq.; James Morrison, Esq., M.P.; Prevost, Esq; Sir R. B. Phillips, M.P.; William Hawes, Esq; T. J. Travers, Esq.; H. L. Keeling, Esq.; B Colwin, Esq; S. G. Whitbread, Esq.; Sir George Larpent, Bart.; Sir E N Buxton, Bart.; Alderman Sir James Duke, Baron de Rothschild; Alderman Humphery, M P; M. Foster, Esq, M.P.; J. A. Hankey, Esq; Thomas A Hankey, Esq.; G. F. Prescott, Esq; James Pattison, Esq, M P.; Alderman T. Wood, &c. &c.

Samuel Jones Loyd, Esq., came forward to nominate Lord John Russell, as a fit and proper person to represent the City of London, a duty which he did with the utmost satisfaction. He (Mr. Loyd) could not forego the opportunity of expressing his continued adherence to the glorious principles of Free-Trade, which had at last become triumphant, and from the recognition of which by the Parliament he augured a glorious career to our country. Honour to that great principle, founded as it was upon truth and justice—a principle which was every way calculated to establish concord amongst us internally, as well as bind together the nations of the earth in the golden bond of peace—honour to all who had advanced that principle; and none had done more towards it than the noble Lord whom they were about to send back to his place in Parliament.

Samuel Gurney, Esq, seconded the nomination. He did so with great pride and satisfaction, and he trusted they would elect with entire unanimity his honoured friend Lord John Russell. The great cause of education had been ably supported by the noble Lord, and on this ground he was anxious to support the noble Lord, who had given his sanction to the cause when it was not so popular as it was now. That was a circumstance which gave the noble Lord great claims upon the support of the City of London. He hoped to see the great cause of Free-Trade carried out without any infringement upon higher principles.

The Sheriff here asked if there was any other candidate? Cries of ("No, no.")

A show of hands was called for, which the Sheriff declared to be unanimously in favour of Lord John Russell. (Here there were several rounds of cheering.)

The Sheriff then declared that Lord John Russell was duly elected. (Here the cheering was renewed, and Lord John Russell came forward, which was the signal for its repetition. The cheering was carried on for some time.)

Lord J. Russell then said:

Gentlemen, On Monday last her Majesty was graciously pleased to desire that I should kiss her hand as First Lord Commissioner of the Treasury. To-day you have done me the distinguished honour of electing me as a member for this great city, the metropolis of the commerce, not only of this empire but of the world. (Cheers.) Such honour, gentlemen, while it fills me with gratitude, at the same time inspires me with awe. (Hear) Gentlemen, I cannot venture to say that I can adequately discharge the duty which has been imposed upon me; but, at all events, on looking back to the measures which I have proposed, to the principles which I have asserted, and to the votes which I have given, I can say that I stand here to carry into effect those measures, and to give life to those principles by which I have been hitherto actuated. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, when you did me the honour to invite me to become a candidate for this city, I declared at the first meeting of the electors that, as I conceived, the whole principle of levying duties for the sake of Protection was vicious and unsound. (Cheers.) I stated to you that as we had a great debt of which we have honestly to discharge the interest as we had great establishments of the navy and army to support, as well as others of a judicial and civil nature, which it was necessary for this country to maintain, it was right and lawful to impose taxes for the purpose of discharging those obligations, and of meeting those exigencies—(cheers), but that taxes which were imposed for the purpose of paying one class at the expense of another—that taxes of which the income does not go into the Exchequer but into the pockets of individuals—that such taxes could be defended on no principle, that is, they were utterly unjust (loud cheers)—and that the country being already heavily burdened by taxation, was all reason the more why such taxes should not be imposed. (Loud cheers.) I likewise put to you the case of a man in the country, who was employing his ingenuity and skill in fabricating a piece of cloth, and a farmer in America, with a bushel of wheat to dispose of; and I said it was unjust not to allow those two men to exchange their products, so that one might obtain food and the other clothing of the best quality, and at the cheapest rate. (Cheers.) Such were the principles of which I was then the advocate, and on the triumph of which I am now happy that I can congratulate you (Cheers.) Gentlemen, I never have attempted, nor shall I now attempt, to assume to myself, or to those who have acted with me, the merit and the honour due to those who have taken part in this great struggle. (Cheers.) I shall not be backward in giving applause to those men in the House of Commons, and to Mr. Villiers at the head of them (loud cheers), who have brought forward for the consideration of Parliament, and in an unanswerable manner, the principle on which the question should be decided; I shall not refuse that honour which is most justly due to those in the country, and to Mr. Cobden (cheers) at the head of them, who have brought down the philosophy of Free-Trade from the Heavens, and have exhausted their strength, and all their energy of mind and of body, in penetrating the whole people of this country with the great truth. (Cheers.) Nor shall I be churlish in refusing any particle of that honour which is due to Sir Robert Peel (loud applause), in bringing forward the commercial measures he has been from time to time the author of, and in acknowledging the energy, ability, and firmness with which he has persevered in carrying them through Parliament. (Loud cheers). I will not say what is due to those who, in 1839, in 1840, and lastly in the budget of 1841, endeavoured to embody those principles in acts of Parliament; that I shall leave to others to say, to whom it will belong with more propriety to do so (Hear, hear). But there is one thing, which I cannot omit, and that is, that no efforts of statesmen in Parliament—no efforts of orators at the meetings of the people—no efforts made in the Houses of Parliament—would have been of use, had it not been for the intelligence of this great people, which has finally decided the conflict. (Loud cheers). And, gentlemen, when I recollect that which was passing in this country only six months and one year ago when I recollect the great meetings which were held in this country, the fervid speeches which were made at those meetings, the excitement that prevailed, and the invective which was used, and see how quietly the great measure of the repeal of the Corn Laws has been discussed in the House of Lords and in the House of Commons, and that by a majority of those two bodies it has been carried into a law, I do but the more admire that which is supposed by some to be the object of superstitious worship to me—I mean the spirit of the English Constitution. (Loud cheers.) It seems to me to resemble that which you will see in the great iron works in the country, where you may behold large cauldrons full of melted iron, apparently enough to destroy and set on fire the building, but yet, by the skill of those who are engaged in its manufacture, carried into certain determined channels, and conveyed thence into its destined receptacles. Thus, this great body of fire, moving rapidly along, yet injuring nothing, becoming, perhaps, the wheel in the factory, or the ploughshare in the field (cheers) apparently so dangerous in its heat, is finally the means of extending agriculture and manufactures, and spreading comforts, benefits, and plenty, over the world. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, I do trust that this principle of Free-Trade will be carried on by the councils over which I shall have the honour to preside, and carried on safely and beneficially for the community. (Cheers.) I will not touch on those subjects on which my friend, Mr. Gurney, chose to address you, as I may shortly have to address the House of Commons upon them (hear, hear, hear); but I do say, as a general principle, that while it may be necessary to keep up certain duties for the sake of revenue, which may indirectly have the effect of protection, that we ought to keep up no duty which is solely for protection—that is to say, we should impose taxes for the benefit of the whole community, and not for the advantage of any class. I do trust that this principle will prevail here in some short time, and yet I trust that it will be no long time before it is adopted by the other nations of the world. There are two especially with which we have the greatest relations; the one is an immediate neighbour—the kingdom of France—ruled over by a Prince of the most enlightened mind, who has contributed, by his sagacity and foresight, to the peace of Europe (hear, hear), and who, I trust, will find that his Chambers concur with him in renouncing the errors of the commercial system which now prevails in that country (Cheers) The other country to which I allude is the United States of America, from which we have lately received such gratifying intelligence. I do rejoice that, while, at one time, so much angry feeling was expressed in that country, the wisdom of the Senate of the United States has over-ruled all those angry sentiments, and has decided in favour of that peace between them and us which, I trust, may endure for ages (Loud cheers.) Among them, likewise, I do trust that the principles of commercial freedom will soon prevail, and that our intercourse may tend to the happiness of both nations. (Cheers.) I have spoken, gentlemen, in the address which I had the honour to direct to you, of the task which remains for me to do—of a task which will, I am sure, be rendered more easy, when we have given up the unprofitable task of attempting to direct the industry of the country better than the industry of the country can direct itself (cheers)—for this, in fact, is the principle of Free-Trade. (Hear, hear.) This principle is not, as some choose to represent it, a new fanciful system—it is no strange, fanciful theory, as has been said—it is nothing but saying, humbly and modestly, there are questions of legislation which we are competent to decide; but as to directing the industry of the country, or directing the markets of the country, or telling the people how they must apply their labour, or telling them what to buy and what to sell, that is a subject on which legislation can do nothing. (Loud cheers) That is a subject on which the wisest House of Lords and the most virtuous House of Commons cannot do so well as the butcher, the farmer, and the artizan, in their own markets and in their own shops. (Cheers.) If we can get rid of those fruitless attempts, there are the great questions of public health and of public education, in which I think it behoves the Government and the Legislature to attempt to improve the condition of the people. (Cheers.) I mention no particular plan I allude to no scheme; but I will say this as regards education of the people, that no plan can be good or worthy the adoption of Parliament which does not sanction and maintain the principle of religious liberty. (Great applause.) Gentlemen, religious liberty has been the object of many contests. (Cheers.) Our ancestors fought for it, and gave their blood to obtain it; and it is not in this day that we are to cripple or restrain it. (Loud cheering.) It should be an object rather to carry this principle to its fullest extent, and to insist that, whatever civil laws we may enact, man shall worship God according to his own belief, and not according to the belief of others, but according to his own conscience. (Great cheering.) And now, gentlemen, having addressed these sentiments to you, in regard to the manner in which I have been proposed and elected the member for this great city, I must express again my great fears that my powers may be insufficient for the task I have undertaken; but, gentlemen, if they were at all commensurate with my wishes, then should I hope to see peace, liberty, and commerce flourish among us to all generations.

The noble Lord then retired amid repeated bursts of enthusiastic applause; but after a time came forward to the front of the platform a second time, and proposed that the thanks of the meeting should be given to the Sheriffs who had presided over them. (Cheers.)

Mr. Loyd seconded the proposition, which was passed with right good will.

Sheriff Laurie addressed a few words to the electors in acknowledgment of the compliment, after which the crowd separated.

The following were among the numerous placards around the neighbourhood of the hall: "Lord John Russell and Extensive Liberal Measures for Ireland," "Lord John Russell and Good Government of our Colonies," "Lord John Russell and Prosperity to the Port of London," "Lord John Russell and a Liberal System of Education," "Lord John Russell and Perfect Religious Freedom," and "Lord John Russell and Free-Trade with all the World."

Testimonial to Sir Robert Peel.—On Wednesday, in numerous parts of the metropolis, boxes were put up at the various public-houses and beer-shops, for the reception of pence for the purpose of presenting a national testimonial to Sir Robert Peel for his advocacy of Free-Trade measures.

The Royal Exchange.—Workmen are employed at the Royal Exchange in removing the asphalte paving in the quadrangle, and in replacing it with ornamental paving formed of the Turkey stone of the old Exchange. Another improvement has been recently made by putting up glazed doors within the gates of the north and south entrances. The doors are the full height of the gates, but are only intended to open at the lower part. We take this opportunity of subjoining a correct transcript of the inscription about to be cut in a panel in the merchants' area, that which was given a fortnight ago being incorrect in some particulars:—

On this site
Sir Thomas Gresham, Knt.,
Citizen and Mercer of London,
Erected the first Building, for the general Meeting of Merchants, which was named by
Queen Elizabeth
On the 23rd of January, in the 14th Year of her Reign,
A.D. MDLXXI.
The Royal Exchange.

It was destroyed, in the Great Fire of London,
On the 14th of September, 1666
Rebuilt
And opened on the 28th of September, 1669, in the 21st Year of the Reign of King Charles II
Again destroyed by fire on the 10th of January, 1838,
and
On the 17th of January, 1842,
The First Stone of this Building was laid by
Her Majesty's [illegible]
His Royal Highness Prince Albert,
and
The Present Edifice was opened

Her Majesty
Queen Victoria,
who was graciously pleased to proclaim it
The Royal Exchange.
On the xxviiith day of October in the viiith Year of Her Reign A.D. MDCCCXLIV.
William Tite F.R.S. Architect.

Newsvenders' Benevolent and Provident Institution.—The annual aquatic festival in aid of the funds of this excellent institution, which is supported chiefly by the news trade and the proprietors of the public journals, was celebrated on Wednesday, when a large party of the subscribers and other friends embarked in the Laurel steamer from the Temple pier, and proceeded to Rose Cottage, Richmond. The company arrived at about one o'clock, and after joining in various rustic sports and other amusements, sat down to dinner. Mr. Merrett was unanimously called on to preside. The usual loyal and patriotic toasts having been drunk with the greatest enthusiasm, several gentlemen addressed the company, and it appeared from the speeches that the institution was established in 1839, for the granting of pensions and temporary relief to masters and servants engaged in the sale of newspapers, who, from age, infirmity, or distress, may require assistance. The committee had stated in their report, that, in addition to the several donations received from the proprietors of the London press, many of their more fortunate brethren had cheerfully subscribed, and readily afforded the assistance sought for. The funded capital of the institution amounts to nearly [illegible]. The Chairman then gave "Prosperity to the Institution," a toast which was received with loud and long continued applause. Mr. Wild proposed "The Health of the Committee and Subscribers to the fund," and Mr. Everett gave "The Ladies," both of which toasts were drunk with the customary honours. The healths of the Chairman, the committee, and other active officers of the institution were also proposed, likewise many other toasts, all of which were duly responded to. Dancing, to the strains of a lively band, was kept up with great spirit till the party arrived in town at night.

Alleged Lunatics' Friend Society.—On Tuesday, the Foundation Festival of this Association was celebrated at the London Tavern, on which occasion, between 60 and 70 gentlemen sat down to a sumptuous dinner, under the presidency of Luke James Hansard, Esq., who has been indefatigable in his efforts to bring the institution into existence. Amongst those who immediately supported the Chairman, we noticed B. B. Cabbell, Esq; Col. Bruen; J. W. Gilbart, Esq.; Henry F. Richardson; Esq.; John T. Perceval, Esq; James Gole, Esq.; William Jerdan, Esq., &c. &c. After the removal of the cloth, and the usual loyal toasts had been heartily welcomed and disposed of, the Chairman proposed the toast of the evening, that of "Prosperity to the Alleged Lunatics' Friend Society. Its object is the protection of British subjects from unjust confinement on the grounds of mental derangement; the redress of persons so confined; and the protection of all classes of persons confined as lunatic patients from cruel and improper treatment. Its interests were ably advocated by the zealous Chairman, Mr. Jerdan, Mr. Cabbell, Mr. Henry F Richardson, the honorary solicitor, and by Mr. John T. Perceval, the honorary secretary; and, in the course of the evening, three individuals returned thanks to the Society for releasing them from improper confinement. A liberal subscription was made; and there was some tasteful singing by Messrs Genge, Edney, F. Smith, Turner; and Toole, the prince of toastmasters, officiated with his accustomed skill.

The Weather.—Last Sunday, about half-past three o'clock in the afternoon, the metropolis was visited with a heavy thunder storm. The electric fluid struck the south-west point of the Sailors' Home, in Well-street, Whitechapel, and dislodged about four yards of the brickwork opposite the spot where Prince Albert, a few weeks ago, laid the foundation-stone of the new Mariners' Church. The heavy mass fell with an immense crash into an upper room of the house of a Mr. Ellis, cow-keeper, adjoining the Home, which at present is used as a dressing-room. Mrs. Ellis, who had been dressing there, had fortunately left a few minutes previously; and so sudden was the shock and so powerful the electric effect, that every inmate of the house was for a moment paralysed. The immense mass of bricks broke completely through the roof and two ceilings. The heat was very oppressive during Sunday morning, but after the storm the air became much cooler. On Monday the weather was gloomy and much colder; the day was rainy throughout, and the highest temperature was only 65 degrees. On Tuesday the temperature was somewhat higher, and the weather was unsettled, showers falling occasionally. On Wednesday there were some seasonable showers, and a good deal of rain fell on Thursday. The thermometer, on the latter day, in-doors, was at 70.

Births and Deaths in the Metropolis.—The births in the metropolis in the week ending July 4, amounted to 1,334, the deaths to 974, being 7 above the average of five years, 76 above the average of five summers, and exceeding the deaths in the week ending June 27 by 84. The week ending July 4 is the first of many weeks in which the mortality has been above the average.

Death of Lord Chief Justice Tindal.—It is with pain we announce the death of the Right Hon. Sir N. C. Tindal, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, which took place on Monday night, at his seat near Folkstone. The learned Judge had been for the previous four or five days suffering under a severe bowel complaint, with which he was first seized on the occasion of his attending in the House of Lords on the hearing of some important appeals, and upon which the assistance of the Judges had been required; but nothing serious was apprehended until the latter part of Monday, when the complaint assumed so serious an aspect that Dr. Pennington, his medical attendant, who had been in attendance on the learned Judge, informed his family of the dangerous state he was in. The malady increased violently, baffling all medical skill, until death put an end to his sufferings, at half past seven o'clock on Monday evening. [We shall give a portrait and memoir of this eminent Judge next week.]

The Staff in Ireland.—Major-General his Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge, Colonel of the 17th Lancers, is shortly to be appointed to the staff in Ireland, and will hold a district command, fixing his head-quarters, it is understood, in Limerick garrison.

The New Elections.—In our metropolitan news we have given an account of the re-election of Lord John Russell for the City of London. At Worcester, Sir Denis Le Marchant has been returned in the room of Sir Thomas Wilde, now Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas. At Nottingham, Sir John Cam Hobhouse has also been re-elected: Mr. Feargus O'Connor was nominated, but he declined to go to the poll. Mr C. Wood, the new Chancellor of the Exchequer, has been re-elected for Halifax. At the time of our going to press, the other elections had not yet taken place, but it is not believed that there will be opposition to any of the Ministerial candidates. The election for Greenwich is to take place on Monday. The High Sheriff has fixed the election for the West Riding of Yorkshire for this day week, the 18th instant. It is supposed that Lord Morpeth will be re-elected without a contest.

The Cobden Tribute Fund.—The subscriptions up to Tuesday evening amounted to £55,000.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Omega."—There are not several ways in which the first player can give checkmate in two moves at the beginning of a game. There is not even one way: the "fool's mate" being given by the second player.

"†+†." Liverpool.—The position you send is the celebrated Indian Problem; a solution is to be found on the wrapper of the current month's "Chess Player's Chronicle." It is quite practicable, and eminently beautiful.

"J. L.," Broad Oak.—We have not the paper at hand to refer to. If you will have the goodness to copy the position, we will give the correct solution.

"Chesso-Mania."—Both your solutions are true; and those you require shall appear, if you will write out the positions, or wait until we have an opportunity of referring to them.

"A. B. P." Your solution of the Enigma No. 16 is correct, but No. 127 is impossible.

"F. W. G."—You may obtain any foreign Chess work through Messrs. Williams and Norgate, of Covent-garden.

"Bunyan."—Get one of Lewis's sterling Treatises, and seize every opportunity of playing with good players. With these helps, you ought soon to overtop the odds now given you.

"Enquirer."—M. Kieseritzki, we believe, has at length reached London. We are not aware that M. Szen proposes visiting England again; but he may be sure of a cordial welcome, if he does come. Mr. Staunton is a member of both Clubs named; but, having been absent from London for some weeks, has not played at either within the time specified.

Solutions by "T B," "A Subscriber," "Marazion," "Chapel Rock," "Pattison," "Old Mortality," "N. N.," "F G.," "Amateur," "Juvenis," "Miranda," "Phil.," "R P. S," "G. A T.," "Oxoniensis," "Major ——," "A Winchelsea Boy," "Mechanic," "Clericus," and "D. N.," are correct.

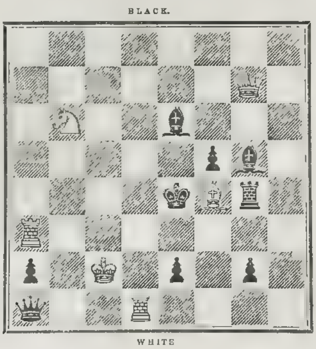
Solution to Problem, No. 128.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to K's 5th (ch)	K takes R
2. B to K Kt 4th	Q P takes P (best)
3. B to Q 6th (ch)	K to Q's 5th
4. B to K's 2nd—and mates next move	play as Black can.

Problem, No. 129.

By C. Stanley, Esq., of Brighton.

White to move first and mate in four moves.



CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 22. By M. D'Orville.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his Kt sq	K at Q Kt 3d
R at K R 6th	Q at her 7th
R at Q R 5th	R at K R 7th
Kts at K B 6th and	R at Q R 5th
Q Kt 8th	B at Q Kt 2nd
P at Q B 4th	Kt at K Kt sq

White to play and mate in 3 moves.

No. 23. By the Same.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R sq	K at Q B 6th
Q at K B 4th	Q at K R 6th
R at K Kt 5th	R at K 3rd
R at Q 4th	R at Q Kt 6th
Ps at Q 3rd and	B at Q 4th
Q Kt 4th

White playing first, mates in 3 moves.

No. 24.—By the Same.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his R sq	K at Q Kt 6th
Q at K R 5th	Q at her 6th
R at Q B 8th	R at K B 7th
Kt at Q B 2nd	B at Q Kt 2nd
Kt at Q R 4th	P at Q R 7th

White plays first, and mates in 3 moves.

GREAT MEETING AT NEW YORK.

In this Illustration, our clever New York Artist has sketched one of those vast gatherings, which are, perhaps, more frequent in the Transatlantic capital than in any other city of the world. The occasion was the United States' War with Mexico; and one of the leading New York journals thus characterises the spirit of the great concourse:

"But one spirit seemed to animate the immense mass; and, what was a curiosity to behold upon occasions of public gathering here, there was not a symptom of the existence of such a thing as party visible. There appeared to be a common pulse beating in the veins of all who were there, and that throbbing with patriotic enthusiasm.

"There were three stands erected in front of the Hall, where meetings were organised; one of the Vice-Presidents chosen at the centre stand presiding at each place. There were many able and eloquent remarks made; and the speakers (their speeches all breathing the same spirit) were warmly cheered. A series of spirited resolutions were unanimously and enthusiastically adopted.

"In order to give more spirit to the scene, as soon as night fell a Drummond light was set ablaze in the balcony of the City Hall, and another from the top of the Museum, which was also illuminated from foundation to the summit. Guns were fired, and the whole affair was more like a rejoicing from battles won, than an expression of determination to win them."

To add to the warlike spirit of the meeting, discharges of cannon took place occasionally while the orators were pouring forth their ire.

At the Eastern Stand, near Tammany Hall, Gen. John Lloyd was chosen President; the Resolutions read at the other Stand were carried by a tremendous "aye!" from the vast assemblage.

Loud calls were made for General Strong, who stood upon the platform. But the General said he was no speaker; all he had to say was, that he was ready for service. (Loud cheers and long.)

Mr. I. F. Otis read a letter from an officer under Gen. Taylor, dated "Point Isabel, May 5," in which the writer says:—"The gallant 7th, with its gallant commander, have done it up 'brown,' and covered themselves with glory;" adding, "the whole army are in tip-top spirits, and I am a little tip-topper!"

Garret Gilbert, Esq, late police-magistrate, informed the assemblage that he was one of the 76's. (The announcement was received with deafening shouts.)

A Mr. Bayard next spoke, and was about the last of the regular speakers. Two or three other rather rough specimens of elocution were given, and the meeting adjourned, amid the sound of cannon and the blaze of rockets.

WESTERN STAND.

Over the meeting, near the Broadway gate, Alderman Cozzens presided. The letter received from Point Isabel was also read from this platform, accompanied by some remarks from Mr. Otis, who proposed nine cheers for the gallant writer of the letter, which were given heartily. Speaking was kept up at this, as well as the other stands, until the roar of artillery rendered all speaking inaudible.

Such are the New Yorkers, in the gaze of their glory. Our Artist was ensconced on the roof of the City Hall, looking down on the balcony, and the multitudes in the Park. The scene was brilliantly lighted up from the balcony, by a Bude light; rockets and guns firing. The long stream of light in the distance is from another Bude light on the top of Barnum Museum: this is lighted up every night, and is a very marked feature; it is moveable, and plays all sorts of fantastic tricks.

ATTEMPTED REVOLUTION IN CHILI.

We gather from the Times' Correspondent at Valparaiso, that Chili has just escaped the horrors of a Revolution.

Politics have long been running very high throughout the country, but more particularly in Santiago, the capital.

For several months past, the authorities found it necessary, or thought it prudent, to restrain the ebullition of party feelings by the imprisonment of several persons who made themselves obnoxious by the promulgation of extreme and factious opinions. On Saturday last matters came to a crisis; late on the night of that day the authorities of Santiago arrested three gentlemen of the name of Vicuna (of one family), and two other gentlemen of the names of Bobar and Perez, as well as nineteen or twenty persons of inferior station, on an accusation of sedition.

GREAT "MEXICAN MEETING" IN THE PARK AT NEW YORK.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE).

Almost immediately after the arrest of these persons, a multitude, composed of the lower orders, collected in the principal streets, carrying seditious placards, charging their rulers with all sorts of crimes, calling for the deposition of the President, the overthrow of the established form of government, and inviting the people to join in a revolution.

One of the placards bore a revolutionary figure, lit up in some curious way from behind, and it invoked, as the future President of the Republic, the name of General Freire. After perambulating the streets, calling out for the dismissal of the Executive Power, &c., and committing such pranks as are common to all popular commotions, a party of the rabble got into some of the churches, and set the bells ringing. At the same time, another party made their way to the house of M. Rengifo. Finding the doors open, they entered with howling and cursing, and destroyed the furniture, printing types, and everything of use they could lay their hands upon. They then proceeded to the office of the Progreso, a Ministerial paper, of which M. Rengifo is editor, and which paper, it is generally supposed, is under the influence of Don Manual Monte, the Minister for Foreign Affairs. Here they shouted for the Industrial, a newspaper addressed to the lower orders, but an armed force arrived in time to prevent their entering the office, or doing any further injury. The military, assisted by the police, who are always armed with swords, and mounted on horseback, drove the mob before them, made prisoners of about two hundred of the common people, and of some twelve or fourteen men of some standing in society.

This tumultuous rising is charged against the Opposition party headed by Vicunia. Their plan is said to have been to break open the prisons and the carros, which last are iron-barred cages on wheels, used as sleeping places for the convicts who are condemned to hard labour on the roads, &c. These cages always stand in the open air, and the male convicts, chained two and two, are huddled into them, without bed or bedding, resembling a menagerie of wild beasts more than human habitations; and most of the cut-throats who occupy them look more like demons than men. If they had been let loose they would have made important allies in an insurrection. Fortunately, matters were prevented from coming to this pass, and no lives have been lost.

Immediately after the occurrence of the scenes just described, the Executive Government, with the consent of the Council of State, passed a decree declaring Santiago in a "state of siege" for a term of 85 days.

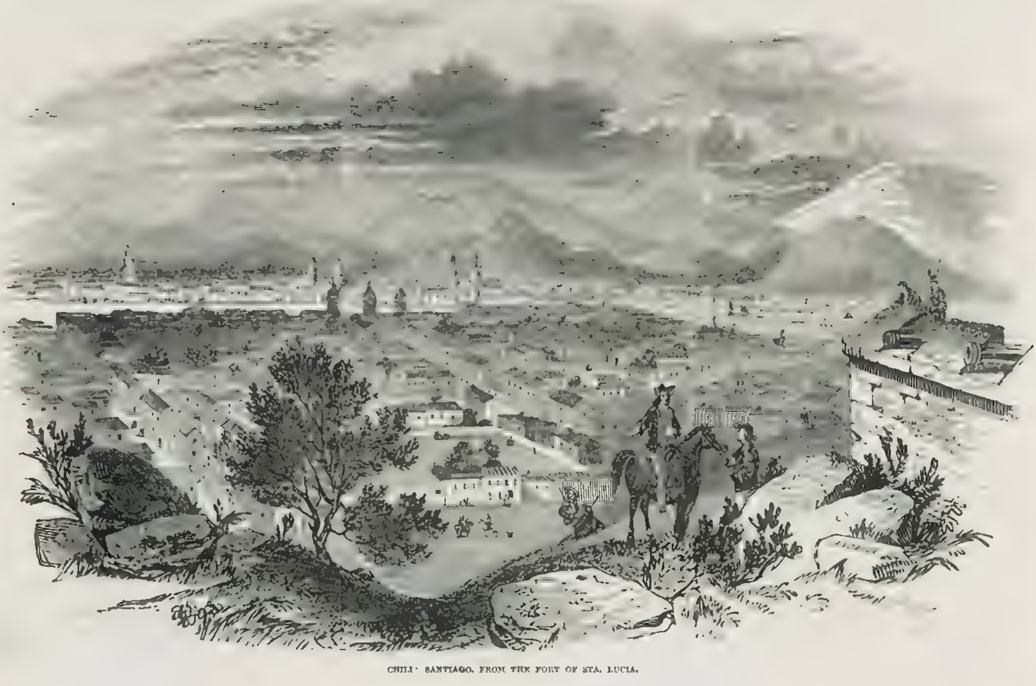
Martial law was thus established. The place has since remained quite quiet, and great precautions are taken to prevent any further attempt to disturb the public peace.

Santiago, of which we annex an Engraving, from an original sketch, is situated in a large plain, 1850 feet above the sea level, bordering eastward on the high range of the Andes, and westward, on a range of hills called the Cuerta de Prado, which divides it from the shores of the Pacific.

Santiago is one of the finest cities in America, in respect to buildings, convenience, and healthiness. It is laid out in rectangular and equal squares, and the principal streets are about forty-five feet wide. The houses are usually but low bulit, on account of the frequent earthquakes, but they are very large, and are ranged round three quadrangular squares. The walls of the houses are four feet thick, built of large red bricks made of baked mud, painted or whitewashed; they are roofed with red tiles. The Plaza or great square, nearly in the centre of the city, has a handsome bronze fountain, for the supply of the inhabitants with water. Here are the principal public buildings—the Government Palace, the Cathedral, Bishop's Palace, &c., There are also a mint, and several handsome churches and convents in Santiago.

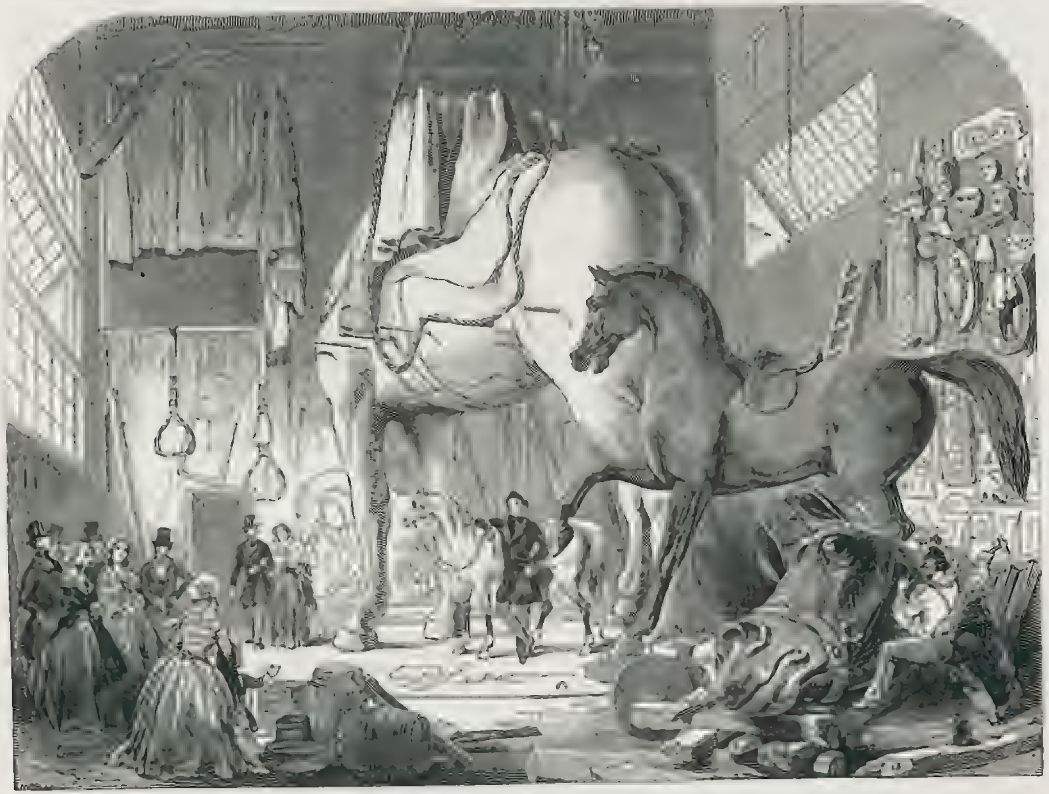
At the eastern extremity of the town is a small rocky eminence, on which the Fort of Santa Lucia is built, which is much visited by foreigners, on account of the beautiful view which it affords of the Andes. Our Artist has sketched his view from this charming spot

The population of Santiago is set down at 60,000: the inhabitants are nearly all of pure European blood; only a few have a slight mixture of Indian blood. The town owes its flourishing condition to its having been for many years the seat of Government, and the residence of the great landed proprietors. The state of society has much improved since the country acquired its independence; many schools have been established, and there are even several schools for females, whose education is almost entirely neglected in the other countries of South America. It has also a college.



CHILI: SANTIAGO, FROM THE FORT OF STA. LUCIA.

THE GREAT WELLINGTON STATUE.



MR. WYATT'S ATELIER, OR MODEL-ROOM.

THE inauguration of this splendid group of colossal art is expected to take place [illegible] readers [illegible] quiry; [illegible]

THE ATELIER.

The Model from which the imperishable Bronze has been cast, was solely formed by Mr. Wyatt, and his son, Mr. James Wyatt, who studied under his father, and has just completed a very picturesque equestrian statue of her Majesty.

[illegible] artists upwards of [illegible] ted in the first [illegible] dous work considerably exceeded 100 tons: it was formed upon a turn-plate, or revolving platform, upwards of 20 feet across, travelling upon 40 rollers, and weighing, in itself, several tons. The vastness of the model required certain precautions to insure its entireness: thus, to give strength to the body of the horse, a beam passes through it longitudinally, like a back-bone, from which spring transverse timbers, like the ribs of a ship. In the Illustration, the modeled group is incomplete; the head and tail of the horse; the feet, and uppart of the figure of the illustrious rider; being wanting. The line of projections from the body of the horse are iron bolts, beneath which, in the early stage of the modelling, were placed props for security in shifting the [illegible] by means of the platform, so as to obtain the most desirable positions for any [illegible].

MR. WYATT'S FOUNDRY.

In order to reach the different parts of the statue a travelling stage, with a shifting floor, was constructed, so that it might be adjusted to any height.

The entire group we should here explain, represents the Duke of Wellington, as he appeared on the Field of Waterloo, upon his favourite horse, "Copenhagen," in a standing position. The Duke sat to the sculptor for the portrait: the head is remarkably fine, and the likeness good: the warrior wears his customary short cloak, which the artist has gracefully draped, so as to give it something of the grace of classic costume.

A single glance at the first Illustration will remind the reader of the vastness of the Model, though it is not there shown in its entire height. Over the doorway hang the huge stirrups; beneath the vast horse, for the sake of comparison, we have introduced the fine Muscat Arab horse, presented by her Majesty to Mr. Wyatt.

Next to the modeled horse—instar montis, and reminding one of the classic marvel, the great horse of Troy—is the model of the horse in Mr. Wyatt's admirable equestrian group of George the Third, at Cockspur-street, a fine work, greatly deteriorated in effect by its being injudiciously placed upon a mean pedestal. In the right hand corner of the Engraving is the bronze head of the Duke's horse, with two workmen employed in finishing it: the length of the head is six feet, and the length of each ear two feet four inches. Having thus described the Atelier, or Model Room, we will proceed to adjoining. The general practice of casting statues need not be detailed here. The material is bronze—a compound of zinc, copper, and tin. For melting it, Mr. Wyatt erected two great furnaces; the first employed was capable of melting only twelve tons at a time, whereas, it was found desirable to cast the remainder of the statue in larger, and, consequently, fewer, pieces; a second furnace was, therefore, built, capable of melting twenty tons at a time.

THE FOUNDRY,

The mould and core being placed in the pit in the foundry, the bronze was run into it from the furnace; and the body of the horse, and the lower portion of the rider, were thus cast in two portions of about twenty tons each. These were magnificent castings; and the effect of so large a surface of molten compound as the twenty tons presented, is described as very extraordinary. The statue, or rather group, was thus cast in about eight pieces. In each case, the mould was placed in the pit imbedded in sand, rammed in as tightly as possible; yet, in casting the front of the horse, by some means, six tons of metal escaped through the mould, the chest of the horse was left vacant, and the casting was, consequently, spoiled. In order that the legs of the horse should be capable of carrying the great weight they would have to sustain, it was found necessary to cast them solid. The other portions of the work vary from one to three inches in thickness, with strong ribs internally, to give additional strength. It is computed that the whole group cannot weigh less than 40 tons; its height approaches 30 feet; and such is the bulk of the horse that eight persons have dined within one-half of it. The following are a few of the other main dimensions:

	ft	in
Girth round the Horse	22	8
Ditto, arm of	5	4
From the Horse's hocks to the ground	6	6
From the Horse's nose to the tail	26	0

In our Illustration, the Horse is shown without the head being fixed on: we descended through the aperture, by a ladder, into the body, which resembles a large cavern.

The group being cast in pieces, as above, they have been joined, partly by screw-bolts, two inches in thickness, and partly fused together by a new process, twelve inches at a time; whereas, by the old method, only six inches could thus be fused at once.

In consequence of the colossal size of the group, there were, for some time, upwards of thirty men employed at once upon the bronze; and, in case of any work being requisite to be done within the figure of the rider, the head was removed, to allow the workmen to descend through the neck. The cleansing, chasing, and finishing has occupied a considerable time: it is not proposed to colour the bronze, as is the practice of some artists; but to burnish the eyes, and the buckles, and other metal appointments.

The roof of the foundry has already been removed; and, in three or four days, the colossal group will be lifted entire out of the pit with shears, and placed upon a carriage, designed and constructed for conveying the great work to its final destination—the triumphal arch at Hyde Park Corner.

Of this great labour—for it is calculated that the group may be raised entire—we intend to present our readers with a series of Illustrations; as well as pictures of the impressive ceremonial, or inauguration.

We may, at present, add that the sculptor's contract with the Committee by whom the funds have been raised, was fixed at £30,000; but the cost will be somewhat short of this sum.

Messrs. Grissell and Peto have contracted to convey the group from the sculptor's, and raise it upon the arch, for the sum of £2000.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, July 12.—Fifth Sunday after Trinity.
Monday, 13.—Parliament at Nottingham, 1334.
Tuesday, 14.—Venus rises at 1h. 30m. a.m.
Wednesday, 15.—St. Swithin.
Thursday, 16.—Sir Joshua Reynolds born, 1723.
Friday, 17.—Dr. Watts born, 1674.
Saturday, 18.—Mars sets at 9h. 0m. p.m.

High Water at London Bridge, for the Week ending July 18.

Monday		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
[illegible] 4	5 28	5 53	6 16	6 4[illegible]	7 7	7 33	8 [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	9 12	10 17

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Philo-Arab" is thanked for the following on the pronunciation of the word Pacha. It is, in reality an abbreviation of the Arabic Pād-shāh or Bād-shāh—thus, Pā-shā or Bā-shā; the last syllable being spelt with the letter sheen, equivalent to our sh. If the pronunciation quoted by you were adopted (as it is by many), it will be in opposition to the Oriental orthography. The French write the word Pacha, and from them we have borrowed the orthography; but they, of course, would never think of pronouncing it Paka, which to an Oriental would be [illegible].

"P[illegible] Gauge."—The suggestion has frequently been made before, and is, besides, imperfect, as meeting only half the question; narrow gauge carriages may be worked on the broad line, but the inconvenience of transferring the traffic of the broad gauge to the narrow lines still remains—by far the greatest difficulty of the two.

"G. W. S.," Dublin.—We have ascertained that the remainder (5 vols.) of Mr. Campbell's translation of M. Thiers's work will appear before the close of this year, simultaneously and on the same day as the French edition in Paris.

"A Subscriber" is quite right in supposing that the style of "Most Noble" is the more usual and the equally correct style of a Marquis.

"Locomotive."—A marriage license can be obtained at Doctors' Commons, St. Paul's, on application to a Proctor. The cost does not, we believe, exceed five guineas.

"J. C.," Hampton Court, is thanked for apprising us of the crack game of Tennis played there on Wednesday and Thursday.

"J. S.," Glasgow.—In the seventeenth century.

"A Subscriber," Aberystwith, should apply to some Type-founder in Scotland.

"Studente."—We have not room.

"A Jersey Subscriber."—The Battle of the Nile took place in 1798; not 1780, as erroneously stated in our "Calendar."

"J. E. D."—The quantities in question are expressed by decimals, which scarcely require simplification.

"H. G.," Southwark.—The notice to quit must be regulated by the mode of paying the rent.

"I. O. U." is an appropriate signature, seeing that the Writer did not pay the postage of his nonsensical note.

"A Sufferer by Lightning," Jersey, should consult Mr. Snow Harris's complete work on Lightning Conductors. We can only illustrate the subject in some special occurrence.

"A. Y. I." The new Lord Chamberlain is Earl Spencer. We scarcely understand the other inquiry.

"A Constant Subscriber."—Address, Mr. Linton, 85, Hatton-garden.

"G. B. W.," *St. Mary Axe.—*Infra dig. is a vulgar abbreviation of Infra dignitatem, Beneath one's dignity.

"Maruthus" should apply to the Keeper of the Royal Academy.

"A Subscriber."—The husband of Madame Thillon is still alive: we do not know her age.

"An Old Admirer."—Prowse and Keath have published a work on the Accordeon.

"Genevieve."—Two minor thirds.

"S. W.," Stourbridge.—The best manufacturers and importers of everything connected with the Dental profession are, Mr. Ash, of Broad-street, Golden-square; Mr. Lemale, of Chandos-street; and Mr. Smale, of High Holborn.

"Laurata H." There is no head of the Catholic Church in England. The Catholic Clergy in this country is simply a Mission from Rome. There are no Bishops; but merely Vicars Apostolic of the several districts; who, however, hold Bishoprics "in partibus infidelium," and thus bear the Episcopal title. The name and address of the Vicar Apostolic of the London District is "the Right Rev. Dr. Griffiths, V.A.L.D., Golden-square."

"J. C. F.," Stockton-on-Tees.—Sir Robert Peel offered Lord John Russell a general support, at the time the latter was forming his Administration, last winter; but he did not specify the exact measure he would have countenanced as a settlement of the Corn-law question. It is highly probable he would have aided Lord J. Russell with his [illegible] in carrying the abolition, or [illegible] to the present; but he gave no distinct pledge to do so. The speeches at the opening of the present session contain all the information accessible on the subject.

"W. H. E." The arms in question should be thus described:—Perpale, azure and sable; a fesse engr., erm., between three bulls' heads caboshed, counter-changed.

"W. W. W."—The maiden name of the Countess of Blessington was Power. She married, first, M. St. Leger Farmer, Esq., of Poplar Hall, co. Kildare; and, secondly, Charles John Gardiner, Earl of Blessington, an Irish Nobleman.

"A[illegible]" [illegible] to the style of "Right Honourable" [illegible] younger sons of Dukes and Marquises, and to the daughters of [illegible].

"Jacens Miles."—"Barbette," in fortification, is an unprotected platform.

"Olim Oxoniensis," Winchester, is thanked for the hints.

"P. K." should be gratified, would our space allow it.

"[illegible] F. Z." The person will be liable.

"A Yearly Subscriber," Lincoln.—The Gretna Green Marriage mummery is still tolerated; but is, session by session, threatened with abolition by Parliament.

"[illegible]"—"Lindley's School Botany."

"[illegible]"—An Act of Parliament will be requisite.

"[illegible]" is thanked for the Regatta Sketches, though we cannot engrave them.

"[illegible] T. L." is thanked for the clever Sketch in the Falkland Islands; but we had not room.

"T. H. K.," Umbala, East Indies.—The MS. has not been received.

Lines "On the Thunder Storm," and "To the French on Napoleon," are ineligible.

"C." In "Andronicus," the i is long, thus, "Andronīcus."

"M. W.," Camberwell.—The Revenues of the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy are distributed by a Court of Assistants, elected out of the body of Governors. Address, "the Registrar, Corporation House, 2, Bloomsbury-place."

"E. D." is thanked for his suggestion, although we could not avail ourselves of it.

 A few replies are deferred, owing to the press of News.

[illegible] Next week, we shall illustrate, in a series of spirited Engravings, the Great Meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, to be held at Newcastle-upon-Tyne; the Sketches by two eminent Artists.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

With the present Number is given A SUPPLEMENT, containing the Title page and Indexes to Vol. VIII. of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, and a Chronology of the Remarkable Events of the last Six Months.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 11, 1846.

It is, we believe, a remark of Dr. Johnson, that, whatever we do, with the certainty that it is for the last time, is done with a feeling of regret. There is a solemn influence in the cessation of a pursuit, when we know that, in passing from our hands, it departs for ever. The cold and unimpassioned Gibbon could not, without strong emotion, write "the last words of the last page" of his "Decline and Fall," and has recorded the day, the hour, and the spot where he terminated his great work. Byron makes his Tasso weep over the concluding page of the "Giarusalema Liberata," the "long sustaining friend of many years"—that which had given him thought and occupation amid the weariness of the long imprisonment that wore down the "eagle spirit of that child of song." Men whose thoughts have been more closely allied to action than those of poets are supposed to be, have felt the same emotion as the close of a long course of labours approached.

Newton could not conclude the calculations by which he proved the truth of his great theory; overcome by the sublimity of the task he had completed, he was obliged to entrust the last stages of the process to a friend. The burden of success is sometimes harder to bear than the mortification of defeat, perhaps from its comparative rarity, for the world witnesses far fewer triumphs than martyrdoms. The oppressive sense of a great end accomplished, appears in a similar manner to have thrown its shade over the last meeting of the "League." The Prospero of the political elements put off his robe with the exclamation "lie there mine art;" and renouncing his spells declared,

> I'll break my staff—
> Bury it certain fathoms in the earth,
> And deeper than did ever plummet sound,
> Some leagues, I'll drown my book.

The act was not without impressiveness; in its performance there was less exultation in the possession of unwonted powers than regret for being compelled to resort to them. As Prospero, could he have changed the heart of his usurping brother by human means, would not have made use of magic, so, had abstract arguments been sufficiently weighed, it would not, perhaps, have been necessary to have evoked such a potent band of spirits to work out the purpose. But, the task done, they are dissolved; not into "thin air" exactly, though, for all practical purposes, the organisation has ceased to exist. The closing proceedings were marked by the same clear, distinct declarations of principle and purpose as have attended the past career of this great body. There was never any mistake, either as to the ends it had in view, or the means by which they were to be accomplished. Its proceedings were public—it invited examination and inquiry; had it done otherwise, it would have alienated support, instead of winning it. Its perfect organisation could only have been framed by men of business individually accustomed to the conduct of operations on a gigantic scale, managed with an economy of time and labour which the Government itself has yet to learn. It was the greatest phenomenon of the present age; the spirit of the counting-house and the exchange had never before been carried so methodically into the arena of public controversy. It may be imitated hereafter; but we can scarcely imagine a question on which such different parties will be able to unite as the purely commercial principle advocated by the League.

It seems as if the settlement of the question produced a similar effect on the two public men so long opposed to each other upon it. As Sir Robert Peel retires from office, Mr. Cobden retreats from public life, one from political, the other from personal reasons: but neither can remain long in seclusion; stranger things have been seen than the successful leader of the League holding office under the converted chief of the Protectionists. It is said that Mr. Cobden is overwhelmed with applications to undertake the advocacy of changes, which many think only require his aid to be successful. We apprehend there is a mistake in this; no man can be all things, or effect impossibilities; and, on questions for which the age is not prepared, even Mr. Cobden would fail. The commercial controversy we have just passed through is much older than is generally supposed; the Corn-Law discussion can be traced back through the debates of at least thirty years; the principles now becoming rules of action were announced in the middle of the last century: all changes, when effected by opinion only, are extremely slow, though the final stages of the progress may be sudden; it is only where all change is blindly resisted, that the natural mutations of society proceed by convulsions, and are wrought by revolution and anarchy. There is rather reason to lament the tardy pace of improvement, than to fear that changes will come too speedily.

Whilst changes, the political, social, and commercial results of which can scarcely be fully appreciated in all their magnitude and importance at present, have been effected amongst us here at home in England, with a noiseless facility and an absence of commotion, which could be exhibited only in a constitutional state, whose institutions, originally founded in justice and common sense, have been matured and consolidated by length of time; a very different aspect of affairs is, unfortunately, presented in several of those foreign states, which, having received the glorious gift of freedom, have not known how to make the proper use of it, and in which the bungling and unjust rule of men, who defiled the name by calling themselves Constitutional Ministers, has led to a state of things almost bordering upon anarchy.

In Mexico, where liberty is but a name, the people unable to withstand, or present even the semblance of successful opposition to the hostile forces of the United States, in their helplessness, have had recourse to their usual wretched specific on all occasions of difficulty—a revolution, in the desperate hope that, in the bouleversement of society, some man may arise, whose talents and daring may be able to re-adjust their chaotic condition.

In Portugal, the misrule of successive Governments has at last ended in a general insurrection on the part of the oppressed people, who have succeeded in wresting some liberal measures from their rulers. But it is by no means an easy matter for a feeble Government to extinguish the flames of civil war when once kindled; and, accordingly, we find, by the most recent accounts from the Peninsula, that large sections of the population have begun to "pronounce" for Don Miguel. Though not even the faintest hope of success can reasonably be expected by or for the Miguelite faction, they may continue their disorders, nevertheless, long enough to inflict great and lasting injuries on their unhappy country.

Let us hope that the next tidings from both those distracted nations may be of a happier kind.

THE REVENUE.

It appears by the usual quarterly accounts of the Revenue, that there is a balance of increase on the quarter, ending July 5, of £575,599, though for the year terminating at the same time there has been a decrease of £1,011,773. The increase on the quarter is thus accounted for:—

INCREASE.
Customs		£23,613
Excise		13[illegible]27
Taxes		[illegible]
Property-tax		99,171
Post Office		26,000
Miscellaneous		444,349
Over and above the ordinary sources of Revenue, it is stated that an increase has occurred under the head of "Imprest and other Moneys," of		44,677
Gross Increase		782,[illegible]27
From this must be deducted:—
DECREASE.
Stamps	£106,581
Crown Lands	30,000
	136,581
And in addition to what is called ordinary revenue, on account of Repayment of Advances	70,747
		207,328
Net increase on the quarter		£575,599

The compensating increase under particular heads of taxation, which reduces the gross decrease of taxes from £2,466,134 to the sum of £1,011,733, above stated, is chiefly supplied by the Miscellaneous Revenue, under the head of which we find nearly three quarters of a million increase, and to this we find 440,000 Chinese money [illegible] within the last quarter. The total Revenue of the year is £50,05[illegible],083.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

IBRAHIM PACHA.

The Times says:—"Our printing-office was honoured on Monday last by a visit from his Highness Ibrahim Pacha. His Highness, accompanied by Major Dickson and his suite, arrived at about four o'clock, and minutely inspected the various departments of our establishment. His Highness manifested extreme intelligence and a ready appreciation of the ingenious and powerful machinery by which the Times is printed, and was particularly struck by the extreme rapidity of the process, upwards of a hundred copies a minute being struck off. After spending nearly an hour in Printing-house-square, his Highness departed, expressing extreme satisfaction at all he had seen." On Tuesday, his Highness, attended by Sami Pacha, and also by Edib Effendi, Turkish Chargé d'Affaires, had an audience of the Queen, and afterwards had the honour of dining with her Majesty.

His Highness Ibrahim Pacha, on Tuesday afternoon, attended as usual, paid a visit to the members of the Senior United Service Club, at the Club House in Pall-mall, and was received by about one hundred and fifty of them.

Lady Macdonald and several other ladies were in the saloon.

His Highness was conducted to the "morning-room," and remained there a brief period to see the portraits of Sir John Moore and Viscount Exmouth. From thence the Pacha proceeded to the saloon, where the whole of the gallant members of the club had congregated. Here Admiral Sir Charles Ogle (the commander-in-chief at Portsmouth) was recognised by the Pacha, and his Highness advanced to the gallant Admiral and entered into conversation with him. The Pacha then ascended to the gallery, where he attentively inspected the large painting of the battle of Trafalgar by Stanfield, and Jones's admirable painting of the battle of Waterloo. The several full-length portraits of the Duke of Wellington, Lord Hill, Earl Nelson, and Lord Collingwood, in the saloon, were then pointed out to his Highness. He remained some minutes in looking at Nelson and Lord Hill.

His Highness went to the billiard-room, and joined in a game of pool. The Pacha is a skilful player, and beat his competitor, laughing heartily at the conclusion of the game. He was next ushered into the dining-room, where there are portraits of Sir Ralph Abercromby, Lord Rodney, and the Earl of St. Vincent. The Pacha appeared gratified in seeing the likeness of Sir Ralph Abercromby, and passed several remarks to his interpreter and Sami Pacha. The drawing-room and library were next visited.

The Pacha then prepared to take his leave, and communicated, through M. Nubar, the gratification he had derived from the visit. The Pacha is an honorary member of the club, having been elected shortly after his arrival in London. We hear that the members of the club contemplate to give an entertainment to his Highness.

His Highness went on Wednesday to Greenwich. The Pacha drove direct to the Hospital, on arriving at which he alighted at the Governor's house, and passed into the Council Chamber, where he was received by Sir Robert Stopford, the Governor, Admiral Sir James Gordon, and the numerous officers of the institution. After an exchange of the usual courtesies, his Highness proceeded through the Royal Ward into the Dining Hall of the Hospital, with the arrangements of which he expressed himself much gratified. He then crossed to the Chapel of the Hospital, the architecture of which he appeared to admire very much. He then returned across the square to the Painted Hall, the beautiful paintings and improved appearance of which occupied his marked attention. On returning from this part of the institution, he proceeded to the ward occupied by the seamen who had been seriously crippled in their country's service. From thence he left the Royal Hospital, and crossed over to the Hospital School, and inspected the model frigate, the yards of which were manned by about fifty of the boys, the juvenile band playing the National Anthem. Having expressed himself much pleased to Lieutenant Rouse, R.N., the Naval Superintendent of the schools, he went forward to the schools and dormitories, and lastly to the gymnastic grounds, all of which he appeared highly pleased with. He then visited the Infirmary of the Hospital; and finally, at two o'clock, proceeded to the Governor's residence, where he partook of a dejeuner with the gallant Admiral.

In the evening the Chairman and Deputy-Chairman of the East India Company and the Court of Directors entertained his Highness Ibrahim Pacha and a large party at the London Tavern. The hour appointed was seven o'clock; and shortly after Ibrahim Pacha, attended by his suite, arrived, and was received by Sir James Weir Hogg, the Chairman, and Mr. St. George Tucker, the Deputy-chairman.

The Chairman of the East India Company presided. On his right sat Ibrahim Pacha and the Turkish Chargé d'Affaires, and amongst the other distinguished guests were M. Nubar, the Earl of Minto, the Earl of Jersey, the Earl of Dalhousie, Mr. Baring, Earl Grey, Mr. Astell, Viscount Morpeth, Viscount Jocelyn, Lord R. Grosvenor, the Vice-Chancellor, the Right Hon. Sir J. Graham, the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, the Lord Chief Baron, the Right Hon. Sir H. Pottinger, Mr. Muspratt, the Hon. Admiral Mackay, Edib Effendi, M. Zohrab, the Deputy-Chairman, the Lord Mayor, the Marquis of Chandos, the Earl Delawarr, the Earl of Ripon, Mr. Wigram, Viscount Mahon, Lord C. Hamilton, Lord Campbell, Right Hon. S. Herbert, Right Hon. H. Goulburn, Right Hon. Sir G. Grey, Mr. Mills, Right Hon. Holt Mackenzie, Right Hon. Sir E. Ryan, Sir R. Campbell, Sir R. Inglis, Sir J. L. Lushington, Right Hon. J. W. Croker, Right Hon. Sir H. East, Mr. Loch, Sir G. Larpent, Mr. Alexander, Mr. Peacock, Mr. J. Melvill, Mr. P. Melvill, Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Masterman, Mr. Abel Smith, Mr. Lawford, Mr. Williamson, &c.

On the cloth being removed, the Chairman gave "The Health of her Majesty the Queen," with all the honours.

The next toast was "The Health of the Queen Dowager," which was followed by that of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family.

The Chairman then proposed "The Health of Ibrahim Pacha," which was given with all the honours.

His Highness returned thanks through his interpreter, who addressed the meeting in French. He said that, since his arrival in this country, he had received nothing but attention, nothing but honour, from all classes; but the flattering sentiments expressed by the Chairman conferred the highest gratification upon him, and rendered it impossible for him to acknowledge, in terms sufficiently grateful, the feelings by which he was actuated.

The next toast was "The Health of Mehemet Ali, Viceroy of Egypt," which was given with all the honours.

His Highness, through his interpreter, again returned thanks, and said, that in every place, in every meeting, which he had visited since his arrival in England, he had heard nothing but praise and the most flattering testimonials bestowed upon his father. On his arrival in Egypt he should not fail to make him acquainted with all that had been said of him, and on his behalf he returned his warmest thanks.

The Chairman then proposed "The Navy and Army." The former was responded to by Admiral Mackay, the latter by General P[illegible].

The next toast was "The Earl of Ripon," who returned thanks; and, on "The Health of her Majesty's Ministers" being given, Lord Minto returned thanks.

"The Health of the Lord Mayor, and Prosperity to the City of London," having been given, his Lordship returned thanks, and shortly after the party broke up.

Viscount Palmerston's First Diplomatic Levee.—Viscount Palmerston, her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, held a levee on Wednesday afternoon, at the Foreign Office, for the reception of the diplomatic corps. The whole of the Ministers appeared in their respective national costumes, the members of orders of Knighthood wearing their insignia.

THE NEW WHIG MINISTRY.

The following appointments have been made in addition to those we announced last week:—

The Admiralty appointments have been completed, and the following constitute the Board:—Vice-Admiral Sir William Parker, Rear-Admiral Deans Dundas, Captain the Hon. F. Berkeley, Captain Lord John Hay, and the Hon. William Cowper

Judge Advocate	Mr. Charles Buller.
Secretary of the Board of Admiralty	H. G. Ward, Esq.
Under Secretary for the Home Department	Sir Wm. Somerville.
Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs	The Right Hon. E. J. Stanley.
Joint Secretaries of Treasury ..	T. Parker, Esq. H. Tufnell, Esq.
Secretaries of the Board of Control	Right Hon. G. S. Byng. T. Wyse, Esq.
Under Secretary for the Colonies	B. Hawes, Esq.
Board of Ordnance	Colonel C Fox, Surveyor. Hon G Anson, Clerk. Lord C Paget, Secretary.

Lord Marcus Hill has been appointed Comptroller of her Majesty's Household. Mr. H. Rich and O'Conor Don are Lords of the Treasury. Mr. Redington is Under Secretary for Ireland. Mr. M. Gibson is Vice-President of the Board of Trade.

Mr. Francis Baring does not take office: he has declined doing so mainly in consideration of the declining health of his revered father, Sir Thomas Baring, and also of Lady Baring, and his consequent wish to spend much of his time at Stratton.

Lord Alfred Paget is appointed Equerry and Clerk Marshal.

Mr. Gibson Craig is made a Lord of the Treasury.

The Irish offices are not definitively announced; but we believe we may state that Chief Baron Brady has received the Seals, that Mr Pigott will succeed him in the Exchequer, and that Mr. Moore and Mr. Monahan will be Attorney and Solicitor-General.

The Earl of Granville, it is said, will be appointed Master of the Buckhounds.

Sir T. Wilde is to succeed the late Chief Justice Tindal. Mr. Jervis will be Attorney-General; and, it is said, Mr. Romilly will be the new Solicitor-General.

The appointments to office in the Royal Household were formally made at another Court held on Wednesday. They were thus appropriated:—

Lord Chamberlain	The Earl Spencer.
Lord Steward	The Earl Fortescue.
Master of the Horse	The Duke of Norfolk.
Vice-Chamberlain	Lord Edward Howard.

At the same Court, Earl Spencer, Lord Edward Howard, and Mr. Milner Gibson were sworn in of her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council.

ARISTOCRATIC ENTERTAINMENTS.

The Earl and Countess of Wilton gave a magnificent entertainment on Wednesday evening last to the Duchess of Gloucester, at the family mansion in Grosvenor-square. The company invited to meet the Royal Duchess (all of whom were present) included his Grace the Duke of Wellington, the Duke and Duchess of Bedford, the Duke of Norfolk, the Marquis and Marchioness of Westminster, the Earl Bathurst, Viscount and Viscountess Sydney, Viscountess Jocelyn, Lord Brougham, and the following members of the corps diplomatique: His Excellency the French Ambassador and the Countess De St. Aulaire, his Excellency the Russian Minister and the Baroness Brunnow, and his Excellency the Hanoverian Minister. The banquet was served at a few minutes after eight o'clock. Covers were laid for twenty-one. The entertainment was one of the most superb character, and the table, which was ornamented with the beautiful vases presented to the noble host by the King of Saxony, presented a magnificent appearance.

Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston gave a superb entertainment on Wednesday evening to their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and a distinguished circle, at their mansion on Carlton House-terrace. The company included his Grace the Duke of Devonshire, the Marquis and Marchioness of Clanricarde and Lady Emily De Burgh, the Countess of Westmoreland, the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, the Earl and Countess of Lincoln, the Earl of Arundel and Surrey, the Earl of Besborough, Viscount and Viscountess Norreys, Viscount Cantelupe, and Lord and Lady Beauvale. Dinner was served at eight o'clock.

The Earl and Countess of Powis entertained at dinner on Wednesday evening, at their mansion in Berkeley-square, the Duchess of Montrose, the Countess of Jersey and Lady Clementina Villiers, the Earl of Uxbridge and the Ladies Eleanora and Constance Paget, Viscount Maidstone, Viscount and Viscountess Gage, Lord William Graham, Lord Alfred Paget, and the Hon R. Clive. Of the family circle there were present, in addition to the noble host and hostess, Viscount Clive, the Ladies Lucy and Charlotte Herbert, the Hon. Capt. Percy Herbert, and the Honourables George and Robert Herbert. The Countess had an assembly after the dinner party, which was very numerously and fashionably attended.

Her Majesty's Return to the Isle of Wight. On Thursday morning, at nine o'clock, the Queen and Prince Albert left Buckingham Palace, attended by a detachment of Hussars, en route to Osborne House. At ten minutes past nine they were received by the Directors of the South Western Railway at the Vauxhall terminus, where a special train had been prepared for their reception. Her Majesty's suite of attendants followed in four carriages. The Royal party landed in the Isle of Wight soon after twelve o'clock.

Windsor, Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.) The Duchess of Kent will arrive at Frogmore-lodge, tomorrow, from Clarence House, St. James's, attended by the Baroness de Speth and Lady Augusta Bruce. Her Royal Highness is expected to remain at Frogmore during the visit of the Court to the Isle of Wight; a period of not more than a week or ten days.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Boiler Explosion at Droitwich.—On Friday (last week) a terrible explosion took place at the salt manufactories of Messrs. Ellins and Co., at Droitwich, by which several persons were severely scalded, and one has since died. At the time when the explosion took place it providentially happened that nearly all the workmen and women employed in the manufactory were at their afternoon meal, so that the works were comparatively deserted. Two men, however, were standing near, loading a cart with salt, when the boiling water and steam poured upon them, scalding them in a fearful manner. The driver of the [illegible] also was [illegible] scalded on his right side, and the horse and cart were driven into the small river Salwarpe, which runs adjacent to the factory. Another person named Brazier, who was at the moment passing the spot with a load of coal, was seriously injured, and his vehicle also was forced into the stream. The unfortunate men who received the most serious injuries, were George Carter and his son James. They were immediately conveyed to the Worcester Infirmary, where, after lingering until next morning, the former expired. The other injured parties are in a fair way of recovery. The deceased, George Carter, was an industrious and steady man, and had only been engaged a few months at the salt-works. He has left behind him a widow and family of ten children. The works have been stopped since the melancholy occurrence above detailed.

Murder at Kineton, Warwickshire.—The particulars of an atrocious murder, which was committed near Kineton, a market town halfway between Banbury and Stratford-on-Avon, have transpired at a Coroner's inquest held at Kineton upon the body of William Chater. The deceased was a blacksmith and machine maker, living at a village called Combrooke, and doing well, being possessed of about a dozen cottages, all tenanted. He is represented, however, to have been a man of very quarrelsome and litigious disposition, often engaged in disputes before the local magistrates with his workmen and others, some of whom have been known to threaten him, and it has been conjectured that to some such cause his death may be attributed. It appears that, on Wednesday (last week), he went to the town of Kineton, about two miles from which he resided, and that he left in the evening for the purpose of returning, being then somewhat in liquor. About midnight, however, his body was found by the road side, with several desperate wounds on his head, and the traces of a hard struggle about the spot where he lay. After hearing all the evidence that could then be produced, the Jury found a verdict of "Wilful Murder against some person or persons unknown."

Fatal Fire in the Commercial-road.—On Saturday morning, a disastrous fire broke out on the premises of Mr. Powell, china and glass dealer, No. 13, King's-place, Commercial-road East, which has occasioned the death of a young female, under very deplorable circumstances. Mr. Powell and his family being alarmed, lost no time in making his way on to the roof, and thence on the one adjoining, where they were secured from all danger. During this time, however, the servant girl, a young female, about 16 years of age, appeared at the second floor front window, in a very excited state. The police perceiving that she was about to jump out, begged of her to stay a few minutes until a ladder was procured; but the smoke fast filling the apartment, and the flames nearing her, the poor girl made a desperate effort and precipitated herself from the window sill. Unfortunately, in her descent, her back caught the lead coping over the shop front, and so changed her position that she fell head downwards on the pavement. She was picked up apparently dead, and with all haste was removed to the London Hospital. She was there found to be still alive, but her skull had been so fractured that her recovery was impossible. She lingered in the greatest suffering until Sunday night, when she expired.

Fatal Railway Accidents. On Saturday week three men were killed on the Lancaster and Carlisle Railway. Last Saturday another man was killed, and serious injuries were sustained by two others, all natives of Penrith, named Samuel Guardhouse, who was killed, and David Stout and Joseph Westmoreland, who were injured. Guardhouse and Stout were engaged as workmen in taking down the extensive stage or wooden bridge, upwards of 100 feet in height, which was erected for convenience during the building of the monster viaduct bridge which spans the river Lowther, at Yew's-crag, near the village of Clifton. Some of the other workmen were in the act of winding up a large log of timber, which Guardhouse and Stout had fastened to the rope of the crane above, when the pulley unfortunately broke, or slipped out of its proper place, and the log fell with great force upon another log upon which the two men were sitting waiting the rope descending again, and shook it so much that they were both thrown off it, and precipitated headlong a great height into the bed of the river below, and, most surprising, the log which fell did not light upon or injure either of them. Poor Guardhouse died about 10 o'clock in the forenoon, being about three hours after the accident occurred. Stout still survives. Westmoreland was driving a waggon from the top end of the cutting, on Clifton moor, when the horse took fright and ran away; he leaped off the waggon, fell on his face, and the waggon ran over both his thighs, and he still continues very ill.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

Their Lordships met at twenty minutes before five o'clock.

Messengers from the House of Commons brought up the Liverpool and Bury Railway Bill, the Scottish Central Railway Bill, and a great number of other railway bills.

The bills on the table were then advanced a stage.

The House then adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

The House met to-day at twelve o'clock, and sat two hours, but private business only was transacted.

Sir Denis Le Marchant took the oaths and his seat for Worcester, in the room of Sir Thomas Wilde, now Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas. The hon. member was introduced by Mr. Francis Baring and Sir Edward Colebrooke.

The Manchester and Leeds Railway Extension Bill was read a third time and passed.

The House adjourned till Monday.

Cabinet Council.—The first Cabinet Council of the new Ministry will be held at the Foreign Office to-day, at two o'clock. The summonses for holding this Council were issued yesterday morning, by direction of Lord John Russell.

The Solicitor-General.—We have heard to-day, at the west end, that the office of Solicitor-General has been offered to Mr. Sergeant Talfourd.

Taunton Election.—The Right Hon. Henry Labouchere, Secretary for Ireland, was, yesterday morning (Friday), re-elected M.P. for Taunton without opposition.

Curious Claim to a Husband.—The magistrates of the Brighton bench were engaged a couple of hours on Wednesday morning in investigating a summons for sureties of the peace, against a young woman named Dinning, arising out of a claim made by her to be the wife of Captain Mercer, a half-pay naval officer; and nephew of Vice-Admiral Sir William Powis. Mr. Clarke detailed the facts of the case. On the evening of Midsummer-day, Captain Mercer, while walking with his daughter, near St. Peter's Church, Brighton, was accosted by the defendant, who claimed him as her husband. Captain Mercer, we may state, appears to be about sixty years of age; the woman could not have seen half so many summers. The Captain told her she was a fool, but from that time she repeatedly intruded into his lodgings, claiming a right to do so as his lawful wife, and she also applied for advice to the magistrates, evidently believing that the Captain was her husband. Her statement was, that she met the Captain at Brighton; and that, after seeing him three times, she consented to become his wife, and that they accordingly left Brighton, by the first train, on the morning of the 1st of October; that they were married at the Church of St. Matthew, Bethnal-green, the same day, the Captain representing his name to be Harper; that they lived together for 13 days, when he left her, and she did not see him again till she met him in Brighton. She also produced the certificate of her marriage. Evidence was then adduced, which clearly established the fact that Captain Mercer was not absent from Brighton at the time the woman said she was married to him; undoubtedly it was an extraordinary case of mistaken identity. The case was withdrawn, Mr. Dempster, the advocate for the woman, and the magistrates, declaring their belief that the defendant had acted with a bona fide belief that Captain Mercer was her husband, but that she was mistaken. Captain Mercer paid the costs of the hearing.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

France.—An express arrived from Paris yesterday, stating that the Northern Railway shares had fallen in the market, on Thursday, in consequence of the report of an accident on that line, near Arras, by which from ten to fifteen persons are said to have been killed, and fifty wounded. No particulars had transpired.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

Preferments.—The Rev. John C Miller, M.A., Lincoln College, Oxford, Minister of Park Chapel, Chelsea, to the Rectory of St. Martin's, Birmingham, vacant by the resignation of the Rev. Thomas Moseley, M.A. The Rev Robert Wheeler Bush, M.A., Scholar of Worcester College, Oxford, has been elected to the Head Mastership of the Islington Proprietary School, vacant by the preferment of the Rev. John Jackson to the Rectory of St. James's, Westminster.

Camden New-Town, St Pancras.—The temporary church erected on the estate of the Marquis Camden, in Cantelowe's-road, Camden Villas, near to the spot on which it is intended to build a permanent church as soon as the funds can be obtained, was opened on Sunday last for Divine Service. The Rev. A. R. Thomas, formerly the assistant minister at Percy Chapel, Bedford-square, was appointed by the late Dr. Moore, a short time previous to his death, to this church.

Protectionist Banquet.—On Wednesday evening above one hundred Peers and members of the House of Commons of "the Protectionist" party, dined at the Trafalgar Tavern, at Greenwich. One of the Watermen steamers was engaged to convey the party down the river. The steamer arrived off the tavern at six o'clock. Among the noblemen and gentlemen present were, the Duke of Richmond, Lord Stanley, the Duke of Buckingham, the Duke of Cleveland, the Duke of Beaufort, the Marquis of Exeter, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Marquis of Ely, the Marquis of Chandos, the Marquis of Granby, Lord George Bentinck, the Earl of Eldon, the Earl of Eglintoun, the Earl Stanhope, Viscount Strangford, Viscount Combermere, the Earl of Kinnoul, the Earl of Sandwich, the Earl of Charleville, Viscount Newport, Viscount Pollington, Lord John Manners, Lord De Lisle, Lord Henry Lennox, Lord Ossulston, the Earl of Mansfield, Lord Brooke, Sir John Yarde Buller, Mr. Hudson, Mr. Miles, Mr [illegible], Mr. H Broadwood, Mr. B. Disraeli, &c.

THE NEW CABINET MINISTERS.

Her Majesty held a Privy Council on Monday, at Buckingham Palace, when the late Cabinet Ministers attended, and resigned their Seals of Office, which her Majesty afterwards delivered into the hands of their successors. After the Council, Lord John Russell attended at his official residence, as First Lord of the Treasury, in Downing-street. Sir George Grey (Secretary) and Sir William Somerville (Under Secretary) attended at the Home Office. The Marquis of Lansdowne attended at the Council Office. Earl Grey attended at the Colonial Office. The Right Hon. Charles Wood attended at his office, as Chancellor of the Exchequer, in Downing-street. The Earl of Clarendon attended at the Board of Trade. Mr. Henry Tufnell and Mr. Parker (Secretaries) attended at the Treasury. Another Council was held on Tuesday, at which the Great Seal was delivered to Lord Cottenham, and the newly-elected Ministers took their seats at the Board. The usual oaths were also administered to them.

[As a pendent to the Engraving upon the next page, we annex the following biographettes of the New Ministry, which have been prepared expressly for our Journal by Mr. Burke, the pains-taking Editor of the well-known "Peerage and Baronetage."]

LORD JOHN RUSSELL,

First Lord of the Treasury (Premier), is youngest son of John, sixth Duke of Bedford, by his Grace's first wife, Georgiana Elizabeth, daughter of George, fourth Viscount Torrington. He was born August 19th, 1792, and has been twice married: first to Adelaide, Lady Ribblesdale, daughter of Thomas Lister, Esq., of Armitage Park, county of Stafford; and, secondly, to Lady Frances Anna Maria Elliot, daughter of the Earl of Minto. By both wives he has issue.

Few names on the records of England have been more illustrious than that of Russell, still fewer so interwoven with the brilliant events of our annals. It acquired historical renown under the rule of the Plantagenets, and from that turbulent era to our own comparatively tranquil times, no generation has passed without its eminent character. So early as the reign of Henry VI, Sir John Russell was Speaker of the House of Commons, and at the Court of Henry VIII., there was no more accomplished gentleman than the first Earl of Bedford. That nobleman's descendant, in the fifth degree, was William, Lord Russell, the ill-fated patriot of the days of Charles II. His Lordship's son, Wriothesley, succeeded his grandfather as second Duke of Bedford, and was great-great-grandfather of the present Prime Minister.

Lord John Russell received his education at Westminster and Edinburgh, in the University of which city he graduated. He first entered Parliament as member for Tavistock, and subsequently sat for Devon, Stroud, and London. His earliest official appointment was that of Paymaster of the Forces, in Lord Grey's Administration, and to his charge was entrusted the introduction of the Reform Bill. He afterwards held the seals as Secretary of State for the Home Department, from 1835 to 1839; and for the Colonies, from the latter year until the retirement of the Whig Ministry in 1841. In literature, his Lordship has gained distinction by his "Life of William Lord Russell," "Memoirs of the Affairs of Europe from the Peace of Utrecht," "A Short History of the British Constitution," and a tragedy entitled "Don Carlos."

LORD COTTENHAM,

Lord High Chancellor, is second son of Sir William Weller Pepys, Bart., Master in Chancery, by Elizabeth his wife, eldest daughter of the Right Hon. William Dowdeswell, Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Rockingham Administration, on whom Edmund Burke wrote one of his most beautiful epitaphs. By the recent death of his elder brother, Lord Cottenham has succeeded to the Baronetcy, and inherited a very considerable fortune. He was born in 1783, and married, in 1821, Caroline Elizabeth, daughter of William Wingfield, Esq., by whom he has six sons and six daughters. The title of Cottenham his Lordship derives from a village in Cambridgeshire, where his ancestors were settled early in the sixteenth century. Samuel Pepys, the quaint author of "The Diary," Secretary of the Admiralty in the reign of Charles II., was great grandson of John Pepys, Esq., of Cottenham, the Lord Chancellor's immediate progenitor. Lord Cottenham, who had previously held high standing at the Chancery Bar, received the appointment of Solicitor-General in 1833, became Master of the Rolls in 1834, and was elevated to the Woolsack, in 1836.

THE MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE,

President of the Council, distinguished himself in early life, when Lord Henry Petty, as an eloquent public speaker, and so far back as 1806 held office as Chancellor of the Exchequer. His Lordship is son of William, Earl of Shelburne, a well-known statesman in the reign of George III., the successor of Lord Rockingham as Prime Minister; and derives a direct descent from the celebrated Sir William Petty. His Lordship, who has just completed his 66th year, succeeded to the Marquisate of Lansdowne at the decease of his half-brother in 1809, and to the Irish Earldom of Kerry on the death of his cousin, the third Earl, in 1818.

Lord Lansdowne was educated at Westminster School, the University of Edinburgh, and Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1827, he took office under Lord Goderich, as Home Secretary; and in 1830 joined Lord Grey's Government, as President of the Council—an appointment he held during the continuance in power of the Whig party. The Marquis married, in 1808, Louisa Emma, daughter of the second Earl of Ilchester, and has one surviving son, Henry, Earl of Shelburne, and one daughter, Louisa, wife of the Hon. James K. Howard.

THE EARL OF MINTO,

Lord Privy Seal, is eldest son and successor of the late Sir Gilbert Elliot, Bart., who, having been Viceroy of the Kingdom of Corsica, was created, upon his return, Baron Minto, and became in the sequel, Governor-General of India and Earl of Minto. He was son of Sir Gilbert Elliot, a poet of considerable merit, and a descendant of the same family as the renowned Lord Heathfield, the heroic defender of Gibraltar.

The present Peer is in his 64th year. By Mary, his wife, daughter of Paul Brydone, Esq., he has five sons and five daughters, of whom the second is married to Lord John Russell.

Earl Minto acted at one time as Ambassador at Berlin. During Lord Melbourne's Administration he was First Lord of the Admiralty.

SIR GEORGE GREY, BART.,

Secretary of State for the Home Department, is nephew of the late Earl Grey, and eldest son of the Hon. Sir George Grey, K.C.B., by Mary, his wife, sister of the celebrated Samuel Whitbread. He was born 11th May, 1799, and married in 1827, Anna Sophia, daughter of the Hon. Dr. Ryder, Bishop of Lichfield, by whom he has issue. His official appointments, on former occasions, have been Under Secretary for the Colonies, Judge Advocate General, and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

VISCOUNT PALMERSTON,

Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, represented the University of Cambridge from 1806 to 1831: in the latter year his advocacy of Reform lost him the favour of that learned constituency, and his Lordship entered Parliament as member for Bletchingley. He subsequently sat for South Hants; and, in 1835, was first elected for Tiverton.

Lord Palmerston, male representative of the great house of Temple, from which the Duke of Buckingham maternally derives, may boast, amongst his predecessors, of the able and accomplished Sir William Temple, and the boast will bring no blush, for, in this instance, unlike so many others, talent still adheres to the name of Temple. Men may differ as to his Lordship's political creed, but no one denies to the eloquent and gifted Secretary for Foreign Affairs the attribute of sound judgment, and the meed of both capacity and genius.

He was born 20th October, 1784; and received his education at Harrow, Edinburgh, and Cambridge. In 1809, he became Secretary at War, and continued to hold that office until 1828. In 1830, he was constituted Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. His Lordship married, in 1839, Emily Mary, daughter of Peniston, first Viscount Melbourne, and widow of the fifth Earl Cowper.

EARL GREY,

Secretary of State for the Colonies, eldest son of the late distinguished statesman, Lord Grey, was born in 1802. In 1830 he became Under Secretary of the Colonies, in 1833 was removed to the Home Office, and [illegible] received the appointment of Secretary at War, which he resigned in 1839. From 1826 to 1830 he sat in Parliament for Winchelsea, in 1831 represented Higham Ferrars, and, subsequently, until 1841, was Knight of the Shire for Northumberland. Being then defeated, he offered himself for Sunderland, and continued its member until his accession to the peerage. His Lordship married, in 1832, Maria, youngest daughter of Sir Joseph Copley, Bart., of Sprotborough.

LORD CAMPBELL,

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, is younger brother of Sir George Campbell, of Edenwood, and son of the Rev. Dr. George Campbell, Minister of Cupar, in Fifeshire. He was born 15th September, 1781, and, having studied at the University of St. Andrew's and in Lincoln's Inn, was called to the bar in 1806. In 1827 this [illegible] and eminent lawyer obtained a silk gown, in 1832 became Solicitor-General, in 1834 succeeded as Attorney-General, and in 1841 was constituted Lord Chancellor of Ireland, being, at the same time, elevated to the peerage. The constituencies he represented successively in Parliament were those of Stafford, Dudley, and Edinburgh.

His Lordship married, 8th Sept., 1821, Mary Elizabeth, Baroness Stratheden, daughter of James, late Lord Abinger, and has three sons and four daughters.

Lord Campbell's recently published "Lives of the Chancellors" has acquired for him a distinguished place in literature.

THE RIGHT HON. CHARLES WOOD,

Chancellor of the Exchequer, eldest son of Sir Francis Lindley Wood, Bart., succeeded Mr. Ellis, in 1832, as Secretary of the Treasury, which office he filled until Nov., 1834; and, on the return of his party to power in the following year, became Secretary to the Admiralty. He was born in Dec., 1800; and married, in 1829, Lady Mary Grey, daughter of the late Earl Grey. He is, consequently, brother-in-law to the noble Secretary for the Colonies.

THE EARL OF AUCKLAND,

First Lord of the Admiralty, held office from 1830 to 1834, as President of the Board of Trade and Master of the Mint, and as First Lord of the Admiralty for a few months after. In 1835 he proceeded to India, as Governor-General, and did not return before 1841. His Lordship, who has not quite completed his 62nd year, is son of William, First Lord Auckland, an eminent diplomatist, by Eleanor, his wife, sister of the First Lord Minto.

VISCOUNT MORPETH,

First Commissioner of the Woods and Forests, is the eldest son of the Earl of Carlisle, nephew of the Duke of Devonshire, and grandson of Frederick, Lord Carlisle, the kinsman and guardian of Lord Byron. With a splendour of descent almost unequalled, in possession of the highest honours and abundant wealth, he has [illegible] relaxed in his effort to deserve reputation by his personal worth. After a [illegible] University career (he graduated at Christchurch, Oxford), Lord Morpeth entered upon public life, and has acquired fame in both the literary and political world. He was born in 1802, and is unmarried. He served under Lord Melbourne as Secretary for Ireland, and sits in Parliament as M.P. for the West Riding of Yorkshire.

THE EARL OF CLARENDON,

President of the Board of Trade, was long distinguished in the diplomatic service of his country, especially when Ambassador at the Court of Madrid. In 1839, he joined Lord Melbourne's Ministry as Lord Privy Seal, and was, subsequently, for a short period, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. He is eldest son of the late Hon. George Villiers, and grandson of Thomas, first Earl of Clarendon, whose father was William, second Earl of Jersey.

The title of Clarendon was adopted by the Villiers family in consequence of their descent, through C[illegible] of Jersey, from Edward Hyde, Lord Clarendon, the statesman and historian of the reign of King Charles II.

The present Earl has completed his 46th year, and is [illegible] Catherine Barham, daughter of the Earl of Verulam.

THE MARQUIS OF CLANRICARDE,

Postmaster-General, is chief of the great house of De Burgh or Burke, and descends from a common ancestor with the famed Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent, the Justiciary. His Lordship possesses considerable estates and influence in the county of Galway. He was born 20th December, 1802, and married, in 1825, Harriet, only daughter of the late Right Hon. George Canning, by whom he has two sons and five daughters. For some time the Marquis was Ambassador to the Court of Russia.

THE RIGHT HON. SIR JOHN CAM HOBHOUSE, BART.,

President of the Board of Control, is son and heir of the late Sir Benjamin Hobhouse, who held the office of Secretary to the Board of Trade in the Addington Administration, and was Chairman of Ways and Means during the short-lived Whig Government of 1806. Sir John has completed his 60th year, and is a widower, his wife, Lady Julia Hay, youngest daughter of the late Marquis of Tweeddale, having died in 1835. He has held office successively as Secretary at War, Chief Commissioner of Woods and Forests, and President of the Board of Control. Sir John Hobhouse is known in letters as in politics. His name is familiar to the public as the confidential friend and fellow-traveller of Byron, and the historical illustrator of the first part of "Childe Harold."

In 1820, he became M.P. for Westminster (having, in the previous year, been sent to prison by the House of Commons for the part he took in the agitation of Reform), and continued to represent that constituency, until displaced by Colonel Evans, in 1833. He has since sat for Nottingham.

THE RIGHT HON. THOMAS BABINGTON MACAULAY,

Paymaster-General, one of the most conspicuous men of the age, whether regarded as a brilliant writer, or as an eloquent Parliamentary speaker, is son of Zachary Macaulay, Esq., and a near connexion of the ancient Leicestershire family of Babington, of Rothley Temple. He was born in 1800; and became a member of the Bar in 1826. His successive official appointments have been Commissioner of Bankrupts, Secretary of the Board of Control, Member of the Supreme Council of India, and Secretary at War; and the towns he has represented, Calne, Leeds, and Edinburgh.

The Right Honourable Gentleman has acquired high literary distinction by his admirable contributions to the Edinburgh Review, and his "Lays of Ancient Rome."

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY LABOUCHERE,

Chief Secretary for Ireland, is son of the late Peter Cæsar Labouchere, Esq., of Hylands, Essex, formerly a partner in the great mercantile house of Hope and Co., and grandson of the late Sir Francis Baring. He was born 15th August, 1798, and studied at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took a first class degree. In 1832 he was appointed a Lord of the Admiralty, in 1835 Vice-President of the Board of Trade and Master of the Mint, in 1839 Under Secretary for the Colonies, and, in the same year, President of the Board of Trade.

The Right Honourable Gentleman married, in 1840, Frances, daughter of Sir Thomas Baring, Bart., and has issue. His family left France at the period of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and became established in Holland, whence the late Mr. Labouchere passed over into England, and purchased considerable landed property.

THE NEW POPE, PIUS IX.

THE NEW POPE—PIUS IX.

By the courtesy of a Correspondent at Florence, we are enabled to present to our readers a Portrait of Pope Pius IX. (the Cardinal Mastai Ferretti), whose election to the vacant Popedom took place on the 17th ult., on the fourth day's scrutiny, a thing unknown for the last two centuries; as, in general, the intrigues of the various parties retard, for a considerable period, a final choice; but the political state of the Legations is such that it was absolutely necessary a hasty choice should be made, lest events should occur which might retard unseasonably or altogether prevent it. The Sacred College is composed of sixty-seven Cardinals, fifty-four of whom only were present in the late conclave, and the majority by which the Pope was chosen consisted of thirty-nine, being six votes more than legal right required. The other candidate in whose favour the wishes of the conclave, as they were of the whole people, were supposed to be directed, was the Cardinal Gizzi; but it appears that the Cardinal is of the liberal school of politics, and that his brethren supposed he would go too far. He is also said to be a man of talent and great decision of character, and all history proves that such a Pope is not the person likely to please the Sacred College.

Pope Pius IX. was born in 1792, at Sinigaglia, near Ancona. He served for some time in the Garde Noble, a body guard of the Pope, and, in that capacity, attracted the notice of Pius VII. His health was delicate, and he became subject to epileptic fits, and, by the advice of Pius VII., he gave up the sword for the cassock; and, having distinguished himself in ecclesiastical studies, was raised to the Priesthood in the regular order of time. He was sent as a missionary to Chili, where he was prominent for zeal and ability; but, in consequence of the political events of that country, he returned to Rome, and was made a Cardinal by his patron, Pope Pius VII., as a reward for his services and sufferings. He was presented with the Bishopric of Spoleto, and subsequently of Imola, in the Romagna, where he was looked upon with reverence and esteem as an excellent clergyman and a doer of good works; and it is thought that one of the reasons of his now being selected by the Sacred College is for his practical knowledge of the Romagna, and of his being best calculated to find the due remedy for the political effervescence which has so long prevailed in that part of the territory of the holy see. The Pope being a native of the Roman state is a strong recommendation to the people, and, as he contrived to live on good terms with them as Bishop of Imola, it is hoped that he will, as Supreme Pontiff, be able to control them. The nomination of the Pope is therefore popular, as it is believed to be judicious on the part of the Sacred College, though, as far as the Liberals are concerned, both in Rome and in the provinces, the choice of Cardinal Gizzi would have been more enthusiastically received.—(Abridged from the Times.)

The Coronation took place on the 21st ult.

[illegible] HER M[illegible]STERS IN COUNCIL.

GREAT MEETING OF THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF ENGLAND.

THE Annual Country Meeting of the Society for the Northern District will commence at Newcastle-upon-Tyne upon Tuesday next, and conclude on Friday. The last Day for receiving Implements, Seeds, &c. for Exhibition was on Thursday, the 9th.

We have already despatched two Artists to Newcastle, for the purpose of illustrating the most important proceedings of the Meeting in our Journal of next week; and, as the arrangements of the Society are, for the most part, completed previous to the actual commencement of the Meeting, we are, this week, enabled to present to our readers a view of the Cattle and Implement Show Yards, on the Town Moor, behind the Bull Parks—the table-land of the hill upon which Newcastle stands.

The Show Yard is arranged as in previous years. It is a square of 18 acres, divided in the centre; and in each compartment are seven sheds, 250 feet long; one side being for Cattle, and the other for Implements. On either side of the road leading to the principal entrances to the Yard, are erected booths for the sale of refreshments· they are gaily decorated, and the fronts have, generally, an architectural character. They are very superior to anything seen at the fairs about London.

TUESDAY, 14.

The Implement Yard open to the public from eight in the morning till six in the evening, at 2s. 6d. each person.

The Public Exhibition of the working of the Implements to take place at the farm of Mr. Henry Hall, of Gosforth Cottage (two miles from Newcastle), adjoining the turnpike road to Morpeth.

Stock received in the Show-Yard, from eight in the morning till four in the afternoon.

MR. HALL'S FARM.

At five o'clock in the evening, Professor Johnston to open a practical discussion, by reading a paper in the Lecture Theatre, Nelson-street, on the chemical principles involved in the preparation of manures, and their action upon crops; with chemical demonstrations. Members and their friends admitted by free tickets, to be obtained of the Secretary. Doors open at Four.

WEDNESDAY, 15.

The Judges to inspect the Stock and award the Prizes.

The Implement Yard open to the public from eight in the morning till six in the evening; admission, 2s. 6d.

At five o'clock in the evening, Mr. Parkes, C.E., Consulting-Engineer to the Society, to open a practical discussion, by reading a paper in the Lecture Theatre, Nelson-street, on the subject of Draining; at the conclusion of which, at eight o'clock, the Judges' award of Prizes (with the exception of those for Horses) will be read by the President. Members and their friends admitted by free tickets, to be obtained of the Secretary. Doors open at four.

THURSDAY, 16.

The Cattle and Implement Yards open to the public from six o'clock in the morning till one in the afternoon; admission 2s. 6d.; and from one till six in the evening, at 1s.

Dinner of the Society in the Great Pavilion, on the Forth, at four o'clock; doors open at half-past three.

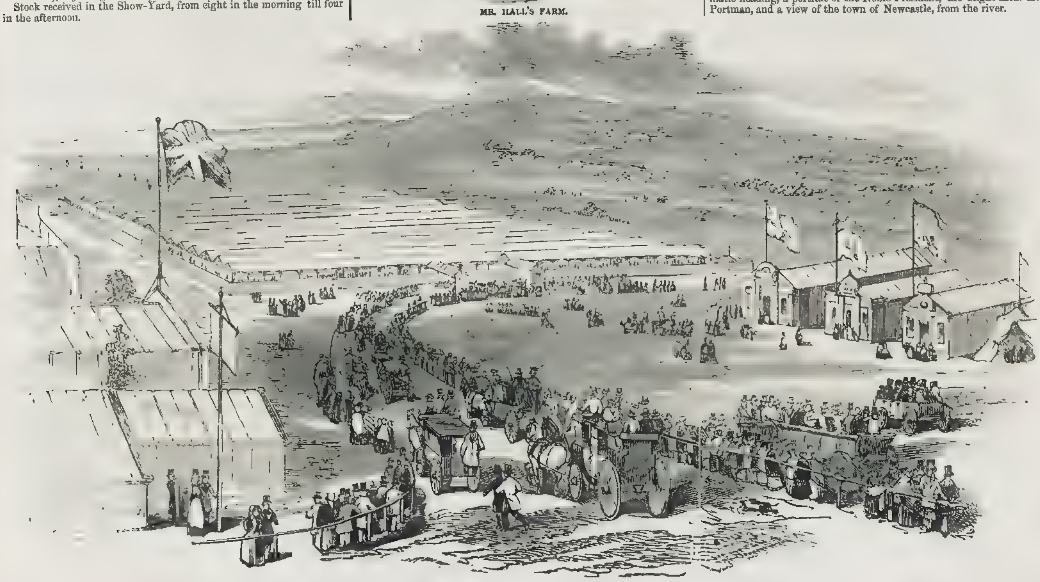
FRIDAY, 17.

Cattle Yard open at seven; admission 1s.

The auctions to begin at nine for ten precisely.

General meeting of the members in the Music Hall, at twelve o'clock.

We have engraved a view of Gosforth Cottage; and, in the emblematic heading, a portrait of the Noble President, the Right Hon. Lord Portman, and a view of the town of Newcastle, from the river.



SHOW YARDS, UPON THE MOOR, NEWCASTLE

MUSIC.

MR. LUCAS'S MUSICAL EVENINGS.

The fourth and last performance of the second series of Mr. Lucas's Concerts for Classical Chamber Compositions was given on Wednesday night, at his residence, No 54, Berners-street and was attended by Sir A Barnard, Sir W Newton, Sir Giffin Wilson, and other well known amateurs. The programme comprised Haydn's Quartet, No 57, in C major Blagrove first violin, Sainton second ditto, Hill tenor, and Lucas violoncello; Mozart's No 2 of Op 18—Sainton leading, with Blagrove, Tolbecque, and Lucas; Mendelssohn's No. 3 of Op. 3, in B minor, for pianoforte (Herr Lüders), violin (Sainton), tenor (Hill), and violoncello (Lucas); and Beethoven's Quintet, in C major, Op. 29, executed by Sainton, Blagrove, Tolbecque, Hill, and Lucas Herr Lüders made his first appearance in England on this occasion, and proved himself to be a superior pianist, possessing great executive facility, and his style bearing the impress of mind and feeling Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Quartet called forth all his powers, for it is very difficult, particularly the fantastic Scherzo in F sharp minor, and the impetuous finale.

The Beethoven Quintet—the Quintet of Quintets, and the quintessence of all that is grand and beautiful—went gloriously, despite of the slight impediment of a broken string in M. Sainton's violin.

Mr. Lucas's Evenings will remain amongst the most agreeable reminiscences of the musical campaign.

THE DISTIN FAMILY.

These unrivalled performers on the Sax Horns are now making a tour in the Isle of Wight. On Monday last they gave a Concert at the Victoria Rooms, Southampton, which was numerously attended. The vocalists were Miss Moriatt O'Connor and Mr. Theodore Distin. The latter has a baritone voice of great power and excellent quality, and if he chooses to cultivate his style, he may turn his fine organ to good account. Mr. Distin's Trumpet Solo created, as usual, quite a sensation, and their quintets were much applauded.

ORGAN PERFROMANCES.

On Monday morning, there was a performance on the new Sixteen feet Manual Gamut and Thirty-two feet Pedal Organ, made by Messrs. Hill and Co, for the parish church of Turvey, Bedford. There are three rows of keys and twenty-nine stops. The following is a description of this noble instrument:—

Grand Organ, 54 notes: 1 Bourdon CCC; 2. Tenoroon Diapason; 3 Open Diapason; 4 Stop Diapason; 5 Principal; 6. Twelfth; 7. Fifteenth; 8. Sesquialtra; 9. Posanne. Choir Organ, 54 notes: 1. Salcional; 2. Stop Diapason (Bass); 3 Stop Diapason (Treble); 4. Principal; 5. Wald Flute; 6. Hohl Flute; 7 Cremorne; 8. Bassoon. Swell Organ, 42 notes: 1. Teneroon Diapason; 2. Open Diapason; 3 Stop Diapason; 4. Principal; 5. Hautboy; 6 Cornopean. Pedal Organ, 27 notes: 1. Open Wood, 16 feet; 2 Sub-Bourden, 16 feet closed (32 feet note). Couplers: 1. Swell to Great; 2. Choir to Pedal; 3. Grand to Pedal.

Dr Gauntlett, the Organist of St. Olave, Southwark, who designed the unrivalled organ in that church, the beautiful instrument in St. Peter's, Cornhill, &c., tested the capabilities of Mr. Hill's organ, in a style which places him in the first rank of players. He gave Preludes and Fugues by Bach, with gleanings from Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Mendelssohn, and Rossini; and contrasted the stop with the finest effect. On Wednesday, there was a second performance, Mr. Edmund Chipp, the son of the clever player on the Drums, being the organist. He performed Mendelssohn's Sonata No. 4, and extracts from the No 6; and works by Bach, Hesse, Stokes, and by himself. He is a very promising artist. On Sunday last, the musical service in the York Minster was rendered additionally imposing by the introduction of the two new trumpets placed in the swell organ, and blown by the high pressure action, similar to the tuba mirabilis in the Town Hall Organ, Birmingham. These trumpets, one of which is termed the ophicleide, and the other the cornopean, were of tremendous power in the factory; but such is the adaptation of the noble Minster for the conveyance of sound, that, when placed in their final resting place, the quality of tone was most musical, and of a force neither to overpower nor interfere with the other portions of the organ, nor the voices of the choir. The York organ has undergone many strange transitions since its first erection, but these additions are the first made by Mr Hill, its builder, since its erection, now about twenty years ago. We understand Mr. Hill disowns and disapproves of the changes it has suffered, and declines interfering with his old work, unless power be given for a complete alteration according to the new and improved mode of voicing and construction, the superiority of which is well exhibited by a comparison between the York and Worcester Cathedral organs, the latter being only a fourth of the size of the former, and yet far the finer and more complete and perfect an instrument.

MR. WILSON'S ENTERTAINMENTS.

This popular vocalist terminated his season at the Music Hall, Store-street, on Monday last, with a selection of favourite Scotch songs; he also gave two German songs, and the English cantata of "The Soldier's Dream," and recited Burns's "Tam O'Shanter." Mr. Land, his able accompanyist, performed a Fantasia of his own composition, on themes from Mr. Wilson's Scotch airs.

THE "MUSICAL WORLD" CONCERT.

A Concert was given on Wednesday morning at the Hanover-square Rooms, by the proprietors of this publication, free tickets being given to the annual subscribers, and the general public being admitted by half-guinea and seven shilling payments. The artists gave their services gratuitously, in the expectation, no doubt, that they would be amply repaid in puffs. There were Sivori, Sainton, Vieuxtemps, Rousselot, Benedict, Piatti, Casella, De Folly, Hausman, Moscheles, Madame Pleyel, and Madame Thillon amongst the foreign professors; and the English were Mr Lindsay Sloper, Mr. Hill, Mr. Carte, Miss Dolby, Miss Bassano, the Misses Williams, and Mrs. Macfarren. The "native talent" had the most subordinate part in this programme, except in the vocal selection, which comprised two songs by a Mr J. W. Davison, who, as a composer, is unknown to fame, Mr Henry Smart, a very superior musician, and Mr Macfarren We need scarcely state that we disapprove entirely of this French system of concert-giving on the part of journalism It is an unjust tax on artists to require them to give their aid without remuneration, and it fetters the independent critic, who must be bound to exalt those who serve his interests The Morning Chronicle remarks:—"The advertising columns would look odd with the announcements—'Grand Concert of the Times,' 'Matinée Musicale of the Morning Post,' 'Soirée of the Chronicle' &c.; and what would then become of the Musical World? The system is highly dishonest, and we hope to hear no more of such Parisian practices.'

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

Brussels Opera Company.—From the prospectus just issued, we learn that, in addition to Madame Laborde, Madame Julien, Mdlle. Guichard, Madame Charton; MM. Laborde, Zelyer, Conderc, Soyer, Millet, Curris, &c., the celebrated baritone, Massol, of the Parisian Académie Royale de Paris, has been engaged. Monsieur Charles Hanssens will conduct the orchestra, which has been increased, as well as the chorus. Monsieur Page directs the ballet. In addition to "The Huguenots," and "Robert le Diable," of Meyerbeer, the "Guillaume Tell" of Rossini, the "Muette" of Auber, the "Juive" of Halévy, the "Favourite" of Donizetti, Rossini's "Count Ory" (never yet heard in England), Halévy's "Mousquetaires de la Reine." Auber's "Domino Noir," "Ambassadrice," "Zanetta," "Diamans de la Couronne," "Le Part du Diable," Gretry's "Richard Cœur de Lion," &c., will be given. It is intended, we believe, that this company shall appear at Covent Garden Theatre in 1847

The Second Italian Opera House It is now, we believe, certain that Persiani has abandoned his intention of opening Covent Garden Theatre in April, 1847, with an Italian troupe, as his wife has renewed her engagement at Madrid, together with Salvi, the tenor, Ronconi, and Morini, for that year, their salaries having been increased fourfold by the order of the Queen of Spain. But it is believed that the son of the celebrated Lanari, of Italy, has entered into an engagement with the Proprietors of Covent Garden Theatre, to bring over an Italian company for October next, to open with Verdi's first opera "Attila." The celebrated Prima Donna the Barbieri, Mdlle. Lowe, Guasco, Musich, and Corradi, are said to be engaged

On Tuesday morning, the eighth and last meeting of the "Musical Union," and Mr. Sedgwick's Concert in the evening, in Mortimer-street. On Wednesday night, the Brussels Company commence their performances at Drury Lane Theatre, with Meyerbeer's "Huguenots." Opera at Her Majesty's Theatre, on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday

Flotow's new opera of "L'Ame en Peine" (Purgatory) has been produced at the Académie Royale de Musique in Paris, but with no decided success. The action passes in Styria, and is founded on the legend that, on the fête day of Sainte Irene, souls in purgatory are permitted to return to the earth to visit their friends. Mdlle. Nau, Mdlle. Dobré, Gardoni, the tenor, Barroilhet, the baritone, [illegible]mont, the basso, sustained the principal parts. The libretto is by M. de [illegible]

[illegible] Director of the Grand Opera, had returned from Bologna [illegible], the author, and M Niedermayer, the composer to arrange [illegible] a French adaptation of "La Donna del Lago," with additions [illegible] beautiful opera of "Zemire and Azor," by Gretry, had been revived at the Salle Favart, for the début of Mdlle. Lemercier, who has been favourably received. Prince Joseph Poniatowski has produced another opera at Genoa, called "Malek Adel" the same subject as Costa's clever work. It was quite successful, the vocalists being Mdlle. Giuli, Bassini, and Ivanoff.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

The performance of "Semiramide," last week, was an object of much interest with the Opera votaries, amongst the greater part of whom this opera is highly esteemed; although, to our ears, it lacks to a certain degree the light and shade which is characteristic of more modern works, and now considered a necessary ingredient of success. The music of "Semiramide," from first to last, is grand, imposing, and magical, but rarely simply pleasing, it keeps the imagination on the stretch, and may, perhaps, end by fatiguing it Nothing, however, could be more sublime and more dramatic than, for example, the finale to the second act, where the varying emotions of the actors, and the events of the scene, are represented by music the most descriptive and appropriate that could have been imagined, and admirably does its performance at Her Majesty's Theatre elicit its [illegible] The remorse-stricken Queen and the guilty Assur [illegible] guilty schemes, in both of whom is inborn pride struggling against the loud voice of conscience awakened by the fearful apparition of Nino, have unrivalled representatives in Grisi and Fornasari. In looks, tones, movements, the illusion is perfectly sustained; while the majestic voice and manner of Lablache, and the surrounding awe of other numerous actors on the stage, give to this portion of the opera a variety and effectiveness which must be witnessed to be imagined.

Grisi as Semiramide is beyond all praise; her impersonation of this character both as to her reading of the part, as to the overpowering energy of passion which, when the occasion needs it, she infuses into her tones and action, and as to the execution of the music itself is inimitable.

The part of Assur, as rendered by Fornasari, though there is here no occasion for the display of pathos and tenderness in the expression of which he so peculiarly excels, is characterised by that tragic power and musical skill and feeling which always distinguish this great artist, and in the duett with Grisi in which the guilty pair by turn accuse and threaten each other, his performance is really sublime Lablache's co-operation in this opera, in so secondary a part as that of Oroe, makes us, every time we hear the opera, still more sensible of the value of the great Neapolitan. And now we come to the novelty of the cast the impersonation of Arsace by Mdlle. Sanchioli. This performance excited in our minds no small curiosity beforehand; for, though we were aware that this artist possessed low tones of excellent quality, and, moreover, were certain that any part she might undertake would bear the stamp of her genius, yet we were anxious to see how she would render a part which would only display half of her natural powers of voice. The result of her performance was decidedly satisfactory. We never heard Mdlle. Sanchioli display more true artistic skill and feeling than in her execution of the music of "Semiramide" It was true that her voice, seemingly from timidity, became, at times, more tremulous than its wont; and, if we must find a fault, we will say that the increased ease and assurance of her higher notes, when, in her cadences, she touched upon them, occasionally produced on the mind an impression that she was singing a part not entirely adapted to her register. But it would have been difficult to have retained any other feeling than that of admiration when listening to her performance of "Giorno d'orrore," for example, or of the first part, especially, of her aria in the second act.

To conclude, on the whole the performance of "Semiramide" is brilliant in the extreme, and well worthy of the great theatre where it is produced. The "Sonnambula," on Tuesday, was more than usually admirable. We have not heard Mario in better voice this season, and his performance, as well as that of Castellan, elicited enthusiastic applause. They were recalled between the acts, and, in fact, received an ovation justly their due. We have only, in conclusion, to notice the revival of a pretty divertissement, "L'Aurore," not played for some years past, and then by Adèle Dumilâtre, and in which Lucile Grahn and Louise Taglioni take a prominent part, and the rumoured engagement of the great danseuse who bears the same name as our new favourite.

There has been very little of novelty in the dramatic world, to chronicle, during the past week: in fact, the only new production is a trifle at the Adelphi, called "The Maid with the Milking Pail," adapted by Mr. Buckstone from the bluette played in Paris last spring, and called "L'Image," when Madame Doche performed the heroine with effect. Subsequently, a translation was brought out at the Princess' Theatre, entitled "A Speaking Likeness," in which Madame Vestris appeared: and, in this last version, the character is entrusted to Mrs. Fitzwilliam There is no occasion for us to repeat the plot. it follows the other versions, but, we must add, is better adapted—the scene passing in England, about the time of Charles the Second. The lady supposed to be dead by the artist, was excellently acted by Mrs. Fitzwilliam; and Mr. Wright appeared to greater advantage than ever, his performance being toned down, and thus rendered doubly effective. He is, in reality, so clever an actor, that there is never occasion for him to resort to outrageous action, or "gag," to make his points. The audience were highly pleased with the "Maid with the Milking Pail", and it was announced for repetition every evening, amidst loud applause.

We are happy to find that Mr. Peake's "Devil of Marseilles" now goes capitally. We recommend our readers to see it, if it be only to witness Mr. O. Smith's fine and artistic impersonation of Cranon

The non-appearance of Mdlle. Rachel at the St. James's Theatre, on Monday, for which evening her début was announced, was a serious disappointment to the frequenters of the house, and, indeed, to the public in general, as a crowded audience was anticipated. We fear, also, that it must have been, in some measure, a loss to Mr. Mitchell, which is much to be regretted, as that gentleman is proverbial for keeping good faith with the public. The bulletin announcing the serious indisposition of the lady was dated from Lille, but it was accompanied with the assurance that she would proceed on to London as soon as she possibly could; and it was evident from the letter that it was her earnest wish to do so. In the meantime, M. Lafont and Mdlle. Dejazet contribute their valuable assistance to entertain the habitués of the theatre

We find, that "A Loan of a Wife"—the farce which we noticed last week, at the Lyceum—is from the pen of Mr Alfred Wigan, equally well known as a clever performer and the author of "Watch and Ward," "A Model of a Wife," "Next Door," and other successful pieces. The house has been capitally attended. A drama of a peculiar construction, called "Above and Below," is announced for Monday evening, and a new burlesque is underlined, written, as we understand, by Mr. Charles Dance It is said that it is founded upon the libretto of "Oberon." If this be the case, the subject was offered successively to Mr Albert Smith and Mr. Stoquelar, who both declined undertaking it. We may expect much, however, from the known tact of Mr. Dance, who may be looked upon as the co-parent, with Mr. Planché, of this species of entertainment. Mr. Kinloch, a deserving member of the Lyceum company, took his benefit on Monday, on which occasion Douglas Jerrold's play of "Nel Gwynn" was revived, Mr Keeley sustaining his original character of Orange Moll. The house was crowded, and the piece went off capitally; the gentleman whose benefit it was, playing very cleverly in the part of Charles the Second.

We do not think that the new American actress, Miss Virginia Monier, will create any remarkable sensation; although she may be a useful stock addition to the corps of the Princess' Theatre. Whilst she betrays evidences of the finished actress in every part of her performances, she lacks real expression and feeling She leaves the impression that she does everything by rule that every intonation of the voice, and every position on the stage, is the result of conventional preparation rather than natural impulse. We should have been glad to have witnessed her début, at the same time, in any other character than that of Mrs. Haller.

The proprietors of Vauxhall announce another Bal Masqué for Monday evening; and it is reported that Ibrahim Pacha will attend upon the occasion. If his Highness enter as fully into the glories of the Arabian Nights' Entertainments as we do in England, he will, without doubt, be gratified at seeing the realisation of some of the splendours of those inimitable fictions. The present proprietors seem to be doing all they can to deserve the support of the public. On Wednesday evening, we chanced to be in the Gardens; and, although the rain had thinned the company, every lamp was alight, and the fireworks and other entertainments went off, without any curtailment. This is as it should be

The amusements of Ranelagh are about to be revived in Cremorne Gardens; an orchestra, capable of containing a host of performers, has been erected, and preparations for a déjeûner, in the best manner, have been making for the last ten days. In addition to an efficient band, the choruses from the Italian Opera House, and the Ancient Concerts, forty persons in number, will sing the madrigals, glees, quartets, &c., with the airs of Dr. Arne, originally performed at Ranelagh. There will be a strong muster of favourite vocalists, and amongst them Mr. Leffler, Miss Terry, &c. Grattan Cooke and Mr. Carte are engaged; and Mr. Loder will lead.

Mr. Mitchell has started for the Continent, to visit Mademoiselle Rachel; and, if the lady is sufficiently recovered, to escort her back to England.

The Queen's Theatre, under the management of Mr. Abington, is announced to open this evening, with "As You Like It." The lessee intends to bring out the legitimate drama; and it is to be hoped that he will present a favourable contrast to the melancholy failures lately made, avowedly in the same line, at other minor houses.

On looking over some provincial papers, we find that the late depression in theatrical affairs has been equally great in the country. There is but one report—that the business has been very bad everywhere, and especially in the large towns. In the words of the Manchester Times, "People whose occupations are close and sedentary will, in the summer evenings, prefer a quiet healthful walk or ride in the country, to a three hours' visit in a heated theatre." For this reason, in the above-named town, the opera of "Maritana," with the talents of Miss Rainforth, and Messrs Allen and Stretton, has failed to attract decent houses.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

RAILWAY LITIGATION.

In the Court of Exchequer, on Tuesday, two cases were tried, involving the question of the responsibility of Railway Directors. The first was that of Banks v. Hill. It was an action by an advertising agent, carrying on business at Wellington-street, in the Strand, to recover from Charles Popham Hill, the defendant, who resides in Devonshire, a balance of about £100, for advertisements of the prospectus of the Salisbury and Leamington Railway Company, inserted in forty-three different newspapers, between the 25th and 29th October last.

The facts connected with this project were brought before the public in a case of "Banks v. Goode," tried some ten days ago at Westminster Hall, when the verdict was taken for the defendant. In the present case it appeared that the defendant authorised his name to be inserted in "the direction," through a Mr. Downes, on the 20th October, and his name accordingly was published in a prospectus dated the 25th October. The defendant never attended any meeting of the Committee, or acted in any manner; but, on the 7th November, it was agreed to abandon the project for the present session; and the defendant, in answer to a letter from the Secretary, wrote to say that, if the other members of the Committee subscribed their proportions to defray the bona fide preliminary expenses, he should willingly do the same The debt in respect of which this action was brought was incurred under the express orders of Messrs. Weall and Barkeley, the Solicitors of the Company, and who had taken an active part in establishing it; having, as it appeared, given indemnities to several respectable persons, who had therefore allowed their names to be inserted as Provisional Committee-men. It was now contended that the credit was given in this instance, not to the defendant, or even to the whole body of Provisional Committee-men, but to the Solicitors, Weall and Barkeley, as proved by the fact that they had inserted advertisements through the instrumentality of the plaintiff, before any Provisional Committee was appointed

The Chief Baron left it to the Jury to say if they believed the defendant had authorised his name to be inserted as a Committee-man, so as to pledge his credit for preliminary expenses; and, also, whether the plaintiff, in inserting those advertisements, acted upon the credit and responsibility of the defendant If they found either of those questions in the negative, their verdict should be for the defendant

The Jury, after an hour's deliberation, returned a verdict for the defendant.

The other case was that of Wyld v. Hopkins:—

Mr. Martin, with whom was Mr. Wallis, for the plaintiff, stated that this was an action brought by the well known map-seller at Charing cross, to recover from the defendant, one of the Provisional Committee-men of the Peterborough and Nottingham Railway, the balance of a bill for £1900, for engraving maps and plans for the use of the Company The defendant had given a written authority to one of the promoters of the line, to insert his name in the Provisional Committee; and the letter having been handed to Mr Gridley, one of the Solicitors of the Company, the defendant's name was printed in a prospectus with several others, which prospectus was shown to the plaintiff at the time the orders were given to him to execute the work in question. The plaintiff did the engraving for the Company, upon the faith that the persons named in the prospectus were liable to him; and there was no doubt that those who had authorised the insertion of their names were liable. The Company was not proceeded with, because a sufficient sum of money had not been subscribed; but several of the Provisional Committee, feeling their liability, had subscribed to pay proportionate shares to defray preliminary expenses. In this way, £1000 had been paid to the plaintiff. The defendant was one of those who declined to meet his fair share of the responsibility accruing to a Provisional Committee-man, and this action was brought against him to compel him to bear his share in common with others

It appeared upon the examination of Mr. Gridley, one of the solicitors of the proposed Company, that the prospectus containing the defendant's name was shown to the plaintiff when the orders were given for the execution of the maps, plans, and sections. The witness also stated, on cross-examination, that there was a Managing Committee appointed, but that the defendant was not one of that body

Mr. Watson, for the defendant, contended that his client, who had taken no part in the management of the Company, was not liable, more especially as there was a Managing Committee appointed, under whose authority the order was given and the work executed. The learned counsel referred particularly to the case of Low v. Wilson, tried last term, in which Baron Parke was reported to have laid it down that a Provisional Committee-man, who did not interfere, could not be held liable for merely lending his name where there was a Managing Committee.

The Lord Chief Baron thought the question in this as in other cases of the same nature was,—did the defendant, by sanctioning the publication of his name as one of the Provisional Committee, hold himself out to the plaintiff as a person pledging his credit as liable for the reasonable and bona fide preliminary expenses of the Company? It would be difficult to say in this case that the mere fact of there being a Managing Committee should exempt the defendant from responsibility. A Managing Committee was often nothing more than a body of persons selected by and from the Provisional Committee, as persons who were more likely to be able to give their personal attention to the business of the Company. It would not be fair to say the members thus selected should be exclusively liable for all preliminary expenses. But in this case there was another important fact. A prospectus was shown to the plaintiff when the order was given for the work, in which the defendant's name appeared as a Provisional Committe-man, but nothing was said in that prospectus of a Managing Committee In nearly all these cases there were expenses before any Managing Committee was appointed, and the question would be who was to be liable for those expenses if the Provisional Committee was not. In this case the only question was, whether the defendant held himself out as liable for preliminary expenses by authorising the insertion of his name as a Committee-man.

The Jury, without a moment's hesitation, returned a verdict for the plaintiff—damages £757 3s. 9d.

Mr Martin stated, after the verdict had been recorded, that if the defendant paid his quota of the expenses, as others of the Committee had done, the judgment against him on this verdict would not be put in force.

On Wednesday, in the same Court, a case was tried, Barnett v. Southwell: it was an action by a stationer in Fenchurch-street against the defendant, as a Provisional Committee-man of the Direct London and Dublin Railway, to recover the value of certain stationary goods supplied to the Company between the 30th of August and the 2nd of November last. The plaintiff's case rested mainly on the facts that the defendant had written to a Mr. Collins, one of the promoters of the Company, to insert his name in the list of the Provisional Committee; and that, in conformity with the authority thus given, the defendant's name was inserted, and appeared in a printed prospectus of the Company which was published on the 18th of October. On the part of the defendant, it was admitted that, in answer to an application from Collins, the defendant had written, on the 6th of October, promising his support to the project, but that, on the following day, in consequence of circumstances which came to his knowledge, he wrote, declining to have any connection with the Company, and requesting that his name might not be used in any manner. Under these circumstances, it was submitted that the defendant had given no authority to pledge his credit, even though it should turn out that Mr. Collins had neglected to communicate to the managing parties the receipt of the defendant's second letter. The Lord Chief Baron, in summing up, expressed, in very plain terms, his dissent from the doctrine contended for on behalf of the plaintiff, and left it to the Jury to say whether the goods in question were supplied on the credit of the defendant.—The Jury, without any hesitation, returned a verdict for the defendant

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange (Friday).—During the present week the arrivals of English wheat for our market have been on a moderate scale, viz., only 3600 quarters The stands being very scantily supplied, the demand for wheat, of home produce was steady, at Monday's prices. Owing to the low currencies at which American flour is selling, next to nothing was doing [illegible], the quotations of which were barely supported The best grinding [illegible] moved off steadily, at late rates, but other kinds were in slow inquiry. Superfine [illegible] was quite as dear, but other kinds hung on hand Oats, beans, peas, and flour moved off slowly, [illegible]

Arrivals.—English wheat, 2660 barley, 740, oats, 1110 Irish wheat, —, barley, [illegible] Foreign wheat, 9780; barley, 9800, oats, 8,340 Flour, 1270 sacks; malt, [illegible]

[illegible] ditto white, 47s to [illegible], ditto white, 50s to 55s, rye, —s to —s, grinding barley, 24s to 27s [illegible] malting ditto 30s to 32s, Lincoln and Norfolk malt 56s to 60s brown [illegible], Kingston and Ware, 58s to 60s, Chevalier, 61s to 62s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire [illegible] 21s to 24s potato ditto, 30s to 33s Youghal and Cork, black, 21s to 25s, ditto, white, 22s to 25s; tick beans, new, 34s to 38s; ditto old, 35s to 38s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 36s to 38s, white, 40s to 42s, boilers, 42s to 44s, per quarter Town-made flour, 47s to 49s, Suffolk, 43s to 44s, Stockton and Yorkshire, 41s to 42s, per 280 lbs. Foreign—Free wheat, —s to —s: Dantzig, red, —s to —s; white, —s to —s. In Bond.—Barley, [illegible], oats, brew, —s to —s; ditto feed, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s, per quarter. Flour, American, 25s to 28s, Baltic 26s to 28s per barrel.

[illegible] best English linseed cakes are selling at full prices. In all kinds [illegible] doing

[illegible] English, [illegible] to 57s; Baltic, crushing 42s to 44s; Mediterranean and [illegible] 43s to 46s. Hempseed, 34s to 36s per quarter Coriander 11s to 15s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 10s to 14s; white ditto 10s to 12s Tares, 7s 9d to 8s 3d per bushel English Rapeseed, £24 to £26 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £10 5s to £10 10s; ditto, foreign, £7 5s to £8 0s per 1000, Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £5 5s per ton Canary 45s to 48s per quarter, English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s; extra, 52s to 55s, white, 60s to 64s, extra up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s, white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 6d to 8½d, of household ditto, 6d to 7½d per 4lb loaf

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat 52s 10d, barley, 27s 6d; oats, 23s 6d; rye, 33s 3d; beans, 38s 5d, peas, 35s 5d.

The Six Weeks' Average Wheat, 52s 5d; barley, 27s 6d; oats, 23s 6d, rye, 32s 9d; beans, 38s 7d, peas, 34s 5d

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 5s 0d; barley, 4s; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 4s; beans, 4s 0d; peas, 4s 0d

Provisions.—Foreign butter continues in good request, at fully the late advance in the quotations. The best qualities are producing 96s to 100s; and other kinds, 70s to 88s per cwt; Irish butter firm, at an improvement in value of from 2s to 4s per cwt; Waterford, landed, 86s to 88s; Carlow, 88s to 90s; Cork, 86s and Limerick, 84s to 86s per cwt. English butter is selling at 91s to 98s for Dorset 84s to 90s for Devon; and 10s to 12s per dozen for fresh A good business has been doing in Bacon, at full prices. Mild cured qualities are producing 58s to 60s per cwt. Bale and tierce middles, including most other kinds of provisions, are quite as dear

Tallow.—This market has a very quiet appearance. Small parcels are taken on the spot at 41s 9d to 42s. Town tallow, the supply of which is larger, goes off readily, at 39s 6d net cash.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 0s clover ditto, £4 5s to £5 10s oat straw, £1 10s to £1 12s, wheat straw, £1 12s to £1 14s per load. New meadow hay [illegible] to £3 5s per load.

Wool.—Owing to the progress of the public sales—at which 25,000 bales will be offered—and the large arrivals, the wool trade is very dull, and prices are not supported

Potatoes.—There are now scarcely any old potatoes on offer; but new ones are selling steadily, at from 6s to 15s per cwt

Coals (Friday).—Holywell Main, 14s 9d, West Wylam, 13s 6d, East Hetton, 14s 3d; Stewart's, 15s 9d; West Tees, 13s 6d; and Sidney [illegible]

Hops (Friday).—The plantation accounts being considered favourable, the demand here for all kinds of hops is heavy, and prices are almost nominal The duty is called £150,000. Sussex pockets, £5 0s to £6 6s; Kent ditto, £5 5s to £6 10s; Mid and East Kent ditto, £6 6s to £8 15s per cwt

Smithfield (Friday.)—The supply of beasts on sale here, to-day, being more than adequate to meet the wants of the buyers, the beef trade was in a very depressed state, and Monday's reduced currencies were with difficulty supported There were on offer 150 oxen and cows, 170 sheep and lambs, and 10 calves from Holland, together with 70 horned and polled Scots from Scotland. The numbers of sheep were not quite so extensive as those exhibited on this day se'nnight. On the whole the mutton trade was firm, and the quotations were the turn [illegible] The lamb trade was very steady, at fully, but at nothing quotable beyond, previous [illegible] In calves, a good business was doing, at full prices, but pigs commanded very little [illegible] Milch cows were selling at from £14 to £19 each including their small calf [illegible] 8lbs. to sink the offal)—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 4d to 2s 6d, second quality ditto, 2s 8d [illegible] 3s 0d, prime large oxen, 3s 2d to 3s 6d prime Scots, &c., 3s 8d to 3s 10d coarse and [illegible] sheep, 3s 2d to 3s 6d, second quality ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d, prime South Down ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d, large coarse calves, 3s 6d to 4s 0d, prime small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 6d, large hogs, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; neat small porkers 4s 8d to 4s 10d lambs, 5s 0d to 6s 0d. Suckling calves, 18s to 29s, and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 19s each Beasts, 814, cows, 150, sheep and lambs 12 550, calves 535 pigs, 250.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a very slow inquiry here to-day on the following terms:—

Per 8lbs [illegible] inferior beef 2s 4d to [illegible] middling ditto, 2s 6d [illegible] prime small [illegible] 3s 4d, large pork, 3s 4d to 4s 0d; [illegible] mutton 3s 6d to 3s 8d middling ditto, [illegible] to 3s 10d, prime ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; veal 3s 8d to 4s 6d, small pork, 4s 2d to 4s 10d lamb, 4s 10d to 6s 0d. Robt Herbert.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English Funds have generally improved this week, and this may be ascribed to various influences. A scarcity of stock, which is required by the [illegible] party to adjust their accounts, is one cause Again: the favourable [illegible] of the revenue, and the absence of all probability of [illegible] turmoil, is another powerful reason. With such a quiet prospect, a material advance might be anticipated, and for a brief space may occur; but the prospects of the Money Market at present hold in check anything like a permanent revival of prices, as they stood a few months since. Consols, which, on Monday, closed firmly at 95¾ ex. div., and 95⅞ for account, have since advanced to, and close at 95⅞ to 96⅛ Exchequer Bills are also better, in consequence of a few purchases, arising from unanticipated railway deposits, having been invested, until the money is required for active operations. The usual re-investments that occur at the period of paying the dividends, have communicated a certain amount of buoyancy to all the Stocks. The subjoined closing prices, from the official list, will confirm this view:—Bank Stock, 209; Three per Cent. Reduced Annuities, 96½; Three per Cent. Consols Annuities, 95⅞; New Three-and-a Quarter per Cent. Annuities, 97½; Long Annuities, Expire Jan. 5, 1860, 10¼; Ditto, 30 years, Jan. 5, 1860, 10⅛; Bank Stock for Account, [illegible]; Consols for Opening, 95⅝; Exchequer Bills—£1,000, 16; £500, 17; Ditto, Small, 13.

The Foreign Market can scarcely be said to have partaken in the improved state of affairs. Mexican, notwithstanding the doubtful state in which the Republic is placed, does not vary materially in price. The Actives closed on Monday at 27; Deferred 15¾. The present price is 27½ and 16¼. Spanish Three per Cents stood at 35⅝ ex. div; and Portuguese Four per Cents at 48 ex div. An improvement of about ½ per cent may be noted on Spanish; and Portuguese, about one per cent worse. The Market closed, languidly, at the following prices: Brazilian Bonds, 5 per Cent, 84; Equador Bonds, 3⅝; Mexican Bonds, 1837, 5 per Cent, 27⅛. Ditto, Deferred, 16½; Portuguese Four per Cent, 47; Ditto, for the Account, 47; Spanish Bonds, 3 per Cent, for the Account, 36½; Dutch-Two-and-a-Half per Cent, 60; Ditto, 4 per Cent Certificates, 93¾.

Although the operations of the Share Market continue on a very limited scale, yet a better feeling evidently predominates. The dividend-paying lines are held firmly at improving prices, all fear of competition being disregarded when the difficulties of making in the new lines are for a moment contemplated. An expense of nearly double the estimate is the first difficulty, and scarcity of money and labour are the next formidable hindrances to the new projects. Again, the better part of those carried are already in the possession of the old Companies, or speedily will be, for want of the money to proceed with. It will be seen, then, from the subjoined list, that prices are in advance upon the dividend-paying stocks, while little or no improvement is to be found in Scrip, from the dread of having to provide for calls. The market closes buoyantly, but transactions are generally firm. Aberdeen, 8⅝; Ambergate, Nottingham, Boston, and Eastern Junction, 1; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 4⅛; Bristol and Exeter, 82; Caledonian, 9⅝; Ditto, Half Shares, 1; Ditto, Extension, 1⅝; Cambridge and Oxford, ⅛; Derby and Crewe, 7⅛; Direct Manchester (Remmington's), ¾; Direct Northern, 1¼; Dublin and Galway, 1⅞; Eastern Counties, 21⅞; Do., Perpet., 5 per Cent., No. 2, ⅝ pm; Ditto, York Extension, 2; Eastern Union, ; Do., ½ Shares, 10⅛; Do., Cambridge and Ely; [illegible] East Lincolnshire, ⅛; Edinburgh and Glasgow, —, Ditto, ⅕ Shares, 17¼; Exeter, Yeovil, and Dorchester 4; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 22⅞; Great North of England, —; Ditto, New, 43; Great Western, 153; Ditto, Half Shares, 85; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 23½; Ditto, Fifths, 33½; Lancaster and Carlisle, 56[illegible]; Leicester and Bedford, ⅛ dis.; Leicester, Tamworth, &c., 1 dis.; London and Birmingham, 224; Ditto, Thirds, 61⅛; Ditto, Quarters, 29⅛, Ditto, Fifths, 25½; London and Blackwall, 9⅛; Ditto, New, 5⅞; London and Brighton, Ditto ditto Fifths, 42⅛; London and Croydon, 22⅞; Ditto, Guarant., 10; London and Greenwich, 9⅛; London and South Western, 78⅛; Ditto, New, 29; Lynn and Ely, 13; Lynn and Dereham, 11; Manchester and Leeds, 119; Ditto, Extension, 2[illegible] p.; Manchester and Birmingham, 83⅛; Ditto, Quarter Shares (B), 13⅛; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, 1 p; Manchester and Southampton, 1½; Midland, 152; Ditto, New, 39⅛, Newcastle and Darlington Junction, New, 1[illegible]; Newcastle and Berwick, 26¾; Norfolk, 26¼; Ditto, Half Shares, 8¾, Ditto, Tenths, 2⅝; Ditto Extension, 2½; North British, 30⅞; Ditto, Half Shares, 11⅝; Ditto, Carlisle Extension, 1⅛, Northern and Eastern, Scrip (issued at 5 dis.), 68; North Kent and Direct Dover, 1⅛; North Staffordshire, 4 pm.; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 7⅞; Portsmouth Direct, 4⅝; Richmond, 18⅛, Scottish Central, 19½; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 2⅞; South Midland, ⅜ dis.; South Eastern and Dover, 41¾; Ditto New (ditto, £33 6s. 8d.), 14; Ditto New (do. £30), 18⅛, Ditto New (do. £15), 2⅞; West Riding Union, 2¼ p.; Wisbeach and St. Ives, 2¼; Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, 4⅛ dis.; Worcester, Hereford, Ross, and Gloucester, 1 dis.; York and North Midland Extension, 35; Ditto East and West Riding Extension, 13, Boulogne and Amiens, 12⅝; East Indian, ⅛; Louvain and Jemeppe, ⅞; Luxembourg, 2⅛; Paris and Rouen, 39¼; Sambre and Meuse, 4⅛.

SATURDAY MORNING.—The English and Foreign Markets were flatter yesterday, the Directors of the Bank of England, at their Court on Thursday, not having intimated any intention of reducing the rate of interest. Consols closed at 95⅝ ¾ for the opening. The Share Market was inactive, but prices were firmly maintained.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JULY 7.
WAR OFFICE, JULY 7.

5th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. A. Blandy to be Lieutenant, vice Mackinnon.

2nd Dragoons: Regimental Sergt.-Major W. Miller to be Adjutant (with the rank of Cornet), vice Reid.

13th Light Dragoons: Lieut. R. H. J. Stewart to be Lieutenant, vice Lloyd. 14th: Sergt.-Major J. Farmer to be Quartermaster, vice Brownhob. 16th: Lieut. E. V. Mackinnon to be Lieutenant, vice Blandy.

Scots Fusilier Guards: Ensign and Lieut. W. Y. Peel to be Lieutenant and Captain, vice Lord [illegible]; Edward F. Fortescue to be Ensign and Lieutenant, vice Peel.

4th Foot: Ensign G. Leslie to be Lieutenant, vice O'Neill; Ensign W. T. Little to be Ensign, [illegible]. 10th: Assist.-Surg. D. Stewart to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Foss. 31st: Assist.-Surg. H. C. Foss to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Stewart. 40th: Surgeon R. A. M'Munn, M.D., to be Surgeon, vice M'Andrew. 41st: Lieut. T. M. Farmer to be Captain, vice Downes; Ensign C. F. L. Jenner to be Lieutenant, vice Farmer; [illegible] to be Ensign, vice Jenner. 45th: Ensign C. P. T. Stacey to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible]; [illegible] to be Ensign, vice Stacey. Paymaster M. C. Taylor to be Paymaster, vice Evans. 49th: Ensign J. [illegible] King to be Lieutenant, vice Ogilvy; J. W. Dewar, to be Ensign, vice King. 50th: Capt. [illegible] M. Tew to be Major, vice Brevet Lieut.-Col. Ryan; Lieut. [illegible] W. Hough to be Capt., vice Tew; Ensign C. A. P. James to be Lieut., vice Hough; Ensign W. Bellers to be Ensign, vice James. 54th: Cadet J. F. Mannank to be Ensign, vice Bellers. 59th: C. D. Pender to be Ensign, vice Little. 63rd: G. G. Cameron, M.D., to be Assist.-Surg., vice Gray. 70th: Lieut. G. Reynolds to be Capt., vice Giveen; Ensign A. J. O. Rutherford to be Lieut., vice Reynolds. 72nd: Lieut. G. R. Perceval to be Capt., vice Warren; Ensign W. Bertram to be Lieut., vice Perceval; A. Smith, to be Ensign, vice Bertram. 78th: Paymaster E. Evans to be Paymaster, vice Taylor. 93rd: Lieut. J. J. Lloyd to be Lieutenant, vice Stewart; Cadet G. W. Goad to be Ensign, vice Rutherford.

Rifle Brigade: W. B. Brewster to be Second Lieutenant, vice Boileau.

HOSPITAL STAFF.—Surgeon J. M'Andrew, M.D., to be Staff-Surgeon of the First Class, vice Edward Pilkington.

BREVET.—To be Majors in the Army: Capt. H. S. Rowan, Capt. C. Lewis, Capt. H. Matson, Capt. A. W. Reed, Capt. R. Denny, Capt. W. B. Marlow, Capt. W. B. Langford, Capt. H. K. E. Wilmot.

MEMORANDUM.—The names of the gentleman appointed to an Ensigncy in the 32nd Foot, on the 12th of June, 1846, are C. F. Steuart, not Stewart, as previously stated.

BANKRUPTS. B. KENT, Rosherville, Kent, now out of business. A. REED and S. J. POWELL, Tottenham court-road, ironmongers. W. JOY, Tunbridge, Kent, plumber. R. A. F. KINGSCOTE, late of Nicholas-lane, Lombard-street, merchant. H. WOODTHORPE, Aveley, Essex, grocer. J. FARRER, Curtain-road, Shoreditch, cabinet-manufacturer. J. WARD, Bradford, Yorkshire, worsted stuff-manufacturer. J. SORBY, Sheffield, scrivener. W. [illegible], Leeds, glass-dealer. T. BEILBY and W. KABERRY, Leeds, flax-spinners. S. GRIFFITHS, Wolverhampton, wholesale druggist. G. BARRY, Handsworth, Staffordshire, surgeon. W. KIRK, Stafford, stockbroker. W. SUDLOW, Liverpool, warehouse-keeper. J. BARTON, Birkenhead, stone mason. R. BAKER, Christchurch, Monmouthshire, farmer. G. HORNSBY, Lesbury, Northumberland, builder.

FRIDAY, JULY 10.
WAR-OFFICE, JULY 10.

7th Dragoon Guards: Lieut. A. Knight to be Captain, vice Bambrick.

11th Light Dragoons: Lieut. T. H. Ward to be Captain, vice Bathurst; Cornet W. G. B. Cresswell to be Lieutenant, vice Ward; A. Briscoe to be Cornet, vice Cresswell.

1st Foot: Ensign H. F. Bytheseа to be Ensign, vice Quin. 11th: R. L. Warren to be Ensign, vice Bythesea. 14th: W. H. Hawley to be Ensign, vice Fortescue. 30th: Brevet Lieut.-Col. R. S. Ormond to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice J. Singleton; Brevet Major J. G. Geddes to be Major, vice Ormond; Lieutenant A. J. H. Lumsden to be Captain, vice Geddes; Ensign E. A. Whitmore to be Lieutenant, vice Lumsden; F. D'Arcy to be Ensign, vice Whitmore. 38th: B. R. Shaw, to be Ensign, vice Ponsonby. 40th: Capt. T. J. Valiant to be Major, vice Coddington; Lieut. T. L. K. Nelson to be Capt., vice Valiant; Ensign F. M. Hockings to be Lieutenant, vice Nelson; T. Wilson to be Ensign, vice Hockings; Lieut. A. A. Nelson to be Adjutant, vice T. L. K. Nelson. [illegible]: Ensign A. E. V. Ponsonby to be Ensign, vice [illegible]; Lieut. G. Burrell to be Lieutenant, vice Cave. 60th: Lieut. G. A. Taylor to be Captain, vice Dames; Ensign M. F. Monckton to be Lieutenant, vice Taylor; W. S. P. Serocold to be Ensign, vice Monckton. 71st: Major J. Fordyce to be Lieutenant Colonel, vice Crawley; Captain the Honourable T. O'Grady to be Major, vice Fordyce; Lieutenant G. Monkland to be Captain, vice O'Grady; Ensign J. Napier to be Lieutenant, vice Monkland; C. T. Seale to be Ensign, vice Napier. 79th: Assistant Surgeon J. Grant to be Surgeon, vice M'Munn. 87th: Second Lieut. J. Fitzgerald to be First Lieutenant, vice Doherty; H. Lloyd to be Second Lieutenant, vice Fitzgerald. 92nd: Lieut. A. W. Cameron to be Adjutant, vice Tattnall. 98th: To be Captains—Lieut. F. Grantham, vice Synge; Lieut. C. Colby, vice Ilderton. To be Lieutenants—Ensign C. B. Browne, vice Grantham; Ensign J. Reardon, vice Colby. To be Ensigns—Ensign P. E. Quin, vice Browne; W. W. Maddock, vice Reardon.

UNATTACHED.—To be Captains: Lieut. G. W. M. Lovett, Lieut. W. J. Yonge.

HOSPITAL STAFF.—Assist.-Surg. C. A. Gordon, M.D., to be Staff Surgeon of the Second Class; W. Singleton, M.D., to be Assistant-Surgeon to the Forces, vice J. Grant; A. J. Doloe, M.D., to be Assistant-Surgeon to the Forces.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, JULY 8.

Royal Regiment of Artillery: Quartermaster-Sergeant C. Dunbar to be Quartermaster, vice Forbes.

Ordnance Medical Department: Temporary Assist.-Surgeon S. H. Fasson to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Farr; R. Thornton to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Staunton.

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY THE LORD-LIEUTENANT.

Buckingham: The Royal Bucks, or King's Own Regiment of Militia—Lieut. W. Cavendish to be Captain, vice Lowndes; Lieut. R. E. Smith to be Captain; W. H. Chapman to be Ensign.

BANKRUPTS. A. BARLEY, March, Cambridgeshire, draper. P. F. PAGE and P. N. PAGE, King's road, Gray's-inn, builders. L. BRAILSFORD, late of Brighton, music-seller. W. OSBORNE, jun., St. James's-street, Piccadilly, silversmith. J. STILES, Wells-street, Oxford-street, soda water manufacturer. B. SAVAGE, Dorset place, Dorset-square, apothecary. J. BALLARD, Hastings, innkeeper. R. H. EVANS and C. EVANS, New Bond street, auctioneers. [illegible] S. PURSER, Cheltenham, draper. J. M. START, Gainsborough, Lincolnshire, bookseller. W. WATTS, Doncaster, millwright. B. SCOTT, Bath, seedsman. D. JAMES, Cardigan, licensed victualler. T. HUTCHINSON, Sunderland and Wingate, Durham, tea dealer. W. ROBINSON, Spring Meadow, Saddleworth, Yorkshire, dyer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—G. PENTLAND, Perth, coach-maker. L. M'BAIN, Kingussie, merchant.

BIRTHS.

At Portsmouth, the lady of Lieutenant G. H. Lapidge, of a daughter.——At Brighton, the wife of the Rev. Joseph Henry Jerrard, of a son.——On the 5th inst., the wife of Dr. C. Brodie Sewell, of twins, one still born.——In Bernard-street, Russell-square, Mrs. T. B. Young, of a daughter.——In Dean's-yard, Westminster, the wife of the Rev. W. Tennant, of a daughter.——At Dorfold-hall, Cheshire, Mrs. Wilbraham Tollemache, of a son.——At Froyle, Hampshire, the lady of the Rev. Peter Aubertin, jun., of a son.——At Winkfield Vicarage, Berks, the wife of the Rev. G. J. Elliott, of a daughter.——On the 5th inst., the lady of T. B. Hildyard, Esq., M.P., of a son.——At Bitteswell Vicarage, Leicestershire, the wife of the Rev. [illegible], of a son.——At Woolwich, the wife of Major Strangways, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

At Penn, Bucks, the Rev. William Woodis Harvey, M.A., to Miss Frances Fox.——At Oxford, the Rev. George Rawlinson, M.A., to Louisa Wildman, second daughter of Sir R. [illegible] Alexander Chermside, K.C.H., &c., M.D.——At Paris, Count Edouard De Dillon, to Caroline, daughter of Count Walsh Freeman.——At Rickmansworth, Lieutenant-Colonel Charles Bagot to Sophy Louisa, eldest daughter of Rear-Admiral the Hon. Josceline Percy, C.B.

DEATHS.

At Pau, Lucy Anne, the wife of the Rev. John Drake.——At Arras, Monsieur Hallette, Civil Engineer, Member of the Chamber of Deputies.——On the 2nd inst., Constantine Talbot Crichton, Esq., son of Sir Alexander Crichton.——At [illegible], Sussex, [illegible] Charles [illegible].——On [illegible] Mr. W. [illegible] Henry Bone, Esq., R.A.——At Southampton, aged 86, Selina, widow of the late Rev. W. Bray.——At Hackney, Mrs. Hole, in the 79th year of her age.——On the 22nd ult., aged five years, Walter Hamilton Dundas, eldest son of Walter Davies Griffith, Esq., of Craig-yr-halen, Anglesey, North Wales.

THE GERMAN ZOLLVEREIN.

Broadcloth, Marbles, Tape, Malt, Whistles,
Nutmegs, Tallow, Muslins, Frieze,
Pepper, Pipe-stems, Lamp-wicks, Bristles,
Wool, Pianos, Chessboards, Cheese;
Gingerbread, Tiles, Rags, Hops, Candles,
Nuts, Tobacco, Horsehair, Flax,
Leather, Toys, Salt, Besom-handles,
Parchment, Brandy, Beer, and Wax!

You smile at such a Bill of Lading!
True! 'tis a strangely mingled page,
But deeper look! and mark how trading
Now moulds the Spirit of the age!
The countless wares by merchants brought us,
Be ye thank'd and be ye prais'd,
What no patriot spirit wrought us
See! beneath your power is rais'd!

For ye have knit a bond of UNION,
That making ONE may render GREAT,
'Tis Commerce brings into communion
What Kings and Councils separate.
Drawing lines and frontiers round us,
They, but by divisions strong,
Would still to wars and battles hound us,—
Fools that we have been too long!

This the moralist has told us
Once and ever and again,
This our poets oft unfold us,
"Unite" the burden of their strain,
Still the fetters fast could hold us,
Song and teaching both in vain!

But Commerce comes and Frontiers vanish,
Sentinel, and guard and gun,
Commerce! destined yet to banish
The hateful creed of all for one!
Germany! with sixty rulers,
Fearing, doubting, jealous all,
Commerce only could have made ye
A blended people 'neath their thrall!

Commerce binds you now together,
Free, at least, to buy and sell;
Ask your rising future, whether,
MIND shall not be free as well?

And when the yoke at last is broken,
And when a PEOPLE'S strength is thine,
When Freemen's thoughts are freely spoken
From Baltic's billows to the Rhine,
Remember TRADE first gave the token
Of Union in the ZOLLVEREIN!

LEWIS FILMORE.

FASHIONS FOR JULY.

DURING the whole of the last month, the universal demand amongst marchandes des modes and their fair customers, was for dresses of the most aërial textures. Tulles, barèges, muslinés, organdies, tarlatanes, and Chinese Batiste, were alone wearable during the late almost insupportable heat; but, now that the weather has so greatly changed, the other materials of summer costume, usually more appropriate to this climate, regain their full favour. Pretty striped silks, in a hundred different shades: those glacés and shaded, or those in light colours, with flounces headed by a trimming a shade darker than the ground of the dress, are now much in favour. Fil de chèvre, in lilac, cabbage green, or pink, is much worn: these dresses are often ornamented by a flat embroidery. Foulards are worn, with high bodies, opening in front sufficiently to allow the embroidered habit-shirt underneath (usually trimmed with Valenciennes), to appear. Dresses in mousseline de soie, with Gothic patterns, are usually in dark colours, and are worn over white silk.

Evening Dresses, and those for déjeûners now occupy the consideration of all our élégantes; for, besides the balls that are nightly given and the fêtes champêtre that have already taken place, numbers are still in contemplation. There will shortly be a Drawing Room, and some Court Balls will be given at Buckingham Palace. It is impossible it should not be so, for the Palace has been already too long shut up, and her Majesty is naturally desirous of benefiting trade as well as giving pleasure to her subjects. We will now endeavour to give a description of some of the preparations that are being made by our leader of fashion for these occasions. Dresses of tarlatan, embroidered with stripes of gold and silver, those of tulle with three skirts looped up at the side with a bouquet of wheat ears and field flowers. With this last costume, the head dress must consist of a Ceres wreath, made also of corn-field flowers. White tarlatan dresses trimmed with six tucks embroidered in crochet, gold, and red, a bouquet in front of the boddice, the coiffure composed of pomegranate blossom and jessamine. Sky-blue crape dresses made with double skirts, the upper being of the tunic form, edged with a string of white daisies. Corsage à la Grecque, fastened with a cameo, a wreath of daisies placed on the forehead, and long floating sashes of wide ribbon, are much worn. These are the principal ball dresses.

For déjeûners, morning fêtes, &c. Blue, lilac, or cabbage-green, barége dresses, lined with silk, the skirt being made with a number of small tucks; a capote of lace, trimmed with a bouquet of tea roses. Another very pretty costume is a dress of Pekin striped blue and white, pink and white, or lilac and white, made in the form of a redingote, fastened in front with bright buttons, either steel or marcassite; a mantelet of muslin, lined with thin silk, and trimmed with lace; a bonnet of tulle, or crape, with drooping feathers.

A dress of white organdie, embroidered in crochet in the tunic form, lined with pink silk; a capote of pink tulle, trimmed with rosettes of a similar material.

A dress of blue pout de soie Nemours, with four flounces in black lace; a mantelet of black lace; capote of black lace, trimmed with blue bells.

A dress of pearl grey Taffetas d'Italie, shot with orange colour, a manilla of a similar material, trimmed with a fold of the same. A paille de riz bonnet and white marabouts.

We have thus endeavoured to give to our fair readers some idea of the most remarkable toilettes that are preparing at the great magazins, such as Vouillon and Lauré, for the forthcoming balls and fêtes champêtres, which, if report speak true, are to render the close of the season so brilliant.

"LES MODES PARISIENNES."—Ce journal est le plus riche, le plus élégant, et le plus varié de tous les journaux de Paris. C'est le journal le plus repandu dans la societe aristocratique de toute l'Europe, le seul adopté par la bonne compagnie de Paris. Les souscriptions sont recues à Londres, chez Mdme. Frederick, Albemarle-street, 40. Prix 6s., pour trois mois.

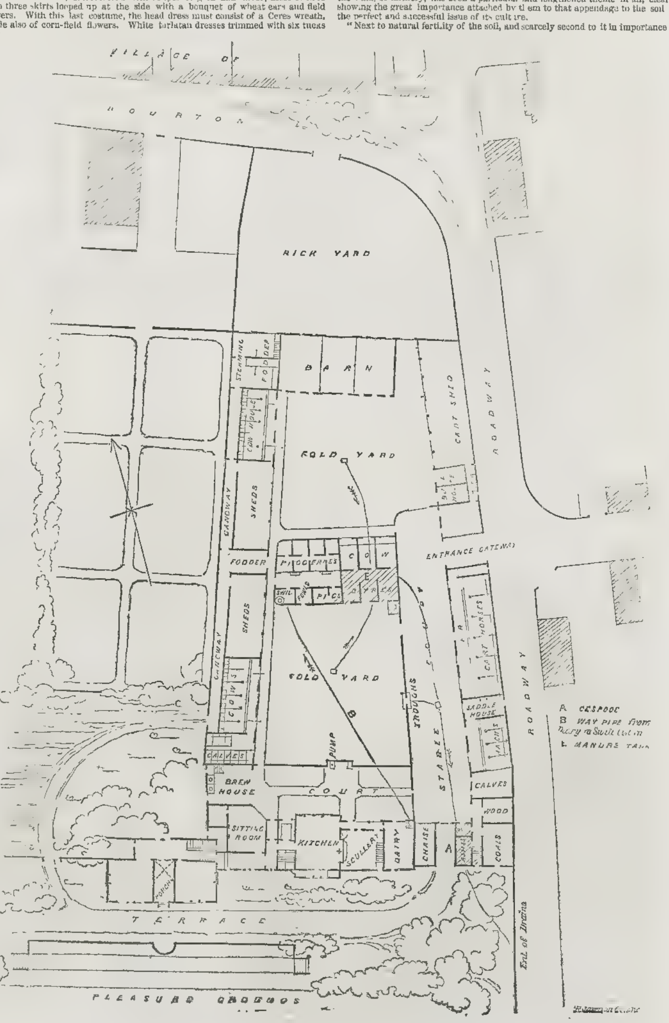
NEW FARMERY.

WE this week present to our readers the annexed Engravings, illustrative of the arrangement and outline of New Farm Buildings and Dwelling, recently erected for a small landowner, in Berkshire, and lying at a short distance from the Great Western Railway. The plan combines the requisite provisions for dairy and breeding purposes, appertaining to land in occupation, viz., between 400 and 500 acres. Its appropriation, both as to the aspect of its offices and conveniences of its arrangement, by reference to the outline plan, will be specially appreciated by our agricultural readers. The architect is Mr. Frederick W. Ordish, of John-street, Adelphi.

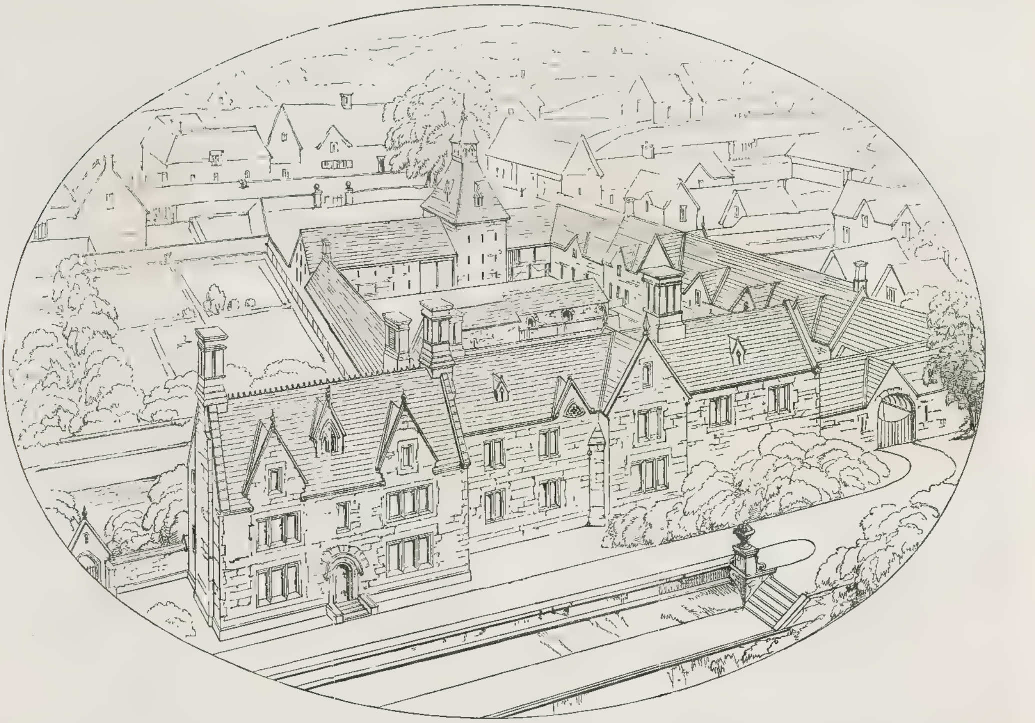
We append some able remarks on the importance of Plan in the construction of a Farmery, which we find introductory to a series of plans in a valuable work, entitled "The Plough: a Journal of Agriculture and Rural Affairs," the first volume of which has just been completed. We should add that the Journal is published monthly, and contains a mass of excellent practical information which must be especially acceptable to "the Noblemen, Gentlemen, Yeomen, Agriculturists, and Breeders of the United Kingdom."

"The works of the ancient Roman writers on agriculture that are still extant, evince, by the accounts of the practice of husbandry of the ancient Romans, a careful diligence and exactness in the execution of the operations in all its branches unsurpassed by the best cultivation of the present age; and many are the useful lessons on the culture of the soil that have been transmitted to us from that wise and opulent people. Amongst the numerous subjects on rural economy that have been treated in writings of the ancient Roman authors preserved to us, the Villa, or farmery, has been a particular and lengthened theme in all, clearly showing the great importance attached by them to that appendage to the soil in the perfect and successful issue of its culture.

"Next to natural fertility of the soil, and scarcely second to it in importance to



GROUND PLAN OF NEW FARMERY, IN BERKSHIRE.



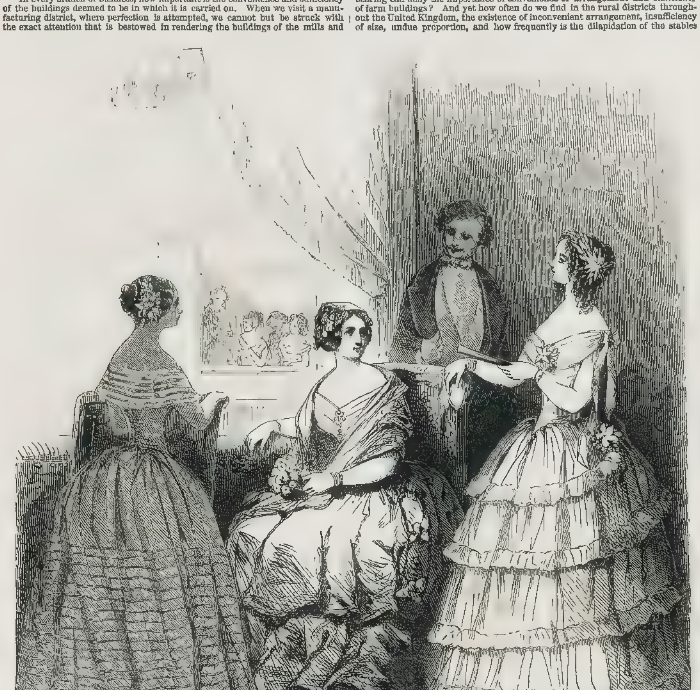
NEW FARMERY OR MODEL FARM, IN BERKSHIRE.

profitable husbandry, is well-arranged and sufficient offices of the farmery. The buildings of the farm-stead may be considered as the workshop, the live stock and implements as the machinery and tools, and the soil, the raw material of that greatest of all manufactures—of that most important branch of industry, producing not only the necessaries, but every luxury of life. To dilate on the transcendant importance of agriculture over every other branch of industrial interest would be idle, and indeed such is not the purpose of this paper, as the vast subject of the avocation must be conceded by every one acquainted with its nature and giving the matter the least consideration.

"In every branch of business, how important is the convenience and sufficiency of the buildings deemed to be in which it is carried on. When we visit a manufacturing district, where perfection is attempted, we cannot but be struck with the exact attention that is bestowed in rendering the buildings of the mills and factories perfect in convenience of arrangement, with a view to economy of labour and expense. When we reflect on the importance that is attached to convenience of arrangement in the establishments wherein the produce of the earth is prepared for the immediate use of man, at least equally important must be the conveniency and sufficiency of farm buildings—the workshops of agriculture, wherein the means of rendering the soil productive are collected and prepared, wherein the tools with which the husbandman applies the means of fertility are kept, and wherein also depends the health, strength, and usefulness of the most perishable of all machines—the cattle Who that considers the matter in its true bearing can deny the importance of convenience of arrangement and sufficiency of farm buildings? And yet how often do we find in the rural districts throughout the United Kingdom, the existence of inconvenient arrangement, insufficiency of size, undue proportion, and how frequently is the dilapidation of the stables and cattle lairs endangering the health and usefulness, nay, even threatening the death of the live stock?

"Even in farm buildings of recent erection, complete convenience of arrangement is found but exceptions in a few cases to general rule. Such does not always arise from parsimony, as in numerous instances farm offices have been built at extravagant expense, where want of convenient arrangement in the dependent relation in the use of one house to that of another, and the want of due compactness of proportion, are glaringly conspicuous. It is frequently to be seen that the barn has been placed in the very situation the most improper it could occupy, and the stables and other feeding places remote from the barn, from which the fodder is supplied.

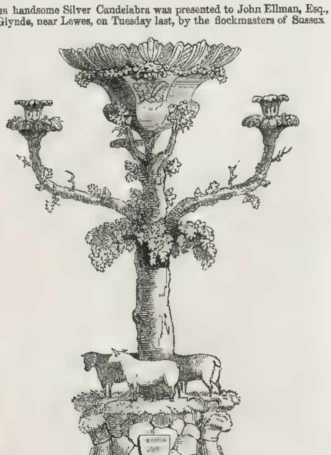
"A very frequent cause of inconvenient arrangement of farm buildings is making additions without due consideration of a general plan. When extensive repairs are required, and the insufficiency of the buildings of a farm is considerable, it is generally ill-advised economy to begin to repair, and enlarge, as it generally ends in rendering the whole concern extremely inconvenient, unless, which is seldom the case, that the principal offices had been placed and the arrangement of the ground originally planned with a view to future extension of the farmery. Under most circumstances, perfect arrangement can only be secured by rebuilding; and most of the old materials may generally be profitably applied in the construction of the new buildings, especially when new materials can only be procured at a considerable distance."



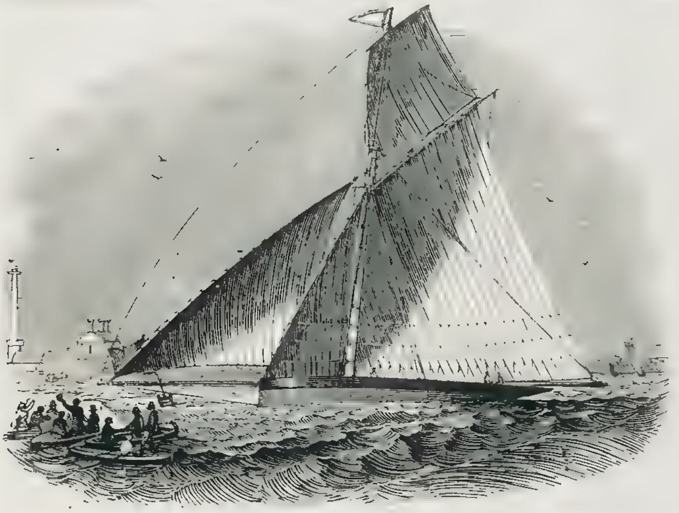
PARIS FASHIONS FOR JULY.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

SILVER CANDELABRA PRESENTED TO MR. ELLMAN, THE AGRICULTURIST.

This handsome Silver Candelabra was presented to John Ellman, Esq., of Glynde, near Lewes, on Tuesday last, by the flockmasters of Sussex and other friends, as a mark of their respect and esteem for that gentleman, who is so justly celebrated for his breed of pure Southdown sheep. The design of the Candelabra is tasteful and appropriate: it consists of an oak tree, with branches for lights, and a vase for fruit or flowers in the centre; the whole standing upon a triangular base, having, at each angle, an elegant model of a pure Southdown ram. The work has been ably executed by the old-established firm of Robinson and Aumonier, of Leadenhall-street, for Mr. Reeves, of Lewes.



SILVER CANDELABRA PRESENTED TO MR. ELLMAN.



ROYAL THAMES YACHT CLUB.—"THE SECRET."

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The Metropolitan Yacht Club closed its home-season on the 4th inst., and when next we have to talk of the exploits of the R. T. Y. C., it will be from the pleasant shores of the Solent Sea. The final match was not so brilliant a finish as might have been desired. By one of those untoward contingencies so common to water parties, there was plenty of wind stirring before and after the day on which the sailing—or, rather, the drifting—took place; but no sooner was it "al hands up, man sail, than it fell as calm as the dream of a halcyon. It boots not now to revert to the "cats' paws" that puffed up the hopes of the mariners but inflated nothing else. Five clippers went for the first-class prizes two in number—to be given to the first and second boats; and there was a very tasteful vase for yachts of the second class. The latter was won by the Ranger—"in a canter." In the first-class, the Secret was the winning craft, the Ino second. Of the first of these beautiful 25 ton cutters, we have an engraving—the counterfeit presentment of a barque of which it may indeed be said—

She walks the waters like a thing of life.

The crack yachts of this Club are undoubtedly the most exquisite specimens of naval architecture afloat. Not only are they unrivalled as "fresh-water sailers," but, as sea-going vessels, they gave a sample of their quality the year before last, at Cowes, which will not be soon forgotten. On the termination of the last match of the season, many members of the R. T. Y. C. dropped down the river, and ran across the channel to Ostend, where a regatta was announced for three days of the present week.

Those three days were also distinguished by racing of another sort at home; they constituted the July Meeting at Newmarket; a festival, if not quite as popular as race weeks generally are in England, nevertheless, of a very sporting character. Tuesday and Thursday give to the turf a pair of very interesting two-year-old stakes—the July and the Chesterfield; the latter generally taking its "form and pressure" more or less from the former.

The clouds that lowered upon the money market towards the close of last autumn, and still wear a most threatening aspect, of course affected speculations of all sorts, the turf quite as much as any. Thus, while it has taken from meetings where merchants of the odds "most do congregate," the stirring activity they were wont to wear has by no means reached the sport of racing. The great proprietors of race horses do not live and move exclusively with an eye to lucre; they have their being independent of the profits of the ring. For this cause the July week at Newmarket, in which the majority of the issues are almost "for love" was less likely to suffer in its spirit than the business meetings. The weather was alternate cloud and shine, with a temperature that made existence a luxury, after the burning heats of the last two months. The returns, on the next page, give the results of the racing; its character calls for some especial allusion.

The July week was at least as good as it usually is—the company, perhaps, more numerous than the ordinary average. The two-year-old stock that showed certainly was not good. The lot in the July Stakes was a very indifferent one—the Flying Cossack cutting up little better than a jade. The winner, too, was thought so little of, that the party did not stand a guinea on her. Nevertheless, the two-year-olds that showed must not be taken as a sample of the quality of the whole team in training at head-quarters. Joe Rogers has some very promising young ones, to the eye, and most of the stables have one or two very sightly.

It is likely that, before the October season sets in, or, at all events, before it closes, we shall have seen out something clipping, of which the winter betting may make its hobby-horse. To borrow a City phrase: the impression left by this little meeting was that the turf is "looking up." Though, as already said, speculation was dull and very limited, what was done had a healthy character about it. The railway from Chesterford to Newmarket will be commenced next week, and they calculate on opening it in May next. This will be a great convenience to those visiting the capital of racing, as well as a service to the general economy of the turf—those by whom it lives, and those who live by it.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

The annexed Illustration is taken from the 5th Scene of the 1st Act of "Twelfth Night;" the characters being Viola (Miss Cushman), and Olivia (Miss Susan Cushman); as lately performed at the Haymarket. The following lines relate to the sketch :—

Olivia. Get you to your Lord;
I cannot love him; let him send no more;
Unless, perchance, you come to me again,
To tell me how he takes it. Fare you well:
I thank you for your pains: spend this for me.
Viola. I am no fee'd post, Lady. keep your purse
My master, not myself, lacks recompense.
Love make his heart of flint, that you shall love;
And let your fervour, like my master's, be Plac'd in contempt! Farewell, fair cruelty! [Exit.

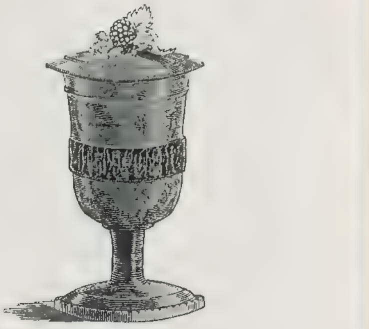
MISS CUSHMAN AS "VIOLA," AND MISS SUSAN CUSHMAN AS OLIVIA," IN "TWELFTH NIGHT," AT THE HAYMARKET THEATRE

THE STRATFORD JUBILEE CUP.

This very interesting Shakspearean memorial has just, to use a commercial phrase, often applied to baser matter, "changed hands." On Saturday last, it was disposed of by auction, at the sale of the effects of the late Mr. J. Johnson, of Upper Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square. This cup, it will be remembered, was presented by the Mayor and Corporation of Stratford-upon-Avon, in September, 1769, to David Garrick, and used at the Jubilee instituted by him in that month, at the birth-place of England's dramatic bard. Shakspeare, about the year 1609, planted at his native place, a mulberry tree; it had long attained a fulness of growth, produced the most luxuriant fruit, and was the admiration and veneration of every one, till in 1756, the Rev. Francis Gastrell, the occupant of the house, from the frequent importunities of travellers, conceived a dislike to the tree, and, in an evil hour, in contempt of the popular adoration, ordered the tree to be felled, and its logs split for fire-wood; a general odium was excited, and a watchmaker named Thomas Sharp, of that town, secured the pieces, and converted the fragments to uses widely different from that to which the tree had been so irreligiously condemned.



THE STRATFORD JUBILEE CUP.

The Cup under notice is about eleven inches in height, lined with silver-gilded; a rim of silvergilded round the foot; and the cover is crested with a cluster of mulberries and leaves, also silvergilded. At the Jubilee, Garrick held it, while singing the following lines, composed by him for that occasion, beginning—

Behold this fair goblet, 'twas carved from the tree,
Which, my sweet Shakspeare, was planted by thee;
As a relic, I kiss it, and bow at the shrine.
What comes from thy hand must be ever divine!
All shall yield to the mulberry tree,
Bend to thee, blest mulberry,
Matchless was he who planted thee,
And thou, like him, immortal be.

On the death of Mrs. Garrick, this Cup was, by a decree in Chancery, sold, on May 5, 1825, at Christie's auction-rooms, in King-street, St. James's, for 121 guineas, and then purchased by Mr. Johnson, by whom it was estimated so highly, that the price asked was 200 guineas. Since his death, it was submitted, with other effects, to auction, and put up at a reserved price of 100 guineas; but, no second bidder appearing, the Cup was withdrawn. On Saturday last, it was again submitted for sale, without reserve, and produced £40 8s. 6d.; the purchaser, Mr. Isaacs, of Upper Gower-street.

GOLD; OR, THE HALF-BROTHERS.

A STORY OF LIFE IN THE MIDDLE STATION.

BY CAMILLA TOULMIN.

(Continued from page 14.)

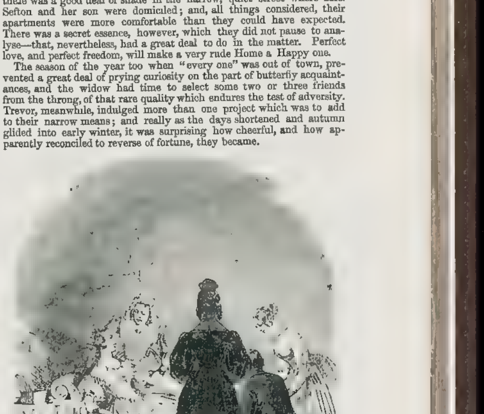
Few people are in London in August who can escape from it; witness the closed up houses and deserted haunts; and I have sometimes thought that the narrow streets, which do furnish ample shade, are even preferable, at such a season, to the squares of "pretension," with their dusty trees, and sickly flowers, and smoke-begrimed sparrows. Well, there was a good deal of shade in the narrow, quiet street where Mrs. Sefton and her son were domiciled; and, all things considered, their apartments were more comfortable than they could have expected. There was a secret essence, however, which they did not pause to analyse—that, nevertheless, had a great deal to do in the matter. Perfect love, and perfect freedom, will make a very rude Home a Happy one.

The season of the year too when "every one" was out of town, prevented a great deal of prying curiosity on the part of butterfly acquaintances, and the widow had time to select some two or three friends from the throng, of that rare quality which endures the test of adversity. Trevor, meanwhile, indulged more than one project which was to add to their narrow means; and really as the days shortened and autumn glided into early winter, it was surprising how cheerful, and how apparently reconciled to reverse of fortune, they became.



Mrs. Sefton knew that a great portion of the house in which they dwelt was occupied by a family of the name of Clifford, a widow and three daughters; but it was reserved for an accident to bring about an acquaintance between them. What she knew of them previously to this event was not altogether in their favour. It was seldom that many days passed over without the shrill, shrewish tones of the elder lady's voice being distinctly audible either in the solo of a scold or the duetto or trio of a quarrel. Sometimes, it must be owned, the younger voices were distinguished in some indignant rejoinder; but, more commonly their part of the performance consisted in sobs and tears. The servant of the house had volunteered the intelligence that Miss Clifford was "a picture painter," that Miss Susan "acted at the play-house," and that Miss Margaret, the youngest daughter, "went out teaching."

Brief but suggestive enough history of aspiration and disappointment of struggling and suffering!

One night, just as Mrs. Sefton and her son were on the point of retiring to rest, a cab drove up to the door, and a loud knock, followed by a faint scream, and then the confusion of several voices, proclaimed that something unusual had taken place. The fourth rate actress commonly returned on foot, and appearing, as she generally did, in the afterpiece, it was earlier than the hour at which she usually reached home. But she it was nevertheless.

"You must carry her up. Oh, send for a doctor!" were words that aroused Trevor, and he rushed down stairs in time to offer assistance that was very gratefully accepted. The poor girl, who could not put her foot to the ground, was suffering much from the ineffectual attempts of her sisters to carry her; but Trevor Sefton raised her in his arms as if she had been a child, and, without further change of posture, laid her on the sofa in the drawing-room. In a few hurried words he explained who he was, and that he belonged to the medical profession; and offered services which, by the patient at least, were most gladly received.

The mother looked at him with an expression that seemed to say, "So young—so wise! I don't believe it:" and her silly thankless questions, and busy ignorant interference, hindered the examination of the injured ankle not a little.

I must try to describe that large and strangely-furnished room, as it appeared by the unwholesome light of two tallow candles of unequal length and thickness.

The first thing which struck the eye was the circumstance of the dark and dingy small patterned paper which covered the walls, having been made the background of various drawings in chalk! chiefly of the human face or figure, and nearly, and in some instances quite, the size of life; though, for the most part, they were little more than outline sketches, but outlines full of expression. Few would have thought that a woman's soul, or woman's hand, had been the creator here; so little was there indicated of the things or thoughts which we are accustomed to associate with a feminine nature. Figures writhing in anguish—features distorted by the most intense and fearful passions—and a greater number, still, of groups or "studies," in which the very soul of melancholy seemed to have taken refuge. Only one solitary figure was there of a cheerful aspect, and this was a rough, but most powerfully expressive figure of Faith standing tip-toe on a globe, with rapt and uplifted gaze, and the drapery of a severed veil around her. A strange effect was accidentally produced by this drawing being partially executed over a half-erased group, in darker chalk, of the demoniac class; so that, to the eye of fancy, Faith—though intended for a separate study—seemed to be soaring from a world strewn with images of horror and of woe.

The floor of that large and lofty room was only partially carpeted, and the furniture was scanty and ill-assorted; with those ghastly figures gleaming on every side—has the reader made a picture of the place,

On a sofa, drawn near the dying embers of the fire, lay the sufferer—a dark-haired, bright-eyed girl, of three or four-and-twenty. There she lay, in a tawdry, flimsy, spangled dress, with large ornaments of mock jewels on her neck and arms, and the rouge but partially washed from her cheeks by the tears which had been wrung from her eyes by intense bodily anguish.

"I told you how it would be; I knew there would be some accident in the scene of the Broken Bridge," exclaimed Mrs. Clifford in tones of evident anger, though she would have told you she was angry for, not with her daughter: "you should have refused to go on in the state it was; and what could they have done then I should like to know?"

"Have found plenty others who were less particular; and when Saturday came——oh, mamma, you should not blame me."

"But I do blame you for being imposed on. But my children are the greatest idiots where their own interests are concerned."

"Hish!" was murmured gently by one who had with much self-command made herself silently useful, but had spoken little; this was the youngest sister, who raised her finger to her lip, and bent over the couch almost to poor Susan's ear.

"But, Margaret," —— interrupted the sufferer, in a subdued voice.

"I know, dear; or, if I do not, you shall tell me by-and-by." And, pressing her hand, she quieted her more impetuous sister for the time.

Absorbed in the examination of the injured limb—and Susan's ankle was not only severely sprained and bruised, but she had been otherwise hurt by her fall when the scenery gave way, and she was precipitated from a height of ten feet—Trevor Sefton had scarcely noticed the younger sister; but her voice was so sweet, so full of character, that his attention was arrested by it.

Margaret Clifford was about the middle height—that best height for grace and ease of carriage—with low shoulders, small hands, and a supple, girlish figure. Her features were good, though she was rather too pale. Perhaps it was this pallor which gave a tinge of melancholy to the countenance. As for her eyes, you could not easily make out the colour, they were so shaded by dark lashes—very much darker than her hair. She was about twenty. This was the young lady who "went out teaching"—the daily governess.

After applying the proper remedies, and recommending, with some emphasis, that the patient should be kept extremely quiet, and not be annoyed or disturbed on any account, he took his departure. But, of course, in the morning, he paid an early visit of enquiry.

His patient was doing well, and now, arrayed in a neat and simple morning gown, she looked like a gentlewoman. There is an intuitive knowledge and perception of character that is sometimes possessed by the very young, and sometimes not by the very old; for it is quite a mistake to suppose that wisdom of any sort must come as a natural inheritance to age. It was by a power of this sort that Trevor Sefton soon perceived that the young actress was a warm impulsive being; eager for praise, but more eager still for affection; capable of being moulded to high and noble purposes, but, alas! like all such natures, capable of being warped to the opposite extreme.

The sweetest flowers that grow, they which open to the sunshine, which nestle the bee, and which shed their odorous wealth in lavish profusion, are the very ones which require the softest training; are the very ones which may be taught to twine around the porch of a happy home, or to creep to the student's window. Alas! as well to trail across the tomb, or cling to the ruin, or be trampled in the mire.

Trevor could not refrain from noticing the drawings on the wall, which were seen to greater advantage by daylight.

"Ah, poor Hester!" exclaimed Susan; "it is her only pleasure to draw these strange figures. I think it relieves her mind; and better display these horrible fancies here, than give such expressions to the portraits she paints."

"Your sister then takes likenesses," said Trevor, interrogatively, though he knew the fact.

"Yes, when she can find sitters: for, Mr. Sefton, we are all very poor, and that is the only thing Hester can do. She has not patience or method enough to paint pictures which might sell. But her miniatures are not good; we all know that, and she says it herself. Though she declares the people all look so heavy and stupid, that she cannot help giving them some sort of expression. Often, she says, the expression they would have if their natural feelings were laid bare. Indeed, sometimes she maintains there is a likeness when no one else can see it. But you must pity poor Hester, Mr. Sefton, not blame her: much sorrow has shaken her brain."

It was during a temporary absence of Mrs. Clifford from the room that the conversation had taken this half-confidential and melancholy turn; it became sufficiently common-place so soon as she returned.

Presently Hester herself came in, to seek for a palette and various drawing materials, and replied to Trevor's salutation quietly, but with perfect grace and propriety. He noticed, however, that her style of dress was very singular. She was attired in the hideous fashion which prevailed about the years 1832 and 1833—the short petticoats—the enormous sleeves, and horrific equipments altogether. This was peculiarly strange, in an artist who, whatever her taste for portraying the stern and grand might be, must have revolted from vulgar hideousness.

Well might they say "poor" Hester! She lived in a dream of the past, and had never had courage to fling aside a fashion which belonged to the time when she had seemed very fair to the eyes of One on earth.

Few would have connected a story of romance with that pale, haggard woman of thirty? But Trevor Sefton was of the few; and by that same intuitive knowledge to which I have before alluded, and whose best name is sympathy, he felt assured some history of the heart belonged to her.

There is no wonder he felt more than commonly interested in the family whose acquaintance he had made so strangely. And though, on this occasion, he did not see the youngest daughter—now engaged in her daily duties—she was by no means forgotten in his speculations.

(To be Continued.)

FINE ARTS.

THE CAB-HORSE (St. James's)—THE CAB-HORSE (St. Giles's). Baily, Brothers.

This is a noble pair of prints, cleverly engraved from paintings by Mr. J. F. Herring, sen., Animal Painter to Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent. First we have the Cab Horse of the man of fashion—the "gwey cab-horse" of Bulwer's play; and a magnificent creature he stands, in all the pride and consciousness of strength and finely proportioned limb. A pet spaniel and an exquisite of a "tiger" are appropriate accessories to this admirable portrait of aristocratic horseflesh.

Turn we from this picture to that—the Cab-Horse of St. Giles's, also painted by Mr. Herring, and equal in life-like characteristics to its proud companion. Here too are "Cabby" and his dog, and a very flesh and blood helper—all realities of stable-Life.

The engraver in these prints has well preserved Mr. Herring's skill in equine portraiture; they are most effectively coloured.

PYRRHUS THE FIRST. Baily, Brothers.

This is a splendid portrait of the Winner of the last Derby Stakes, the property of John Gully, Esq. It is painted by Mr. Herring, sen., and is allowed to present, most faithfully, all the points of the racer. It is well engraved, and spiritedly coloured.

ROYAL THAMES YACHT CLUB MATCH FOR THREE SILVER CUPS.

On Saturday, the last grand match between the yachts of members of the Royal Thames Club came off on the river, the prizes being three splendid pieces of plate—viz., one large silver-gilt cup and cover of very elegant design, ornamented with flowers and foliage in dead gold, valued at sixty guineas, for the first boat of the first class; a silver claret jug, enriched with marine figures in alto relievo, in dead silver, value thirty guineas, for the second boat of the first class; and a smaller silver-gilt cup, value thirty guineas, for the first boat of the second class.

The distance appointed to be sailed was from Erith, round a flag buoy moored off Chapman's Head beacon, below Gravesend, and to return to Greenwich. The following yachts, belonging to the members of the club, were entered:

FIRST CLASS.

Yachts.	Tons.	Owners' Names.	Port
Belvidore	25	Lord A. Paget	London.
Ino	25	[illegible] Esq.	London.
Secret	25	J. W. Smith, Esq.	London.
Vixen	25	J. H. [illegible], Esq.	London.
Prima Donna	25	T. Harvey, Esq.	Colchester.

SECOND CLASS.

Yachts.	Tons.	Owners' Names.	Port
Ranger	12	E. W. Roberts, Esq.	London.
Sea Nymph	10	C. Wheeler, Esq.	Southampton.
Enchantress	11	[illegible] Esq.	Weymouth.
Wee Pet	12	J. W. [illegible], Esq.	London.
Waterwitch	8	F. Strickland, Esq.	London.

The Sea Nymph and the Waterwitch did not start.

At twenty-six minutes past twelve precisely the Commodore directed the signal gun for starting to be fired, and, in less time than we take to write it, a beautiful start was effected. The Ino was first under canvass, but the Belvidere was the first that paid round and got off with the lead. The Vixen, on getting away, drifted on the Prima Donna, but they speedily cleared, and the little squadron stood down the Erith Reach in the following order, with a very light wind drawing nearly from the south:—the Belvidere first, followed by the Ino, the Secret third, and the Vixen and Prima Donna last. After passing Greenhithe the breeze fell, and the boats did little more than drift with the tide. When the boats were off Gravesend the Ranger had passed all her competitors but the Ino; the Secret had also stolen up, and was now running with the Belvidere for the third place. The Enchantress, Prima Donna, and Vixen were half a mile astern.

Below Gravesend, the Belvidere shifted her topsail, and the Ino soon after followed her example. In this reach the Secret passed to windward of the Ino, while crossing on opposite tacks. Off Coal-house Point, the Commodore, finding that the yachts could not reach the beacon off Chapman's Head, the wind and tide being now against them, gave the signal for them to sail round the steamer and return. The Secret and the Ino were now close together; the latter having a slight advantage, made a short board to windward, and, putting about, was so close under the stern of the Secret, that it was with the utmost difficulty they could prevent the Ino's bowsprit from running over the quarter of the Secret. Both boats passed in quick succession round the steamer, and were hailed with loud cheers by the company on board. The following is the order, and the time in which they went round:—

		min.	sec.
1	Secret	10	20	before four o'clock.
2.	Ino	10	40	ditto
3.	Belvidere	4	25	ditto
4.	Ranger	2	23	ditto
5.	Prima Donna	2	20	past four o'clock.
6.	Enchantress	5	0	ditto
7	Vixen	11	3	ditto

The boats came in as under:

		m.	sec.
1	The Secret	11	15	before seven o'clock.
2.	The Ino	0	25	ditto
3.	Belvidere	2	30	past seven o'clock.
4	Ranger	20	45	ditto.
5.	Prima Donna	27	[illegible]	ditto.

The Vixen and Enchantress did not come up.

NEWMARKET JULY MEETING. TUESDAY.

Handicap Sweepstakes of 20 sovs each.

Lord Lonsdale's b c by Bay Middleton, out of Miss Milner	(A Day)	1
Mr. P. P. Rolt's Evenus	(Holmes)	2

The July Stakes of 50 sovs each.

Sir J. Hawley's sister to Deer Chase	(Sly)	1
Colonel Peel's Vert Vert	(Nat)	2

The betting was flat and the weather cold, but the attendance was quite as full as is usually seen at a July Meeting.

WEDNESDAY.

Purse of £50.

Sir J. Hawley's Bravissimo	(Chapple)	1
Mr. Gurney's Cantley	(Pettit)	2

The Town Plate of £50.

Sir J. Hawley's Bravissimo	(Butler)	1
Lord Lonsdale's Joy	(Bartholomew)	2

THURSDAY.

Handicap Sweepstakes.

Mr. Pettit's Alvanley	1
Mr. Watson's Libation	2

The Chesterfield Stakes.

Nerissa	1
Ibrahim Pacha	2

Won by a neck. Seven ran.

WORCESTER RACES.—TUESDAY.

The Severn Stakes of 5 sovs each, and 25 added.

Mr. E. Peel's Spithead	(H. Bradley, jun.)	1
Mr. J. Thompson's Hope		2

The Two-year-old Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 25 added.

Mr. E. Griffith's Lady Lift	(Marlow)	1
Lord Caledon's f by Simoom, out of Pergamaon		2

The Worcestershire Stakes of 20 sovs each, with 100 added.

Captain Harcourt's The Druid	(Duncan)	1
Mr. Parr's Dulcet		2

Won easy

The Members' Purse of £50. Heats.

Mr. G. Dumble's Rosin the Beau	(Whitehouse)	1
Mr. Collett's Nannie		2

WEDNESDAY.

The Selling Stakes of 5 sovs each, and 30 added.

Mr. H. Johnstone's Blind Hookey	(Marlow)	1
Mr. Barton's Princess Olga		2

The Tradesmen's Cup of £50, added to a Sweepstakes of 15 sovs each.

Mr. T. Parr's Dulcet	(Whitehouse)	1
Mr. B. Collett's Pal		2

The City Members' Plate of £50. Heats, Two Miles.

Mr. Shelmerdine's Rolla	(Whitehouse)	1
Mr. W. Smith's Master Dounes		2

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—John Day's stable was in immense force this afternoon, two of them figuring proudly at the "head of the poll;" at Newmarket and Liverpool, two being nearly, if not actually, first favourites for the St. Leger and Derby, and a fifth second favourite for the great race to come off at Goodwood!! Camera Obscura, the property of the leader of the Protectionists, was also an immense favourite; but the betting, in other respects, although it touched upon a great number of favourites, was not at all brisk. We subjoin a rather lengthy "price current:"

JULY STAKES.

5 to 4 on Cossack (t)	5 to 1 agst Galata filly	8 to 1 agst Oxygen filly

LIVERPOOL CUP.

5 to 2 agst Mendicant (t)	12 to 1 agst Telemachus (t)	26 to 1 agst As-You-Like-it
10 to 1 —— My Mary	15 to 1 —— Highwayman	18 to 1 —— Premier (t)
10 to 1 —— Satyr (t)	16 to 1 —— Intrepid	20 to 1 —— [illegible]
12 to 1 —— The Conjuror (t)	16 to 1 —— Rowena

GOODWOOD STAKES.

Even on 11 agst the field	25 to 1 agst Jenny Wren	25 to 1 agst Footstool (t)
9 to 1 agst Camera Obscura (taken)	25 to 1 —— Petitioner	25 to 1 —— Connaught Ranger (taken)
	25 to 1 —— Giantess (t)
10 to 1 —— The Hero	25 to 1 —— Orion	25 to 1 —— Red Rover
20 to 1 —— Jonathan Wild	25 to 1 —— Glossy	30 to 1 —— Bro. to Sir Henry
	40 to 1 agst Akbar (t)

ST. LEGER.

5 to 1 agst Sir Tatton Sykes	8 to 1 agst Brocardo (t)	30 to 1 agst Woodpecker
5 to 1 —— Pyrrhus the First	10 to 1 —— Grimston

DERBY.

40 to 1 agst Van Tromp (t freely)	40 to 1 agst Cossack (t freely)	50 to 1 agst Halo (t freely)
	40 to 1 —— Red Hart	50 to 1 Bingham (t)
	50 to 1 agst Crozier

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Letters from Hungary mention that fires daily broke out in every part of that country. Two towns, Lieoitz and Darandt, in the Carpathian Mountains, had greatly suffered. In the first 22 houses, and in the second upwards of 100, beside the Lutheran Church, had been reduced to ashes. There was every appearance that they had been wilfully set on fire.

The Hull Packet states that during the heavy thunder-storm of last week a shower of frogs fell from one of the surcharged clouds over the Humber, several dropped on the decks of vessels navigating the river, and a portion of the coast near Killingholme Lights was, for a time, covered by myriads of the strange arrivals.

The Impartial de Smyrne relates that a short time ago a man was found dead at Mytelene, with his head very nearly severed from his body. Another had been arrested on suspicion, when a Roumeliot came voluntarily forward and acknowledged that he was the murderer, under the following superstitious impression:—Having been a long time suffering from disease, he twice had a vision that he should recover if he killed a man, and drank his blood. He therefore went into the fields, and seeing a shepherd eating his breakfast, he took from him the knife he was using, and plunged it into his heart.

Paragraphs have of late appeared in some of the journals, declaring that the cholera was raging in Persia so violently that the third of the population had been carried off by this malady. Late intelligence, however, from that country announces that, so far from that being the case, the sanatory condition of Persia is at present most satisfactory.

It is stated from St. Petersburg, that news had been received from the interior of Russia of a tremendous hurricane along the banks of the Wolga, which destroyed between 100 000 and 150,000 chetwerts of flour, rye, wheat, linseed, &c., which were destined for St. Petersburg. The loss is very great.

The Semaphore of Marseilles states from Rome, 28th ult., that the Pope is seriously occupied with the question of a political amnesty, and that he already possesses the public confidence as to the benevolence of his intentions. The only anxiety felt was as to the person who shall receive the important appointment of Secretary of State. Nothing positive was known on the 28th on that subject. It was reported that the Pope, in order to avoid giving offence to any party in the appointment of a Secretary of State, had resolved for the present to appoint a Commission of the Government, representing all the opinions of the Conclaves.

The Duke de Bordeaux has arrived at Frohsdorf, where he has joined the Duchess d'Angouleme. It appears that the rumours in circulation concerning the precarious state of the Duchess' health are destitute of foundation.

The Augsburg Gazette states that a rupture is imminent between Persia and Turkey. Persia insists on Bagdad being restored to her, and an expedition against the town is not improbable. It is said that the Sultan is not averse to hostilities.

A letter from Vienna gives an account of the destruction of the village of Lichtenweerth, near that capital, by incendiaries. A rural judge having been elected by the aristocratic party, the peasants, in their rage, set fire to his house, but, by a change of the wind, the flames spread to the other buildings, and the authors of this wicked act became the greater sufferers by it. Previously to the election, they had threatened to perpetrate the atrocity, but no attention had been paid to the menaces.

The New Rotterdam Courant publishes in its number of July 2, a letter addressed to Mr Turing, Consul of Great Britain at Rotterdam. This letter was written in consequence of a statement in the French journal La Presse, that the eldest son of Sir Robert Peel, first Secretary of the British Legation at Switzerland, had been lately arrested, and cast into prison at London, for the non-payment of bills of exchange given for debts incurred at the gaming table. Mr. Turing, in refutation of so odious an imputation, states that he has a letter from Mr. Peel, dated Berne, June 20, last; Mr Peel, far from being in prison at London for bills, was in the exercise of his functions as Secretary to the Legation at Berne.

A Vienna letter of the 28th ult., in a Frankfort journal, mentions a report that the States of Lower Austria have requested the Government to abolish all the taxes on articles of consumption, and substitute for them a direct tax upon property.

The three hundredth anniversary of the birth of the illustrious astronomer, Tycho Brahe, was celebrated with great pomp on the 21st ult., at the island of Hveen, near Copenhagen. A great number of steamers filled with passengers arrived from the capital on the occasion. The total number of visitors was estimated at 8000, viz., 5000 Danes, 1000 Norwegians, and 2000 Swedes. In the evening there was a banquet, at which 2000 persons were seated.

A Frankfort letter of the 5th states that the Treaty of Reciprocity between England and Prussia against literary piracy has been ratified. The principal clauses of the treaty are as follow:—"The rights of publishers in both countries are to be the same, but dramatic works are not included in this provision. The import duties in England on Prussian books are to be reduced; no works contrary to morality are to be admitted in either country. The treaty is to have its course from the 1st of September next, for five years, and to continue, unless a year's notice be given on either side of a wish to annul it.

The Belgian papers state that the Treaty of Commerce between Holland and Belgium was concluded and signed on the 4th instant.

A letter from Amsterdam states that in consequence of the increased intercourse between that city and Rotterdam, the Government has determined, notwithstanding the railway communication existing between those two places by the Hague, to have a direct line established.

The Royal Academy has sent a donation of £50 towards the fund for the relief of the widow and family of the late Mr. Haydon.

The Grand Council of Geneva has terminated the discussion on the instructions to be given to the Deputies whom it sends to the Diet. The proposition to declare the affair of the Jesuits a federal question has been rejected in the same proportion as last year. As to what concerns the alliance of the seven Catholic cantons, the deputation of Geneva will not pronounce at present.

From a parliamentary return it appears that the commission to inquire into the potato disease cost £19,000.

IRELAND.

THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—Mr. O'Connell was at the meeting of the Repeal Association, last Monday, and made a long speech, amidst vociferous cheering. He said it was clear that they had arrived at a period which might be productive of much good or of much evil. Everything depended on their own exertions, and the real question was, whether the Association itself would not disparage the great cause by any proceedings which it might institute itself. They witnessed the defeat of one of the most powerful Ministries that England had ever seen. Sir Robert Peel, at the commencement of his career, had a majority of one hundred in the House of Commons, backed, he might say, by the entire House of Lords. Yet that Government, powerful as it was, had vanished, he might almost say, into thin air. The fall of Sir R. Peel, strange as it might be, was one of the most graceful acts of his whole political life, he might add dynasty. He resigned power not to advance any particular interest, or to promote any private motives; not to increase his own fortune, or to augment his titles or dignity. He lost power in a struggle to feed the hungry, to elevate the condition of the artizan. He took a stand on the part of the people, and against the combined aristocracy of the kingdom. The part which Sir Robert Peel took was a glorious part, and deserved the unbounded praise of the empire. It was certainly a cheering spectacle to witness such disinterestedness and philanthropy in a statesman of the present day. What was their duty? What was the course which the Irish people ought to pursue under present circumstances? The wonderful success which had attended the persevering and untiring exertions of the Anti Corn-law League ought to inspire them with new hopes and fresh expectations that the object on which they were bent might not unreasonably be expected. The success of Cobden was the triumph of moral force—a principle which he might say was first acted upon by the people of Ireland. The Chartists, on the contrary, had adopted physical force, and what had become of them? They were not in existence. The Corn Laws then were repealed, and their repeal was mainly owing to the Liberal Irish Members. The people of England were, therefore, bound in gratitude to assist the Irish people in obtaining measures of amelioration, it remained to be seen whether they would. The honourable gentleman then proceeded to review the proceedings in Parliament, consequent on the Coercion Bill, and the circumstances which led to its defeat, and then dwelt at some length on the early history of the Repeal agitation, and averred that his primary object, in raising that cry, was for the purpose of extracting justice from England. It was with a similar view that he established the Precursor Society. He came to Ireland to tell them, first, that he intended, at the earliest possible moment in the next session of Parliament, to bring under the consideration of the Legislature the question of the Repeal of the Union. Secondly, he required the Association to declare what acts they conceived to be necessary for placing the people of the two countries on an equal footing in point of civil rights. Thirdly, he required their sentiments on a law to alter the relations between landlord and tenant. Fourthly, he wished means to be taken for restoring the influence of the Association throughout the country. Fifthly, he insisted on an immediate attention to the registry, particularly in such places as were likely soon to become vacant; and, sixthly, that the Committee of the Association should fix on such candidates to fill the vacancies as they consider proper. After reiterating the objects of eleven Acts of Parliament which he claimed as a matter of justice for Ireland, Mr. O'Connell said that he was very moderate in his demands. He only wanted one to make up the dozen; he was like the school-boy who wrote to his mother, "send me eleven shirts to make up the dozen," (laughter); he had the eleven shirts. It might be said that if England granted all these measures he would give up Repeal. In the first place, he was not giving up Repeal, and he would never give it up.—The rent was £114 9s.

CRICKET.—The match—Sussex v. Kent—terminated on Saturday afternoon, in favour of Kent, by a single innings and three runs. Subjoined are the numbers scored on the game, which lasted three days, and attracted some thousands to Box's Cricket Ground:—Kent, 33[illegible]; Sussex, 187.

ROYAL HARWICH YACHT CLUB.—The annual regatta of this distinguished club, of which J. H. W. P. Smith Pigott, Esq., R.Y.S., is now Commodore, hoisting his flag in his own vessel, the Ganymede, 70 tons, will come off in Harwich Harbour on Friday and Saturday, the 17th and 18th inst.

The regattas at Havre are fixed for the 28th and 29th of the present month.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE. The Nobility, Subscribers to the Opera are respectfully informed that Mdlle. TAGLIONI, having yielded to the entreaties of her friends, has consented to appear again for a few nights previous [illegible] FINAL RETIREMENT from the Stage.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Nobility, Subscribers and the Public, are respectfully informed, that there will be an EXTRA NIGHT, THURSDAY NEXT, JULY 16th, when will be presented, for the Last Time this Season, Rossini's celebrated Opera, entitled IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA. Rosina, Mdme. Grisi [illegible] Sig. Mario; Bartolo, Sig. Lablache, and Figaro, Sig. Fornasari. [illegible] venting, a Selection from the highly successful New Grand Ballet, en- [illegible]

With the LAST SCENE of Bellini's Opera, LA SONNAMBULA. Amina, Madame Castellan. Selections from the Grand Ballet CATARINA; ou, La Fille du Bandit. The admired Grand Pas du Masque, by Mdlle. Lucile Grahn.

And will be revived the admired Ballet of LA GITANA. La Gitana, Mdlle. Taglioni. [illegible] tions for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. [illegible]

THEATRE ROYAL DRURY LANE.—The Public is respectfully informed that the BELGIAN OPERA COMPANY will positively begin their performances on WEDNESDAY, 15th of JULY.—Principal Performers, Mdmes. Laborde, Jullien, Charton, Guichard, MM. Laborde, Massol, Zelger, and Condere. Operas: Les Huguenots, Robert le Diable, Guillaume Tell, La Guise, La Favorite, Le Comte Ory.

Private Boxes and Stalls to be obtained, either for the series or by the night, of Mr. PARSONS, at the Theatre, from ten till four.

THEATRE ROYAL COVENT GARDEN.—M. JULLIEN'S [illegible] GRAND BAL MAS[illegible] July 20. Every preparation is being made to render this Entertainment in every respect equal, if not superior [illegible] M. Jullien's former Balls. The decorations, both illuminative and floral, will be on a scale of profu[illegible] its construction.—Tickets for the Ball, [illegible] for whom the audience portion of the Theatre will be, as before, set apart), will be [illegible]

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—[illegible] On MONDAY NEXT, JULY 20th, WALLETT the CLOWN'S BENEFIT. First and only night of T. BARRY and W. F. WALLETT as the RIVAL CLOWNS.

Tickets may be had at the Theatre, and of Mr. Wallett, at his Cigar Divan, Kennington-road, near the Cross.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. [illegible] Fashion. Seventh Week of OUR ASIATIC CONQUESTS. Monday, July 13, and during the [illegible] cluding with A RACE FOR A DINNER. Box-office open from Eleven to Five.—Stage Director, Mr. T. Thompson. Commence each evening at Seven o'clock.

COLOSSEUM.—LONDON BY NIGHT.—NOTICE.—The Nobility and Gentry are most respectfully informed, the Colosseum will remain Open during the Season until Eleven o'Clock, and that the atmospheric effects in the marvellous Panorama of London by Night, will take place every half hour. Grand Orchestral Organ, from Three till Five and Eight till Half-past Ten. Holiday Prices continued.

DAY EXHIBITION. Panorama of London—Museum of Sculpture—Conservatories—Aviary [illegible] from Ten till Half-past Five, and Half-past Seven till Eleven.

The whole projected and designed by Mr. W. BRADWELL.

PUBLIC BREAKFAST and MORNING CONCERT in CREMORNE GARDENS, CHELSEA, in preparation for WEDNESDAY, JULY 15th, [illegible] —the newly-elected Lavender Flowers, and the Million and one natural attractions of this truly Noble Domain, are thrown open to the Public for Promenade and Inspection every Sunday at Half-past Four o'clock. No charge is made for admission, but every visitor is expected to take a Refreshment Card to the amount of Sixpence. N.B.—The Public are most respectfully requested not to pick the Flowers, or tread on the borders of the Beds.

NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.—The TWELFTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, at their GALLERY, 53, PALL MALL, near St. James's Palace. Admission, 1s.; Catalogue, 6d.

JAS. FAHEY, Secretary.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A new and Interesting Lecture, by Dr. RYAN, on the PHENOMENA and EFFECTS of HEAT and COLD, at Half-past Three Daily, and the Evenings of Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at Nine o'clock. Professor BACHHOFFNER'S LECTURES on NATURAL PHILOSOPHY, with brilliant experiments, Daily. MACINTOSH'S REVOLVING ENGINE, COLEMAN'S PATENT LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE for ascending and descending Inclined Planes, FAR[illegible] nified by the OPAQUE MICROSCOPE. The OXY-HYDROGEN MICROSCOPE, exhibiting [illegible] Living Objects. A beautiful Picture of the CHAPEL in the CONVENT of [illegible] near Jerusalem, by Mr. Charles Smith, is one of the Series of DISSOLVING VIEWS [illegible] Admission, 1s.; Schools Half-price.

THE ENGLISH ARISTOCRACY.—This day, Second Edition, price reduced to 5s., bound in cloth, THE ARISTOCRACY OF ENGLAND. A History for the People. By JOHN HAMPDEN, Junior. Cromwell: "What then is the great root of all our grievances?" Pym: "The Aristocracy." Give their true history, and you unriddle the secret of every national embarrassment." EFFINGHAM WILSON, 11, Royal Exchange.

EUGENE SUE and ALEXANDRE DUMAS.—LOBSTER[illegible] l'Enfant Trouvé, by Eugene Sue; and Les Mémoires d'un Médecin, by Alexandre Dumas. WILLIAM THOMAS, Publisher, 21, Catherine-street, Strand. Orders received by all Booksellers.

[illegible]

ADVICE to the DEAF, with Remarks on Deafness, founded on the experience of upwards of 30,000 cases. "The author appears well versed in its diseases."—Lancet. "Mr. Curtis has done more for the cure of diseases of the ear than any other man living."—Monthly Magazine. London: WHITTAKER and CO., Ave-Maria-lane.

Just published, [illegible]s. 6d., postage free,

THE HAIR and its PRESERVATION, with Instructions for Keeping It in a Healthy Condition. By Madame BERNARD, whose treatment of the hair is recommended by Dr. Locock, Accoucheur to the Queen.

14, John-street, Adelphi, and 4, Old Bond-street.

THE HORTICULTURAL FETE THIS DAY.

FLOWERS and FLOWER SHOWS. By an Eminent Authoress. Being No. 15 of The TOPIC, price 3d. Preparing, [illegible] tal Travel—France. No. 17. Ditto—Northern Italy, Switzerland, Rhenish [illegible]; No. 18. Ditto—Southern Italy, Central Germany. Just issued, [illegible] isting of 13 articles, by writers for the quarterly reviews. In cloth, 3s. 6d.

C. MITCHELL, Red Lion-court, Fleet-street.

HOW TO LIVE.—Price 1s., by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, AND AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.

By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c.

Sherwood, 23, Paternoster-row; Carvalho, 147, Fleet-street; Hannay, 63, Oxford-street; Mann, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand.

Now Ready, Fourth Edition, entirely re-written, price 10s. 6d., cloth,

THE ART OF CHESS-PLAY; New Treatise on Chess. By GEORGE WALKER. Comprising all the best methods of playing the Openings and Ends of Games; and including the new Discoveries of Von Der Lasa, Von Jaenisch, St. Amant, Kieseritzkij, Calvi, &c.

Also,

WALKER'S CHESS MADE EASY, exclusively for Beginners, 3s. 6d.

WALKER'S EDITION of STURGES'S GUIDE to the GAME of DRAUGHTS, 4s. 6d.

WALKER'S CRIBBAGE-PLAYER'S TEXT-BOOK, 3s. 6d.

London: SHERWOOD, GILBERT, and PIPER, Paternoster-row.

CHEAP EDITION. VOL. IV.

D'AUBIGNE'S REFORMATION, price 5s., is Now Ready, in post 8vo. cloth. Also, OLIVER and BOYD'S STANDARD EDITION of the [illegible] being the only English Edition corrected and authenticated by the Author. Large Type, with Autograph, post 8vo., cloth. Price of the whole, 14s. Extensive Additions, not hitherto published, have been made by Dr. D'Aubigne to this Edition; and, in a new Preface, written expressly for it, he says:—"I have revised this translation line by line, and word by word; and I have restored the sense wherever I did not find it clearly rendered. It is the only one which I [illegible] corrected. I declare, in consequence, that I acknowledge this translation as the only faithful expression of my thoughts in the English language, and I recommend it as such to all my readers." OLIVER and BOYD, Edinburgh. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co., London.

Just Published, with Engravings, Fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d. plain, 5s. 6d. coloured,

THE WONDER SEEKER; or, the History of Charles [illegible] By M. F. TYTLER. "Miss Tytler is [illegible] in this department of literature that we at present possess."—Edinburgh Witness.—Mrs. HOF- [illegible]

HOWITT'S PRIESTCRAFT, EIGHTH EDITION.

This day, in 12mo., cloth, price reduced to 5s.

NEW AND IMPROVED EDITION OF THE POPULAR HISTORY of PRIESTCRAFT, in all Ages and Nations, with large additions. By WILLIAM HOWITT.

We spirits are not citizens of the earth, but of the city of God, [illegible] the universe, and [illegible] d?"—Shubert's Present State of Christianity [illegible] the World. [illegible], Royal Exchange.

MONS. LEPAGE'S FRENCH SCHOOL COMPLETE; designed to supersede the necessity of visiting France (at the risk of morals) to acquire the Parisian accent. New and improved edition, in one vol., price reduced to 9s. 6d., [illegible], THE FRENCH SCHOOL; comprising the "Echo de Paris," "Gift of Fluency in French Conversation," and the "Last Step to French." Each of which may be had separately, as the pupil progresses. "The first of the works comprised in this collection is so well known to the public, and has met with so large a sale, that we need not further notice it. To the utility of the two latter works we beg to offer our unqualified testimony of praise. In 'The Last Step to French,' we have a grammar of the language, superior, in our opinion, to any that has preceded it, both in sound, etymological research, and in the simplicity of its arrangement, whilst the collection of M. Lepage's three works into a single volume, furnishes [illegible] library for the student in French, and at the same time a manual of conversation, [illegible] to learn and to speak the language."—Parthenon. London: EFFINGHAM WILSON, 11, Royal Exchange; Messrs. LONGMAN and Co., and all Booksellers.

Just Published, price 1s., the Fourth Edition (Translated from the Nineteenth French Edition.)

CONSTIPATION DESTROYED, or, Exposition of a Natural, Simple, Agreeable, and Infallible Means, not only of overcoming, but [illegible] physicians and other persons of distinction. Free by post, 1s. 6d. Sold by JAMES [illegible], Tea Dealers, 40, Ludgate-hill, London, and by all Booksellers in the United Kingdom.

[illegible], PRICE EIGHTEEN [illegible].

THE COMING HOME. A COMIC PANORAMA. DRAWN BY LEECH.

London: ACKERMANN and Co., Strand; [illegible] RENSHAW and KIRKMAN, 12, Budge-row; [illegible]; WESTLEY, [illegible] DORLING, Epsom [illegible]

Just pub[illegible]

SOYER'S COOKERY; or, The Gastronomic Regenerator. Dedicated, by permission, to His Royal Highness the DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE. Published by SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co., Stationers' Hall-court; and sold by JOHN OLLIVIER, Pall-mall.

DOUGLAS JERROLD'S WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, of Saturday next the 18th of July, will contain the commencement of several Series of [illegible] of Social Importance and Entertainment, by himself and his Eminent Literary Associates; [illegible] a mass of News and Information well digested and arranged, suitable to family reading. [illegible] 69, Strand, where Prospectuses can be had, Gratis, or of any Town or Country news- [illegible]

TO ADVERTISERS.—DOUGLAS JERROLD'S WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, circulating amongst thousands of all [illegible] will afford an ext[illegible] opportunity to Advertisers. Advertisements, as far as possible classified and inserted in leading places according to priority of reception at the Office, 169, Strand, where prospectuses can be had, Gratis, or of any Town or Country Newsvender.

SUPERIOR SCHOOL BOOKS.—BUTTER'S ETYMOLOGICAL SPELLING BOOK and EXPOSITOR; an Introduction to the Spelling, Pronunciation, and Derivation of the English Language. 92nd Edition. Price 1s. 6d. bound. BUTTER'S GRADATIONS IN READING AND SPELLING, upon an entirely new and original [illegible]

Sold by Simpkin and Co., Whittaker and Co., Longman and Co., Hamilton and Co., London; H. Mozley and Son, Derby; Oliver and Boyd, Edinburgh, and J. Mc Glashan, Dublin.

EDUCATION.—The Sons of the Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and [illegible] ed by Mr. E. POCOCKE for the Unive[illegible] general. Ready access is granted to a well-selected [illegible] the additional advantage of numerous MSS., especially in the Persic and Arabic. A prospectus and view of the house may be had on application to the Principal, Mr. E. POCOCKE, Arno's Court, Brislington, between Bath and Bristol.

A SCOTCH TWEED GOTHA JACKET FOR 30s.—This Jacket, which is well suited to be worn by Gentlemen when shooting, angling, in the library, or country ramble, is made to measure, in a first-rate style of fit and workmanship, [illegible]; best ditto, ditto, 38s. At GRAVES'S, fashionable tailor and trowsers maker, 313, High Holborn.

TROWSERS! TROWSERS!! TROWSERS!!!—A good [illegible] and Tailor, 313, High Holborn, after many years' experience and study, is enabled to assert [illegible] A new assorted stock of the newest designs to select from.—R. GRAVES, 313, High Holborn.

BERDOE'S WATERPROOF OVER COATS, for the SUMMER; also SHOOTING JACKETS.—The reputation of these well known garments has been so long established that they now need no other recommendation. For quality, workmanship, style, a quiet, gentlemanly, and respectable appearance, lightness, convenience, moderate cost, durability, and especially for being really waterproof (and not so in name only), they are unquestionably still unrivalled, notwithstanding the numerous competitors their well-known extensive sale has produced. By royalty and a long list of noblemen and gentlemen of the highest rank and tit[illegible] been patronized. Made only by W. BERDOE, tailor [illegible] th side, and shortly at 96, New Bond [illegible]

REGISTERED PALETOT OF LLAMA CLOTH.—This Garment, mostly used as an Overcoat, is, during the hot weather, both in this country and abroad, worn without another coat, the same one will happily suit both purposes. To its gentlemanly appearance and moderate price, joined to the peculiar elasticity and lightness of the material, may be ascribed the cause of its being universally a public favourite. It can be [illegible]

NEW and SPLENDID PARISIAN ESTABLISHMENT for PERFUMERY, GLOVES [illegible] L. T. PIVER, Proprietor of the two largest Houses of the kin[illegible] and also at Brussels, begs most respectfully to inform the Nob[illegible] general, that, for the splendid and unique London Establis[illegible] LAUVERGNAT BROTHERS, who have been [illegible] variety, quality, and cheapness, of L. T. Piver's Perfumery and Gloves (already patronised by all the Nobility), will give an entire satisfaction to the customers that wi[illegible] their patronage.

LADIES before leaving Town would be thoroughly repaid by calling at NUNN'S, who has very considerably reduced the price of his acknowledged reasonable and pretty Summer Stock of French Canzous, Guimpes, Habit Shirts Sleeves, Collars, Pocket Handkerchiefs, Lace Visites, &c.; also, Dress, Bonnet, and Night Caps, all shapes, makes, and prices. Amongst a number of other articles that may be mentioned as worthy of notice, is a quantity of imitation old Point Laces almost equal to the real, with this difference: what would cost 10s. a yard [illegible] can be obtained for 10d. About 500 In- [illegible]

THE HAIR.—The celebrated QUIN-JULEP and POMADE, for strengthening and restoring the hair, and preventing its prematurely turning grey, are patronized by the Royal Family, and the Nobility, and Faculty. They are an invaluable acquisition to the nursery; and in cases of Nervous Headache, a little of the Quin-Julep ap- [illegible] Prepared only by J. S. ELVIDGE, [illegible] Mrs. Park[illegible] gh-street, Pimlico, where it may be obtained, and of the following authorised Ag[illegible] ather and Harding, 4, Cheapside; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; [illegible] ston, 68, Cornhill; [illegible] Strand; F. Dann, 235, Oxford-street, near Hyde [illegible] House; [illegible], Wigm[illegible] sh-square; P. Grignon, 174, Regent-street; J. [illegible] Queen's-row, Pimlico; Ch[illegible] 54, Piccadilly; White, 228, Piccadilly; Giddings, 16, Ox[illegible] 0, Strand.

TURNING LATHES of best London manufacture.—G. and J. DEANE invite attention to their Stock of LATHES, and Machinery therewith connected; together with the very best description of Lancashire TOOLS of every kind. [illegible] mination to supply only such articles as may be confidently relied upon for accuracy of construction and finish. Chucks of every description, Slide-rests, Rose-engines, and other apparatus constructed on the most approved principles. Alterations and repairs promptly attended to. All kinds of machinery built to order.—DEANE'S, Gun Manufactory, 30, King William-street, London-bridge.

PATENT FLEXIBLE VELVET HATS.—JOHNSON and CO., 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street, hatters to the Queen and Royal Family, inventors and patentees.—From the construction of the Patent Flexible Hats, the unpleasant pressure on the forehead is entirely removed; and by their extreme elasticity they are capable of accommodating themselves perfectly to the shape of the head; the crown, moreover, being ventilated, and the perspiration prevented from appearing on the outside of the hat, are additional advantages. As Ladies' Riding Hats, they are light and elastic, and will retain their position on the head without the least discomfort.—JOHNSON and Co., 113, Regent-street; and GRIFFITHS and JOHNSON, 2, Old Bond-street.

BUTLER'S TASTELESS SEIDLITZ POWDER, in one Bottle.—This useful aperient preparation, besides forming an equally efficient, and far more agreeable draught than that produced with the common Seidlitz Powders, is made in much less time, and with infinitely less trouble. To allay fever or thirst, a teaspoonful, in water, forms a most refreshing saline draught. Being inclosed in a bottle, it will remain uninjured by humidity during the longest sea voyage or land journey. Sold at 2s. 6d. the bottle (which is enclosed in a case, and accompanied by a measure and spoon), by the Preparers, BUTLER and HARDING, Chemists, 4, Cheapside, corner of St. Paul's, London; and may be obtained of J. SANGER, 150, Oxford-street, DAVENPORT and STEDMAN, 20, Waterloo-place, Edinburgh; and also of their Agents in every part of the kingdom.— Be careful to order "Butler's" Tasteless Seidlitz Powder, and to observe the address.

ARCHITECTURAL ENRICHMENTS.—BIELEFELD'S improved PAPIER MACHE, which has been almost universally adopted for architectural decoration, has been patronised by her Majesty, by the Hon. Commissioners of Board of Works, by the highest of the nobility and gentry, and by the most eminent architects of the day. It has been used at the Royal Palaces at the present House of Lords, at Drayton Manor, the new Conservative Club-house, &c. also at the British Museum, and Pantheon Bazaar, where it has been extensively used for some years, and an inspection will sufficiently establish its superiority over every other kind of composition both for beauty and durability. Designs prepared for the decoration of ceilings, panelling of walls, &c. A volume of enrichments, containing more than 1000 designs of the papier maché ornaments, with a tariff, price £1.—Works, 15, Wellington-street North, Strand.

ROBINSON and AUMONIER, Silversmiths and Jewellers, 153, Leadenhall-street, London, beg to inform their friends and the public, that they continue to sell SILVER SPOONS and FORKS, at 7s. 2d. per oz., and every other article in GOLD and SILVER upon the most reasonable terms. The utmost value given for Old Plate and Jewels. Mourning Orders executed on the shortest notice. Plate for Presentation designed with taste and economy. Best Plated Ware. Also, the newly invented Electro and Magneto Electro-Plate, composed of white metal, extremely hard and durable, and will engrave on any part the same as real silver, which it so nearly resembles that it can only be told therefrom by assaying. Sconce Candlesticks for warm climates. Superior Cutlery, &c. Country Orders faithfully and punctually attended to.

SILVER TEA SERVICES of New Patterns.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Working Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, respectfully [illegible]

[illegible]		£10 [illegible] 0		[illegible]		£[illegible]
Ditto	Sugar Basin	6 14 0		Ditto	Sugar Basin	7 [illegible] 0
Ditto	Cream-jug	4 10 6		Ditto	Cream Ewer	5 2 0
Ditto	Coffee-pot	14 10 0		Ditto	Coffee-pot	16 17 0
Complete		£35 12 6		Complete		£42 10 0

A variety of upwards of 50 Silver Tea and Coffee Services may be seen in the Show Ro[illegible] and on applica[illegible] n the Illustrated pri[illegible] taining drawings, with the [illegible]

THE ROYAL NAVAL, MILITARY, EAST INDIA, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 13, WATERLOO-PLACE, LONDON.

DIRECTORS.

Lieut.-Col. Sir Frederick Smith, K.H., R.E., Chairman.
Col. Sir William Gossett, C.B., K.C.H., R.E., Deputy Chairman.
Admiral the Right Hon. Sir G. Cockburn, G.C.B., M.P.
Major-Gen. Sir J. Cockburn, Bt., G.C.H.
Gen. Sir Thos. Bradford, G.C.B., G.C.H.
Major-Gen. Sir P. Ross, G.C.M.G., K.C.H.
Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Gardiner, K.C.B.
Major-Gen. Sir H. D. Ross, K.C.B., R.A.
Capt. Sir George Back, R.N.
Major-Gen. Taylor, C.B., E.I.C.S.
Major-Gen. Edward Wynyard, C.B.
Major-Gen. Arnold, K.H., R.E.
Major-Gen. Cleiland, E.I.C.S.
Lieut.-Col. H. Hanmer, K.H., late R.H.G.
Lieut.-Col. Purchas, E.I.C.S.
Lieut.-Col. Matson, R.E.
Major Shadwell Clerke, K.H., F.R.S.
Archibald Hair, Esq., M.D., late R.H.G.
Capt. William Lancey, R.E.
William Chard, Esq., Navy Agent.
James Nugent Daniell, Esq.
Wilbraham Taylor, Esq.

ACTUARY—JOHN FINLAISON, Esq., the Government Calculator.

Assurances are granted upon the Lives of Persons in EVERY station of Life, and for every part of the World, upon particularly favourable terms. [illegible]

A Bonus amounting to 30 per Cent. on the actual value of the Policies, was apportioned to the Assured at the First Septennial Meeting, held in [illegible].

JOSEPH C. BRETTELL, Secretary.

AS COMPANION.—A Lady is desirous of engaging in the [illegible]

HEAL and SONS' LIST of BEDDING, containing a full description of w[illegible] which persons [illegible] enabled to judge the [illegible]s that are best suite[illegible] HEAL and SON, Feather D[illegible]

MONEY TO ANY AMOUNT immediately advanced, by way of Annuity or otherwise, upon Real or Personal Security, such as Freehold, Leasehold, [illegible] personally or by letter) to be made to Mr. BULGIN, 22, Regent-street.

WATCHES and CLOCKS.—A Pamphlet, explaining the various constructions and the advantages of each, with a List of Prices, will be forwarded, gratis, by post, if applied for by a post-paid letter. T. COX SAVORY and Co., [illegible] 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise [illegible] improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute p[illegible] reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

ITALIAN ALABASTER, MARBLE, BRONZE, DERBYSHIRE SPAR, and other ORNAMENTS for the Drawing-room, Library, and Dining-room, consisting of a new and elegant assortment of Vases, Figures, Groups, Candlesticks, [illegible]

Imported and manufactured by J. TENNANT, late Mawe, 149, Strand, London.

COINS of ANCIENT EGYPT, GREECE, and ROME.—PETER WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins and Medals, 46, Strand, London, has just [illegible] two stamps. Assignats of the French Revolution, 1s.; Ancient Roman Brass Coins, with good portraits of the Emperors, 1s. each. Pennies of the Conqueror, 2s. and 2s. 6d. each. [illegible]

GOLDEN METAMORPHOSIS.—Old Fly-spotted and Discoloured Gilt Frames are Restored to their original Beauty and Lustre, at a few [illegible] each, by sponging them with UPTON'S GOLD DETERGENT. Price, 2s. 6d. per bottle. [illegible] Molu, Lacquer, Frosted Glass, and Non-abrasive Plate Detergent, 1s. 6d. p[illegible] had of UPTON and Co., 24, Pentonville-hill, opposite Penton-street; and of Shopkeepers in general.

LIGHTER and SOFTER than FLANNEL. THRESHER'S INDIAN GAUZE WAISTCOATS, manufactured expressly for warm climates, are per- [illegible]

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to Pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted. Millinery Rooms.

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very Low Prices, for Cash, by JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linen-Drapers to the Queen, at their Family Linen Warehouse, 26, Regent-street, two doors below Piccadilly Circus. Parcels above £5 sent throughout England carriage paid. [illegible] established for nearly Seventy Years. [illegible]

SYLPHIDE PARASOLS.—W. and J. SANGSTER beg to solicit an inspection of their PARASOLS for the Season, manufactured in Glacé and Moiré silks of the most Elegant patterns yet offered to the Public. A large assortment of every other description of Parasols, including the Claremont, Marquise, &c. &c.—W. and J. SANGSTER, Patentees, 140, Regent-street; 94, Fleet-street; and 10, Royal Exchange.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, Fire-proof Safes, and Cash Boxes.—Chubb's [illegible] and also give immediate notice of any attempt to open them. Chubb's Patent Fire-proof Safes, Bookcases, Chests, &c., strong Japan Cash Boxes, and Deed Boxes, of all sizes, fitted with Detector Locks.—C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard.

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS and GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, kitchen ranges, iron bedsteads, fenders, fire-irons, general furnishing ironmongery, tinned copper, iron and best tin cooking vessels, best [illegible] plate and [illegible] japanned trays, tea urns, ornamental iron and wire works, for [illegible]. Every article is warranted, and marked at the lowest [illegible] adjoining the Royal Bazaar, 58, Baker-street, Portman-sq.

PERVILE pretio vendere negotiari tutissime, et globus nivalis periendo cumulare procurritur; in other words, who sell the cheapest, trade securest, and, like the snow-ball, gather as they go. Acting ever faithfu[illegible] EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY can secure to the Public TEAS, in 6lb. bags, at 2s. 6d., 2s. 10d., 3s. 6d., and 3s. 10d. per lb.; and COFFEE at 9d., 1s., 1s. 2d., and 1s. 5d., at the old warehouses, No. 9, Great St. Helen's-churchyard, City.

HOCKIN'S PREPARATION OF SEIDLITZ POWDER IN ONE BOTTLE keeps in every situation. The dose can be apportioned to form a moderate, refreshin[illegible]ge, or saline draught, so as to suit all ages and constitutions.— It is the [illegible] a Natural Spring, and is the best Family Medicine. It instantly stops sickness [illegible] HOCKIN, 38, Duke-street, Manchester-square.

METCALFE'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—Useful Inquiry.—For proof of the extreme durability, power, cleaning, and true economy, ask all who have used Metcalfe's Brushes. The Tooth-brush performs the highly important office of searching thoroughly into the divisions, and cleaning in the most extraordinary manner; hairs never come loose. 1s. Peculiarly penetrating Hair- [illegible] Improved Clothes-brush, that cleans harmlessly in one-third the time. The new Velvet [illegible] at METCALFE'S only Establishment, 130 B, Oxford-street, one door from H[illegible]

CAUTION.—Beware of the word "from" Metcalf[illegible]

FOR FILLING DECAYED TEETH.—DALE'S ENAMEL, price 2s. 6d. This preparation is confidently offered to the Public as the best material [illegible] for filling Decayed Teeth, which it effects without giving the least pain or [illegible] a short time, as hard and as durable as the tooth itself, and, by [illegible] g the access of air, it arrests all further possible progress of decay. The preparation, before use, is in a soft state, and continues so for a short time, and it may, therefore, be used by any person with perfect facility, and is [illegible] however large the cavity.—Prepared by JOHN DALE, Analytical Chemist, Manches[illegible]; in packets, at 2s. 6d. each, by most respectable Druggists and Medicine Venders in the kingdom.—Directions for use are enclosed with each packet.—Wholesale agents, Messrs. [illegible] HEAD and ROBERTS, Manchester, and BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon-street, L[illegible]

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.—Price 2s. 6d.

Patronized by her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert.

MR. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM for Stopping Decayed Teeth, however large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any pressure or pain, and soon becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum t[illegible] 20, Regent-street; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street, [illegible] Butler, 4[illegible] and all Medicine Venders in the Kingdom.

Mr. T[illegible] of Teeth on his new system of self-adhes[illegible], witho[illegible] springs or wires [illegible] d does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any [illegible] ful operation what[illegible] and is much less expensive than others. Mr. THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-stre[illegible]

THE NEWLY-OPENED HOUSES.

(A BRIEF OUTLINE.)

The extensive New Establishment of [illegible] is now open for the transaction of the various features of its business, a[illegible] anxious to state the principles upon which it is conducted, and the [illegible] has opened. Bespoke customers have now devoted to them a [illegible] ms, entered by a Private Waiting Hall, 84, Aldgate. There are [illegible] Waistcoat Room. Ladies are informed that a private Habit Room is likewi[illegible] E. MOSES and SON have made other additions, too numerous to name at present. The "Ready-Made" Department is at least four times its former extent, and its business will, consequently, be despatched with much greater facility. This department occupies 85, and 86, Aldgate. The Hat Depôt is at 83, Aldgate, and is furnished with every description of [illegible] and Caps, of the best quality and fashion. The Hosi[illegible] tinguished for the worth and variety of its a[illegible] chases are made. The Outfitting and General C[illegible] and 155, Minories, has equal recommendations, and is an i[illegible] eature in the New [illegible] es of E. MOSES and SON. Let it be remembered that "Ec[illegible] the maxim at the new Establishment, as it was at the old; and be it also remembered, that the Proprietors still adhere to the marking of the articles in plain-figured prices, from which no abatement can be made. Let it be borne in mind, also, that any articles may be exchanged, or that the price of the article may be returned, without the least hesitation. For particulars [illegible] Self-Measur[illegible] t, and other essential information, see the new book, entitled "Past, Present, and Future," which may be had gratis and post-free, of the Proprietors, E. MOSES and SON, 154, 155, 156, 157, Minories, and 83, 84, 85, and 86, Aldgate, City, London.

E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Woollen-drapers, Clothiers, Hatters, Hosiers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen, regret to be obliged to guard the public against imposition; but, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood "of being connected with them," or "it's the same concern," has been resorted to in many instances, and for obvious reasons, they have [illegible]

GRAND REVIEW AT WOOLWICH.

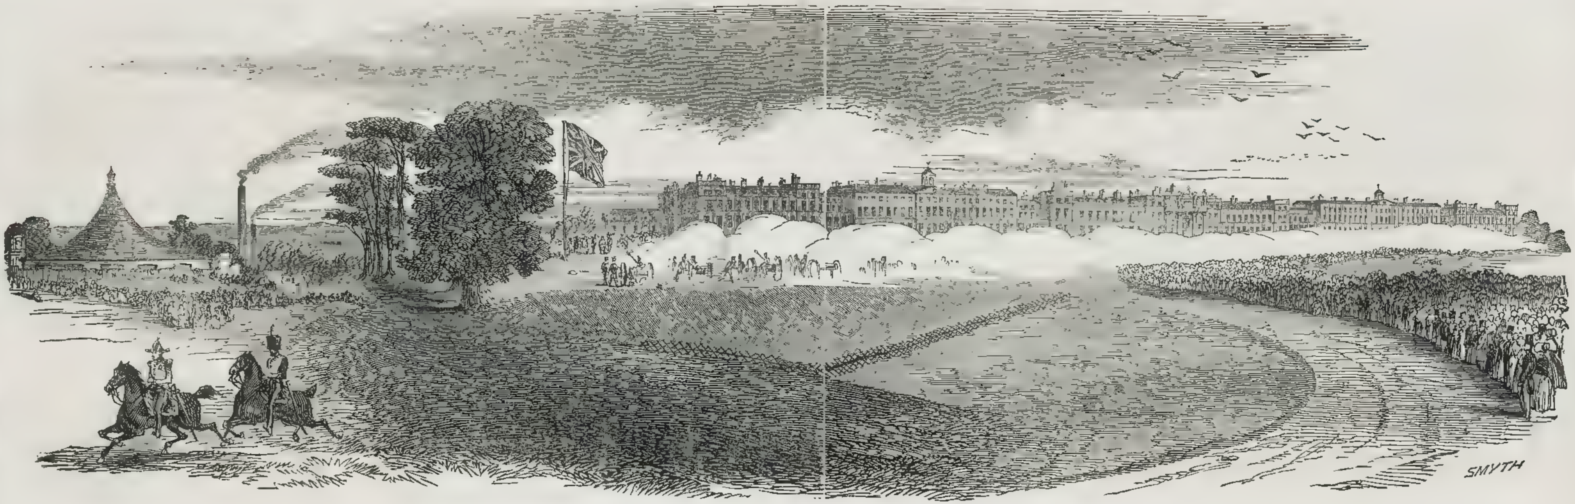
In our Journal of last week, we detailed the visit of Ibrahim Pacha to Wool- [illegible] in the two engravings upon the next page.

The Review did not take place until the afternoon, after Ibrahim Pacha had inspected the laboratory, the foundry and the carriage department, at Woolwich. His Highness and state then partook of a déjeûner at the mess-room; on leaving which the Pacha walked to the mortar and howitzer battery, where he witnessed some excellent practice with shells, fired at a flag-staff eight hundred and fifty yards distant on Woolwich-common. Lieutenant-Colonel Grant had the command of the practice, and the details were executed under the directions of Major Rowland, Major Clarke, Major Furneux, and Captain Mee, with Lieutenants Smyth, Waller, Colclough, Greville, and Best.

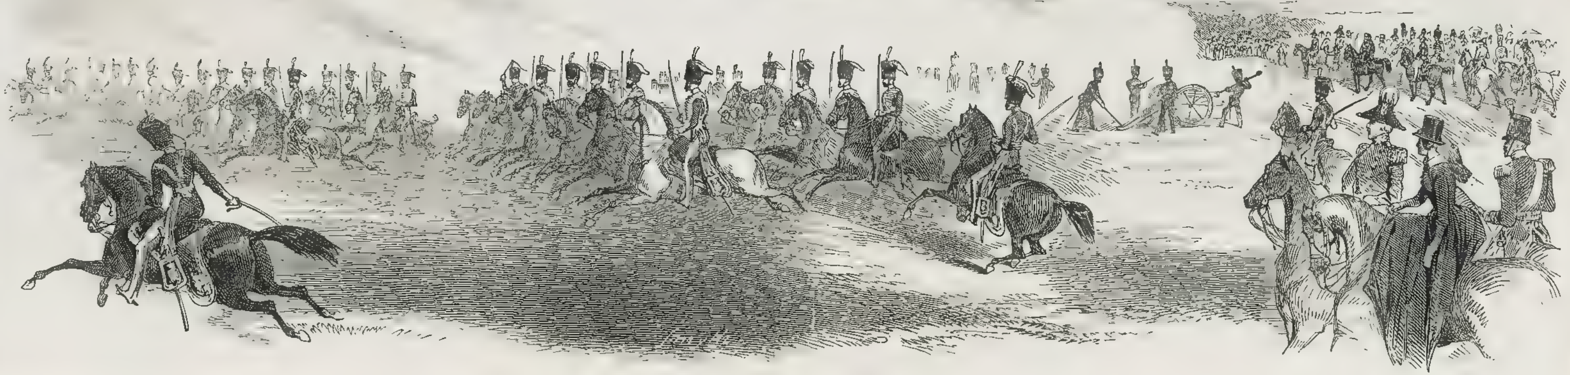
From the mortar and howitzer battery His Highness went to witness the [illegible] sitory exercises carried on by Captain Cuppage's company, and the recruits going through the course, and then entered the Rotunda, where he witnessed the numerous models of almost every important fortification, and all Her Majesty's dockyards, and sundry descriptions of arms used in ancient and modern warfare.

At four o'clock, the Royal Horse Artillery, under the command of Colonel Wylde, C.B., and the field batteries, under the command of Colonel Cleaveland, [illegible] batteries. They afterwards marched past at a walk and trot, and the Horse A[illegible] the exercises and manœuvres of a field-day in excellent style and in review order.

GRAND ARTILLERY REVIEW AT WOOLWICH.



SHELL PRACTICE AT THE FLAG-STAFF, ON WOOLWICH COMMON.



HORSE ARTILLERY AND FIELD BATTERIES.—IBRAHIM PACHA AND STAFF.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, July 11, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 220.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 18, 1846. [Sixpence.

THE DEPARTURE OF IBRAHIM PACHA.

OUR visitor, Ibrahim Pacha, has returned to his own country after his European tour, during which he has seen all that a passing traveller can see of the > Cities and men,

> And manners, climates, councils, governments, of the two great nations of Europe—France and England. He is the first of the rulers of the East by whom the apathy and indifference common to Orientals have been broken through, and exhibited the curiosity with regard to the things and ideas of western civilization, which that apathy often but disguises. It is easy to feign a contempt for men and systems whose superiority is too keenly felt to be almost beyond imitation. This was the old Moslem feeling towards the "Infidel;" it prevailed in the intercourse of individuals, and tinged the policy of their rulers. But time and experience are stern teachers as well as destructive innovators. The Mussulman of the nineteenth century is not what he was in the seventeenth, any more than the European is now what he was at the same date. Notwithstanding the unchangeable character of the dogmas of Islamism, its followers have not escaped the mutations, physical and moral, that time brings with it to all. The fanaticism of the disciples of the Prophet, which, while Europe was weak, threatened to spread over the West, by the teaching of sword and fire, is extinct; and with it has vanished that military prowess that swept from the earth the last relics of the empire of Rome—that seized the capital of the Greek Emperors—and, but for the heroism of Poland when it was still a nation, would have levelled the walls of Vienna.

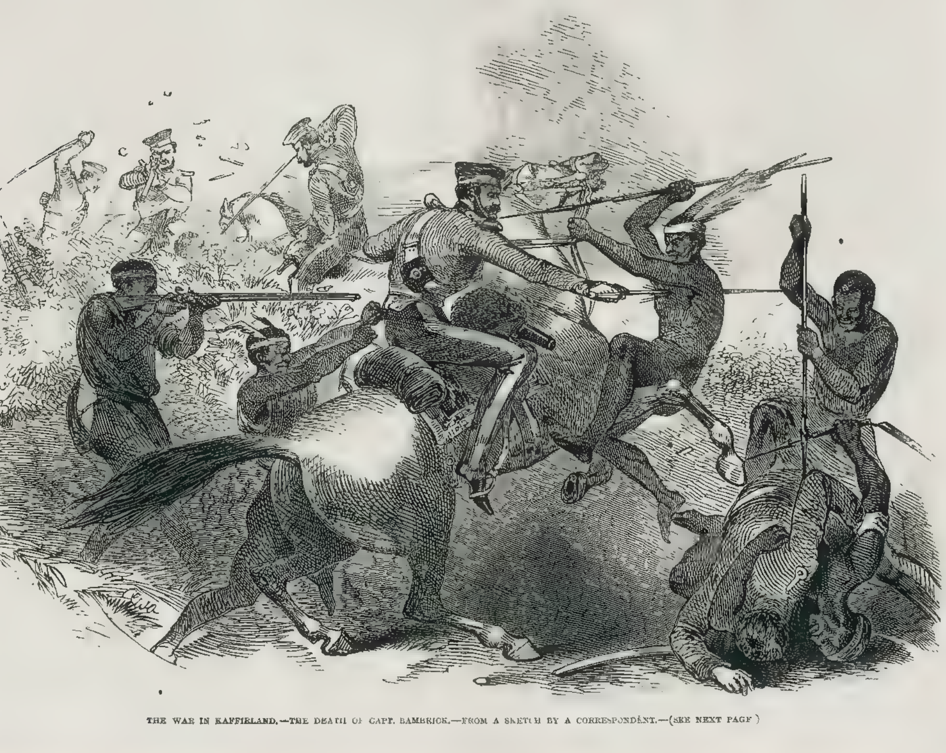
Surrounded by Christian and civilised States, Turkey has been unable, however willing, to escape the influence that they must always exercise. Superiority in arts, arms, and enterprise, cannot be resisted—as the Porte has learned by many a bitter and humiliating lesson; not one of which has been more effectual than that given it by Mehemet Ali, when, as ruler of Egypt, he declared himself independent of the Sultan, and maintained himself in his position—one of the "rebellious Pachas" who, with "encroaching Giaours," have long been the despair and perplexity of the Government of Constantinople. The talents and energy of Mehemet Ali might not, perhaps, have effected such a revolution, had they not been assisted by the science and discipline of Europe, which he had the sense to appreciate, and the courage to employ, to the surprise and bewilderment of the true believers of the older school. The answer said to have been given by Ibrahim Pacha to an objector of that class, who censured him for employing the impious inventions of the infidel, may be taken as containing the spirit by which both he and his greater father are actuated. He said he could not find any passage of the Koran that proscribed either steamboats or artillery! Owing so much to the skill and science of Europe, it is but natural, then, that the future ruler of Egypt should be anxious to see them at work in Europe itself; and what they have made of the people, among whom the miracles of modern discovery are things of every day, so familiar, that half their wonders pass unmarked and unnoted.

And "what does the Lion think of us?" What has he seen that will mould his opinions?

His first impressions of Europe were derived from France; where, we must confess, he was received with greater courtesy, with more Royal attentions, and more regard of the ceremony that belongs to the Princes and Powers of the Earth, than we have shown him. The heartiness of the reception could not be more sincere than ours, but it was exhibited with more taste and tact. Ibrahim was lodged in a Royal Palace—had a guard of honour—the Royal carriages and a Princely retinue were placed at his disposal—he was accompanied and escorted by members of the Royal Family. We must allow, with an oft-quoted authority, that "they manage these things better in France."

But as the reception, with all its courtliness, does not make the whole worth of a visit, it may be asked, what did the future Ruler of the land of the Pharaohs see? It may be summed up in a single sentence: he saw Paris; and, in those things which London and Paris possess in common, we are not without misgivings as to our place in the Pacha's opinion. After the tasteful magnificence of Paris, where immense wealth has been skilfully bestowed, we should be almost afraid to ask Ibrahim's private judgment of our squirt-like fountains, dull squares, comical statues, and unsightly public edifices, for which the Government has just been enterprising enough to produce, with few exceptions, a complete combination of inconvenience and ugliness. It is only in those things which are peculiar to England that we would boldly challenge comparison.



THE WAR IN KAFFIRLAND.—THE DEATH OF CAPT. BAMBRICK.—FROM A SKETCH BY A CORRESPONDENT.—(SEE NEXT PAGE)

In France, too, the Pacha was shown a review of something like an army—a force capable of making a military movement—to which the inspection of a few regiments in Hyde Park must have looked poor and petty. But Ibrahim is not a man to be overpowered by the sight of cities or squadrons. Even Versailles can be calmly scanned by the Lord of Thebes and the Pyramids, and he has himself commanded a greater army than he saw at Paris to a soldier it was no novelty. But in England he found what Egypt and his own experience could never have prepared him for: he came less like a Royal guest than an ordinary visitor; he lodged at a tavern; went where he liked, and when he pleased; threaded London from end to end, and saw what is more overpowering than architectural beauty—its stupendous size and enormous population. He mixed in the amusements of all classes—with the exclusives of Chiswick and the plebs of Cremorne; watched the passage of steamers and the flight of balloons, descended even to the depths of a showman's booth, and, with a characteristic presence of mind in the proprietor, was on the instant converted into part of the exhibition! He was not here the guest of the Sovereign only; he found many powers and governments, regal in their wealth, and statelike in their organisation, to do him honour.

The East India Company, the rulers of hundreds of millions, invited him to a banquet where he saw the real royalty of Commerce, part of the greatness of the crowning city, "whose merchants are princes, whose great ones are traffickers of the Earth." The Oriental Navigation Company made him their guest, anxious to pay a merited compliment to the Prince whose dominions they so often traverse—but one of the countless unions of men for peaceful enterprise that England presents. The Reform Club presented him with the spirit of union in another shape—men with a common bond of opinion, uniting for social convenience, and, by acting on a principle nowhere so well understood as in England, securing to the moderately wealthy, a degree of luxury and splendour that few Kings of old could command, with the additional advantage of furnishing an example capable of application to all classes. And he saw armies too, a mightier host enrolled for a better purpose than the bands which nations arm for mutual destruction; he saw our myriads of toilers, with their "Captains of Industry," making war upon crude matter and bringing from it numberless fabrics of utility and beauty, which are sent forth to the ends of the Earth, and subduing the powers of nature to their will, by strange engines that cut iron like ribands, and mould beams of steel as though they were clay in the hands of the potter, working marvels, as strange as any in the tales of Arabia and its enchanters, or the "golden times of good Haroun Alraschid." These are the soldiers that will yet conquer the world, and in these battalions of labour lie England's truest strength; they have turned villages into cities and covered the sea with ships; they stud the surface of the land with centres of industry, where the sound of hammer and loom, and the many voices of human industry never cease. All this, the Pacha must have marked; what impression has he borne away of it? Will he ask himself the reason of the difference between busy peopled, industrious England, and decaying, depopulated, apathetic Egypt, where all that has life seems forced, where cities are but masses of ruins, and where even his father's public works have been compelled by an armed force, and purchased by an amount of death and misery that makes improvement itself hateful to the people? Few are wiser than their age, or better than the mass of their fellows; and Mehemet Ali differs from most Turkish rulers only in this, that he has made himself independent, and uses his power more undisguisedly and on a larger scale, and with greater calculation, for his own personal benefit; he grasps all, buys all, sells all, monopolises all; he is at once, the Farmer, Factor, Merchant, Prince and General, to whom all Egypt, men, money, and produce belongs; it has gained by so belonging to him thus far, that, being his own, he manages it with so much discretion as to leave it in an elastic and producing condition: to do otherwise would injure himself. Where each Pacha grinds as much out of the wretched natives as he can, knowing, if he leaves anything in their possession, it will only go to his successor, their state is much worse than that of the Egyptians under Mehemet. But it is a mistake to suppose he is an enlightened, wise, or merciful ruler, measured by the European standard of those qualities. We wish we could hope that the glimpse of the results of justice and freedom Ibrahim Pacha has seen among us might induce him to act more widely upon them as principles of government. But his character is fixed and formed; less politic than his father, he is, as a soldier, more cruel and bloodthirsty: "England is England, and Egypt is Egypt," he would say; "and Egypt, being mine, I will deal with it as I choose, or as I can!" Knowledge and travel may teach him how to get more profit out of his farm; but greater regard for the tenants upon it must be learned in another school, which the East does not yet afford, and even in the West has not been long established.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

There has been, for some time past, to the knowledge of every one, an open discussion in Council betwixt the King and M. Guizot, the latter urging the impolicy of the King going to England at the present fierce electioneering crisis, and Louis Philippe urging his promise to Queen Victoria, and her daily expectation of his visit. Until now M. Guizot's opinion has prevailed, thanks to the gloomier reflection of the English people on the impressionable surface of those of France. But the King maintains his intention of coming in October. In the meantime the whole Cabinet is dispersed. The King goes to St. Cloud, and from thence to Eu, a convenient starting point for England. M. Guizot has hied home to his humble country abode, worthy of Cincinnatus, the Valricher, near Lisieux; whilst that romantic Quixote, Count de Salvandy, like another Cæsar, is gone to write his Commentaries in Algiers. The other Ministers had already departed sometime since. Amidst the King's incessant journeys there was one of deep sorrow, yesterday, to the sepulchre of his race at Dreux it was the anniversary of the death of the Duke of Orleans and the whole Royal Family (above all, the Queen and the widowed Duchess) were in the deepest mourning; not of costume, but of the heart, for there is no family in Europe more affectionately united. The Opera, on this occasion, closed its portals. The King, on his way to Dreux, met the boys of the military school of La Flèche on the road, who arrested his progress with their shouts of greeting. The King descended from his carriage, conversed with the embryo captains, and obtained a holiday for them for the next day, the 13th. That being the melancholy annivers[illegible] own accord, came to Paris, and repaired to the church of the Invalides, where a funeral service was at once performed, and only then dispersed to enjoy their holidays

The King has a good humoured joke always uppermost and ready for each new visitor. The other day when Baron Rothschild, the great financier of the Northern Railroad, came to dine with him, "Hail to the Conqueror of Amiens, Arras, [illegible] Lille," exclaimed the King as the Baron entered. "Baron, like my ancestor the Grand Monarque, you have made the Conquest of Flanders!" This conquest, like others, has ultimately made many shudder and not a few shed tears of unutterable sorrow. The accident on this railroad has paralysed Paris at the very moment all its remaining rich inhabitants were going to migrate. Railroad accidents in France appear always destined to be catastrophes of unprecedented destruction—the double accident on the new railroad has awakened the reminiscences of all the horrors of the Versailles catastrophe

In spite of more than a thousand demands of [illegible] made to the tribunals of Paris last year, marriages in the higher circles [illegible] innumerable at this moment. The ease with which the affair is settled here is, perhaps, the most extraordinary piece of eccentricity in the present civilisation of France. A gentleman who has sown his wild oats, deranged his fortune, and wishes to settle, applies to his notary, and tells him to look out for a wife. The notaries, the solicitors of France, get the same commissions from fathers who wish to marry their daughters; so that the affair is soon arranged—and parties suited then they meet and the wedding is celebrated. Thus have just occurred the marriages of Count d'Urrer with Miss Viger, daughter of the Deputy; M. d'Eschevery with Miss de Préjeau; of the Deputy M. Tribert with Mdlle Eugenie de la Valette; of the Baron d'André, a diplomatist, with Mdlle. Boullet, a daughter of a Peer of France, &c. &c. The celebrated General Lamoricière is said to be about to wed M. Thiers' beautiful sister-in-law, Mdlle. Dosne. As to the marriage of Count de Lasteyrie with the Duchess of Leinster's niece, Mademoiselle [illegible] Chabot, it will take place on the 15th of August. Her brother, Count [illegible] who now temporarily replaces at the Court of St James's th[illegible] [illegible], Count de St. Aulaire, during his visit to his son's constituents, will [illegible] to Paris for a [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] in London in his absence. All Paris has been these two last days laughing at a new skit upon the headlong mania for jockeyism reigning in France. A vaudeville, entitled "Le Turf et le Sport" has just been given at the Variétés. The scene is Chantilly Race-course, and the heroes of the Paris Jockey Club are delineated to the life. This does not prevent their being most active in organising their packs of hounds They have published the results of their last se[illegible] sport: the pack of the Marquis de Vogue, of a hundred dogs, it appear[illegible] season, no less than forty wild boars, besides stags, &c., in the [illegible] [illegible]uillet; and that of Count Greffulhe did as much execution in that of Fontainebleau; and no forest in France now but has its pack; independent of that sport of hare and fox, so furiously performed à l'Anglaise. All, however, is now at a stand still; electioneering absorbs every mind, and the business of all that are not immediately engaged, is reading the biogr[illegible] most unsparing sketches—of the would-be-elected, which daily appear in the journals, and are circulated under other forms secretly. A glorious moment for scandal.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers contain a long report of the trial of the individuals concerned in aiding the escape of Prince Louis Napoleon from Ham. The trial lasted two days, and the accused were convicted, with the exception of the Commanding Officer, Demarle. Dr. Conneau was condemned to three months' imprisonment. Thelin, the Prince's valet-de-chambre (who escaped with him), was sentenced by default to six months' imprisonment. Count de Montholon, the fellow-captive of Prince Louis at Ham, has been restored to liberty by a Royal Order of the 10th instant. The Count had been sentenced by the Court of Peers, on the 6th of October, 1840, to 20 years' imprisonment.

The Cardinal Archbishop of Aix died on the 6th instant, aged 76.

The daughter of her Royal Highness the Princess Saxe-Coburg Gotha has been baptised in the Chapel of the Palace of Neuilly. The Christian names of the infant Princess are Marie Adelaide Amélie Clotilde.

THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Our advices from the Cape, which reach to the 16th May, are rather important. The Kaffirs continued their hostilities and depredations. There have been some severe conflicts on the frontier between the colonists and the Kaffirs, though it does not seem that the latter had appeared in larger force than 300 or 400 together. These managed, however, to keep the whole province in a state of excitement; for, although the farmers were arriving fast, and assembling in small encampments, they were not sufficiently organised to act upon a decided or extensive scale. Almost all the country on the banks of the Kowie river was burnt; and a lady, writing from Cawood's Post, remarks, "The country is all in a blaze; and there is nothing but gun-firing all day" Before the colony can be called secure, even after the defeat of the Kaffirs, it is said to be indispensable that detached forts should be raised, so as to afford rallying points for the farmers; and we are glad to find, by the army notices, that reinforcements are about to proceed to the Cape, including a body of artillery. In the Albany district, one gentleman, Mr. Howse, had lost sheep, horses, and cattle, of the value of £[illegible]0,000, and his house, valued at £1500, was fully expected to be destroyed. In the neighbourhood of Graham's Town there were 5000 oxen and 10,000 sheep collected for the purpose of securing supplies, as well as to prevent thefts.

On the 5th of May, a band passed within two miles of Botha's post, driving about 10,000 sheep and lambs before them. The weak garrison were only able to re-capture 800. At Leeuw Fontein the Kaffirs took 380 head of cattle, 7 horses, 17,000 sheep, from three settlers. Fierce attacks had been made upon many farms, but both Boers and British settlers had repelled them with the greatest bravery, and with considerable slaughter of the assailants. The Fingoes have fought well against the Kaffirs; strong hopes are entertained that the Tambookies will not join in the forays; but the few troops on the frontier were incompetent to guard it. Nothing could be done till the burgher-levies came in. Some sharp skirmishes had taken place between the British troops and the enemy, in several of which the latter were valiantly repulsed. Very little loss of life was sustained in these several affairs, but the destruction of property was immense.

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO

By the Caledonia, we have received New York papers to the 30th ult. They fully confirm the statement given in part of our impression of last week, that the Senate had ratified the Oregon Treaty

The Mexican war continued an object of great attraction to the American people, who seem delighted to multiply every little circumstance into a great fact

The advices from the city of Mexico, contained in the New York papers, are to the beginning of June. Paredes is expected to have 16,000 men in the field against the Americans. He is to command in person. General Mejia has superseded Arista. General Alvarez has possession of the city of Acapulco, on the Pacific, where he has raised the standard of "Federation," within 300 miles of the capital. Yucatan has formally declared its independence under President Barbachano. Tampico has declared in favour of the Federative principle, but is divided on the question of the Presidency, General Anastasio Parrodi being in favour of Santa Anna. The northern departments of Tamaulipas, Chihuahua, and Zacatecas, and, we believe, New Leon, Coahuila, San Louis Potosi, New Mexico, Santa Fé, Sonora, and California, or the whole of Mexico above the 24th parallel of north latitude, propose to organise a separate Republic, under the protection of the American army, preparatory to annexation to the United States. Yucatan also desires to come into the confederacy of sovereign and independent States. The most extraordinary enthusiasm seems to prevail among a large part of the Mexican people, the Yucatecos particularly, in favour of annexation.

The letters from Matamoras are to the 12th of June. The town or city of Reinoso had surrendered to the American forces without resistance, and the authorities of the city of Camargo, had sent a deputation to General Taylor, offering him full possession of that place. Both these cities are on or near the south side of the Rio Grande, on the road to the capital. The Mexican usurper is concentrating his forces at a mountain pass near Monterey, where, if any where, he will dispute General Taylor's march. The western expedition into New Mexico and Santa Fé was expected to take up its march from the Missouri frontier between the 15th and 20th of June. While the American army and navy are employed in bringing the war to a speedy termination, the Government at Washington evince every desire to treat with the Mexican usurper whenever he is prepared to renew negotiations. Senators Webster and MacDuffie have intimated the practicability of adjusting the difficulties with Mexico, immediately, and the latter, who is now Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, is said to be preparing the basis of an arrangement for this purpose, which he will submit to the President and the Senate immediately.

The papers mention that the brig Sulley, of Pictou, Nova Scotia, Captain Gordon was lost in the Vineyard Sound, on Saturday morning, the 20th of June. The following particulars are given in the Rhode Island, Newport, Daily News, of the 27th

"The brig was from Pictou, bound to Fall River, and had on board about seventy souls. The passengers were partly Scotch, and were families in comfortable circumstances, bound from their homes to the State of Maryland, where they were going to work in some of the mining establishments.

"The brig struck on the 'Sow and Pigs,' a cluster of rocks about thirty miles from this place, between Gay Head and Cuttyhunk, at a quarter-past three o'clock this morning. The number of lives lost was thirty.

NEW ZEALAND.

The following letter from a Correspondent, dated Auckland, February 9, 1846, gives some additional particulars of interest connected with the operations against Heki

Ruapekapeka, or the Bat's Nest, is situated about thirteen miles inland from the head of the Kawa Kawa river, in the direction of Wangaruruanga, which Captain Grey, our new Governor, after a Council at Kororarika, with our native allies, determined to commence vigorous operations against without delay. After the usual difficulties of dragging heavy guns over an unfrequented road, the combined force at length took up a position on an open ridge in the midst of a Puriri forest, about three quarters of a mile from Kawiti's pah. The British force comprised soldiers, seamen, and marines, from the various ships; and pioneers from the Auckland Battalion of Militia, under the command of Captain Atkyns, amounting to about 1300 men; and our native allies, under their Chiefs, Tamate Waka, Nene, Mahi Tawai, and others, amounted to about 800 men; making a total of about 2000 men. The enemy, under their Chiefs, Heki and Kawiti, did not exceed 500 men of the fighting "Ngapuni," who had posted themselves in a pah of incredible strength,

Colonel Despard, commanding the forces, has been blamed for stating in his despatch that the pah was taken by assault, when, in fact, it was nothing more than a surprise, which took place on Sunday, the 11th of January, 1846, at ten o'clock, while the enemy were outside the pah at their prayers. A heavy cannonading, shelling, and rocketting, from all the batteries, commenced the Saturday previously, when a breach was made, through which it was proposed to carry the pah by assault, but which Tamati, Waka, Kem, Mahi Tawai, and others strongly opposed, asking Colonel Despard if he had so soon forgotten Owhaiawhai.

The order to advance on the position was afterwards withdrawn, and it is well that it was so, for if the pah, contrary to Waka's advice, had been stormed on the Saturday, the loss of life on our part would have been very great, which, in Maori warfare, is considered a victory, even at the expense of their pah, which they would have immediately abandoned, satisfied with having taken the lives of their enemies, in payment for its loss, and they would then have built another. It happened, however, fortunately, on the Sunday morning, on which the surprise took place, that some of the allied natives there reconnoitring about the [illegible], and not hearing any one inside, they entered the breach unobserved, and immediately made a signal to the advanced battery, which was seen [illegible] the seamen, who immediately reached it through the breach, follow[illegible] whole of the disposable force from all the batteries. At [illegible] became aware that we were in possession of the pah, and imme[illegible] menced a heavy fire on the people from the outside, and made sev[illegible]empts to drive them out; but, finding that a superior force was in possession of the pah, they, after a sharp engagement, which lasted several hours, finally gave up the attempt, and fell back, with a loss of about twenty killed, into the dank Puriri Forest of the Ruapekapeka. The casualties on our side amount to twelve killed, and thirty wounded: four of the latter have since died from the effects of their wounds

Kawiti, who finds that he derives no advantage from fighting us, has since made overtures of peace, offering to give up some of his lands in compensation for the loss the Europeans have sustained at Kororarika. Heki, however, whose motives are entirely political, is extremely reluctant to recognise the Queen's authority, nor will he acknowledge any flag but the one he himself put up.

Such is the state of affairs at present in New Zealand. Respecting the mutilation of Captain Grant's body and Lieutenant Philpotts, neither Heki nor Kawiti had anything to do with it The act was committed by two old priests, who t[illegible] a portion of his flesh for sacrifice, to inspire them (the two priests) with the wairura, or spirit of prophecy, and which was the cause of Heki—who was some distance away, laid up with a wound he received in a late skirmish giving directions for the evacuation of the pah at Owhaiawhai; nor had Heki or Kawiti anything to do with the roasting of the two soldiers, by pouring hot Kauri gum on their bodies. I was present during the operations at Kaupakaka, at least some portion of the time, where I met Atkyns, who was then in command of the Corps of Pioneers: he is also Captain of the Rifle Company.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The Annuities to Lord Hardinge and Lord Gough.—The business to day was brief and unimportant. The Marquis of Lansdowne said he should propose, on Thursday, to bring up the report on the bill for granting annuities to Viscount Hardinge and Lord Gough, with the intention of restoring the bill to its original state.

The Duke of Richmond regretted the announcement of the noble Marquis, and said he should take the sense of their Lordships on the subject.

The new Ministers were seated on the Treasury benches. Lord Brougham retained his former seat on the Opposition benches Lord Lyndhurst sat on his right and the Earl of Ellenborough on his left. Lord Stanley was not in the house. The Duke of Wellington, who was in the house for only a short time, took his seat on the woolsack, by the side of the Chancellor, and spoke from the Bishops' bench. The Earl of Dalhousie was on the Opposition bench.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

INTRODUCTION OF THE NEW MINISTERS TO THE HOUSE

The following Members, who had vacated their seats by the acceptance of office under the new Administration, were introduced, and retook the oaths and their seats

Lord J. Russell (First Lord of the Treasury)
Lord Palmerston (Foreign Secretary.)
Sir G. Grey (Home Secretary.)
Mr. C. Wood (Chancellor of the Exchequer.)
Sir J. C. Hobhouse (President of the Board of Control)
Mr. Labouchere (Secretary for Ireland.)
Colonel Fox (Surveyor of the Ordnance)
Captain F H. Berkeley (a Lord of the Admiralty)
Admiral D. Dundas (a Lord of the Admiralty.)
Lord M. Hill (Controller of the Household)
Mr. J Jervis (Attorney-General)

There was no manifestation of feeling upon the occasion. Soon after Lord J. Russell had taken his seat, Lord G. Bentinck left his place, went up to the noble Lord, and cordially shook hands with him. Sir James Graham took his seat as Leader of the Opposition. Mr. T. Duncombe spoke from the back benches, on the Opposition side of the House The Protectionists, in a body, took their former seats on the Ministerial side of the House, below the gangway. Lord Ingestre, as one of their body, spoke from the place which he has occupied during nearly the whole of the present Parliament. Sir R. H. Inglis retained his former seat, flanked on both sides by the Whig Irish Members.

New Writs. New writs were ordered for St. Ives, in the room of William Praed, Esq., deceased; and for the County of Kilkenny, in the room of the Hon. P. Butler, decease

ARRANGEMENT OF PUBLIC BUSINESS

Sir J. Graham said there were some bills which he had introduced to which he was desirous of drawing attention. One was the Highways Bill, which he believed would lead to so much discussion that at the present period of the session he could scarcely hope it would pass, and would therefore abandon it for the present. Another was the Commons Inclosure Bill, the object of which was to enlarge the powers of the Commissioners. This bill had been read a second time; and, as the principle was agreed to, he would propose that it should be proceeded with in Committee on Friday next. The other was the Poor Removal Bill, and this he [illegible] should not be left to the care of an individual member; but, as the noble [illegible] (Russell) might not be prepared at that moment to say what he would do [illegible] respect to the measure, he would move its postponement until Thursday

Mr T. Duncombe said he had understood that the late Government were pledged in word and honour to this Highway and Poor Removal and some other bills, which were part of their "great comprehensive scheme," and which formed the inducement held out to country gentlemen to consent to the Corn Law repeal. They now threw over these measures of compensation. What would the country and the labouring classes think of the pledges of public men after this gross breach of faith?

Sir J. Graham replied, that the late Government had been themselves first thrown over, and therefore they were not to blame if they could not carry the measures they had designed to accompany the Corn-Law Repeal Act.

Lord J. Russell said the very first measure which the present Government proposed to proceed with was the Poor Removal Bill; but he much doubted the policy of having union settlements, which he thought should be a subject of inquiry.

The Estimates. Mr. Williams then drew attention to the magnitude of the estimates of the year, which had been prepared in anticipation of war, and were for the present year seven millions more than they had been in the year 1835. He hoped the whole subject of the expenditure of the country would be revised by the present Government.—After some observations from Mr. Hume and Dr. Bowring, Lord J. Russell said the whole of the increase in our naval and military forces was not attributable altogether to the probability of war. Much of it was owing to the increase of our colonies, and to the extension of our commerce. Indeed, our present force did not enable the Government to give the necessary reliefs to that portion of the army engaged in foreign and colonial service.

The House was occupied during the remainder of the night in discussing estimates, and many votes of money were agreed to. An opposition was manifested to the vote of £120,700 for the Poor-Law Commissioners by Mr. Hume, who said he should propose their removal, but the grant was agreed to.

HOUSE OF LORDS Tuesday

Salaries of the Judges.—Lord Brougham drew attention to the act fixing the salaries of the Judges, and adverted to an arrangement which was calculated to introduce a most unconstitutional practice, as well as to originate unpleasant litigation. By the act, the salary of the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench was fixed at £10,000; but Lord Denman, whose disinterestedness was one of his many great qualities, only accepted £8000, the balance being accredited to the public in the financial accounts. Such a proceeding, however unexceptionable it might be in the case of the present Chief Justice, was calculated to lower the dignity and independence of the Bench, by introducing the practice of rendering Judges dependent on the Government of the day; any reserve in the amount of the salary fixed by Act of of Parliament being calculated to have the effect of a bribe, to be administered according as the demeanour of the Judge was satisfactory to the Treasury. Lord Grey replied, that, if any one was to blame, it was the noble Lord himself, who was Chancellor at the time the reduction was made.—Lord Brougham begged, in the first place, to say that he had not addressed the noble Earl; he had addressed himself to those who were higher in office, and who, consequently, might be supposed to know more of the m[illegible] than the noble Earl. (A laugh.) He trusted, for the sake of regularit[illegible] such scenes would not take place in future in that House, that, when a noble Lord declared upon his honour that he did not know a certain matter, the noble Earl should get up and say, "But I know that you did know" (Laughter)

Some routine business was transacted, and the House adjourned at an early hour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday

Newly Elected Members.—Mr. M. Gibson and Lord Ebrington took the oaths and their seats, the former for Manchester and the latter for Plymouth.

On the motion of Mr. Tufnell a new writ was ordered for the county of Sutherland, in the room of David Dundas, Esq., who had accepted the office of her Majesty's Solicitor-General

The Policy of the Government.—In answer to a question from Mr. T. Duncombe, Lord J Russell said, the principles upon which I propose to carry on the Government are the principles upon which I have always acted, and which I have always declared in this House. (Ministerial cheers.)—Dr. Bowring proceeded to call the attention of the House to the evils arising from the high duty upon tobacco; but, while the subject was under consideration, the House [illegible] "counted out."

HOUSE OF COMMONS Wednesday.

The House met at twelve o'clock to-day, and sat till half-past two, chiefly upon private business.

Newly-elected Members. Mr. Fox Maule was introduced by Lord Ebrington and Mr. John Parker, and took the oaths and his seat for Perth. Mr. W Cowper was introduced by Lord Ebrington and Lord Marcus Hill, and took the oaths and his seat for Hertford.

The Charitable Trusts Bill was read a second time, upon a division, [illegible]

The Battersea Park Bill was read a third time and passed

HOUSE OF LORDS. -Thursday.

The Royal Assent.—The House met to-day at four o'clock, when [illegible] Assent was given by Commission to a great many bills. The Comm[illegible] were The Lord Chancellor, Earl Minto, and Lord Campbell. The bills we[illegible] in number, and were principally private bills, recently passed.

Viscount Hardinge's and Lord Gough's Annuity Bills The Marquis of Lansdowne moved the order of the day for bringing up the report on the Annuity bills of Viscount Hardinge and Lord Gough. His object was to induce their Lordships to restore the bill to the state in which it originally stood when it was introduced into the House.—The Duke of Richmond opposed the motion. In the discussion that followed several noble Lords declared they should support the Government, though they had voted against it on the last occasion, [illegible] better instructed on the subject. On the division the numbers were—

For receiving the report,

Content	47
Non-Content	18
Majority for the Government	[illegible]

The House rose at half-past eight.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

Newly-elected Members.—Mr Sheil (appointed Master of the Mint, took the oaths and his seat on his re-election for Dungarvan.

Lord A. Paget took the oaths and his seat for the city of Lichfield.

THE POLICY OF THE NEW GOVERNMENT

Lord J[illegible] made the following statement in regard to the course which the Government intended to pursue relative to the measures before the House. "I stated that I would to-day give notice to the House the general course of [illegible] which it is the intention of her Majesty's Government to pursue with [illegible] the Bills before the House, and I will do [illegible] of the order of the day. On Monday I will state to the House the policy which it is the intention of the Government to pursue with respect to the Sugar Duties I will then unfold the plan we consider ought to be adopted, after which I propose to adjourn the forther consideration of the question until to-morrow week (Friday). It is now late in the session to lose time, and I will make as little delay as possible; at the same time I propose a short bill for the continuation of the Sugar Duties for one month, or until Parliament shall otherwise approve (Hear.) With regard to the Poor-Law Removal Bill, I have stated my general views respecting it to the House, and what is further proposed to be done will be stated by the Secretary for the Home Department. The next Bill before the House is the Drainage Bill. Some members of the Government will undertake the care of that bill, with the hope of carrying it through. The next are the bills brought in by the late Chief Secretary for Ireland: one of the most important of these bills, the Ejectment Bill, it is our intention to adopt, with some slight alterations, preserving, especially, that clause which prevents the seizure of growing crops. We also propose to proceed with the Lease Bill; but, with respect to the Tenants' Compensation Bill, we find the machinery so exceedingly complicated, that we will postpone it for further consideration. There are some other bills affecting Ireland, regarding which the Chief Secretary for Ireland (Mr. Labouchere) will be able to answer whatever questions will be put to him. There are some bills which are now in the House of Lords; one of them is called the Small Debts Bill, which is a bill similar to the one which has been introduced by the former Government, and which has been repeatedly before Parliament. The present Government entirely approve of the general purport of that bill, and although it is a bill of great length, containing many provisions, they do hope that they will be enabled to obtain the sanction of Parliament to it during the present session, as it is a measure of very great importance. There is another bill, which likewise is at present in the House of Lords, which the Government do not propose to take into their own hands unless necessary, but which I trust will obtain the assent of Parliament—it is called the Religious Opinions Bill. That bill was introduced by a member of the late Government, in the name of the Government, and, therefore, is a Government bill. I trust that the author of that bill will continue to take charge of it; but, if he should not do that, some member of the present Government will then propose that bill in its present shape. There are many other bills which are not of great importance, which we propose to go on with."

In reply to Mr. T. Duncombe, Lord J. RUSSELL stated that it was true that he had offered Lord Dalhousie, Lord Lincoln, and Mr. Sidney Herbert, places in his Government, because for the last five years they had been gradually approaching towards his opinion; but he should not have done so had they maintained the opinions which they had expressed in 1841. He thought it was sufficient if the members of a Ministry agreed in general principles, without insisting that every member of the Ministry should agree upon any question which should be brought before Parliament. For instance, he did not agree with Earl Grey in every opinion which he entertained with regard to the Irish Church. With regard to Ireland, he (Lord J. Russell) considered the social grievances of that country called for an immediate remedy, and he and his colleagues were prepared to propose measures which would afford not perhaps an immediate remedy, but which would produce beneficial effects, so that, in the course of ten years, the social condition of Ireland would be greatly improved. With regard to the franchises of Ireland, he did not imagine that the question of the franchise was one of small consideration. He thought that possession of the franchise elevated a man in his own opinion, and in that of his neighbours, and he was, therefore, prepared to propose for the people of Ireland an enjoyment of the franchise exual to to that possessed by the peaple of England

On the close of this discussion, Sir G. GREY introduced the Poor Law Removal Bill, of which he stated the details; a long and uninteresting debate followed, and the House went into committee pro forma, and adjourned at half-past eleven.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE CHIEF JUSTICE TINDAL.—On Monday morning the mortal remains of the late Chief Justice Tindal were removed from Bedford-square, for interment in the family vault at Kensal-green Cemetery. At nine o'clock, the hearse, drawn by six horses, and ten mourning coaches, each drawn by four horses, moved from the house, and arrived at the Cemetery shortly after ten. About fifty gentlemen, principally the immediate relatives and friends of the deceased, comprised the attendants, amongst whom were Mr Baron Parke, Sir W. Symonds, of the Civil Department, Royal Navy; Major Symonds, Captain Symonds, R.N; Captain Tindal, R N., and Mr C. G Tindal, sons of the deceased; Mr. Bosanquet, the banker, son in-law to the deceased; the Rev. J. E. Tyler, Sir J. De Vieulle, of St. Helen's, Jersey, Major Woodrooffe, W. Woodrooffe, Esq., A N. Skirrow, Esq., &c. The coffin bore the following inscription.—"The Right Hon. Sir Nicolas Conyngham Tindal, Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, died July 8th, 1846. Aged 69 years." The funeral service was read by the Rev. Mr Tyler At the conclusion, the coffin was moved to the family vault, where lay the remains of Lady Tindal, wife to the deceased, who died several years since, and the Rev. Mr. Tindal, one of his sons.

THE COURT OF COMMON COUNCIL AND FREE TRADE.—At a Court of Common Council held on Wednesday, Mr. Ashurst gave notice of a motion for the next Court-day "That the Thanks of the Court and the Freedom of the City, in gold boxes of the value of one hundred guineas each, be presented to Richard Cobden, the Hon. Charles Villiers, John Bright, and Colonel Thompson, for their eminent public services." (Loud cheers). Mr. Ashurst also gave notice of a motion—"That the thanks of this Court be given to Sir Robert Peel, Bart., for his eminent public services in introducing and supporting the bill for the repeal of the Corn Laws and for the reduction of taxation."

VICTORIA PARK.—The attendance of visitors on Sundays keeps pace with that of the other long-established metropolitan parks On Sunday and for many weeks past the visitors have exceeded 10,000, and amongst them were many from the west-end, upwards of thirty carriages being outside the principal lodge entrance on Sunday between four and six o'clock. Three coroneted carriages were there at one time—an event, perhaps, unknown in the previous history of the parish. Among the visitors in the afternoon was Viscount Canning.

THE HARVEST NEAR THE METROPOLIS.—The wheat harvest has commenced in the immediate neighbourhood of the metropolis

BIRTHS AND DEATHS IN THE METROPOLIS The table of births and deaths registered in the metropolis during the week ending Saturday last, gives some interesting facts. The number of deaths is 901, of which 488 have been those of persons under 15 years of age; 259 from 15 to 60; and 154 from 60 and upwards. The number of male deaths was 440, and of female deaths, 441. No fewer than 139 persons fell victims to consumption during one week, ending Saturday last The total number of births during the week was 1278. The number of male births was 659, and of female births 619.

MADEMOISELLE RACHEL AT THE ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

NEARLY twenty years ago, a poor little girl, timid and careworn, even at five or six years old, with features pinched in by destitution, and scarcely protected from the weather by thin and almost ragged clothes, might be constantly seen in Paris, haunting the cafés and public places, with a guitar on her arm, and an old decanter stand or saucer in her hand, to collect the few sous which she drew from the hearers, to support her family, and which were given from feelings of compassion alone. Somewhat later, this young creature, whose manner of life had not allowed her to avail herself of the slightest education, and whose notions had been formed amidst the smoke of the pipes, and the questionable discourse of the estaminet, was obliged, in order to comply with the ambitious views of those who directed her career—struggling and uncertain as it was—to appear at a theatre intended for the efforts of amateurs Later still, the still delicate girl appeared at the Gymnase theatre, when, on the 24th of April, 1837, it was announced that Mdlle. Félix would make her first appearance, in a two-act vaudeville, by M. Duport, called "La Vendéenne" From a criticism on her performance, by good chance now lying before us, we make this extract: "Mdlle. Félix is a young person in whom we can perceive the finest dramatic organisation that it is possible to imagine. Her voice is clear and penetrating; and, in its impassioned points, loses itself in tears. Her success was even greater than that of 'La Vendéenne,' which had been cleverly constructed to draw out all the precocious talent of the young débutante; and the Gymnase will renew, with its new actress, the best days of Mdlle. Léontine Fay. There will be no mistake in the realisation of the brilliant horoscope which every one must form of her future career. Well, this little famishing child this fragile infant of the boulevards and taverns this clever comedie-vaudeville actress at the Gymnase-Dramatique, soon proved the truth of the above criticism. She was applauded and courted. applauded by those who appreciated talent, whether it was the effect of inspiration or study, and courted by the highest and proudest in the land. She appeared again in a higher sphere: fresh triumphs awaited her: and, as MADEMOISELLE RACHEL, she was acknowledged as the first female tragic actress not only of France, but of the world.

On Monday evening this great tragedian appeared, for the first time, on the boards of the St. James's Theatre. It is now some three or four years since she was last in London, and she then performed at the Italian Opera House. To the spirited management of Mr. Mitchell, we are indebted for the opportunity of witnessing her acting this season; and we were happy to find that her inopportune illness had rather whetted the public desire, than otherwise, to be present at her rentrée. The house was crowded with a most brilliant and fashionable, and, what with us is much more, an appreciating audience especially in the matter of the French plays: and the applause was heart-warm and spontaneous. Camille, in Corneille's tragedy, "Les Horaces," was the character chosen by Mdlle. Rachel for her opening part; and her performance throughout was one of the most superb pieces of acting we ever witnessed. It struck us that her recent indisposition the traces of which were clearly evident—added, if anything, to the effect of her impersonation. And, certainly, she has improved in the style of her acting. There is less tendency to "rant." She produces the same grand points of passion, vengeance, and indignation, with the most consummate skill in concealing her intention of making them. And every word has its value. Not only is the effect of the entire sentence inimitably perfect, but this perfection is attained by the nicest discrimination of tone and emphasis, adapted to each component word, the result being a marvellous ensemble, compared aptly by a contemporary to a great picture, which may be first viewed as a whole, and then inspected closely to observe the wonderful details, by the proper accumulation of which, the effect of this whole is gained. It was not until towards the close of the tragedy that Mdlle. Rachel put forth all her grand powers. indeed, there is no great opportunity for the actress to do so until the last act, as it is now played, but then her acting [illegible] Her suspense during the progress of the combat her terrible, [illegible], were far beyond all comparison the [illegible] thing ever given on the stage Her silent wretchedness and her overwhelming anger were alike impressive—the attention of the audience was as much rivetted to the sufferings of the tender, heart-stricken woman, during the earlier scenes of the tragedy, as it was absorbed by the imprecations and fearful anger of the concluding one.

The same remarks will apply, nearly with equal justice, to her performance in the "Phèdre" of Racine on Wednesday. To those who could, for a moment even, distract their thoughts from the actress and the stage, there was something remarkable in the wrapt attention of the house whenever she was on the scene; and this increased with the progress of the fearful story. The struggles of Phèdre against the unhallowed passion for her husband's son, with which she is inspired, gave new scope for Mademoiselle Rachel's genius to display itself, either in her impersonations of tender passion or unbridled jealousy. It was marvellous to see such intensity of anger and mental anguish pourtrayed with such little physical support as her delicate frame was, apparently, capable of affording.

It is needless to say that, on both these occasions, the applause was most enthusiastic, and that wreaths and bouquets were flung in profusion on the stage when Mdlle. Rachel appeared before the curtain, at the conclusion of the tragedies We could say much in praise of the general company who supported her, but she alone has occupied all our attention. Au reste, her brother, M. Raphael Félix, has in him the elements of a good actor; and of Mdlle. Martelleur we have often had occasion to express our good opinion.

At one or the other of the performances we noticed, amongst the distinguished company, the Duke of Wellington, Marquis and Marchioness of Douro, Duke of Devonshire, Marquis of Clanricarde, Sir George and Miss Talbot, Lady Cottenham, Lord Sherborne, Lady Wilmot Horton, Lady Caroline Maxse, the Belgian Minister and Madame Van de Weyer, Lady Mary Christopher, Dowager Countess of Charleville, Sir Henry and Lady Meux, Marchioness of Conyngham, Lady Emmeline Stuart Wortley, Marquis of Titchfield, the Swedish Minister, Sir Charles Vaughan, Lord Brougham, Lord Somerton, Sir Isaac and Lady Goldsmid, Lady Grenville, Lord and Lady Beaumont, Lady Mary Corbet, the Count de Courc[illegible] Sir Edward and Lady Hartopp, Mrs. Alfred Montgomery and Miss Montgome[illegible] Mr. George Tyrwhitt, Sir Henry Webb, Sir John H. Lowther, Baron and La[illegible] Park, Sir Edward Codrington, Earl and Countess Desart, Countess of Blessingt[illegible] and the Misses Power, &c.

RACHEL IN CAMILLA.

SONNET.

Rome! l'unique objet de mon ressentiment,
Rome, à qui vient ton bras d' immoler mon amant,
Rome! qui t'a vu naitre et que ton cœur adore—
Rome! enfin que je hais parcequ'elle t'honore &c

Child of Melpomene! Camilla's story
Lives in thy bosom as an avatar
Of love immortal. Round the cloudless star
Of thy pure spirit, genius pours his glory,
Ever as a halo: and the shadows hoary
Of laurelled bards surround thy triumph' car,
Exultingly; as, on that morn afar
Rome joy'd when came Horatius from the gory
Field of his fame. Oh! Rachel! 'tis the soul
Alone can hymn thy mightiness. The tongue
And pen are paralyzed 'neath thy control,
And the pent heart with pulseless awe is wrung.
The Shakspeare of the Gaul was great Corneille—
The Siddons' throne is graced by thee, Rachel!

DESTRUCTION OF THE ST. LOUIS THEATRE AT QUEBEC, AND DREADFUL LOSS OF LIFE.

IN our late impression last week, we gave an account of the destruction of the St. Louis Theatre, at Quebec, by fire, on the 12th of June, when forty-five persons were burned to death. We now supply ample particulars of this calamity from a Correspondent, and from the Quebec Mercury

(From a Correspondent.)

Mr. Harrison, a Canadian artist, exhibited in the evening of June 12th, to about 300 spectators in the St Louis Theatre (a building 80 feet by 40), a series of illuminated Dioramas, consisting of a view of the City of Ramesses, Orleans Cathedral, the City of Jerusalem, with the Crucifixion, &c. At ten, P.M., the curtain dropped, the National Anthem was performed, and about 240 of the people had already left the Theatre, when there was an alarm of fire on the stage—a camphine lamp had been upset, the flame from which communicated with the scenery, on which, most of the remaining spectators rushed to the back part of the house, and fell, in their panic, down a narrow stair, one over the other, and became irretrievably crushed together and interlocked.

Desperate efforts were made by their friends to release them: a few were extricated from the mass with great difficulty; but the flames rapidly spreading throughout the building, the walls of which were lined with wood it had once been a racket-court—and the black smoke from the camphine, &c., stifling those courageously assisting, the roof fell on forty-five victims, composed of the heads of many respectable families and their children:—Mr. Scott, an advocate, and his daughter; Mrs. and Miss Gibb; Mr Hoogs, a banker, and his two sons; Mr Wheatley, a stationer; Mr. Sims, a druggist, and two children; Mr. Carwell, a merchant, and two children; Lieutenant Hamilton, 14th Regiment, and his [illegible], Miss Julia Rea; &c. Their charred remains (on which the [illegible] were [illegible] entire on the lower extremities) were recovered next morning; and thus a large number of the inhabitants of this unfortunate city have been thrown into mourning

Last year, in May and June, 1845, 20,000 of the inhabitants, or two-thirds of the population, were rendered houseless by the two great fires which consumed almost all the suburbs, and now there has occurred a frightful loss of life by fire. There were other outlets to escape from the St. Louis Theatre, but which were not known to those who suffered—they made for the door by which they had entered, and thus miserably perished

The military, consisting of the Royal Artillery, the 14th, and 89th Regiments; and, also the Fire Companies, by their greatest exertions, prevented the fire from spreading over the Upper Town, and again rendered very eminent service

(From the Quebec Mercury of the 13th June.)

Last night, at ten o'clock, a fire broke out in the Theatre Royal St. Louis (formerly the Riding School), at the close of Mr. Harrison's Exhibition of his Chemical Dioramas. From the information we have been enabled to glean, a camphine lamp was overset, from some cause or other, and the stage at once became enveloped in flames.

The house had been densely crowded, but some had fortunately left before the accident

A rush was at once made to the staircase leading from the boxes, by those who, in the excitement of the moment, forgot the other passages of egress

In an incredibly short space of time, the whole of the interior of the building was enveloped in one sheet of flame: the newly erected platform covering the pit, and communicating at each end with the stage and boxes, favoured the progress of the flames.

The staircase communicating with the boxes was a steep one, and we are of opinion it had fallen from the weight of those who crowded upon it. At least, such was our opinion at the moment.

One foot was interposed between the hapless crowd and eternity, and on that space we, with five or six others, stood, the fierce flames playing around us, and the dense smoke repelling all efforts to extricate. As far back as we could see, there was a sea of heads, of writhing bodies and outstretched arms. Noise there was none—but few moans escaped the doomed. At the extreme end in view, there were faces calm and resigned; persons, who, from the funereal veil of smoke which gradually enshrouded them, appeared calmly to drop into eternal sleep By our side was one brother striving to extricate another, but abandonment was unavoidable. One poor creature at our feet offered his entire worldly wealth for his rescue; the agonising expression of the faces before us can never be effaced from our memory.

Some were erect, others trampled beneath the feet of the uppermost, and the whole inextricably interlocked

The flames at the moment were above and around us: but human aid was of no avail: in five minutes from the time of which we make mention, the mass of human beings who had but a short interval previous been in the full and active enjoyment of life, were exposed to our view a mass of charred bodies and calcined bones!

Up to this hour forty-five bodies have been recovered from the ruins! Most of them have been recognized: a greater loss of life than in the two dread conflagrations of last Summer.

Sad wailing pervades the city. Scarcely a street can be traversed in which the closed shutter or the hanging crape do not betoken a sudden bereavement Fathers, sisters, children of both sexes indulge in the deepest lamentation. Woe has fallen upon many; for those who were thus suddenly and awfully summoned into the presence of their Creator

P.S.—"4 o'clock."—45 bodies have been recovered All but two have been recognised. Dlle Emilie Poncy, aunt of Miss Poncy, of the Lower Town is missing; the remains of a body said to be a female are supposed to be hers.

The second is a Mr. M'Hugh, of Malbaie, a schoolmaster, who was in the theatre in company with Miss Poncy

The theatre, and stables adjoining, we should add, were burnt to the ground. The horses in the latter were all saved.

The ruins are still smoking; and, as in the time of London's great plague, the dead-cart plies to and fro from the scene of the calamity to different parts of the city, conveying its ghastly load of charred remains, followed by weeping relatives and the gaping crowd which ever attend such dread scene

The Procession (Corpus Christi) by the clergy and members of the Roman Catholic Church has, in consequence of the above calamity, been set aside

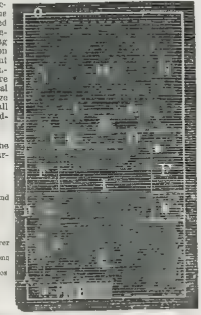
(From the same paper, of the 16th of June)

We have conversed with some parties who were present at the exhibition on the evening in question, who concur in stating that, at its close, Mr Harrison, the proprietor, was in front of the curtain, thanking the audience for their patronage when a strong light shone through the green baize. He immediately drew it aside, and, seeing the flames rapidly extending, tore it down, but too late to arrest the progress of the fire, which had then extended to his dioramic views, and was quickly enveloping the wings and scenes placed above the "flies" (as they are termed), to be out of the way of the persons moving about the stage. An attempt was also made by the innocent cause of the disaster, the boy, to extinguish the fire, and, we are told, by Lieut. Armstrong, of the 14th Regiment, who rushed upon the stage for the purpose but in vain.

We should state that, by this time, most of the audience had retired, the remainder having held back to escape the great crush and retire quietly and in comfort. The smoke from the camphine and burning canvass soon, however, [illegible] them and produced a general confusion Having entered by the box-door, they thought only of escaping the same way (although the pit entrance was at hand, and several of the windows, especially one over the porch at the box-door were within reach, from the boxes, even of the youngest child present), and, the stairs being somewhat steep and narrow, the foremost were pitched down headlong, and there jammed by others falling upon them, until the passage became completely choked, and the unfortunate people inextricably interlaced, crushed, and wedged in One gentleman who had a lady under his care, foreseeing the slight chances of escape afforded them, returned to the boxes with his charge, although they were one-third of the way down stairs. When there a bright sheet of flame swept across from the stage to the boxes, fanning, with its burning glow, their faces: she shrieked and sprung from his grasp down the stair. He followed, in the hope of rescuing her, and crept over the heads of the writhing victims then doomed to inevitable destruction. He spoke to several on his way down, but could not find his companion, who eventually perished with the rest. He became senseless when about to reach the landing place at the entrance and was dragged out by one of the few bystanders present. Another gentleman who was pulled from the living mass flew past us, and, so bewildered was he, would have rushed into the flames then bursting through the adjoining pit-door, but for the friendly and providential interposition of a person near him

We stated as our impression, when the awful sight of the struggling mass of human victims first met our view, that the stairs had fallen. Upon reflection, this cannot have been the case, as the wooden partition on the one side did not extend below the level of the inclination of the steps, and, consequently, had they fallen, the crowd would have rolled into the open area adjoining, and beneath the boxes.

It may be proper to add that the view is taken from the Place d'Armes, Quebec. The Theatre is situated near the site of the former Castle St. Louis, which was the residence of the Governor of British North America. The building (the Theatre) was very plain; not originally built for a theatre; but the destruction of life, &c, now gives it some interest. The Castle was destroyed by fire in 1835, and has not been rebuilt, the seat of Government being removed to Montreal, since the union of the Canadas. The scenery about Quebec is very grand, bold, and interesting: the harbour and basin are compared to Naples. The principal building on the left is the St. George Hotel, kept by Payne; the small building to the right is a guard-house.



GROUND PLAN OF THE THEATRE.

We annex a Ground-Plan of the Theatre, showing the internal arrangements, &c.

A. Outside door leading to the Boxes.
B. Stairs leading up to Boxes.
C. Boxes.
D Outside door leading to the Stalls and Pit.
E E. Stalls.
F F. Pit.
G G Orchestra
H. Proscenium
I. (Temporary) erection, (with seats) over the Stalls and Pit
J. Passage, below the Boxes, from one door to the other
K. Refreshment Room, below the Boxes
L L. Curtain
M. The Stage
N N Dressing Rooms, &c.
O Private door.
P Entrance to Refreshment Room
— Place where the bodies were found

ALARMING AND FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.

In part of our impression of Saturday last we communicated such particulars as were then known in England, of a lamentable accident which took place, on the previous Wednesday, on the line of the Great Northern Railway of France, between Arras and Douai.

Some confusion still prevails in the details which have since been published, but we supply the best versions of the accident we can find in the French papers.

The train, which left Paris at seven in the morning, on Wednesday, the 8th instant, drawn by two locomotives, had passed the Arras station, when, on arriving opposite the village of Fampoux, the second machine and its tender went off the rails. The leading carriages remained in their places, but twelve or fourteen carriages of the middle of the train went off the way, and five or six were precipitated down the bank into a piece of marshy ground below. The accident took place at about half-past three o'clock in the afternoon.

Two trains from Arras and Douai soon brought to the spot three medical men, the Procureur du Roi, and Mayor of Arras, and the chiefs of the stations of that town and of Douai.

As soon as the news arrived in Paris, a representative of the Board of Directors, accompanied by the engineer, proceeded to the spot. The passengers were taken to Douai, where the usual train from Paris, which passes Arras at half past seven, took them on to Lille and Valenciennes

The Northern Railroad Company have published the following report from the sub-inspector who accompanied the train, dated July 10, five A M

"The train ran off the rails on the 8th, at five minutes past three, at a distance of eight kilometres (two leagues) from Arras, when going at a very moderate rate, as acknowledged by several passengers, whose names I have. Of twenty-eight carriages, thirteen were precipitated into a deep peat pit, having eight feet of water. Although the first locomotive did not go off the rail, and the second so little that the fourgon (baggage waggon) No. 1,002, which followed, remained on the rails, the running off commenced with the two next carriages. These two waggons were first detatched from the train, and fell into the water, where they now lie, crushed by the three diligences which followed them. The weight of these diligences seems to have dragged the other carriages off the rails. There are, therefore, piled up, and wholly or partially destroyed, eight carriages. The fifteen carriages at the tail of the train, and the fourgon at the head, after the locomotives, escaped the accident. We have now to deplore twelve known deaths. The following are the names that we have been able to obtain: Mdme. Demeldes, of Armentiers; Marie Flamand, of Bouchain; Mdlle. Legnay, of Fampoux; [illegible] Lecompte, of Isselle; Bourgeois and Degnen, soldiers; and Tabary and Picard, two boys. Wounded—Mdme. Picard, of Montalaire, shoulder broken and contusions on head; Mdme. Braine, wife of a notary at Arras, contusions; M. Degny, chef d'escadron, seriously wounded; an Englishman and his wife, at the Hotel de Flandre, at Douai, the husband in the arm, the wife contusions; M. Grapinet, a lace dealer, of Paris; another Englishman, at the Hotel de Flandre, at Douai. The Cour Royale of Douai has taken up the affair. An examining counsellor and M. Besche have interrogated me. He is partly convinced, as far as we can judge, that the company is perfectly innocent of this unhappy event. In addition to the two conductors killed, we have no person in the employment injured. The rest behaved perfectly well, and one of them, named Hocq, saved eight persons by swimming. I have also to praise the excellent co-operation of M. Halliot. We had in this unfortunate train the Princess de Ligne and her four children; the Marquise de Lauriston; Marshal Salagne (Portuguese); M. Lestiboudois, deputy; and General Oudinot, miraculously saved, for his carriage was crushed under the diligence, and his aide-de-camp has since died of his wounds. We do not appear to have had more than four or five persons severely wounded. Eighteen carriages have been already despatched to Arras and Douai; these have not suffered, but the others are in a deplorable state."

The Independance of Brussels says:—"More than three hours elapsed before assistance arrived. The peasants of the environs looked on with astonishment, and the wounded passengers could hardly obtain water to wash their wounds. A sad scene presented itself to the spectators. Young females, who had been in their holiday dresses, were taken out bleeding, and covered with mud. Some victims had their heads separated from the bodies, others, with broken limbs, were lying by the sides of the road. An aide-de-camp of General Oudinot was on the edge of the pond, his loins and three ribs broken, and praying for death. An Englishman, who was travelling with his family, had an arm broken in three places; but, notwithstanding his sufferings, he would not confess to his wife that he was wounded. At the end of the train were nine private carriages, in which were the Princess de Ligne and her four children, the two daughters of the Polish General Skrzynecki, in the Belgian service, and a Russian lady. The [illegible] last immediately opened their trunks, and placed all their linen at the service of the wounded, at the same time giving to them their personal aid."

A Douai journal states that M. de Lagrence, who returned lately from his embassy in China, was in the train, but escaped injury. The Princess Czartoriska is also stated to have been a passenger

Some of the French papers give details of a much graver account than the above. Indeed, the greater number of them, relying upon the Journal de la Somme and the Echo du Nord, persist in the expression of their belief that the deaths have been numerous. The former of these journals asserts that there are 58 missing. A conducteur, named Bourgeois, who sat on a carriage behind those which fell over, states that in the waggon which had been overturned in the [illegible] there were 35 persons But a great number, it must be recollected, escaped by swimming, or were pulled out. We, therefore, hope that the report of the Government officer will prove correct

The National of Friday gives the following on the authority of [illegible] who was at the scene of the accident, and gathered his information from persons who [illegible]

"The train consisted of 24 carriages, and was drawn by two locomotives. At five minutes past three the train was in front of the village of Fampoux, [illegible] near Roeux, where there is an embankment near a deep lake over a [illegible] At this point the rails were either disjoined, or displaced, or broken. [illegible] locomotive, however, got over them, but the second [illegible] going completely off the rails. The violence of the shock, [illegible] page, was such that the chain which united the carriages to each other [illegible] snapped like glass, not precisely close to the locomotive, but at the fifth or sixth carriage. The carriages thus detached were thrown into the marsh. The first was literally broken to pieces, others were upset and submerged Yesterday there were nine carriages lying on the embankment where they had stopped after the first impulsion had ceased. Nobody can know exactly the number of passengers killed or drowned. The water is very deep at this spot The [illegible] states that eleven dead bodies have been removed. The [illegible] from whom we had [illegible] information heard, on the spot, that, up to yesterday, it was a certainty that there were seventeen killed. The Liberal, of Douai, states the number to be twenty. As to the number of wounded, one account gives fifteen. At Douai and Arras, however, it was said that fifty persons had been wounded, which is not impossible, as fifteen carriages ran off the rails, and we may suppose that most of the passengers in them received more or less injury. It is impossible to conceive the alarm and anxiety that were felt at the different stations towards Belgium at the non-arrival of the train."

BURNING OF THE QUEBEC THEATRE.—FROM A SKETCH BY A CORRESPONDENT.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

The National, of the succeeding day, has the following :—"M. Victor Paquet, who was providentially saved, writes to us this (Sunday) evening, with feelings of the greatest indignation, and declares that the number who have perished is triple that which has been announced. The company, nevertheless, express astonishment, and complain of our partiality. 'It is the Government engineers,' they say, 'who formed the road, and delivered it up to public circulation. The National, which has written so much on the subject, cannot be ignorant of this.' No, certainly not; but, if M. de Rothschild reads the National, he must have seen that, at the moment when the works were ceded, we formally demanded, in the interest of the public and of the company itself, that it should seriously examine and survey the line. We particularly dwelt on the immense responsibility which would lay on the company."

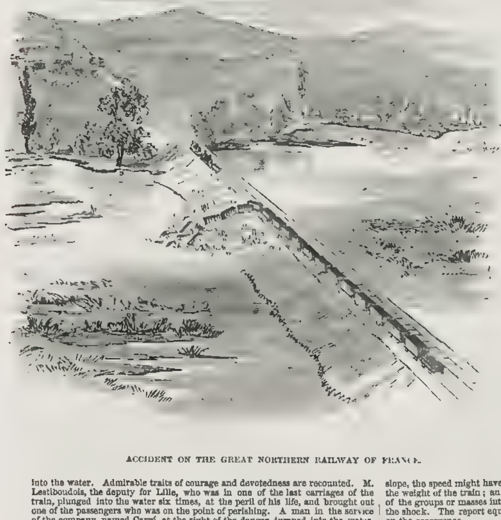
The Epoque states that the number of persons killed was sixteen. The Gazette des Tribunaux says :—"Amongst the passengers who escaped, all who were not paralysed with fright, hastened to the assistance of the persons who had fallen into the water. Admirable traits of courage and devotedness are recounted. M. Lestiboudois, the deputy for Lille, who was in one of the last carriages of the train, plunged into the water six times, at the peril of his life, and brought out one of the passengers who was on the point of perishing. A man in the service of the company, named Carré, at the sight of the danger, jumped into the water, and swam away to avoid the carriages, which were falling into it; but, on hearing the cries of the sufferers, he returned, and, plunging several times, saved five lives. The number of persons killed or drowned is not yet known, but we are assured that three of the railroad carriages, and a messageries diligence, called les Picardes, had completely disappeared in the water."

The Messager contains the following official communication relative to this melancholy catastrophe :—"We are happy to be able to announce that the aide-de-camp of General Oudinot, whom we had counted among the number of victims of the deplorable accident of which the Northern Railway has been the theatre, has not sunk under his wounds. There are, on the contrary, great hopes of his recovery. Thus, the number of persons killed, including the two conducteurs, amount to 14. The latest accounts, brought on Saturday evening by M. Frissard, divisionary inspector, who visited the scene by order of the Minister of Public Works, enable us to affirm that we shall not have to announce and deplore any further deaths."

M. Frissard, Inspector of the Department of Ways and Means, M. Onfroy de Breville, chief engineer, sent to Fampoux by the Minister of Public Works, and two engineers of the Northern Railroad Company, returned to Paris on Saturday evening. "Their report," says the Siècle, "confirms in every respect the account addressed to the company by the sub-inspector who accompanied the train, and which we have published. It is now officially ascertained that the number of dead is 14, as at first stated, and we have a positive assurance that, if we except the wounded, there will be no other victims."

The Constitutionnel mentions that the King, on hearing of the accident on the Northern Railway, had sent to the spot one of his aides-de-camp, General de Rumigny, who soon brought back to his Majesty a correct account of the event.

It is an extraordinary fact that on the day after the great calamity an accident occurred on the same spot. The agents of the company had, with the most culpable negligence, left near the rails a crane which had been used to draw up the carriages which had fallen into the water, and a train from Brussels coming up, a step of one of the waggons struck against the crane, and drove it among the soldiers and labourers who were near, breaking one soldier's leg, severely wounding two other soldiers, and causing contusions to several workmen. If the resistance of the crane had been greater the carriages would have been forced off the rail, and a calamity equal to or greater than that of the preceding day would have happened.



ACCIDENT ON THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY OF FRANCE.

A Brussels paper of the 10th, has the following :—We have to enumerate another accident. The train from Valenciennes to Brussels which set out this morning arrived at the station of Blanc Misseron, when the guard gave the signal announcing its arrival. The conductor, a young man 28 years of age, stooping to see if it was time to stop, leaned too far forward, so that his head was dashed against a tree, and he expired shortly afterwards.

Councillor Wanderwallen and the Avocat-General have been appointed by the Cour Royale of Douai to proceed with the investigation relative to the accident on the Northern Railroad. M. Busche, chief engineer of the Northern Railroad, has been called before the court, and undergone a long examination.

The Northern Railway Directors have sent a communication to the Paris newspapers, in which they contradict the reports given by the local papers, as to the extent of the number of persons killed and wounded by the recent accident, and declare that it has been ascertained that the real number of victims was fourteen killed (including two children), five seriously wounded, and twenty slightly bruised.

M. Frissard, the Government Inspector of the Railroads of the North, has addressed his report to the Minister of Public Works on the late accident. He states that the train consisted of two locomotives and 28 carriages, with 220 passengers, and classes them in the order in which they were connected, but there is nothing in this part of the report that contains any new information. In his resumé of the report he states that 13 carriages, waggons, or diligences, were thrown off the road, and that the number of victims might have been greater if there had not been two luggage waggons and an empty diligence—that of Valenciennes—and if five of the carriages had not taken a less dangerous direction than the others

The report proceeds to say that the speed of the train was not great—a fact demonstrated by the time occupied in passing from Arras to Fampoux (near to which the accident occurred), the distance being five miles, and the time spent in doing it twenty-two minutes; but he does not deny that, in descending a slope, the speed might have been, for the moment, accelerated by the weight of the train; an hypothesis justified by the appearance of the groups or masses into which it (the train) was broken by the shock. The report equally acquits the materiel of culpability on the occurrence.

Ultimately, after acquitting the Government of delivering the road in an imperfect or unsafe condition to the company, and the company of neglecting it since it came into their possession; and, after stating that the materials used were excellent, and the speed moderate, and the road straight, M. Frissard concludes by declaring his perfect incompetency to account for, or make even a rational guess at the cause of the accident.

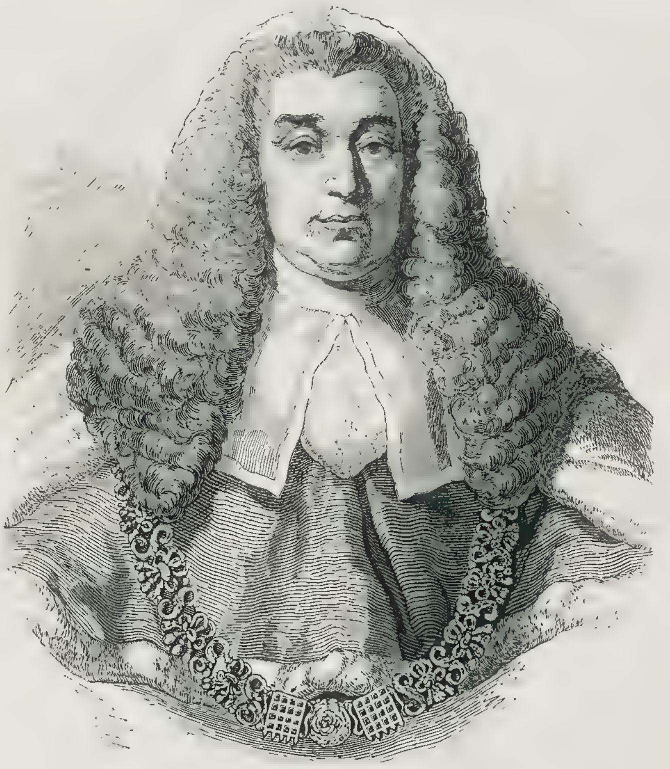
We regret to learn, that, notwithstanding the official statement that the deaths from the accident were fourteen only, rumours were in circulation in Paris which increased the number to forty, and even more. It has now been ascertained that no Englishman has been killed; but, unfortunately, there are one or two severely hurt. Mr. Stratford Best had his arm badly fractured, and it is feared that he must have it amputated. Mrs. Best, who was in the carriage, fortunately escaped. Capt. Burke was severely bruised, and still remains at Douai, where he is confined to his room with a severe fever brought on by the excitement of the accident. Mr. Browne, of the firm of Messrs. Kysaeus and Co., of Paris, escaped by swimming.

MDLLE. RACHEL AS CAMILLE, IN "LES HORACES."—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

SIR NICOLAS CONYNGHAM TINDAL,

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE COMMON PLEAS.

This great Judge, perhaps one of the ablest lawyers that ever sat on the Bench, was born at Chelmsford, in 1776, where his father, Robert Tindal, the descendant of an old Essex family, was, for many years, an eminent solicitor. Mr. Tindal, the son, after the usual course of school education, entered at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1795, and, within four years of that period (in 1799), took the degree of A.B., and that of A.M. in 1802. At the University he was eighth Wrangler, and senior Chancellor's Medallist. In October, 1801, he was elected a Fellow of his College, and held the Fellowship for eight years. Immediately after taking his Master's degree he became a student of Lincoln's Inn, by which Society he was eventually called to the Bar. Before, however, assuming the degree of a Barrister, he entered upon practice, with very considerable success, as a special pleader; indeed, a man more thoroughly erudite than Mr. Tindal even then was, in every department of the law, could scarcely be found within the range of the profession; he was especially celebrated for what is called "black letter learning." His high reputation brought him so many clients, that at a very early age he thought it safe to go to the bar, and he was accordingly called in Trinity Term, 1809. In the same year, he married the youngest daughter of the late Captain Thomas Symonds, R.N., and consequently resigned his fellowship. A numerous family were the issue of this marriage, but the wife of Sir Nicolas Tindal died many years ago. In the Court of King's Bench, and on the Northern Circuit, every year brought Mr. Tindal additional reputation as a lawyer; he, however, never attained much fame as an advocate. His forte lay in his thorough knowledge of the principles of the common law, and in his ready and powerful application of them in argument; in the more showy duties of examining witnesses, or addressing a jury, he was not distinguished; indeed, he left these willingly to his leaders, and generally confined himself to heavier and more laborious employment. A large income rewarded his learning, his industry, and his high reasoning faculties. Mr. Tindal first came prominently before the public as one of the Counsel for Queen Caroline, at the celebrated investigation before the House of Lords.



THE LATE SIR NICOLAS CONYNGHAM TINDAL, LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

In 1824, Mr. Tindal was returned to Parliament as member for the Wigton District of Burghs: here, also, his deficiency in the powers of eloquence caused him to be little noticed. In politics, he was a Tory ad captandum; and, in 1826, he was made, by the then Government, Solicitor-General, and was knighted. After subsequently representing the University of Cambridge in Parliament, Sir Nicolas Tindal was appointed Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, in June, 1829: this elevated position he held during the long period of seventeen years.

As a Judge, his name will rank among the brightest of those who have occupied the seat of justice in England: he was courteous, calm, patient, dignified, ever inclined to mercy, yet rigidly just; his beautifully lucid and intelligent opinions and statements, in giving judgment, or in addressing the Jury, may be cited as models of forensic wisdom. One of them, which was much admired at the time, we would particularly refer to, as a perfect specimen: it was the charge of this able Chief Justice to the Grand Jury at the Special Commission at Stafford, in 1843, appointed to try the riotous colliers and labourers. This address may be found at length in the volume of Reports by Messrs. Carrington and Marshman, page 662, and is well worthy the perusal, not only of the professional reader, but of every one who can appreciate the administration of human justice, in its purest and most majestic form.

The indefatigable and invaluable career of Sir Nicolas Tindal has been suddenly brought to a close; and it may be truly said of him, that he died almost "with harness on his back." About a fortnight ago, he attended officially the hearing of an appeal in the House of Lords. On leaving, he complained of excessive heat, and appeared to be almost fainting. He was, within a few hours, seized with paralysis of the left leg, extending to the hip joint; and, being removed to the sea-side, at Folkstone, expired there on Monday evening, the 6th instant, in the presence of his son, Captain Tindal, and several other members of his family. On the Friday morning preceding the melancholy result, a shivering fit came on, followed by a low inflammation of the bowels on the right side: the immediate cause of death, however, appears to have been the rupture of an internal vessel. At the moment the event took place, Sir Nicolas was lying in his bed, and using not the slightest exertion.

Of a man endowed with such public virtue, it is also gratifying to relate, that his private worth was no less. Adored by his family, revered by his friends, he lived in the utmost affection of all who knew him: as an instance, we find Lord Lyndhurst, and Lord Brougham—who was his pupil—both unable to refrain from tears when announcing his death in the House of Lords. Indeed, if ever the public have cause to grieve, it is when the hand of fate falls upon their surest safeguard, the intellectual and immaculate judge, such as this man was, —In memoriâ æternâ erit justus.

SCULPTURE IN THE PEDIMENT OF THE NEW COMMERCIAL BANK, EDINBURGH.—DESIGNED BY MR. JAMES WYATT.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

RUINS OF TYNEMOUTH PRIORY, NEAR NEWCASTLE.

This picturesque ruin is one of the antiquarian curiosities of the environs of Newcastle. The village of Tynemouth adjoins North Shields, and lies upon the summit of perpendicular cliffs, inaccessible from the sea.

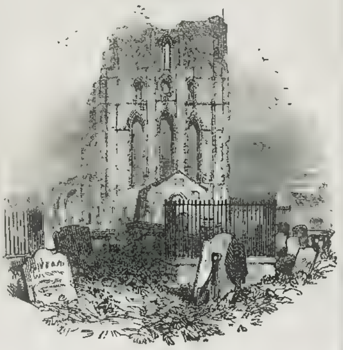
The Priory—the architectural beauty of which is attested by the above remains—was founded by Oswald, King of Northumberland, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin. It was plundered by the Danes on three of their incursions, in the last of which it was, with its inmates, reduced to ashes. It remained in ruins until the reign of Edward the Confessor, when it was rebuilt by Tonstan, Earl of Northumberland, and dedicated to St. Mary and St. Oswin. Soon after the Conquest, it was degraded to a cell, and made subservient to the monastery at Girwy, afterwards to Durham, and lastly to St. Albans.

From various records, it appears that the Priory of Tynemouth possessed the royalties of twenty-seven villages in Northumberland, and several in Durham. After the Suppression, the site and ruins were granted to the Duke of Northumberland, but again reverted to the Crown, in whose hands they remained until the death of Queen Elizabeth.

On its being converted into a Fortress, it was called Tynemouth Castle; and, from its peculiar situation, it seems to have been formed by nature as a stronghold, and to possess remarkable facilities for the protection of the port and shipping.

During the Civil Wars, it was besieged and taken by the Scots, in 1644, with a loss to the Royalists of thirty-eight pieces of ordnance. The garrison were allowed to march out, and the Parliament ordered £5000 to repair this fortress and the works at Newcastle, and appointed Colonel Henry Lilburn, governor. He and most of the garrison, however, shortly afterwards declared for the King, on which the Governor of Newcastle marched against him, and, having besieged the Castle, put all to the sword, and Lilburn being slain, his head was fixed on a pole.

We find these details opportunely enough in "The Handbook of Newcastle," by Llewellyn Jewitt; a very cheap Guide, prepared expressly for visitors to the Agricultural Show, and furnishing just the kind of information they are likely to stand most in need of. It is a meritorious performance, and is worthy of the encouragement of visitors and the good people of Newcastle, at all seasons.



RUINS OF TYNEMOUTH PRIORY, NEAR NEWCASTLE.

To return to the Priory remains. They are, adds the "Handbook," judiciously enough, "extensive in their proportions, picturesque in their appearance, varied in their style, and exquisitely beautiful in their various bits of architectural detail. The principal parts of the ruins are in the early English style, and many fine specimens of the characteristic 'tooth ornament' may be found, especially upon the elegant series of arcades, and upon some of the dooways. The Priory was for many years used as the parish church; but, being much decayed, and the parishioners being debarred from using it during the Civil Wars, a new church was erected; but many of the families of the town still bury in the old ground."

At Tynemouth, near the cliff, by the way, has lately been placed Lough's noble statue of Lord Collingwood, engraved in No. 189 of the Illustrated London News.

THE NEW COMMERCIAL BANK, EDINBURGH.

A noble edifice, in the Corinthian style of architecture, has just been completed for the business of the New Commercial Bank, at Edinburgh. It is situate in George-street, termed the finest street in Europe; and the building forms a grand addition to the already highly-embellished "Queen of the North."

Perhaps, the most interesting feature of the structure is a group of sculpture, executed by Mr. A. H. Ritchie, from a model by Mr. James Wyatt, whose very meritorious share in modelling the colossal statue of the Duke of Wellington, we noticed last week.

The figures of the Edinburgh group, which we have engraved, are in full relief, and of colossal life-size. They entirely fill the tympanum of the Bank pediment, just as in Mr. Lucas's clever model of "The Parthenon Restored;" the sculpture thus forming a portion of the architect's design, instead of appearing like an afterthought. The experiment was a bold, but successful, one; and great credit is due for it to Mr. Wyatt, Mr. Ritchie, the sculptor, and Mr. Rhind, the architect of the Bank building.

The group consists of, in the centre, a figure of Scotland, supported by Justice and Enterprise, receiving from the hands of Plenty the fruits of her industry. Impersonations of Agriculture and Navigation, with emblems and accessories, fill up the dexter side of the pediment. On the sinister side, are figures representing Merchandise and Science; while a group of three children peering into the peculiarities of a notched wheel complete the group. The figures are all well modelled and sculptured, and the draperies light and flowing; the three children are exquisite, and have rarely been equalled in modern sculpture.

The design, we should add, was submitted to competition: and to Mr. Wyatt was awarded by the Bank Directors, the prize for his very tasteful composition.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, July 19. Sixth Sunday after Trinity.
Monday, 20. Burns died, 1796, aged thirty-seven.
Tuesday, 21. Lord William Russell beheaded, 1683.
Wednesday, 22. Jupiter rises at 0h. 29m. a.m.
Thursday 23.—Gibraltar taken, 1704.
Friday, 24. Saturn rises at 9h. 6m. p.m.
Saturday, 25. St. James.

HIGH WATER at London Bridge for the Week ending July 25.

Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
0 0	0 4	0 34	1 0	1 23	1 45	2 7	2 24	2 44	3 0	3 16	3 35

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. M."—Napoleon Bonaparte was in stature only 5 feet 6 inches, English.

"A Friend," Milnthorpe, had better put up with the loss: he is not in a safe position to proceed.

"W. W." is thanked for the information as to the Parish Clerks, though we have not room to insert it.

"W. Z. F." wishes to obtain a full account of the Schoolmaster's College now in course of formation.

"T. L. S.," [illegible], is thanked, but we have not room for the anecdote.

"I. F. S."—"Metaphysics," in the "Library of Useful Knowledge."

"W. H.," Birmingham, is not bound to draw as well as engrave, though it will be advantageous for him to do both.

"J. F." Torrington.—A good magic lanthorn, with astronomical slides, may be bought for about three guineas.

"A Constant Reader."—The author of the play of "Money" is Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer-Lytton, Bart.

"A Subscriber," Compton-street, Soho.—Mr. Wright first appeared in London at the Queen's Theatre, as Von Dunder, in "'Twould Puzzle a Conjuror," season 1832-33.

"An Anxious Enquirer," Dalston.—The fee for a Marriage License is Five Guineas.

"A. B. C.," Coventry.—Gravel walks may be hardened with a mixture of dry road scraping and coal tar from gas works.

"Organistes."—We have not leisure to search the Times file.

"J. B.," York.—198, Strand. We cannot give any opinion as to informants, nor double consonants, &c.

"R. C.," Huntingdon, is thanked; but we cannot undertake the Engraving.

"E. A. L."—In Bank Securities.

"K.," Leicester, is thanked for his suggestion.

"A Faithful Reader."—We should be sorry to see the Lake at Oatlands filled up; the disparking would less concern us, as parks are for the gratification of the few. There are third class carriages on the South-Western Railway: perhaps, the South-Eastern Line runs through more picturesque scenery. Middlesex (area, 282 square miles) is the smallest of all the English counties, except Rutland; in amount of population exceeded only, and that in a small degree, by Yorkshire alone: in density of population, it very far exceeds any other English county.

"A Subscriber," Lyme Regis.—A servant discharged without warning for proven dishonesty cannot claim a month's wages besides that due.

"C. J. D." should apply to a Hair-dresser.

"A Five Pound Note" should get changed: say, a Commercial Traveller.

"T. O. M." should consult the Pamphlet on Ward's Cases, published by Van Voorst, 1, Paternoster-row.

"R. H. B. S."—The price of the Gallery Stalls at Her Majesty's is 5s. The public, however, frequently have to pay more than that sum, owing to persons, under feigned names securing the tickets beforehand. In London, and in Paris, (at the Académie de Musique) every means has been employed in vain by the Directors to stop this imposition on the public.

"W. W. O."—The height of Tom Thumb is 25 inches: it would be, therefore, more correct to compare him to the height of the arm than the seat of a chair.

"A Constant Reader," Chipping Norton.—Smart's Edition of Walker's Dictionary, just published. See the word in question, in our article on the Kaffir War, in present No.

"A Country Subscriber."—The charge for our Journal is 13s. per half year, if paid in advance.

"A. B."—"Taylor's Short-hand, improved by Harding"; or, "Pitman's Phonography."

"S'il vous plait," Birmingham, should employ hard paper. See "Booth's Principles of English Composition"—a sound work.

"Paul Pry," Worthing.—A soubrette is a lady's maid, or a chambermaid. Lord Byron died April 19, 1824, and was buried in Hucknall Torkard Church, Notts.

"M. A. L."—The half-farthings were coined for our Colonies. Threepenny pieces are less rare at home.

"Via Recta," Barum, should apply to any Print-seller—say Evans, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's Inn Fields; and to Dealers in Curiosities, in Wardour-street, Soho. All our Journal may be had in Volumes or Numbers.

"S. S."—The case quoted from the Essex Transcript, American paper, is, indeed, a frightful illustration of Slavery, in that land of liberty and equality.

"Luckless Joe."—Exposure at a Police Office may induce the payment of the promised "Reward," if it be properly claimed.

"Lover."—Naxos is the largest of the Cyclades Islands in the Egean Sea, or Archipelago.

"Timothy Tablet."—Probably, at some future time.

"A Well-wisher," Shrewsbury.—The locality of the New Farmery, engraved in our last, is indicated in the accompanying Plan. The price of the Plough, Agricultural Magazine, is 2s. 6d. per month.

"Ex-Sydney," Glasgow.—The Australian Sketches will be resumed. Still, our present Number will remind our Correspondent that other Colonies demand attention.

"J. G. N."—Mr. G. Godwin, Jun., is one of the Honorary Secretaries to the London Art-Union: address, Trafalgar-square.

"Agricola."—We do not know the work in question.

"Incognita," (L.C.H.S.) "Olim Oxoniensis."—"W. H.," (an Artist.)—We regret that we have not room for the Lines by these Correspondents; as their object is to direct public sympathy in the right vein. We are happy to learn that the Subscription List for the same noble object, is fast lengthening.

"Amate."—We cannot give any reason for the absence of the hon. gentleman from the present Ministry: rumour says that it is caused by some disagreement with the Premier as to the office he wished to fill.

"S. P. N."—The present Parliament has existed longer than any for the last fifteen or twenty years. From the passing of the Septennial Act till the close of the war, more than one Parliament may have existed the full term without a dissolution, but we do not know an instance of it since the peace.

"Emily Maria."—Is our fair Correspondent quite certain that the subject of her question is not altogether a creature of the poet's imagination?

"C. V. Johnstone."—A passport is required for Belgium; the Consul's fee is 5s.: if the Traveller goes to Germany, the visée of the Prussian Consul will be necessary also, which entails a fee of 5s. more. Guide Books are abundant, and vary in price from 6d. to 10s. "Murray's Hand-Book" is the fullest and best.

"C. C. C."—There is no railroad from Ghent to Brussels, except the Ostend and Cologne line, which passes through Malines.

"A Widow."—The etiquette of the Bar requires that all business be transacted through an Attorney.

"A. B."—An Officer in a Royal Regiment of Militia is entitled to put "a Cockade" in his servant's hat.

"An Old Subscriber."—King's Newton, whence Lord Hardinge takes the designation of his title, is certainly in Derbyshire. In our next, we will indicate its exact locality.

"G. B. H."—Lucile Grahn is not married.

"An Irish Reader" shall be answered next week.

"A Subscriber."—Parliament is dissolved by the efflux of time at the expiration of seven years from the period of its being summoned. A Statute to this effect passed in 1716.

"Flirts."—To reply would be literary flirtation.

"A Constant Reader," Leeds.—Fleming and Tibbins's Dictionaire Royal. French Without a Master.

"Somerset."—The address is 3, Chesterfield-street.

"A Subscriber."—The address of the pyrotechnist is 98, Regent-street, Lambeth.

"H. C."—We have not seen the work in question.

"P. S. W.," Mobile.—The subjects named possess no novelty, or we might avail ourselves of the well-intended suggestions.

"Philologist."—Next week.

"Cuo Viator."—The Gretna-green marriages have not yet been abolished by Act of Parliament.

"A Constant Reader" will find a list of London Savings' Banks in the Post-office Directory.

"A Subscriber" will require practical lessons in Wood Engraving: the "Treatise" is not a royal road to excellence in the art.

"A. J. A., Fenchurch-street."—Cave.

"P. H.," Winchester, is thanked.

"E. J.," Wallingford.—We cannot speak as to the merits of the work in question.

THE LATE MR. HAYDON.

(To the Editor.)

In the memoir of the life of R. B. Haydon, inserted in your journal of July 4, it is stated that "he was admitted to see the Elgin Marbles, and the consequence was, that he rubbed out the whole of what he had painted of his picture of Dentatus, and recommenced on a new principle," &c. Having been on intimate terms with Mr. Haydon at that period, I can venture to say, that such was not the case. The only part of the picture which he erased and repainted was the head of Dentatus; and that in consequence of a defect in the drawing of the neck. Instead of being indebted to any new principle of the art, from seeing the Elgin Marbles, he was, at that time, much taken up with the study of the colouring of Bassano, of whose works he was a devoted admirer.

I may as well add the following, to show how deeply he felt the disappointment of not receiving even one of the several premiums adjudged to various artists, by the Fine Arts' Committee of the Cartoons' Exhibition: Haydon, some time afterwards, gave a Lecture on the subject of Cartoons generally, at the Richmond Literary and Scientific Institution; and, in referring to his own position and efforts to sustain high art, he became so excited as to be obliged to give vent to his feelings in a flood of tears, and the Lecture was brought to a sudden close, the audience kindly sympathising in his reverses. I am, &c. J. S. A.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 18, 1846.

Every additional fact in the intelligence from America confirms us in the belief that the race who inhabit the north of that immense continent are destined to rule the south of it. They will do so from a natural cause always in operation, that infallibly gives dominion over the weak into the hands of the strong, over the idle to the industrious, over the apathetic to the men of energy. No political combinations, no efforts of diplomacy, will avail to prevent this consummation; it may be very distant as yet, but come it will, and it is as well to contemplate it as a possibility. The nature of man abhors a state of anarchy, confusion, and mere chance existence, with neither laws to restrain, men to guide, or a power that can be and do something. The northern race possess the qualities that build up empires and states, and hold them together by law and custom; wherever they go, they carry these qualities with them: their colonies grow to nations, and those nations proceed in their development.

It is as useless to complain of the increase, or try to stop it, as to lament the growth of the sapling to the oak. What may be the "Federations and the Powers" that are yet to arise in America, none can foresee; but that they will be as extraordinary in their nature as anything the world has yet witnessed, we do not doubt. It is a continent in the infancy of its history, armed with all the strength of modern science. It began its career little more than two centuries ago, and has an almost boundless territory, fresh and unworn, in which the Railway and the Steam Engine will be but the beginning of things.

Europe has a distinct history of two thousand years, yet has got no farther. Can we at all estimate what the aspect of society would have been, had Printing, Steam, and the Railway, been at work in it ever since the fall of the Roman Empire? The subject almost defies the grasp of the imagination. Yet, thus must we calculate, in looking forward into the future of America.

Present forms of Government sink into insignificance; they may be the best for the time, but will not bind all generations; the Republic of America has not existed longer than the duration of one human life; yet we doubt if the history of the whole world presents such another example of expansive power; man armed with implements unknown to former times, placed in a new sphere of action, scarcely feels a limit to his faculties; he starts upon new ground, with all the skill and wisdom that have been the accumulation of the experience of centuries. What marvel that he so quickly makes a conquest of the desert and converts the wilderness into a dwelling-place? That he spreads farther and farther, till men of other blood and languages acknowledge his dominion? It is a necessity. This is what is leading the power of the United States southward to Mexico; we now see but the germs and beginnings of what will assuredly take place in time—the Government of the descendants of the Spanish Colonists by the Anglo-Saxon race.

The Spaniards began their sway in the New World more like demons let loose on the earth than men; they have had their reward; their old Monarchy, from the same incapacity for government, and inability to do anything but crush and destroy, fetter and exclude, giving nothing but chains alike to commerce and conscience, has sunk to the weakest and most despised country of Europe; their colonies, where they shed so much blood, have gone from bad to worse; even their independence has been a misfortune rather than a blessing. Unable to unite for any purpose, the moment the yoke of the Monarchy was thrown off they flew at each other's throats, fighting and murdering, till the page they have added to modern history is one of the most horrible that history, ancient or modern, contains. But humanity wearies of anarchy, hopeless of improvement, of peace, of government of any kind from within, they are indifferent to invasion from without.

It now appears that many of the Northern States of Mexico are rather favourable to "Annexation" to the United States, than otherwise. The utter imbecility and savage ferocity of the men who have stood in the place of rulers to them, drive them to it; when anything like a well-policied state borders another torn and convulsed by factions, the feeling is inevitable; and thus the race who can govern, wins its way by a law as natural as the descent of water from the height to the level. It has been so from the beginning, and will continue to be so till the end. This is the tendency; but some of the circumstances by which it is shown are not so solemn in their nature; thus a President stimulating a war cry for party purposes, and then finding it unechoed by the great mass of the people, looks very petty indeed; the discovery of the cost of war and its ruinous effects is sooner made than formerly, and the alarm felt on the money part of the question, we hail as one of the best symptoms for the sway of peace; and, as if to conclude the discussion of the subject with a touch of the ludicrous, the last mail contains the offer of an American speculator to take the whole Mexican war by contract! undertaking to beat Arista and his troops for a much smaller sum than the States Government could do it, "pickings included!" Such a proposition could only have been made by an American; it is, decidedly, a new field of commercial enterprise. The "pomp, pride, and circumstance" of glorious war never received such a shock as this—placing it on the level of "navies' work," or the supply of workhouse provisions. Think of a return of so many killed and wounded, "as per contract!" It is worse than the "villanous saltpetre" that disgusted Hotspur's "certain Lord" with the noble profession.

Accident to Sir R. Peel.—Sir Robert Peel has been absent from the House of Commons during the week, in consequence of having lacerated his foot. We are happy to say that the accident was not of a serious character, although it may confine the Right Hon. Baronet to his room for several days longer. There have been numerous inquiries at Sir Robert Peel's house during the week.

THE MINISTERIAL RE-ELECTIONS.

Last week, in our first impression, we gave a list of the places which had re-elected the individuals whose seats had been vacated in consequence of the acceptance of office. In our latest edition the results of some other elections appeared. We now subjoin a general account of the re-elections. It will be seen by our Parliamentary Report, that most of the newly-elected members have taken their seats in the House of Commons. The re-elections since our last are these:—

Colonel Fox, for the Tower Hamlets.
The Right Hon. Henry Labouchere, for Taunton.
The Hon. W. F. Cowper, for Hertford.
Sir George Grey, for Devonport.
Lord Marcus Hill, for Evesham.
Mr. John Jervis, for Chester.
Captain Berkeley, for Gloucester.
Admiral Dundas, for Greenwich.
T. M. Gibson, Esq., for Manchester.
Mr. Fox Maule, for Perth.
Mr. Sheil, for Dungarvan.
Lord Alfred Paget for Lichfield.
Henry Rich, Esq., for Richmond, (Yorkshire).
The Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay, Esq., and W. Gibson Craig, Esq., for Edinburgh.

At Edinburgh Mr. Macaulay was opposed by Sir Culling Eardley Smith. The nomination took place on Friday (last week), and the Sheriff said the numbers were so nearly equal that he would not undertake to decide which had the greater number.

A poll was then demanded on behalf of both parties.

The polling was commenced on Tuesday, and Mr. Macaulay gained the election over [illegible], Sir Culling Eardley Smith, by a majority of 90, Mr. Macaulay having polled 1735 votes, and Sir Culling Smith 832. The total number polled is [illegible]67, or not above one-half the number of electors on the register.

At Plymouth, Lord Ebrington was opposed by Mr. Vincent. At the close of the poll the numbers were:

Lord Ebrington	716
Mr. Vincent	188
Majority for Lord Ebrington	528

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT OSBORNE HOUSE.

Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal Family, continue at the Isle of Wight. On Tuesday, the Fairy steamer, having on board her Majesty and Prince Albert, left the Isle of Wight, and proceeded up the Southampton Water and Itchen River, as far as Wortham Bridge, whence the Royal party was rowed in the State barge to Wood Mill, South Stoneham, the property of John Fleming, Esq., and where some of the finest salmon in England is caught. During her Majesty's visit, twenty-eight fish were taken in the weirs, and landed in her presence. Wood Mill is about six miles from Southampton.

Earl Spencer arrived at Osborne House on Tuesday afternoon, and had the honour of joining the Royal circle at dinner.

IBRAHIM PACHA.

On Saturday last a splendid entertainment was given by the Lord Mayor to Ibrahim Pacha, at the Mansion House. After the accustomed toasts, the Lord Mayor proposed, "Health and Happiness to his Highness Ibrahim Pacha." (Loud cheers.)

As soon as silence was restored, after the rapturous ebullition of feeling which the toast excited,

His Highness rose, and for a few seconds communicated with great earnestness with his Interpreter. At length,

The Interpreter addressed the company, in the French language, to the following effect: He said that, by command of his Excellency Ibrahim Pacha, he had to attempt to convey to the company the desire of his Excellency to express that, although he had been received by all classes of this country with the most marked feelings, he had not experienced a reception more agreeable to his feelings than that afforded him upon that occasion, by the Lord Mayor, the magistrates, and the chief merchants, of this great and important city; and that he should, upon leaving England, carry with him the recollection of all the kindness he had received, but more particularly for the attentions paid him by the first city in the world. (Loud cheers.)

The health of Mehemet Ali was then given very enthusiastically; for which the Interpreter, by command of Ibrahim Pacha, returned thanks.

The Lord Mayor subsequently proposed "The Health of her Majesty's Ministers and Lord John Russell." (Great applause).

Lord John Russell said, that having so lately accepted office from their most gracious Sovereign, he could only say it would be their endeavour to preserve the institutions, to maintain the honour, and to give free scope to the energies of this great country. Trusting to the fairness which characterized Englishmen he could feel little doubt that the time might come when they would have to speak of that which they had accomplished. At present, therefore, he could only speak of the satisfaction he enjoyed in seeing there an illustrious Prince, who had done so much for the civilization and prosperity of Europe. (Cheers). That Prince had justly stated that his illustrious father ever wished to cultivate the relations of friendship with England, and he (Lord John Russell) was convinced that by preserving the relations of amity between the two nations, the interests of both would be best helped and secured. He trusted also, that the illustrious Prince had learned some lessons on the banks of the Thames which would not be without use on the banks of the Nile. (Cheers). He could assure the illustrious Prince that the humanity which he had shown to Englishmen who traversed his dominions, and the facilities which he had afforded to trade, were duly and gratefully appreciated by all parties and professions in England, and that there was no place in which they were more appreciated than in this noble city, where commerce was so well understood, where the arts of peace and science had been carried so far, and where commercial relations were extended to all nations of the globe. (Cheers).

On Monday a deputation from the London, East India, and China Association, and other merchants, comprising Sir George Larpent, Bart., Mr. Samuel Gregson, Mr. A. Hastie, M.P., Mr. B. D. Colvin, Mr. Peter Bell, Mr. W. Lyall, Mr. Weber, and Mr. Stikeman, the secretary, waited on the Pacha, by appointment, to present an address congratulating his Highness on his visit to this country, and expressing their conviction that upon the cultivation of mutual good feelings between great and powerful states the welfare and prosperity of nations depend, and trusting that the good understanding that now exists between this country and that administered by his Highness Mehemet Ali will long continue undisturbed, to the advantage of both and the general benefit of mankind.

The Pacha received the deputation in the most flattering matter.

His Highness was engaged at his hotel up to two o'clock, when his carriages were ordered for the purpose of making visits to some of the leading aristocracy, preparatory to his Highness leaving this country.

His Highness received a select circle to dinner at his hotel, in addition to the members of his suite.

On Monday night his Highness honoured the Marchioness of Westminster and Baroness Brunnow with his company.

On Tuesday morning the Emir Asmar, the Babylonian Princess, was introduced to the Pacha, at Mivart's, by his Excellency Sami Pacha, and had a long interview of his Highness.

In the afternoon, his Highness Ibrahim Pacha, by his aide-de-camp, Colonel Bonfort, transmitted to the Lord Mayor the munificent sum of £500 for the poor of the metropolis.

Shortly before two o'clock, his Highness, accompanied by Colonel Bonfort, M. Nubar, and Major C. Dickson, left Mivart's Hotel for the Foreign-office, in Downing-street, where his Highness was received by Viscount Palmerston and the principal officer of that department. The Pacha was conducted over the several offices, and remained there nearly an hour, when he returned to his hotel to luncheon.

Lord John Russell, the Duke and Duchess of Northumberland, his Excellency Baron Brunnow, the Earl of Jersey, the Earl of Clarendon, the Earl Grey, Lord Oranmore, Captain Percy Grace, and many other noblemen and gentlemen, visited his Highness at his Hotel.

In the evening, Viscount Palmerston gave a splendid banquet in compliment to the Illustrious Pacha. The noble Viscount, in honour to his distinguished suitor, proposed the health of his Highness Ibrahim Pacha, which was drunk with all courtesy by the company assembled at the festive board. His Highness the Pacha and suite, when the party retired from the drawing-room, was ushered to the saloon, where, in the society of a select circle of ladies, he partook of coffee. The Pacha, by his Interpreter, M. Nubar, thanked the noble Viscount for his splendid hospitality, and, at eleven o'clock, took leave of the party.

On his departure, his Highness and suite went to Chandos House, to honour the Countess Dietrichstein's réunion by his presence.

On Wednesday, Ibrahim Pacha took his departure by the South-Western Railway, when the Pacha and his suite were received with the distinction due to his station. His Highness was welcomed by the Chairman and Deputy Chairman and several of the Directors.

As his Highness contemplates visiting Cadiz, Gibraltar, and probably Lisbon, it is uncertain how long it will be before he reaches Alexandria, but he is desirous of being there by the 15th of the ensuing month.

His Excellency Sami Pacha, after the departure of his Highness, returned to Mivart's.

Rumoured Visit of the Queen to Ireland.—The Ballinasloe Star says that her Majesty will visit her Irish subjects before the close of the present autumn.

Arrival of the Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz.—Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz have arrived in London.

Grand Fete at the Austrian Embassy.—On Tuesday evening his Excellency the Austrian Ambassador, and the Countess Dietrichstein, gave a magnificent entertainment to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, at Chandos House. The company comprised the Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Devonshire, his Excellency Count Bjornstjerna, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Marchioness of Ailesbury, the Marquis of Anglesey and Lady Adelaide Paget, the Earl of Wilton, the Countess of Westmoreland, Count Jarnac, &c. The Countess subsequently had an assembly, when among the visitors were Ibrahim Pacha and nearly the whole of the foreign ministers in this country and the leading nobility.

The Duke and Duchess of Norfolk's Grand Fete.—On Wednesday evening, the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk gave a princely entertainment, at Norfolk House, to their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Cambridge, the Duchess of Gloucester, and the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz. In addition to the Royal visitors, the dinner circle comprised the Duke and Duchess of Bedford, the Duke of Devonshire, the Duke and Duchess of Beaufort, the Marquis of Anglesey, the Marquis of Winchester, the Earl and Countess of Delawarr, the Earl and Countess of St. Germans, the Earl of Arundel and Surrey, the Earl and Countess of Wilton, Viscount Cantilupe, and Lord George Manners. The Duchess afterwards had an assembly, at which there were present the Duke of Wellington, several of the Foreign Ministers, the Duchess of Cleveland and Lady Augusta Paulett, the Marchioness of Londonderry and Lady Alexandrina Vane, the Marquis of Breadalbane, the Countess Grey, &c.

Lord John Russell.—Lord John Russell has been elected a Governor of the Charter House, in the room of Chief Justice Tindal, deceased.

New Appointments.—It is stated that the Marquis of Normanby will be the new Ambassador to Paris. Mr. Dundas has been appointed Solicitor-General, in the room of Sir F. Kelly.

New Field Marshals.—A Field Marshal's baton is about to be bestowed on Generals Sir G. Nugent, Grosvenor, and the Marquis of Anglesey.

Aristocratic Marriage.—A marriage will shortly take place between Lord Henley and Miss Augusta Peel, only daughter of the Dean of Worcester.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD. July 11.

In a Convocation, holden this day, being the last day of term, the Rev. John D. Hare, D.C.L., of Trinity College, Dublin, was admitted ad eundem. In a Congregation, also holden this day, the following degrees were conferred.

M.A.—Rev. E. A. Tickell, Balliol College; Rev. J. W. Twist, Queen's College; Rev. W. Littlehales, Exeter College.

B.A.—G. B. Lewis, Oriel College, Grand Compounder; J. Spankies, Merton College.

Consecration.—On Monday morning the Bishop of London performed the ceremony of the consecration of St. Jude's Church, in the Old Bethnal-green-road, being the seventh of the ten for the erection and endowment of which the liberal subscription of £100,000 was made a few years since.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. FRIDAY.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE laid on the table of the House, copies of the treaty between this country and the United States.

Lords Hardinge and Gough's Annuities Bills were read a third time, after a remark from the Duke of RICHMOND, regretting that Sir C. Napier had not been included in the grant.

The Earl of DALHOUSIE presented a resolution recommending that the narrow gauge be generally adopted.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

NEWLY-ELECTED MEMBERS.—The following members took the oaths and their seats, having been re-elected after their acceptance of office:—T. B. Macaulay, Esq., and W. Gibson Craig, Esq., for the city of Edinburgh; Mr. Rich, for Richmond, Yorkshire.

THE OREGON TREATY.—Lord PALMERSTON laid on the table the treaty re[illegible]y concluded between this country and the United States for the settlement of the Oregon Boundary Question. The ratification had been exchanged that day between himself and the Minister for the United States. (Cheering.)

THE ALLEGED DEATH FROM MILITARY FLOGGING.—Dr. BOWRING gave notice that on Monday he should put a question to the Secretary at War, relative to the alleged death of a private of the 7th Hussars, in consequence of a military flogging.

The House went into Committee of Supply. A number of votes were taken, and the House adjourned at one o'clock.

THE COURT.—Her Majesty, accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince Albert and the Royal family, are expected to leave Osborne House for Buckingham Palace on Monday next. We understand that the christening of the infant Princess will take place at Buckingham Palace on Saturday next, upon which occasion her Majesty will give a grand dinner, and an evening party.

CABINET COUNCIL.—A Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office yester[illegible]. The Council was attended by Lord John Russell, Lord Palmerston, Earl Grey, Sir George Clerk, and all the other Ministers in town.

LORD LIEUTENANCY OF NORFOLK.—The Earl of Leicester has been appointed to the Lord Lieutenancy of the county of Norfolk, vacant by the decease of the late Lord Wodehouse.

ELECTION FOR LISKEARD.—Mr. C. Buller has been re-elected for Liskeard, without opposition.

SERIOUS FIRES AT LIVERPOOL.—Accounts have been received of two fires at Liverpool, which occurred within a few hours. One occurred in Sefton-street, on [illegible] day-night; eight engines were brought to bear upon it as speedily as possible, and by midnight the fire was subdued, having been confined to the three stories from the top. The damage is estimated at £4000. The second and most destructive fire occurred on Friday morning about a quarter before two, in the massive pile of building known as the Apothecaries' Hall. This latter, it will be remembered, suffered a similar misfortune some few months ago. The damage resulting is estimated at a large sum. We are happy to say that no injuries to life or limb occurred.

THE FATAL DUEL AT PORTSMOUTH.—On Thursday morning, Lieutenant Hawkey was tried at Winchester, for the murder of Lieutenant Seton. The circumstances of the duel, which occurred near Gosport on the 20th of May last year, and in which Lieutenant Seton was killed, will be in the recollection of our readers. The Jury acquitted Lieutenant Hawkey, who was immediately discharged.

COUNTRY NEWS.

PRINCE ALBERT'S PROPOSED VISIT TO LIVERPOOL.

The preparations for the opening of the dock and its magnificent warehouses are now in progress; and when completed will be in every way worthy of the [illegible] and present to his Royal Highness and suite, and to the company who [illegible] favoured with admittance within the walls of the dock, one of the finest spectacles ever witnessed.

The apartment where the déjeûner is to take place is a warehouse-room on the first story, and is situated at the south-east corner of the warehouses, and is 99 feet long by 88 feet wide.

The entertainment will be entirely cold, and will consist of fruits of the most recherché kinds, patés, ice creams, ices, &c.

The accomodation for parties to witness the opening of the dock by the Prince and his suite in the Fairy, Royal yacht, reflects the highest credit upon the liberality of the Chairman and the members of the Dock Committee.

When the Fairy enters the dock by the gut at the north-western end, the spectacle presented by this magnificent mass of the élite of the town, will be a sight such as few Princes or Kings can boast of in their dominions.

A rapid progress is being made with the preparations of laying the foundation-stone of the Sailors' Home.

The procession on the occasion will consist of about 6000 persons, of whom 1000 will be Freemasons and 1000 Odd Fellows. The boys of the Bluecoat Hospital will head the procession. The Freemasons will follow; then will come the Corporation, and, immediately after, the Prince, in the state carriage, drawn by six horses, from the Royal Mews. The shipping trades and the Odd Fellows will bring up the rear.

The Duke of Leinster, Grand Master of the Irish Freemasons, will, it is expected, be also present; and Lord Combermere, Earl Ellesmere, and Earl Zetland are confidently looked forward for to head their loyal body, the English Freemasons, who are to make one of the most magnificent demonstrations ever witnessed.

The silver trowel with which his Royal Highness will lay the foundation-stone of the Sailors' Home will be massive and of elegant design.

THE HARVEST.—Several pieces of wheat have been cut in the neighbourhood of Brighton, and stacked in good condition; and the crops generally, besides indicating an abundant yield of grain, show that beautiful tinge which indicates fitness for the sickle. A letter from Maidstone states that a sample of new barley w[illegible] at market ten days ago. So early an harvest has not been known [illegible]

VIOLENT GALE AT BRIGHTON.—On Tuesday morning, about eleven o'clock, as most of the fishing boats were riding at anchor in the roads, a gale sprung up, and the boats, which were nearly all empty, were placed in a very perilous situation. The sea broke violently over them, and three of the empty ones were swamped. It was feared that they would be driven on shore, and the sea was too rough to put off an ordinary boat, and the life-boats were had recourse to. Several men were put on board, and, by dint of great exertion, they succeeded in recovering their vessels. Soon after this happened, William Priest, the master of the Caroline, and one of the oldest fishermen in Brighton, put to sea. On arriving off Shoreham, Priest was engaged in setting one of the sails, when he was struck accidentally by a spar, and knocked overboard. The accident was observed by his sons, but before they could rescue him [illegible] The deceased, who was about 40 years of age, has left a widow and large family.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN LIVERPOOL.—On Wednesday morning a fire of an alarming character took place at Cooper's-row, in the vicinity of the Custom House, Liverpool, occupied by Mr. M'Euchen as a cork-cutting manufactory; an alarm was instantly raised, but ere the fire-engines could arrive, the flames burst forth from the windows of the second floor, and in a very short space a mighty and overwhelming mass of fire raged with fury throughout the entire building. The warehouse in question is five stories high. The upper part was stored with cotton, the property of Fieldon Brothers. The under stores were in the occupation of Mr. M'Euchen, and in these the fire broke out. After a considerable delay, occasioned by the want of water in the mains, the fire-brigade succeeded in subduing the fury of the flames, and prevented them from injuring the adjoining premises. At two o'clock the roof fell in. The damage is estimated at from £8000 to £10,000, the greater part of which is covered by insurances in the Atlas and Globe offices.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE BIRMINGHAM AND BRISTOL RAILWAY.—A fatal accident occurred on Monday afternoon on the above line, by which a man named Stock, a guard on one of the trains, came by his death. It seems that deceased left Bristol at eleven o'clock in the morning, in charge of the mail train, and ought in due course to have arrived in Birmingham at half-past three o'clock. It appears, however, that, soon after the train had reached the Blackwell station, the deceased stood upon one of the carriages to buckle some luggage together, when the engine driver, for some reason which has not yet transpired, whistled suddenly, upon which the deceased turned round to get hold of his break, when, unfortunately, his head struck against a bridge, and he was precipitated to the ground with great violence. The [illegible] was instantly stopped, and the deceased taken up and conveyed to Birmingham, and from thence to the Queen's Hospital, where he died at five o'clock in the evening.

ALLEGED DEATH FROM FLOGGING.—On Wednesday evening, an inquest was held at Hounslow, on the body of Frederick White, a private of the 7th Royal Hussars, whose death, it was alleged, had been caused by the effects of the corporal punishment he had received under an order of court-martial. The Jury, on looking at the body, found that, in the middle of the back, between the shoulders, where the greatest inflammation had evidently been, a great piece of skin, nine inches one way and eight inches the other, had been cut away. The Coroner inquired where the skin was, and by whom it had been cut off; and it was replied it had been cut off by Dr. Read, who had been sent down by the Horse Guards to perform the post mortem examination of the body, and it should be looked for. There was no evidence to support the allegation as to the mode of death; but the inquiry is to be resumed next week, when it is supposed that something positive will be elicited.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT IN A MINE. FORTY-THREE MEN DROWNED.—A fearful mining accident occurred on Thursday afternoon (last week), at East Wheal Rose lead mine, in the parish of Newlyn, eight miles from Truro. A thunder-storm of unprecedented violence, attended with a flood which resembled rather the bursting of a waterspout than the heaviest rain, broke over the neighbourhood. The torrents pouring from Newlyn Downs, collected towards the valley, where the mine is situated; and, rushing in torrents down the shaft, quickly filled every level. Some of the people, who were alarmed at the first flow of water, made their way to the surface and escaped, but they were very few. Others reached so near as to be seen from the surface; but, exhausted by their previous exertions to hasten up the ladders, were beaten down by the torrent and perished. Forty-three were drowned in the mine.

A CHILD KILLED ON THE NOTTINGHAM RAILWAY.—On Friday afternoon (last [illegible]) as the five o'clock train from Nottingham was approaching Beeston station, which is four miles up the line, the engine-driver, John Fisher, observed a child crossing the rails a short distance before him; he immediately shut off the steam, reversed the engine, and blew his whistle; at the same time the guard [illegible] on; but the train going at the rate of nearly 40 miles an hour, it could not be stopped until it passed over the poor child, and crushed it almost to [illegible]. The train having been stopped, upon examining the body it was found that the upper part had been severed from the lower; its bowels were strewn about, its chest and arms were crushed, and the shoulders were wrenched from their sockets. The head and portions of the upper limbs lay in fragments near the rails, and the lower portion of the child's body and the legs were driven to a distance of six or seven yards off the line. Upon inquiry, it was discovered that the poor child was the daughter of Matthew Lowe, a gamekeeper, who resides at Padge House, near the railway; and she was only twenty-two months old. She had been placed in a chair in the garden by her mother, whilst she got tea ready, and strayed to the spot upon which she was killed. A Coroner's inquest was held, when the Jury returned, as their verdict, "Accidentally killed by a railway engine and a train of carriages passing over her body."

THE MURDER AT KINETON.—Two persons are in custody charged with the murder at Kineton. Their names are James Shelswell and William Mumford, both young men, and both natives, or residents, of Kineton. The former prisoner was lately a waggoner in the employ of Mr. Adkins, farmer, of Kineton; but he is now engaged as a labourer at Fenny Compton, upon the Oxford and Rugby Railway. He has been before convicted of serious assaults. Mumford was examined before Mr. King on Saturday, and from the evidence then brought forward, he, together with his fellow-prisoner, was apprehended on Sunday afternoon. The chief ground of suspicion against the prisoners is the fact of their asserting that they had not seen the deceased Owen. He left the Rose and Crown about half-past nine o'clock on the night of Wednesday week, whereas a witness was now produced, who upon oath said that he had seen the prisoners and the deceased together some time afterwards. Moreover, Mumford had said that he went straight to his lodgings after leaving the deceased, while his landlady deposed that on the night in question he came home in the "middle of the night," and she gave him the key out of the window.

THE MURDER OF THE POLICEMAN AT DAGENHAM.—The inquest in this case was resumed on Tuesday, and again adjourned for a fortnight, without eliciting any facts tending to criminate any person. A man, who stated that he, with another, had been pointedly alluded to, attended voluntarily with that other, to hear and answer anything that might be brought against them. Previous to commencing the inquiry, the Coroner took two jurymen to wait on a woman in the neighbourhood, but what passed between them did not transpire. Immediately after the adjournment of the inquiry, a long interview took place with the Coroner and the principal police authorities, chiefly relating, it was understood, to a letter received from Bristol, accusing certain persons of the crime.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

It is reported (says one of the Madrid journals) that an afflicting catastrophe has occurred within the last few days on the coasts of Almeria in Spain. A steamer, carrying, by orders of the General of the district, 600 troops on board, was unable to bear the weight of so many men and went to the bottom, only two escaping.

Among the pensions granted by Sir Robert Peel before retiring from office, were £100 a year to Mr. Bernard Barton, the Quaker poet; £50 each to two aged sisters of the late Major General M'Gaskell; and a pension of the like amount to the daughter of Brigadier-General Taylor, killed in the late war in India.

It appears from official documents, that during the year 1845, the number of slaves enfranchised in the French Colonies amounted to 1505, which gives a total of 45,247 slaves set free since 1830.

A letter from Rome, dated June 31, states that much disappointment had been felt by the non-appearance of the promised amnesty, the preceding day being the anniversary of St. Peter and St. Paul. Many political offenders had, however, received pardon.

The last Levant mail brings the news that the accounts from Syria are satisfactory. The mountaineers of Lebanon, as if wearied of their feuds, had laid down their weapons. Sinister rumours regarding the Russian arms in Daghestan prevailed at Constantinople, but it was uncertain what amount of credit ought to be attached to them. A rumour prevailed at Malta that the Prince de Joinville would cruise in that direction, and pay the Governor a visit.

The diligence which left Madrid for Bayonne on the 3rd inst., met with a fearful accident on the morning of the 6th in the Spanish Pyrenees, at a hill called Rentoria. Descending at too rapid a pace, in turning an angle the carriage, passengers, and nine mules, were precipitated over a steep precipice. The first fall was upwards of twenty feet, and all would have been rolled into the abyss beneath but for the intervention of some trees. Strange to say, none of the passengers were seriously injured. Amongst the number were P. S. Butler, Esq., M.P., Mr. Corbet, nephew to J. Blackburne, Esq., M.P., Captain Wilson, late 7th Hussars, and Captain Pilkington, Royal Engineers. Of these, the three first escaped unhurt, but the last was seriously bruised. The rest of the party were more or less contused, but were able to proceed in the course of the day.

In 1845, during the procession of the Fête-Dieu, at Kleinzell, a small town in Hungary, a widow, named Witrewslewsky, lost her child, a little girl, in the crowd. All her efforts to find her were in vain. This year she again attended the procession, when she was accosted by a little girl, holding in her hand a wooden box, who was begging for alms. She immediately recognised her own child; but, to her horror, on examining her she found that she was blind, the orbits of her eyes being empty! A woman who attempted to obstruct Madame Witrewslewsky in taking away the child was arrested, when she confessed that she was a public mendicant, that she had stolen the child, and scooped out its eyes with a knife, in order to excite the greater commisseration for the unfortunate little creature. The punishment inflicted by the Hungarian laws for this crime is breaking alive on the wheel.

The Presse quotes a letter from Basle of the 10th inst., stating that the Vorarlberg and the principality of Lichstenstein were lined with Austrian troops, stationed there to watch the progress of events in Switzerland. The Helvetic Diet decided on the 7th inst. that a federal camp should be assembled as usual this year, notwithstanding the opposition of the Catholic Cantons. A new protest of the Swiss Bishops against the secularization of the Argovian Convents, signed by 32,000 Catholics of different Cantons, had been presented to the Diet.

Mr. Waghorn has been at Vienna, commissioned, it is said, by the British Government, to negotiate with the Government of Austria to establish the shortest route from the port of Duino, through Germany, to the North Sea.

The Courrier de Marseilles publishes the following letter from Rome, July 5:—"The difficulties which attend the new Sovereign Pontiff begin to reveal themselves. He is surrounded by a league of secular and religious employés, enemies to all reform, and who seek to hide from him the truth, and to conceal from him the real state of things."

A letter from Naples of the 27th ult. mentions that the eruption of Mount Vesuvius was greater than ever; the crater vomited forth its lava with great noise, and in the night the flames presented a magnificent spectacle. The heat at Naples was 24 degrees of Reaumur (86 Fahrenheit). The Commerce, on the authority of a letter from Stockholm, states that the weather was so cold in that city on the 26th of June, that all the vegetables planted in the open air had perished; lumps of ice were also found in the basin of the fountain in the park of Stockholm.

The Augsburgh Gazette publishes a letter from Rome, dated July 2nd, stating that the Pope the day before went on foot, accompanied only by a few prelates and some Swiss soldiers, to the church of the Silesian nuns, where the festival of the Visitation was being celebrated. The nuns kissed the hands and feet of the Pope. The inhabitants of Rome were surprised to see the Pope walking through the streets, a circumstance which had not been witnessed since the days of Pope Ganganelli. His Holiness on his return was received with great enthusiasm, and the acclamations of the crowd increased when he condescended to receive a petition presented to him by a poor man.

We learn from Berlin that the Earl of Westmoreland, the British Ambassador at the Court of Prussia, had returned to his post from London. It was thought at Berlin that the late change of Ministry in England would not lead to any change in the embassy at Berlin.

A letter from Smyrna states that on the 25th of last month, at six o'clock in the evening, a most violent shock of earthquake was felt, which lasted fifteen seconds. This is the severest shock remembered at Smyrna.

Letters from Warsaw announce in very positive terms that the Emperor of Russia is on the point of proclaiming the abolition of slavery in such of his provinces as have hitherto retained the system. This resolution is said to have been made known by the Emperor at the time of his last visit to Warsaw.

It is stated in the Cambridge Advertiser that on the banks of the Cam are now to be seen several growing willows in a state of spontaneous ignition and combustion; and others with charred leaves, as if burnt by lightning.

The dividend paid under the estate of Mr. Chambers, the banker, in November last, has not brought with it any alleviation of the sufferings of the family. Thus, on the one hand, it has yielded little less than a dividend of 40s. in the pound; whilst, on the other, Mrs. Chamber's marriage settlement has not been put in train of payment.

On Thursday, 19 shares of the Globe, evening newspaper, the property of which consists of 62 shares, were sold by auction for 12,990 guineas.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

CONVICTIONS FOR A MURDER COMMITTED NEARLY FOUR YEARS AGO.

At the assizes at Oxford, on Tuesday, James Biddle, aged 28, and Isaac Sheriff, aged 40, were tried, before Mr. Justice Maule, for the wilful murder of George Mobbs, in the parish of North Aston, on the 28th of September, 1842.—Mr. Carrington and Mr. Pigott conducted the prosecution; Mr. J. J. Williams, at the request of the Court, undertook the defence. The deceased was a very respectable farmer, and resided at a farm house called Dean Hill, in the above-mentioned parish. On the evening of 28th September, 1842, he rode from home to Steepleatiton, a distance of about three miles, in order to attend a lecture on astronomy. He left, in company with another farmer, about eleven o'clock at night, and they rode together as far as a public house called the "Fox Inn," on the road between Dunsten and North Aston, where they separated, their several roads lying in different directions. That night, beween twelve and one, a person riding along the road was startled by his pony shying, and, on looking round, saw a man lying on a heap of stones, and a grey horse, without a rider, on the road. He, however, took no further notice and went on. The next morning the body was found on the heap of stones in question, which was in a hollow part of the road, and quite near the deceased's own gate. The ordinary steps were then taken, and a Coroner's Jury returned a verdict of "Found Dead," and every person in the neighbourhood thought his death was accidental.

This impression was not removed till the month of March last, when a travelling tinker, named Skerzowberg, apprehended for robbery in a farm-yard, said to the constable that he would tell something about a murder, and on being removed to Banbury, told the gaoler he had something to say to him. The gaoler, after cautioning him, took down his statement. He repeated it before a magistrate and on different occasions, and it was always substantially the same, and to the effect that on the night in question, he saw the two prisoners knock the deceased off his horse and strike him. When down, one of them saying with an oath that he should never dawn another daylight; that they then ran away, and he, having been on the leap with them, followed them, and came up to them, and they threatened to kill him if he ever "split;" and that from that time he did not see them for twelve months, and again not for another year, and that on each occasion they alluded to the murder.

The prisoners, on being taken, confessed circumstantially to the murder, saying that they had killed the deceased by pulling him off his horse, and striking him with a stick. These confessions were clear, and the prisoners were at once convicted, and sentenced to death.

SCENES FROM THE WAR IN KAFFIRLAND.

IN our Journal of the 4th inst., we gave the substance of official despatches, dated Cape Town, April 29, detailing some sharp conflicts of the Colonists with the Kaffirs, on the frontier, on the 16th, 17th, and 18th of April.

We are now, by aid of a clever and accredited Artist, resident in the Colony, enabled to illustrate, in a series of vivid and faithful sketches, the leading scenes and incidents of the war, accompanied by some very interesting notes by our Correspondent, and some further information as to the localities of the several conflicts.

Previous to our entering upon the affairs of what may be termed "the Kaffir War of 1846," it may be as well to glance at the occurrences of a few weeks prior to the sailing of the Lady Flora, on the 6th of May last—occurrences which have since acquired importance as the opening scenes of a struggle of life or death to the Colonists of the Cape of Good Hope. We would, also, devote a short space to the ten years which have elapsed since the last Kaffir War; but the narrative is beset with difficulties, added to which, our space will only allow us to deal with the recent, or, we fear we may say, the present, struggle.

On the causes of this disastrous train of events, far be it from us to hazard an inference unsupported by the circumstances of the case. "We know not," writes our Correspondent, "how much may fairly be attributed to an unfortunate exercise of the influence of Exeter Hall, grounded on very partial information; we know not what mischief may have been done to the Kaffirs themselves by diplomatic amusements and treaty-making with an uncivilised people, who are, for good purposes, under no sort of Government whatever: but this we do believe, upon the faith of the Governor of the Cape, Sir Peregrine Maitland, a man of humane character and high principle, that in the present affair, the Colonists are not to blame. Annually, for the last ten years, in defiance of treaties, have murders been committed, and thousands of their cattle swept away, without any means of protection or reprisal."

At length, the Lieutenant-Governor resolved to chastise the Kaffir hordes, and to call upon the whole of the Burgher force on the frontier to prepare for the attack. The Fingoes residing in Graham's Town were armed, and 500 stands of arms distributed to the inhabitants. All the military posts were put in the most efficient state; and detachments of the 27th Regiment, and of the 7th Dragoon Guards, were moved to Fort Peddie, Cawood's Post, and Bathurst.

We learn, also, from an Official Circular, dated Graham's Town, March 2[illegible], that a Hottentot having been murdered, and some Kaffir prisoners rescued from the Civil Escort, within the borders of the colony, by Tola's Kaffirs, the Lieutenant-Governor demanded that the Kaffirs concerned in this outrage should be given up to justice: this demand was disregarded, and His Honour then resolved to enter the Ceded Territory with British troops and armed Burghers, to enforce his claims.

Within a few days of the above date (on March 31), the Government issued at Cape Town, a Manifesto to the inhabitants of the Colony, "and the various Friendly Tribes in Alliance with the British Government." This document announces the departure of the Governor for the frontier, in order to attend, upon the spot, to the present position of affairs over the Eastern Boundary of the Colony. It then details the outrages of the Kaffir aggressors since his Excellency met the Chiefs upon the Frontier, in September, 1844, to the last great outrage—the rescue of a Kaffir committed to Graham's Town for trial; and the cruel murder and mutilation of a Colonist to whom the prisoner had been fastened for security. The Chiefs, in reply to the demand for measures to secure the murderer, and for the restoration of the rescued prisoner, disputed the matter stoutly, stating that as one of the attacking party was shot by a constable, the killing of the innocent colonist was balanced, and must not be carried further. The Chiefs, however, knew this to be a special pleading; by this, and other acts, they sympathised with the war party prevalent throughout Kaffirland; and to crush them was declared by the Governor to be his first object.

Meanwhile, the Lieutenant-Governor, Colonel Hare, was actively placing the Eastern Districts in a defensive as well as aggressive position; and the Kaffirs, on their side, prepared for their peculiar style of warfare. Nor were our difficulties inconsiderable; for all who knew the state of Kaffirland, foresaw the certainty that all the Chiefs would join whenever a prospect of plunder was opened, and that we should have to cope with 8000 warriors, provided with fire-arms, in their own fastnesses, and, at the same time, defend 150 miles of an almost untenable frontier line. Such was the extent of the exposure; for the feeling of the T'alambri and Congo tribes was very doubtful, and even the distant Amagaikas leaped for joy when the news of the anticipated forays was announced to them.

On the 10th of April, the Governor arrived in Graham's Town, and on the 15th, he pushes onward to Post Victoria; the Lieutenant-Governor being then at Fort Beaufort. The force on the frontier, reckoning Burghers and military (including a portion of the 90th and 95th Regiments, detained on their way from Ceylon to England, and expected at Graham's Town), might be stated at 3000 men.

Between the 11th and 14th of April, several strong bodies of troops were moved into Kaffirland across the Keiskamma. No opposition was offered until after they had concentrated at Block Drift and Burn's Hill; but, in Albany, colonial blood had been shed, and successful forays commenced, by the Friendly Tribes. Stock, the son of old Eno, a chieftain of the Amagaikas, behaved now, with good faith, in apprehending and delivering up the murders; and we trust that the rest of his tribe will not be allowed to revenge this act.

On the 16th of April, the first collision took place, as already detailed in our Journal of July 4.

We quote from the official accounts of this affair the scene of the death of a brave old Peninsular and Waterloo soldier, Captain Bambrick, of the 7th Dragoon Guards; in reference to which corps it has been remarked that they are a brave set of men, but are not yet up to bush work against an unseen foe: they keep together, and are regular targets for the Kaffirs. The affair is thus described by Major Gibson, dated Burnshill, April 16th.—(See the Engraving on the front page.)

> This afternoon I heard firing on the opposite side of the river, and put the troops under arms. It was shortly after reported to me that some ten Kaffirs had made a dash upon some cattle that had been feeding a short distance down the river side. I immediately ordered out the few duty men of the Cape Corps, together with Captain Bambrick's troop of the 7th Dragoon Guards, and marched them to the top of the hill, overlooking Sandilla's Drift. I then ordered Captain Bambrick to proceed with Ensign Boys of the Cape Corps, to the Drift, and if he saw the spoor, he might proceed a short distance in pursuit of them. He, unfortunately, however, led the troops into a thick bush, and, just as he was returning out of it, after a show of balls had been discharged at his party, he was killed. I had taken Lieutenant Gregory with one gun, and Captain Rawstorne's Company of the 91st Regiment in support; and, on Captain Bambrick's death being reported to me, I marched the Company of the 91st Regiment to the vicinity of the spot; and, taking a detour myself to a rising ground exactly opposite with Lieutenant Gregory's six-pounder, and, after firing two rounds into the bush, the infantry advanced, and exchanged several shots with a large body of Kaffirs, without any casualty on our side. Captain Rawstorne, seeing that the Kaffirs were so daring, and that they were approaching him in large numbers, and fearing that he might be surrounded, retired slowly to Burnshill. Seeing a large mass of Kaffirs congregated in the sa[illegible] the 91st had left, I caused two shells to be exploded, which fell and burst exactly among them. I then returned home.
>
> This night, about seven o'clock, and just as I had diminished the size of my camp, we were attacked by a considerable body of Kaffirs, whom we beat off in about six or seven minutes—I am sorry to say with the loss of four men killed of the 91st, and four men wounded.
>
> The Kaffirs appear to be in great numbers around us, and I consider it to be very dangerous to attempt to move with so large an amount of ammunition and baggage in the present excited state of this neighbourhood, especially as we are so surrounded by them, as we observe their fires and hear their cries in every direction.

We have also the details of an affair in the immediate presence of the Governor, at Post Victoria, on the 19th, in which our troops and the Kaffirs fought with the most determined bravery, through a bushy country; our troops file-firing as cool and steady as if on parade with blank cartridge; the Kaffirs fired 2000 shots, at least, and is supposed numbered some 15 or 1600: their [illegible] surprising; their firing high must account for the miraculous escape of our troops, who fought their way through a determined horde, with the loss of only one man—a distance of five miles.

On the 20th, the Governor arrived at Block Drift, and the troops were expected to remain there some time, until the whole of the forces, military and burgher, were removed to the front. Martial law was proclamed through the whole colony. The killed, wounded, and missing, during the engagements of the 16th, 17th, and 18th, were 2 Captains, 1 subaltern, 19 rank and file, 11 chargers, 1 bat horse, and 25 troop horses.

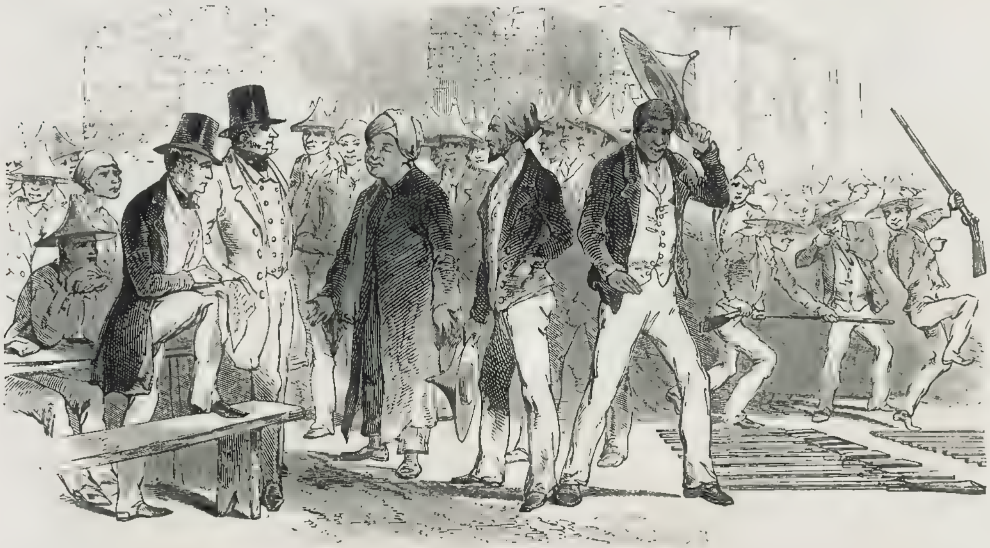
In the general order of the 20th, the Governor remarks that the Kaffirs are not the same foe as formerly, when armed with native weapons; but have become muchmore formidable, from increased numbers, considerable mounted force, and especially through the possession of fire-arms, an acquisition particularly adapted to the entangled country which was the scene of the late operations.

Of the perilous state of the Albany Division, while the troops were thus engaged in Kaffir land, we have ample evidence. The news of what the enemy termed the defeat of the English at Burnshill and Block Drift spread like wild-fire among the so-called Friendly Tribes; and the temptation to plunder became too strong for the Kaffir Tribes to resist. In the Neutral Territory, there was also convincing evidence of the like disposition.

An Extra Supplement to the Graham's Town Journal, to the date of Apr[illegible] states the whole country, from Kaffirland to Bushman's River, to be in the hands of the Kaffirs, who were ravaging it with impunity. A desperate attack was made on Keerega Farm, where a number of Dutch and English farmers had assembled for mutual defence: there was much firing, and the enemy, at length, retired with 400 head of cattle, besides 12 horses. At another position, near Lombard's Post, a large farm was fired upon, a party with axes broke down the gates of the kraal, and carried off, it is said, no less than 2500 head of cattle. In these cont[illegible], a great number of Kaffirs were killed or wounded; and pack oxen were often seen laden with the slain of the e[illegible]

The Fingoes, who were employed as [illegible] round Gra[illegible] T[illegible], behaved

SCENES FROM THE WAR IN KAFFIRLAND.—FROM SKETCHES JUST RECEIVED FROM CAPE TOWN.



MUSTER OF THE MALAY VOLUNTEERS IN THE MAIN BARRACKS, CAPE TOWN, MAY 6, 1846.

bravely; in many cases, they recaptured cattle, and the enemy fled from them panic-struck.

Up to this date, the villages of Bathurst, Port Frances, Farmerfield, Salem, and Sidbury, had not been seriously attacked.

The whole country south of Graham's Town was, however, lighted up at night by the burning houses and lighted produce of the isolated, defenceless, farms.

In all, up to April 25, five thousand head of cattle were known to have been swept off the Colony by "the Friendly Tribes," whilst our troops were keeping our undisguised enemies, the Amagaikas, at bay.

Upon one occasion, a large body of Kaffirs attacked a Wesleyan Chapel, eight miles east of Graham's Town, but stoutly defended by a little garrison within. several balls perforated the door.

We may here mention that, in some instances, the missionaries have fled from among those whom they supposed they had converted. It is, also, a melancholy fact that the Kaffir translation of the New Testament has often afforded a supply of wadding for the enemy's guns, and it has been picked up in that state!

A painful sensation had been created by the news of the death of Captain Norden, of the Graham's Town Yeomanry, who was shot through the head, in repelling an attack upon a neighbour's farmstead: the Kaffirs carried off and stripped his body, but it was afterwards recovered, horribly mutilated.

Immense herds of colonial cattle were driven through the Fish River by large bodies of Kaffirs: they passed close under the guns of the post, and suffered much loss from the grape and canister shot thrown in amongst them: the dead and wounded were instantly placed on pack bullocks, and carried off.

These events occurred in the neighbourhood of Graham's Town, from which nearly all the troops had been withdrawn; or in Lower Albany, which was protected in front by a small force at Fort Peddie. The Kaffirs, therefore, avoided the troops; and, by intercepting messengers, kept the Governor in ignorance of their movements on his right and in his rear. The Burgher force was only then beginning to arrive at this scene of danger.

We give an Engraving of one of the scenes of plunder in Kaffirland, on the 1st of May.

In Cape Town, the greatest anxiety prevailed. A stringent law, compelling all individuals called on, without exception, to take the field under martial law, was promptly passed; volunteers were collected, and the Malays enrolled as a corps.

One anecdote is worthy of notice. The Government Secretary sent for the Priest and communicated his wishes. The immediate reply was—"They got their freedom from the English, and if they refuse to help now, they ought to have their heads cut off." Accordingly, on the morning of the 4th May, the scene in front of the Colonial Office was a strange one for Cape Town. Thousands of Malays were assembled, and hundreds pushed eagerly forward to be enrolled; so that, in a few hours, in fact, as fast as the names could be taken down, six or seven hundred were on the lists.

On May 2nd, the Civil Commissioner of the Cape Division ordered two divisions of field cornetcies, armed and mounted, to start immediately for the Frontier; and similar measures were about to be adopted in the Western Division.

The Municipal Commissioners had a meeting to take steps for furnishing a contingent from Cape Town. Numerous applications had also been made for leave to volunteer; and from the spirit everywhere shown there is no room for doubt that within a very short time a powerful force will have moved from this end of the colony to relieve our suffering brethren in the Eastern Districts, and effectually chastise their cruel and treacherous invaders.

We give a sketch of the enrolling of the Malays on the 5th of May; at which time, however, they were full of complaints against their priests, by whom, they allege, they have been misled.

The following, from the South African Commercial Advertiser, of May 6th, gives a frightful picture of the environs of Graham's Town:—

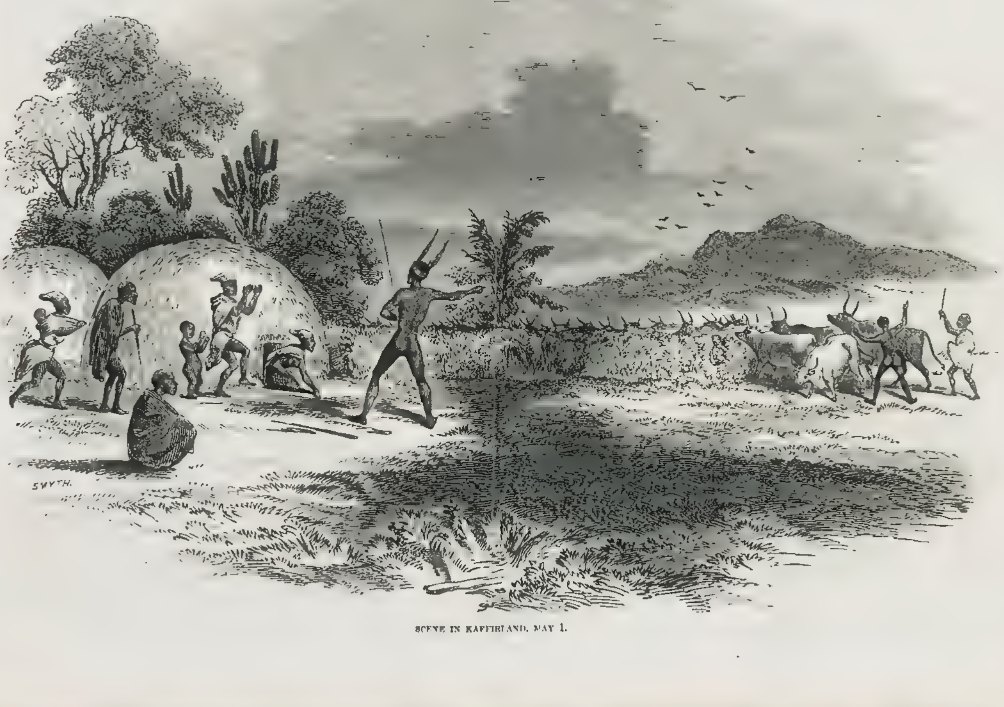
"The Kaffirs, in parties of considerable strength, are ravaging Lower Albany, and almost every night attack cattle posts within two or three miles of Graham's Town. To the west of Graham's Town they are also met in sufficient numbers to arrest ordinary communication along the whole line to Fort Beaufort, and to render it unsafe to move in that direction any but very strong escorts. The Town itself is felt to be in danger, and they have no power to assist such places as Bathurst, or to spare reinforcements to posts on the right, where the Commandants are no longer able to check the bands of marauders entering the Colony and returning with droves of cattle.

"Fort Beaufort and Block Drift Post are in front of Sandilla, Macomo, and Botma's Country, whose people are thus kept in check. On the left is the Kat River Settlement, the Kaga, and Baviaan's River, and in the rear, at the distance of 50 or 60 miles, is the village of Somerset. The troops cover this large area against masses of the enemy in front, but detached parties have moved far beyond the camp, and are also ravaging that part of the country."

On the other hand, "In the Western districts, and in Cape Town, the levies are partly organized, without the loss of a moment. A number of vessels have been engaged by Government, to carry up at once to Algoa Bay contingents from Cape Town and its neighbourhood, together with stores of every description. For those who proceed by land, waggons, tents, blankets, and everything that is required for health and refreshment, as well as daily rations, will be supplied in abundance. Government has pledged its faith that nothing in the shape of expense shall be suffered to come into competition with the welfare of the people, on their march or in the field."

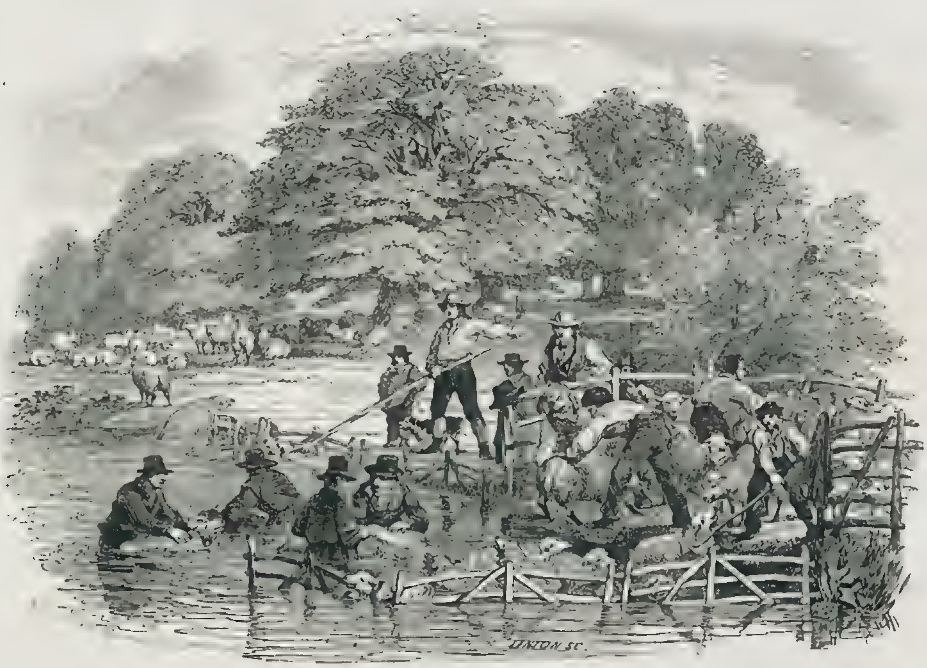
Cape papers to the 16th of May have also arrived. Continued skirmishes with the Kaffirs on the frontier furnish the staple of news, and the loss of property to the settlers had been great in consequence. The Governor was waiting reinforcements before he took the field against his adversaries, and this delay is supposed to have given them encouragement in their attacks.

We shall next week return to our Illustration of the Scenes of Warfare, derived from the same authentic source as those now presented to the reader—the sketches of a clever Artist in the Colony.



SCENE IN KAFFIRLAND, MAY 1.

AGRICULTURAL PICTURES.



SHEEP-WASHING.—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.

SHEEP-WASHING.—SHEEP-SHEARING.

This pair of pictures, from drawings by Mr. Duncan, the celebrated painter of rural life, will, we are persuaded, be specially acceptable to our "Agricultural" readers; although their appearance is, as regards season, somewhat in the rear.

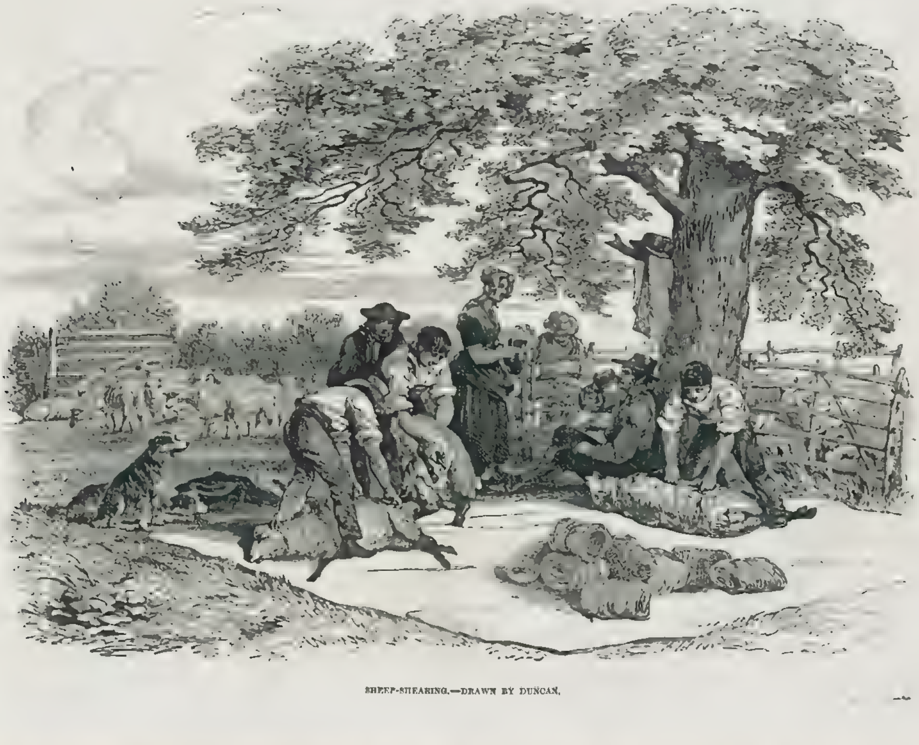
The Washing takes place a few days before the Shearing. "Custom," says the "Dictionary of the Farm," "has very properly required that the old fleece should be cleansed before its removal, by washing the animal in some running stream. Two or three days are then allowed for the drying of the wool previous to its being shorn; the sheep being turned into a clean rick-yard, or field, or dry pasture, and remaining there until the fleece is dried; that the new yolk, which is rapidly secreted, may penetrate through it, giving it a little additional weight, and a peculiar softness.

Sheep-shearing Time is marked in the Ephemeris of Nature, June 5, as Tonsura; though Dyer lays down for it the following tokens:

> If verdant Elder spreads
> Her silver flowers; if humble Daisies yield
> To yellow Crowfoot, and luxuriant grass,
> Gay Shearing Time approaches.

Again, of its homely joys, he sings:

> At Shearing Time, along the lively vales,
> Rural festivities are often heard:
> Beneath each blooming arbour all is joy
> And lusty merriment: while on the grass
> The mingled youth in gaudy circles sport,
> We think the golden age again return'd,
> And all the fabled Dryades in dance.
> Leering they bound along, with laughing air,
> To the shrill pipe, and deep re-murmuring chord
> Of th' ancient harp, or tabor's hollow sound.
> While th' old, apart, upon a bank reclin'd,
> Attend the tuneful carol, softly mixt
> With every murmur of the sliding wave,
> And every warble of the feather'd choir;
> Music of Paradise! which still is heard
> When the heart listens.



SHEEP-SHEARING.—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

“G S.”—In Enigma No. 11, you must first check with the Kt, then with the Queen, and, on the third move, Castle, giving checkmate. In No. 12, discover check by playing Kt to K B 8th, then move Q to K Kt 8th, and, finally, mate with the Rook at K's 8th

“Solon,” Wisbech.—When your Queen is attacked, you are not obliged either to take the piece, or move the Queen; but, when the King is checked, you must do one or the other “Marazion.” You were quite right regarding Problem No. 127.

“S Y. M. C.,” Liverpool Get ‘Tomlinson's Amusements in Chess,” and study diligently the Elementary Lessons in the “Chess Player's Chronicle.”

“Juvenile.”—Mr. Lewis, we believe, will shortly bring out an appendix to his last valuable Treatise. You may obtain that work, and any other Chess book, of Mr. Hurst, King William-street, Strand.

“G. A S The Problem you require is published monthly on the wrapper of the “Chess-Player's Chronicle.”

“D. D.”—We shall, next week, give the only two games ever played between the competitors you name Messrs Horwitz and St Amant; and we have in reserve for the opening of the Chess season a number of highly entertaining novelties from abroad.

“F. P. Apply to Mr. Stewart, the ivory turner in Oxford-street, who has many beautiful specimens of Chess men and boards

Solutions by “R. W B.,” “F P M.,” “G. N.,” “Idler,” “Palamedes,” “Thadeus,” “Peter,” “Sandy,” “Civis,” “S. W. G.,” “Old Noll,” “Chapel Rock;” “T. B.,” Bradford “Marasion,” “H. H. D.,” “J H. R.,” “Subscriber,” “Annette,” “Amateur,” and “G. A. S.” are correct. Those by “M A C” and “W. T.” are wrong.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No. 129.

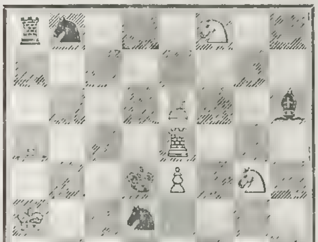
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to Q's 4th (ch)	Q takes R	3. Q to K's 5th (ch)	K to his B's 6th
2. R to K's 3rd (ch)	Q takes R (best)	4. Q takes Q—mate

PROBLEM No. 130.

Beautiful piece of play by Mr. D'ORVILLE, of Antwerp.

The White gives mate in seven moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

GAME JUST PLAYED AT BRIGHTON, MR. STAUNTON GIVING THE PAWN AND TWO MOVES TO CAPTAIN KENNEDY.

Take Black's K B's P off the board.

WHITE (Capt. K.)	BLACK. (Mr. S.)	WHITE (Capt K.)	BLACK (Mr S.)
1. K P two		17. Q to K B's 4th	Q to K's 2nd
2. Q P two	K P one	18. R to K B sq	Q Kt to Q 2nd
3. Q B P two	Q B P two	19. Q Kt P one	Q R P one
4. Q [illegible]	Q P one	20. Q Kt to Q sq	K B to Kt 4th
5. K B to Q 3rd	K Kt P one	21. Q to K B 2nd	Kt to K 4th
6. Q B to Q 2nd	K B to Kt 2nd	22. B to Q B 2nd	Q Kt P 2 (b)
7. Q Kt to B 3rd	K P one	23 P takes P	P takes P
8. K Kt to K 2nd!	K Kt to R 3rd	24. B to Kt sq	Q B to Q 2nd
9. [illegible]	Castles	25 K R P one	Q Kt P one
10. K [illegible] P two	P takes P	26 Q Kt to K 3rd	B to Q Kt 4th
11. Q B takes P	K Kt to his 5th	27. Q Kt to K Kt 4th	Kt takes Kt
12. Q to her 2nd	K Kt to K 4th	28 P takes Kt	Q to K Kt 2nd (c)
13. Q B takes Kt	B takes B	29 Q to K B 3rd	Q B P one
14. Q to K R 6th	B to K Kt 2nd	30. P takes P	B takes P
15. R takes R (ch)	Q takes R	31. R to B 2nd	R to Q R 6th, and wins (d).
16. Q to K R 4th (a)	K B to his 3rd

(a) Losing time He had better have gone at once to K B 4th

(b) The advance of these Pawns at the proper juncture adds much to the embarrassment of White's position.

(c) P[illegible]ing to move Q to K R [illegible]

(d) White's last move was not the best on the board; but there was none which could have prolonged the game more than a few moves

GAME LATELY PLAYED BY MR. BUCKLE AGAINST ANOTHER AMATEUR

BLACK. (Mr. B.)	WHITE. (Mr. [illegible])	BLACK. (Mr. B.)	WHITE. (Mr. [illegible])
1. K P two	K P two	14. B P takes Kt	Q Kt P one (b)
2. K Kt to B 3rd	K Kt to B 3rd	15. Q R P two	Q P one
3. Kt takes P	Q to K 2nd	16. Q R P one	Q to K [illegible] 3rd
4. Q P two	Q P one	17. P takes P	[illegible] P
5. K Kt to B 3rd	Kt takes K P	18. Q to B 2nd (ch)	K to Kt [illegible]
6. Q B to K 3rd	Q B to K Kt 5th	19. K R to Q B sq	Q to her [illegible]
7. K B to Q 3rd	K Kt to his 4th	20. Q B to K B 4th (c)	Q to her 2nd
8. Q Kt to Q 2nd	Q Kt to B 3rd	21. Kt to K [illegible]	Q to her B sq
9. Castles	Kt takes Kt (ch)	22. Q to her R 4th	Q to K 3rd
10. Q Kt takes Kt	Castles	23. Kt to Q B [illegible]	R to Q R sq
11. K R P one	B to K R 4th	24. Kt to Q 8th (ch)	R takes Kt
12. Q Kt P two	Kt takes Q Kt P (a)	25. R to B 7th (ch)	K to Kt sq
13. Q R to Q Kt sq	Kt takes B	26. Q takes P	Mate

(a) A dangerous caption, since it exposes the K[illegible]

(b) [illegible] premature, and serves to facilitate Black's attack

(c) Well played. If this B is taken, mate follows in five moves

CHESS IN GERMANY.

(a) Game between two German players, in which White, Mr. H., gives his opponent the Q Rook and the first move.

(Take White's Q Rook from the board)

BLACK (Mr. S.)	WHITE (Mr. H.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)	WHITE (Mr. H.)
1. K P two	Q B P two	14. Q R to Q sq	K to Kt sq
2. Q P two	P takes P	15. Q Kt to B 4th	Q Kt P two
3. Q takes P	Q Kt to B 3rd	16. Q Kt to R 3rd	K P one
4. Q to her R 4th	K P two	17. K Kt to Q 4th	Kt to K 4th
5. K B to Q B 4th	K R P one	18. K to R sq	Kt to Kt 5th
6. Q B P one	K B to Q 3rd	19. K R P one	Q to K R 5th
7. Q B to K 3rd	K B to Q B 2nd	20. Q to K 2nd	Kt to K R 7th
8. K Kt to B 3rd	K Kt to B 3rd	21. K R to K sq	Q B to K Kt 5th (b)
9. Castles	Kt takes K P	22. Q to her B 2nd	B takes K R P
10. B takes K B P (ch)	K takes B	23. P takes B (c)	Q takes K R P
11. Q takes K Kt	Q P two	24. K to Kt sq	Kt checks
12. Q to her B 2nd	R to K B sq	25. Kt takes Kt	P takes Kt
13. Q Kt to R 3rd	Q R P one	26. Q to K Kt 6th

And White mates in three moves.

(a) [illegible] New Leipsic Chess Journal of Mr Hirschbach

(b) In the Leipsic Chess Journal the following variations [illegible] interesting position are [illegible]

BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.
21 [illegible]	[illegible]	2[illegible]	[illegible] K 4th (disc ch)
Kt takes Kt *	[illegible]	2[illegible]	[illegible]
Q to her 2nd	[illegible] P	[illegible]	[illegible]
K to Kt sq	B to R 7th (ch)	[illegible]	[illegible]
25 K takes P	Q takes P (ch)	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	Kt takes Kt	Q [illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	R to K B 6th	K [illegible]
[illegible]	Q B takes K R P	And [illegible]
[illegible]	R takes K R P	26. Q takes B
P takes R	B takes P	And the position is given as drawn
K Kt [illegible]	Q to R 4th	25. K to Kt sq	B to K B [illegible]
K takes Kt †	B to Kt 5th, (disc. ch)	25. Kt takes B	P takes [illegible]

And White wins.

‡ Better to play K B P 2.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 25.—By M. D'ORVILLE.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R sq	K at Q 5th
Q at K sq	Q at her Kt 5th
B at Q Kt 2nd	R at K R sq
B at K Kt 4th	R at Q Kt sq
Kt at K 5th	Kt at K 2nd
Kt at Q B 3rd	Pawns at K Kt 3rd and K B 2nd

White plays first, and mates in three moves.

No. 26.—By the SAME.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R sq	K at his Kt sq
Q at K R 5th	Q at her R sq
R at K B sq	R at K R 7th
B at Q R 3rd	R at K 7th
Pawns at K 6th and Q 6th	Kt at Q sq
	P at K Kt 2nd

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No 27.—By the SAME.

WHITE.	BLACK	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q B sq	K at Q 4th	R at K 4th	R at Q R sq
Q at K R 2nd	Q at her R 7th	Kts at Q 8th and Q Kt 3rd	Kts at Q B 3rd and Q Kt 4th
K at K 6th	R at K R sq

White, playing first, mates in three moves.

MUSIC

THE BRUSSELS OPERA COMPANY AT DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

On Wednesday night, this unrivalled troupe made their re-appearance in this country, in Meyerbeer's magnificent opera of “Les Huguenots.” The house had a very different aspect from that which greeted their début last season; in this instance it was extremely well attended, many of our leading artists and amateurs being present. Indeed the reputation acquired by the Brussels company may be pronounced to be such as to render the speculation beyond a doubt; but, at the same time, a few improvements in their business arrangements may be of essential service. It appears to us, that the affair is not sufficiently advertised, and that some uncertainty prevails as to the nights of performance. Last year, the changes were frequent, even at the eleventh hour, and the hours of beginning very precarious; positive regulations should be laid down on these points to secure the public from disappointment. It would also be advisable to have printed books of the operas, with translations, like Her Majesty's Theatre. The delays between the acts should be as brief as possible, as it is not the custom of this country to loiter in the foyers as at the continental theatres. There is no half-price, which we take to be impolitic, as it will keep away many persons, whose relaxation from daily affairs is only at a late period of the evening. To sum up this portion of the direction, we would suggest the policy of engaging the services of an English manager, thoroughly conversant with the wants, wishes, and habits of our audiences; a settled purpose is everything.

Wednesday's auditory appeared fully resolved to bestow cordial greetings on all the artists. No sooner had the patriarchal conductor, M. Charles Hanssens, appeared to take his place, than he was received with several rounds of applause. Mdme. Laborde, Mdme. Julien, Mdme. Guichard, M. Laborde, M. Zelger—all established favourites—had their reception; and it was not the least remarkable incident, that the Chorus had also the honour of an especial welcome, and right well do these incomparable singers deserve the distinction. The National Anthem, played by the band, with the audience standing, was cheered again and again. There were some slight changes in the cast. The Count de Nevers, played last season by Laurent Quillévéri, was assigned to M. Massol, a distinguished baritone, for some years at the Parisian Académie Royale de Musique; but, as he had not arrived on Wednesday, the part was taken, at a very short notice, by a M Delman, who has been known as a singer at the London Concerts, under the name of Signor Felice Planque, and who is the M. Félix who made a pasco in “Zampa,” at Her Majesty's Theatre. He is, it is said, a brother of Mdlle. Rachel, and has a very fine bass voice, which lacks style, and is an indifferent actor. He acquitted himself, however, ably, under the circumstances; and, with time and practice, may become an artist of utility. The Count de St. Bris introduced a new basso—M. Barielle—who came out astonishingly in the fourth act A M. Boulo, a tenor, who sang the “Ra-ta-plan” of Bois-Rois, is amongst the new arrivals, and is a clever vocalist. In the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, of July 26, 1845, we gave a lengthened analysis of Meyerbeer's masterpiece. The dramatic and musical incidents were therein described at length; and, if it be the intention not to publish books, our notice, reprinted on a single sheet, would be a guide to the amateur who is not in possession of the score.

Our task is now to allude more particularly to the exertions of the artists on the present occasion. In the foremost rank is Madame Laborde, who (Persiani excepted) is the greatest executant of vocal intricacies now in the world. She is charged with the delineation of Marguerite de Valois, and all her music is in the second act; her subsequent appearances being merely to aid the action of the piece. After an entr'acte of surpassing beauty, in which the flute has some charming phrases, so exquisitely executed as to be loudly applauded, the Queen appears, and begins the air “O beau pays de la Touraine.” More delicious warbling in the cabaletta of this scena was never heard; the divisions are imitative of the carol of sweet birds, and the prolonged shakes of Madame Laborde, with her chromatic runs, were divinely performed. We thought the house would have come down with the hurricane of applause. The encore was imperative; and the fair songstress went through the bravura passages again without the least apparent fatigue, although she had only risen from her bed to attend to her duties, having suffered severely—as, indeed, the whole company—from the horrors of sea-sickness. In the subsequent duo with her caro sposo, she elicited similar transports of admiration in the movement “Si j'étais coquette.” Altogether it was a triumphant exhibition of vocal perfection, which no other singer now in this country could approach. In the third act, Madame Julien enlisted all sympathies in the duo with Zelger, “O terreur.” In the fourth act, her marvellous energy in the great duet with Laborde, in which Valentine essays to save Raoul from the St. Bartholomew Massacre, created a prodigious sensation, and she was called for, with M. Laborde. In the fifth act, her death scene was replete with pathos. Without being a refined singer, there is an earnestness about her which excites the audiences to the highest pitch.

The very difficult part of Raoul de Nangis, in which Nourrit and Duprez have in turn signalised themselves so greatly, was forcibly sustained by Laborde on the whole. He gets on better as the situations become more complicated. No one would suppose, from his unfortunate delivery of the lovely romance, “Plus blanche que l'hermine,” which he can never sing in time, that he would distinguish himself so much in the the fourth and last acts. Zelger's making up in Marcel, the faithful follower of Raoul, and the stern upholder of the Protestant faith, is alone worth going to see—it is quite a picture. The “Piff haff” battle song, with its strange accompaniment of picolo and bassoon, was encored, and the Lutheran Corale, which Meyerbeer has interwoven throughout the opera with such consummate skill, was finely rendered by M. Zelger. Madame Guichard sang the elegant melody of the Page in the finale of the first act delightfully. Her voice is a high soprano, but she sang well in tune, and the divisions were neatly executed.

The Choruses, although they were not so steady as usual, arising from the fatigue of the singers after their voyage, went with surprising precision. The trying orgie of the first act will improve in the rehearsing. The trebles in the chorus of “Baigneuses” were admirable. The Benediction of the Daggers, with its astonishing climax, electrified the house as usual, and the Septuor of the Duel was equally effective. The instrumentalists played delightfully. The sensitiveness of execution in the elaborate accompaniments was beyond all praise; but we think an increase of the stringed instruments would better balance the weight of brass in the band. The executant with the drums did not pass unheeded in the Consecration of Arms scene. The terrific colouring of this concerted piece is without a parallel in lyrical art

To describe the continued enthusiasm of the audience throughout this masterly work, and the ovations at the close, would be impossible.

HAYMARKET THEATRE

An English adaptation of Grisar's popular opera of “L'Eau Merveilleuse” was produced on Wednesday night, under the title of “The Marvellous Water Cure;” although the story has nothing to do with the wonders of Gruefenberg, being simply confined to the rivalry between two mountebanks, one of whom resorts to the stratagem of pretending to commit suicide, and, after being united to his rival's lady-love, affects to be cured by the magical water vended by his brother quack. This story, it will be seen, is made up from Camacho's episode in “Don Quixote,” and from Donizetti's “Elisir d'Amore.” Grisar's music is a compound of all schools, pleasantly strung together. The operetta had a great run at the Salle Favart, in Paris; and it enables Madame Thillon to assume a picturesque costume as the Trumpetress of Dr. Tartaglia, and to sing very charmingly divers songs, and in the concerted pieces. The successful lover, Belloni, was sustained by Hudson, who sang at times pleasingly, and whose rich brogue in the Neapolitan was very predominant. Bedford, transplanted from the Adelphi, was the Charlatan, and invested it with his broad burlesque. He has voice enough to have done better things. Bland had a slight sketch of a deaf Podesta. The accompaniments, under the direction of Mr. T. Reed, were nicely executed The “Marvellous Water Cure” is merely destined to run through the few remaining nights of the fascinating Thillon's engagement, and will then be laid aside and forgotten, unless it was very well sung in all the parts by superior artists.

THE MUSICAL UNION.

The eighth and last meeting of the second season of this thriving Institution took place on Tuesday afternoon, at Willis's Rooms. The programme comprised Haydn's Quartet in D to 63, executed by Vieuxtemps, Deloffre, Hill, and Piatti; B. Romberg's Elegy for Violoncello, exquisitely played by Piatti; and Beethoven's Septet in E Flat, Op. 20, for violin (Vieuxtemps), viola (Hill), violoncello (Piatti), clarionet (Lazarus), bassoon (Baumann), horn (Puzzi), and contra-basso (Howell). The whole performance was of first-rate quality. We congratulate Mr. Ella on his successful exertions as the Director of the Union. He has given a great impetus to art by his bold undertaking, and has entitled himself to the thanks of every true amateur, and of every independent professor. With Prince Albert as Patron, the Duke of Cambridge as President, the Earl of Westmoreland as Vice President, and with such names as the Earl of Falmouth, Viscounts Adare and Templetown, Lord Saltoun, Sirs G. Clerk, A. Barnard, J. Campbell, R. B. Phillips, Major Legge, Capt. Cadogan, Hon. L. Parsons, Messrs. Clerk, Shelley, Freeburgh, Lukin, Staniforth, and Perkins on the Committee, the “Musical Union” must now take its position amongst the permanent musical institutions of the metropolis.

MUSICAL CHIT CHAT

Mr. Sedgwick, the concertina-player, gave an Evening Concert, on Tuesday, at Mr Blagrove's rooms, in Mortimer-street, supported by the talents of Mrs. Weiss, Mrs. Newton, Mrs. Seguin, Mrs. Ellis; Misses Lyon and O'Connor, Messrs. Weiss, Ransford, Seguin, and Giubilei, as vocalists; and by the Distin Family, Blagrove, and Case, as instrumentalists.

Signor Jannetti, the Professor of Italian Literature, gave a matinee déclamatoire et musicale on Monday last, at the Hanover-square Rooms, aided by Mdlle. Vera, Miss Dolby, Mdme. Hennelle, Signor Bottura, Signor Ciabetta, Signor Brizzi, and Signor Alfredi. Signori Vera and Orsini were the accompanyists.

The Ethiopian Serenaders terminate their long and profitable engagement at the ST. JAMES's Theatre this evening.

At the SURREY Theatre, the operatic company has been quite successful, and we shall take an early opportunity of noticing their performances.

M. Jullien terminates his Concerts d'Eté to-night at COVENT GARDEN Theatre We fear that he must have lost considerably by the speculation. He is about to make a tour in the provinces, to give Promenade Concerts.

We made some comments last week on the dishonest French system of concert giving on the part of musical periodicals. Some sensible remarks on this subject, made by the Athenæum, are worthy of quotation. “When the editor,” it says, “of a critical periodical, to render his journal attractive, lays himself under heavy pecuniary obligations to those whom he criticises, what chance is there of his duty to art being performed without fear or favour? What prospect have his readers of getting at the truth with regard to any musician likely to offer or to withhold a contribution towards the programme? It is ill done in the great artists (however the small ones may be excusable, their need making them liable to temptation,) to lend themselves to such proceedings. Their avidity for praise in print is satisfied at a heavy cost, if it imply the loss of public confidence; and, though it may be asking superhuman virtue to ask of Editors to deny themselves immediate profit on the hand-to-mouth system, when their victims are so willing, it is not overstrained to expect that musicians having a European reputation should provide for the independence of their class by respecting that of others. The miserable state of matters in Paris—openly avowed and lamented by every person with whom we have conversed on the subject,—the notorious instances of distinguished artists beset by journalists for direct subsidies—of obscure men, whose merit exceeds their means, unable to get one single unbought word of recognition ought to be remembered as a warning by our Moscheles's, Benedicts, &c. &c. They are doing their best for the annihilation of impartial criticism by playing at the ‘Grand Concert of the Musical World,’ but they will not succeed. If the artists will not save themselves, the public must step in and save them.”

MADAME PLEYEL.—This distinguished pianiste left London on Wednesday for Belgium.

A new ballet, called “Betty,” by M Mazelier, the music by M. Ambroise Thomas, has been produced at the Académie Royale, at Paris, with success A new danseuse, from Italy, only sixteen years of age, Mdlle. Fusco, made a triumphant debût in the part of Betty. The story is the visit of Charles the Second to Wapping, and making love to Mary Copp, so often dramatized in this country. M. Thomas's music is much eulogised; and the dancing of Mdlle. Plunkett, Adele Dumilâtre, Mdlle. Maria, and M. Petipa, was much applauded.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

The re-appearance of Taglioni in “La Gitana” has been the great event at this theatre during the past week, and one of the most momentous of the season, especially to those who appreciate this great and gifted danseuse—not only by her marvellous powers, but by the change she has effected in her art. Other ballerine, such as Lucile Grahn, Carlotta Grisi, or Cerito, may follow in her steps, and may even rival the performance of Taglioni; but to the latter the votaries of Terpsichore have a debt of gratitude, as the originator of all that delights us in an art now poetical and intellectual, and before her time quite the reverse

All that Taglioni does bears the stamp of genius. It is not merely the astonishing degree of physical power by which she disguises all effort, and almost makes the beholder imagine that that floating, flying movement she maintains is her only natural method of locomotion; it is not merely this which constitutes the peculiar charm of Taglioni's dancing—it is that she transports the spectator into an [illegible] world; and, by every look, tone, and gesture, maintains the illusion

“La Gitana” was the ballet in which the fair Sylphide re-appeared before the English public.

The groundwork of this ballet is identical with the plot of the “Bohemian Girl:” a child stolen from her parents by the Gipsies, and finally recognised and restored to them, &c. La Gitana is presented to us during her vagabond existence; and it is then that the “Cracovienne” and other characteristic dances are introduced. With Taglioni, even in these, there is a refinement, a poetry, and intellectuality, which never abandon her. But, more of the great danseuse, when we have had further opportunities of judging whether she still fully maintains her wondrous powers.

“Anna Bolena,” “Nino,” and the “Barbiere,” have been the operas given during the past week—the former with an effectiveness which showed the Diva, Grisi, had lost none of her power of awakening the emotions of pity and sympathy for the ill-fated Queen. This part has always been, and still continues one of the best of her repertoire. It has this difference from those of “Semiramide” and “Norma,” that here, throughout, she is represented as innocent and injured. In the others, she is partly, at least, the aggressor and accuser; here, grief, more than anger, is the ruling passion she represents; and none could do it more touchingly or more majestically. Lablache's Henry VIII. is a marvellous performance. The first glance shows us that all remembrance of our joyous, witty favourite is banished: his face assumes an expression of hardened brutality, in which no trace of the real man is to be discerned. The light-coloured false hair which he wears, giving him the appearance of a much younger man, renders his corpulence of person more remarkable, while it is peculiarly appropriate to the personal descriptions which we read of the Blue Beard Monarch. This impersonation inspires a degree of antipathy to one of the worst of English Sovereigns, which it is hardly possible to describe. The illusion is perfect. Mario, in the part of Percy, sings admirably, as usual; but, though the character is not one which gives much scope to dramatic power, we think he might advantageously infuse into it a greater degree of pathos and spirit. We can only allude en passant to the striking improvement of Corbari, who gives forth her sweet notes with far less tremulousness and timidity than heretofore, and who makes an excellent representative of Jane Seymour. La Brambilla enacts Smeaton with spirit and taste.

LYCEUM.

It is some time since we have seen so admirably constructed a piece as the comic drama of “Above and Below,” produced at this house on Thursday evening. It is a clever adaptation of a German play, “Die erste und die zweite Stiegen,” written by M Nestroy, and played with great success at one of the theatres at Vienna. It was subsequently produced in Paris, and has now found its way to London, under the title above given, where it promises to enjoy an existence as long as either of its continental careers.

The plot is too intricate to give in detail; indeed, the incidents are so complicated, and the situations follow one another with such rapidity, that it would occupy an entire column to describe them.

The chief novelty is in the construction of the scene, which is divided into two floors—the upper one being the salon of a wealthy Paris banker, and the lower one the very humble dwelling of an old-clothes merchant, who is exceedingly poor. The upper floor is inhabited by M. Dorville (Mr. Diddear) and his daughter Cecile (Miss Farebrother); whilst Landré (Mr Frank Mathews), Poisson, his partner in the old-clothes line (Mr. Keeley), and Lolot, his niece (Miss Daly), dwell below. There are also two personages Armand, a silly coxcomb (Mr. Wigan), and Leonard, a young clerk (Mr. H. Butler), who divide their time between the two apartments. On the fortunes of these individuals the interest of the play turns; and the business of the drama is so cleverly conducted, that there is always some very entertaining equivoque arising from the dialogue going on “above and below;” or some curious antithetical incidents in the action, which keep up the interest from first to last—the change of position in the two families, one going up in the world as the other descends, being amongst the most effective.

It was very well acted, and put on the stage in first-rate style. The costumes deserve a word of commendation, and all the mechanical appliances were cleverly arranged. At the fall of the curtain, the applause was most enthusiastic; and Mr Keeley, whose acting as the idle, good-natured Poisson, was especially great, announced it for performance every evening until further notice, amidst renewed and prolonged cheering. It is the best card played by the Lyceum management for some time, and will draw good first prices. We cordially recommend our play-going readers to see it.

THE QUEEN'S.

This little theatre was opened on Saturday evening by Mr. Abington, as we announced last week, for a short season, previous to the company's migration, we understand, to Richmond.

The house has, during the recess, been very nicely decorated. Everything looks new and clean, and some few alterations in the audience portion are made in the best possible taste. A new drop scene, representing the Embarkation of Cleopatra, has also been painted; and, altogether, the Queen's Theatre, in point of comfort and general appearance, may take its place on a level with any other in the metropolis.

Mr. Abington, of whom report speaks highly both as an actor and a manager, professes his intention of playing only the legitimate drama. He opened his campaign with “As You Like It,” in which Miss Clara Seyton, very well known to the public as a lady lecturer, acquitted herself very creditably as Rosalind; and was very well supported by the company, whose names, however, with the exception of Mrs. Selby's, are not familiar to London playgoers, but not the less deserving of commendation on that account.

SADLERS' WELLS, which has been thoroughly repaired and re-decorated, will be re-opened under the management of Mr. Phelps, on Saturday next, with Shakspeare's Henry IV. Among the accessions to the company are Mr. Wallack and Mrs. Pollock.

VAUXHALL.

The Second Masquerade took place at these Gardens on Monday evening; and the attendance was even greater than on the former occasion: indeed, we heard that at one time between eight and nine thousand people were assembled in the grounds. The Masquerade might altogether be considered quite a “hit.” Some of the costumes were very fanciful; and there was an evident improvement in the deportment of the crowd, as compared with the unmeaning and boisterous riot of the “rabble rout,” of which Masquerade visitors were formerly composed. The people are evidently being brought up to a better style of entertainment of this class. Hence, a few unhappy individuals who came to be “funny,” found themselves at a sad discount; and their intrusion into a quadrille or polka, was usually speedily followed by their rapid expulsion.

There was something irresistibly ludicrous, to a quiet observer, in the sad expression of two or three dreary Clowns, who wandered about the walks, and now and then tried to be droll; and a few other old conventionalities—butchers, sailors, recruits, and the like—were terribly put out, by matter-of-fact replies to their attempts to be witty

The débardeurs, as usual, at affairs of this kind, carried it all their own way; and a mock Ibrahim Pacha created much amusement by being lionised about the Gardens. As the real Simon Pure was expected, the assumption was a happy one.

The music was good; the refreshments were good; and the number of lamps unparalleled, even with the thousands "additional" of past seasons in our memory. In fact, it was altogether a very good thing of its kind; perhaps the best we ever saw

Among other persons of distinction who have lately visited the Gardens may be mentioned his Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge, the Duke and Duchess of Montrose, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Dowager Duchess of Bedford, the Marquis of Clanricarde, the Marquis of Abercorn, the Marquis of Worcester, Earl of Chesterfield, Earl of Wilton, Earl of Munster, Lord Brougham, Lord Stanley, Lord Cantilupe, Lord Vivian, Lord Monteagle, Sir W. W. Wynn, Sir M. and Lady Montefiore and a large party, Lady Williams, Sir W. and Lady Myddleton, Sir H. Webb, Marquis of Busada, the Lord Mayor, &c, &.

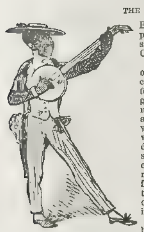
TRACTS FOR THE TRAINS.

BY ALBERT SMITH.

No. IX.

PLEASURE TRIPS FOR THE PEOPLE. No. IV.

THE NASSAU BALLOON



KEEPING in mind the leading pastimes of "the people" at this season we seize the opportunity of saying a few words about the balloon trip from Cremorne Gardens a week or two ago.

The popularity of balloons is something curious. It comes by fits and starts, like a stage cascade, or an English sunshine, or an outcry for the legitimate drama, or an exhibition of good pictures, or an overflow of dwarfs, and nigger vocalists, and immense animals. And an aëronant is a species of perennial grub. In the winter we hear nothing of him. he hybernates with his balloon, in the chrysalis state, without doubt, of dressing-gown and slippers; but no sooner does the fine weather arrive, than he casts his skin, unfolds his wings, and is once more a creature of the air, until he "shrinks from the breath of the first Autumn day." And then he disappears as mysteriously as the flies, or the pins; which we hold to be the greatest instances of spontaneous evaporation known.

Whilst all sorts of progresses and voyages, by sea and by land, have received every attention from our Artists, we must confess that those in the air have been much neglected, as to illustrations. They have been principally confined to a large street wood-cut, of a car filled with distinguished ladies and gentlemen, with no end of fireworks behind them; and an individual in the centre, supposed to be Mr. Green, politely bowing to the spectators, who, in kit-cat proportions, are waving their hats and umbrellas, and shaking their handkerchiefs, and giving way to all kinds of frantic enthusiasm. To supply this void, we dispatched two Artists to the scene of the last balloon ascent: one was to go in the car, and the other to remain on the ground. The following interesting sketches have resulted.

VIEW OF THE COMPANY AT CREMORNE AT THE MOMENT OF ASCENT.

The above Cut gives a lively image of the crowd in the grounds, in the midst of whom might have been seen Ibrahim Pacha, had the mob not hustled him up so that he could not be made out. This was the only Illustration which our aërial Artist favoured us with, as he got so frightened, and so completely in the clouds, that his art failed him. Our mundane Draughtsman was more lucky. He first sends us this View of

THE BALLOON AS IT APPEARED FROM WATERLOO BRIDGE,

amidst the cheers of the boys, who directly started off after it, as vaguely as they would have done after a fire-engine, which is ever a reckless pursuit, whose termination may not be guessed between Gray's Inn-lane and Epping Forest. We ourselves were fortunate in taking this Sketch of whilst we were pumping our brains for a subject. The following came by the inspiration of the moment.

THE BALLOON AS IT PASSED OVER OUR ATTIC SKYLIGHT,

SONG.

THE AERIAL GREEN.

Air—The Ivy Green.

Oh! a daring man is the Aërial Green,
As he rises above the wall
Of the turfy Cremorne, or for nothing is seen
From the road beside old Vauxhall!
How bleak soe'er the wind may feel,
Or dark the night may keep,
He lights the match of his firework wheel,
Though all below may sleep.
Creeping where nobody else has been,
A daring man is the Aërial Green!

Since Green first began his airy career,
How many his rivals have been,
But none like himself through the heavens can steer,
He's so knowing, although he is Green.
For Henson shall go, and be dimmed his fame,
And forgotten his Aërial Ship,
But Green shall still carry out his name,
And flourish in every trip
Creeping up to realms unseen,
A daring man is the Aërial Green!

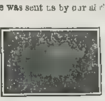
Our Artist took his next Illustration, and a very graphic one it is, from

THE BALLOON AS IT APPEARED DISAPPEARING.

There is much to praise in this spirited sketch. The treatment is simple, but very expressive: the balloon is evidently a point, and the drawing is free and unstudied. His next Cut is

THE BALLOON WHEN IT WAS OUT OF SIGHT.

A similar view to the above was sent us by our aërial Artist, who recovered his presence of mind a little, of



THE VIEW FROM THE BALLOON, AFTER NIGHTFALL.

With this illustration, for the present we conclude our paper; but an amateur who was amongst the voyagers has promised us his portfolio, to which we may possibly recur.

CHARADE THE SIXTH.

In the busiest haunts of commerce you may see me as you pass,
Where the newest fashions dazzle through the mammoth panes of glass;
Where upon the last barèges coils of gaudy ribbons lie,
And gay parasols by hundreds are stack'd up to catch the eye—
Long-fringed Joinvilles, gants de Paris, velvet polkas, sarsenet streamers,
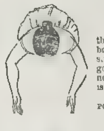
Wonderful regatta shirts—all ballet girls, and dogs, and steamers.
(Twelve and sixpence cost the first; and very dear, the more's the pity!
But the others, ready made, are three and sixpence in the City.)
Where the firm have put their names, in golden letters raised on high,
By the side, without a doubt, MY FIRST will stand for company.
In those deep solitudes and pensive cells,
Where everything that's slow and dreary dwells,
Secluded from the living world for aye,
My hapless SECOND pines her life away.
No vows of truth her dull existence cheer,
No words of love are whispered in her ear,
She ends her weary pilgrimage alone,
As cold and rigid as the sculptured stone.

Would you wish to find MY THIRD, everywhere I may be heard;
On fair Chiswick's shaven lawn, or the greensward of Cremorne;
With the troops on battle plain, or the long Teetotal train;
At the fair, amidst the tents; or at Gravesend, with the Gents,
Heralding sly Punch's antic, or the Fantoccini frantic,
Windsor Terrace, Greenwich Fair: Kensington [illegible] me there.
Families of ancient line have enriched their roll by mine,
Where the towns in ruins lie, and the conquered armies die,
On my noisy way I keep [illegible]!

Why's a cobbler like a king?
Why's A'Beckett like Tom Spring?
Why to bed do people go?
Why is Kent like Cerito?
Why do millers wear white hats?
Why don't darkness bother cats?
Why are men like gooseberries?
Answer any one of these,
And you find MY WHOLE with ease.

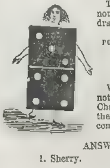
OUR PORTRAIT GALLERY.

We have been favoured with two Theatrical Portraits this week, by artists of eminence. The first of these has been taken by a talented young man who is at present struggling for fame; and not being very well off, can only go to the slips of the theatres, with an order, as he cannot, without inconvenience, even fee a box-keeper. It is a



PORTRAIT OF MADAME CASTELLAN, IN "LA SONNAMBULA."—TAKEN FROM THE FIFTH TIER.

The second is by a gentleman of idle habits, who will not trouble himself to go at all to any theatre, but has drawn from what he conceives to be the fact.



PORTRAIT OF MADAME ANNA THILLON IN THE "BLACK DOMINO"

We must again request our ingenious Correspondents not to favour us with so many poetical solutions of our Charades Our space will not allow us to insert any of them; and to ourselves the revelation is not of material consequence.

ANSWER TO CHARADE THE FIFTH.

1. Sherry.
2. Cobler.
3. SHERRY-COBLER.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Our weekly commentary on the popular pastimes of the country in the present instance will be compounded upon Caleb Quotem's principle, that "many small articles make up a sum." The chief feature of the past six days was the July racing at the capital of commerce. This we purpose leaving to tell so much of its own tale as will be found in the returns of the running. Liverpool is a great place in the Trade circular; in the Turf circular—commonly called "the ring"—it is of less importance.

While "the Season" is celebrating its high ceremonials while Fashion is holding

Its nightly round of glitter and perfume—

it will not be amiss to glance at the merry-makings of the people—the carnivals of common life, wherein, after all, we read the true histories of nations. Wander through May Fair or St. James's when you will, be it noon or midnight, you are prepared for the reign of pleasure, whose golden sceptre is the talisman by which all live and move. But thread the thorny haunts of labour, and if there you meet light hearts and contented spirits, be sure that you have fallen upon good ways Be satisfied with this: wiser heads than yours would be puzzled to predict what shall come of the future. See, here we are at Bankside, a district where they sacrifice but little to appearances. But through these sooty faces good humour peers out, and "We'll all be merry in our old clothes," is the order of the day

It is the occasion of the annual Regatta of the Clink Liberty, and the boat given by its inhabitants to be rowed for by the watermen and lightermen is about being contended for. Ancient Charons are the champions—men who had never yet won this prize, and, but for this condition, never would on this side of the Styx It was a cheering sight to look upon those hale, hearty amphibiu, handling their sculls as whilom they were wont, "and eager for the fray." The contest was in heats—and very hot it was; the winner being John Harrison, a youth of forty-four. At one time it looked as if sixty-two would do the trick; but, as the saying is, "youth will be served." Contemporary with this passage in aquatics, there was also a Regatta at Greenwich, at the instance of the gallant Governor of the Hospital and most of the neighbouring nobility and gentry. The course lay between the Dreadnought and the town, and the sport was excellent. This, too, was in heats, the conqueror being "dark blue"—or rather Brown, for that was the winner's patronymic. It was quite a gala day among the "ancient mariners" of the Hospital; of whom it must be written, "implentur veteris Bacchi" that is to say, they imbibed considerable grogs; while the "penguisque ferinæ" portion of the quotation no doubt applied to the pursuits of the gentility.

To this list of capital rowing-matches must be added that between gentlemen members of the Guy's Club, which extended into the twilight of Tuesday last. The races were arranged in heats in which much skill, bottom, and effort was displayed. The course was that of classic fame, extending from Putney to Hammersmith-bridge, the winning boat being that manned by Messrs. Foster and Brenchley. In the matter of Yachting our items are but atoms. The Royal Mersey Yacht Club are in process of a Regatta to day, and purpose having a high festival in honour of the visit of his Royal Highness Prince Albert to their waters; so that, the rumour of an aquatic tour to Liverpool, by at least one of the Royal pair, seems well founded. Coup de-grace has been given to the idea of Olympics on Wimbledon Common. The Lord of the Manor forbids them, and the lords and ladies of the locality are scandalized at the notion of them; on Wimbledon it is lawful for the heath to flourish but not the turf. The fine weather of the last half-dozen days was propitious for the lovers of cricket, who were up and at it at Lord's, and many a ground besides. In short, merry-makings al fresco have generally prevailed: may their shadows never be less......

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—If the betting had been commensurate with the attendance, we should have had a much longer quotation, and some "movements," to record; the reverse, however, was the fact; so that, first premising that My Mary, Poynton, The Premier, and Telemachus were generally looked upon as "non-starters" (all, by the way, having been backed for a good deal of money), we may content ourselves with a list of the market prices.

MERSEY STAKES (LIVERPOOL).
7 to 4 agst Van Tromp (t)

LIVERPOOL CUP

2 to 1 agst Mendicant (t)	12 to 1 agst Lightning (t)	15 to 1 agst Plaudit
10 to 1 —— Yardley	15 to 1 —— Highwayman (t)	16 to 1 —— Polish (t)
12 to 1 —— Satyr (t)	15 to 1 —— Rowena	18 to 1 —— Inheritress

20 to 1 agst The Baron (t)

GOODWOOD STAKES.

Even on 9 agst the Field	20 to 1 agst Giantess	33 to 1 agst Akbar
9 to 1 agst Camera Obscura	25 to 1 —— Orion	33 to 1 —— A-la-mode (t)
15 to 1 —— The Hero	25 to 1 —— Footstool	30 to 1 —— Newcourt
15 to 1 —— Jonathan Wild	25 to 1 —— Jack Cade	30 to 1 —— Plenitude
15 to 1 —— Connaught	25 to 1 —— Bold Archer	33 to 1 —— Humdrum (t)
Aug. 1	33 to 1 —— Jenny Wren

ST. LEGER.

5 to 1 agst Sir Tatton Sykes (t)	8 to 1 agst Brocardo
5 to 1 —— Pyrrhus the First (t)	40 to 1 —— Vanish (t)

DERBY.

25 to 1 agst Van Tromp	40 to 1 agst The Reiver (t)	50 to 1 agst Epirote (t)
40 to 1 —— Old Port (t)	50 to 1 —— Crozier	50 to 1 —— Halo (t)

50 to 1 agst Planet (t)

LIVERPOOL JULY MEETING. WEDNESDAY.

The Croxteth Stakes of 15 sovs each, 10 ft and 30 added.

Mr. J. Green's The Conjuror	(Longstaff)	1
Mr. Meiklam's Inheritress	(Templeman)	2

The Produce Stakes of 50 sovs each.

Mr. Green's Lady Harkaway	(Murphy)	1
Mr. Irwin's Danceaway	(Maloney)	2

The Sefton Stakes of 30 sovs each.

Mr. Irwin's Danceaway .. .. .. walked over.

The Bickerstaffe Stakes of 100 sovs. each.

Col. Anson's Iago .. .. walked over

The Mersey Stakes of 25 sovs. each, and 50 added.

Lord Eglintoun's Van Tromp	(J. Marson)	1
Lord Caledon's b c by Simoom, out of Cassandra	(Marlow)	2

Match, T.Y.C. Lord Stanley's Abdiel (Butler), beat Lord Glasgow's f by Retriever, out of Canada, (Holmes). Won by a length.

Plate of £60. Heats.

Mr. Green's Lady Harkaway	(W. Abdale)	1
Mr. Smith's c by Jerry, out of the Maid		2
Mr. Lancaster's Monsieur Perrot		3

THURSDAY.

The Foal Stakes of 100 sovs each. Once round and a distance.
Colonel Anson's Iago walked over.

The Liverpool Cup of £300, added to a sweepstakes of 25 sovs each.

Mr. Meiklam's Lightning, 5 yrs	(Templeman)	1
Lord Eglinton's Plaudit, 4 yrs	(J. Prince)	2
Lord Warwick's Yardley, 6 yrs		3

BANKSIDE REGATTA.

On Monday, this event exhibited a novel feature, the competitors being confined to the six oldest watermen and jobbing lightermen of Bankside, Southwark, who had never before won the boat annually given by the residents of the Clink Liberty and its vicinity. The race was in four heats.

First Heat

John Harrison	(Yellow)	1	Edward Hollam	(Purple)	2

It was a close heat for some time well round.

Second Heat

John Kingman	(Red)	1	Robert Simmonds	(Pink)	2

Third Heat

Thomas Hasern	(Blue)	1	John Schooley	(Green)	2

Grand Heat.

Yellow	1	Red	2	Blue	3

The distance, in this as in the preceding heats, was from Mason-stairs, down round a boat moored off the Phœnix coal wharf, up round Messrs. Hall's road, down again to the boat at the Phœnix, up again to the Barge-road, and down to Thames-street Stairs to finish.

They went off very levelly, and continued scull and scull for two or three minutes, when Red (the sexagenarian) began to show in front, and, as they approached Southwark-bridge, had nearly drawn his length clear. The rounding of the lower boat altered the position; and, on coming up against the tide, Blue passed through Southwark arch his lengths clear, and Yellow two lengths astern as third. Off the Waterman's Arms the pair fouled, and this gave Yellow an opportunity of going ahead, which he never forfeited, winning easily.

EAST GREENWICH REGATTA.

In consequence of the great patronage extended towards the watermen at Greenwich, two regattas have of late years taken place. The funds have been found sufficient to get up two distinct regattas, the first of which came off on Monday, under the patronage of Admiral the Hon. Sir Robert Stopford, and the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood. The exceeding fineness of the weather, and the perspective of good sport, induced a very numerous and respectable assemblage, who were evidently much gratified with the rowing, which was first-rate. The race was with six scullers in four heats, the distance extending from the Dreadnought to the end of East Greenwich, the distance being repeated.

First Heat.

T. Watkins	(Red)	1	T. Bayley	(Pink)	2	J. Payne	(Green)	3

Second Heat.

J. Brown	(Dark Blue)	1	G. Parkinson	(Light Blue)	2	J. Fungo	(Yellow)	3

Third Heat.

Light Blue	1	Yellow	2

Fourth Heat.

Red	1	Dark Blue	2

Grand Heat.

Dark Blue	1	Red	2

Both were together first time down the course. After the turn Blue half a length a-head of the other. It was a most dashing and gallant race, Red continually rowing up to the winner, but unable to pass. Won by a length.

CRICKET.—The match between the Marylebone Club and Undergraduates of Oxford—the return match—was played at Lord's, on Thursday and Friday (last week), when, to the astonishment of many, because Hillyer and Lillywhite were the bowlers against them, the University made an easy conquest of the Marylebone Club.

MEETING OF THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY AT NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.

MONDAY was a day of preparation for the opening of the public proceedings of the Society, and hence much activity and excitement was apparent in every direction of the town. From a very early period in the morning, visitors began to arrive; the railways disgorged their crowded trains upon the streets, and the steamers that successively arrived in the river displayed their decks literally paved with human beings. Nor were these the only arrivals. Hundreds of cattle and sheep intended for the exhibition choked up the public ways and filled the air with their cries, as they wended their way up the steep streets and lanes that lead from the river side to the high land of the Town Moor; while ever and anon, the business even of the bustling traders of the town was suspended as some extraordinary animal passed by. Thanks to the facilities now afforded for removing stock from a distance, they looked for the most part in excellent condition.

On Tuesday, the Exhibition of Implements, comprising the eastern half of the show-yard, was thrown open to visitors. The exhibition was an unusually interesting one. Every sort of agricultural implement, from the primitive spade to the most complicated specimen of modern mechanism, found here its appropriate representative; and it was impossible to look round upon the exhibition without feeling that here mechanical skill was engaged in paying its appropriate tribute to the eldest and the most important of the arts—the cultivation of the soil There were not, indeed, many exhibiting any striking originality of invention, and some appeared to be too complicated; and, what is worse, too expensive for ordinary use; still, the anxiety that was displayed by the inventors to facilitate the labours of the husbandman, in every department of his toil, was a gratifying sight, as indicating the importance which is now attached to agricultural improvement by every class in the community.

There were upwards of one hundred stands for implements, each occupied by separate exhibitors; and when it is mentioned that some of these gentlemen exhibited from fifty to eighty different implements, and that very few had only one, some idea may be formed of its extent. There were upwards of forty different kinds of carts; as many chaff, hay, and straw cutters; about twenty dibbling machines; nearly fifty different descriptions of drills; about 100 ploughs, all varying in some minute point of construction or other; while the importance of draining was recognised by the presence of nearly twenty different machines for making bricks, draining-pipes, tiles, &c. Add to these fences, gates, harrows, hurdles, mills, pumps, thrashing machines, turnip-cutters, weighing machines, wheels, patent axles, with a variety of articles which came under no regular head, and only served to confuse and distract the uninstructed eye that attempted to reduce them into order or classification. Neither were all the implements exhibited the produce of Great Britain; there were several ingenious articles from Ireland; and Count Gufenberg, of Finland, exhibited a corn drill, supplying the seed on an entirely new principle. A few of the exhibitors had not come forward, as it was understood their implements had been sent by sea, and had been delayed on their passage; but there were implements enough in the yard to prevent the absence of the others from being noticed.

The exact number of articles exhibited on Tuesday was 727. This is a decrease compared with the number of last year, but the judges of the exhibition state that what is lost in point of number has been gained in point of quality, the new implements shown being singularly well adapted for improved cultivation, while the modifications on those exhibited which formerly obtained prizes were all of a simple and highly practical description. The number of implements entered and shown each year since the commencement of the Society stands thus:—1839, 23; 1840, 36; 1841, 319; 1842, 455; 1843, 508; 1844, 948; 1845, 942; 1846, 727 The implements at the present show consisted of 41 carts, 45 chaff, hay, and straw cutters, 18 churns, 15 crushers, 8 clod crushers, 6 corn-dressing machines, 20 dibbling machines, 9 drills, 8 corn and seed drills, 11 drills for general purposes, 21 drill and pulverising machines, 15 fences and specimens of fencing, 4 fire-engines, 18 iron gates, 33 harrows, 4 hay-making machines, 18 horse hoes, 19 hurdles, 18 machines for making bricks, drain tiles, soles, &c., 29 mills, 89 ploughs, 18 miscellaneous ditto, 5 pumps, 11 rakes, 12 rollers, 12 scarifiers, 6 steaming apparatus, 15 thrashing machines, 7 tree guards, 4 troughs, 8 turnip cutters, 15 weighing machines, 25 patent wheels and axles, 4 whippletrees, 2 winnowing machines, and 138 other articles which the Committee describe as "not capable of being classified among the preceding."

Amongst the classified specimens, the numerous machines for making drain-tiles were prominent, and evidently attractive objects in the exhibition. It certainly did appear that if the land is not thoroughly drained it will not be for want of tiles; for here was one set of machines at work, capable, by the direction of a man and a boy, of preparing clay during winter for 400,000 to 500,000 tiles, and another set throwing them off in a perfect state for the kiln at the rate of from 30,000 to 40,000 a day; while a plough was shown for cutting drains for tiles "ten inches in top and five inches in bottom, any depth down to two feet, by two or more men at lift." Then, as regards ploughing generally, there were all kinds of instruments in this peculiar line, from the deep and tearing subsoil to the double-sheathed-ploughing manuring-sowing machine, which, at the experimental farm, did as much work in one hour as five men do in most cases in ten, and, moreover, does its work so well that the most devoted stickler for manual labour and native industry, did he rent a farm, would be tempted to give it a trial. Nor is this all: there were dibbling machines and drilling machines for all sorts of drilling and dibbling.

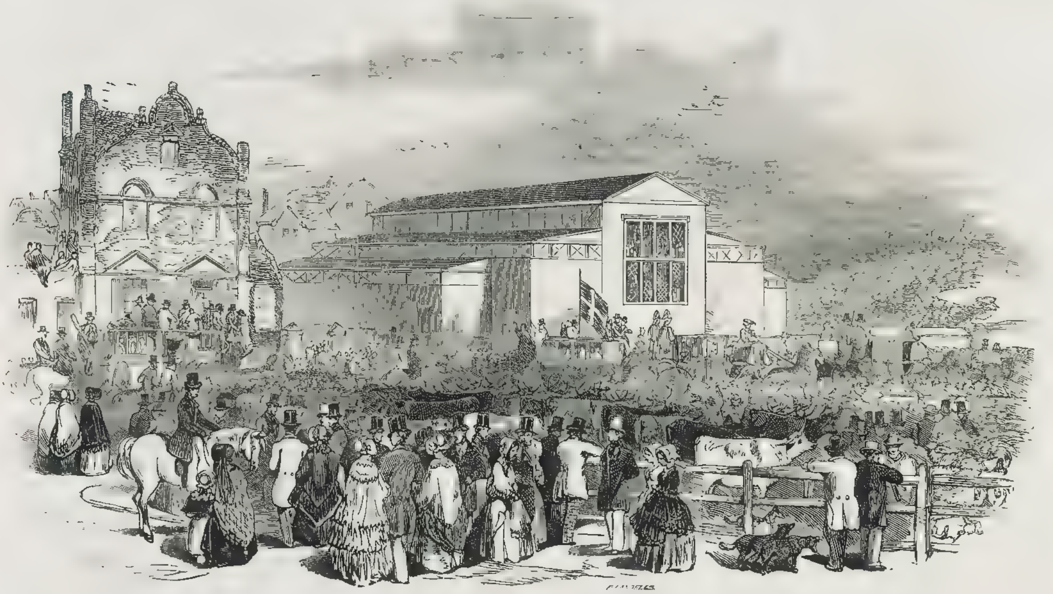
In addition to those articles which obtained prizes, we may notice a few of the other implements, which appeared to attract attention from the visitors, from the simplicity of their principle, and the efficiency of their operation. Among the most remarkable of these was a new drain-tile machine, exhibited by Mr. Ainslie, of Alperton, Middlesex, and which possessed the peculiar advantage of being adapted to work among all sorts of clay, as the small stones which so frequently abound in imperfectly prepared clay are, by this implement, crushed as they pass between the rollers. It consists of two iron rollers fixed in an iron frame, placed about three-eighths of an inch apart. The clay is drawn in by the rollers on the one side, and forced out through the moulds on the opposite side, in a continuous stream. The tiles are cut at the required lengths by two wires placed in a frame, worked by a lever, and moved by the boys that lift the tiles from it. It is capable of making from 10,000 to 15,000 per day of ten hours

Mr. White, of Tewkesbury, exhibited a set of gig harness with patent shaft tugs, &c., consisting of a metallic tube tug, covered with leather and creased, and has a neat appearance, into which the trace passes, and can be taken up or let out in a few seconds with the greatest ease; adapted for either end of the trace. The shaft tug, by the same principle, confines the shafts as soon as they are put in, by only buckling the bellyband in the common way.

Among a great variety of gates and fences exhibited by Messrs. Young, of Edinburgh, were models of four gates on the sympathetic principle, constructed for railways where a turnpike crosses on the level, upon the sympathetic principle, whereby the four gates work simultaneously by moving one. Adapted also for turnpike bars and farm purposes.

Messrs. Reay, of Newcastle, exhibited a drill plough, intended to raise drills for potatoes, turnips, and other roots. The mould boards (moveable) being detached the plough is then used as a scuffler for cleaning the drills; and the harrow, being attached to the plough, drags the weeds to the surface, from which it is freed by a hand lever as occasion requires.

GREAT MEETING OF THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY AT NEWCASTLE.



THE GREAT PAVILION AND CATTLE SHOW

Such are a few of the articles exhibited on this occasion. It ought to be added, that many of those now exhibited were shown at former exhibitions, and several of them obtained prizes at former shows. The improvements on this occasion are all of a scientific nature; there is nothing exhibited that is likely to effect a revolution in the science of agriculture.

Besides the implements, Messrs. Gibbs, seedsmen to the Society, exhibited for sale a great variety of roots, seeds, grasses, &c.

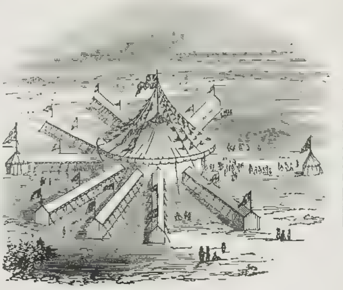
The trial of the implements, for the most part of those which had received prizes, took place, according to appointment, on the farm of Gosforth, about two miles from the exhibition yard, upon the Morpeth-road. Four fields, two of them being fallow, and the others light and heavy clover lee fields, were appointed for the purpose. The trial attracted a considerable number of noblemen and gentlemen, who, previous to the arrival of the judges, examined the various implements with much attention. Among these were the Marquis of Downshire, Lord Hawke, Hon. Mr. Clive, Sir M. W. Ridley, Sir H. Williamson, Col. Anson, M.P., S. C Ogle, Esq., M.P.; M. de Santarem, from Dijon; the Marquis de St. Opportun, with his tutor, from Normandy; the Chevalier Dillon, French Consul; Dr. Moberg, Secretary to the Swedish Agricultural Society; M. Kyamer, from Finland; M Jeppa, of the Rostock Agricultural Society, &c.

At twelve o'clock the Judges, Mr. Miles, M.P., and Mr. Shelley, arrived on the ground.

The trials commenced by no fewer than sixteen ploughs being set to work at once upon the light clover field. Through the attention and urbanity of the Judges, the company, which had by this time become exceedingly numerous, were directed to those parts of the field where they could see the operation of the ploughs to most advantage, without impeding the working of the implements. It may be mentioned here, that it was not intended to give any formal opinion as to the comparative merits of the ploughs—the sole object being to show their qualities in actual operation. The ploughs were, therefore, after some time, removed to the heavy land, where, as in the former case, their working qualities appeared to give general satisfaction to the company assembled.

When they had finished, four subsoil pulverisers were set to work, part drawn by four horses, and part by two.

The prize cultivator was also tried in this field.



PLAN OF HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY'S TENT.

In one of the fallow fields there were various experiments with drills and harrows; in the other, the horse hoes were tried, as was also a double trenching plough, made by Messrs. Ransome and May, of Ipswich. The efficiency of this implement was generally admitted; but it seemed to be considered too expensive orordinary farming.

A clod-crusher, which had been brought from Norway, was tried along with the spiked rake, which carried the silver medal. The operations of both were much admired; but it appeared to be the general opinion that the English implement was the superior of the two.

The experiments terminated soon after four o'clock, to the general satisfaction of all assembled.

Mr. Croskill, of Beverley; Mr. Stratton, of Bristol; Messrs. Barrett, Exall, and Andrews, of Reading; and Mr. Garrett, of Leistow Works, Suffolk, are amongst the largest contributors.

We give the list of Prize Implements in another page.

One of the great attractions of the week, if not of the Meeting, was the Annual Exhibition of the Horticultural Society of Northumberland and Durham, whose Show Tent was erected in the Bull Park, which was thrown open to the public. This pavilion was erected in the form of a star, in compartments of 120 feet long and 20 broad, radiating from a circle, the diameter of which is 160 feet. In the centre of the circle, the band of the 5th Dragoon Guards, from York, was stationed, and, during the afternoon, played various pieces in excellent style. In the nine compartments of the pavilion were displayed the plants and flowers of the Horticultural Society, some of which were of exquisite beauty.

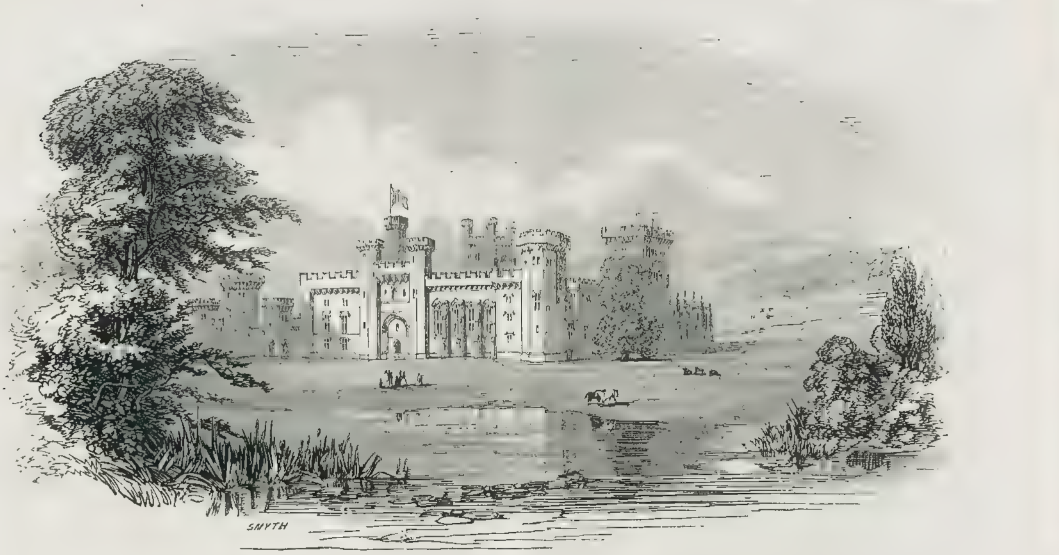
In the first compartment was the amateurs' collection of plants. 2. Ditto single plants and cut flowers. 3. Open class, collection of plants. 4. Ditto single plants and cut flowers. 5. Choice collection of plants, &c. 6. Gentlemen's gardeners' collection of plants. 7. Gentlemen's gardeners' single plants and cut flowers. 8. Cottagers' plants &c. 9. Fruit, &c.

The cottagers' compartment was in no degree inferior to those of its richer brethren; and three neatly-clad little girls seated at the entrance, and busily engaged in making lace, gave to it a very pretty and interesting effect.

We have engraved the Rotunda, or centre of the Pavilion; and the plan of the starlike Tent, separately.

In the evening, Professor Johnston, of the Durham University, delivered a Lecture on the chemical principles involved in the preparation of manures, and their action upon crops, in the Lecture Room, Nelson-street, Lord Portman, the President of the Society, in the chair. The apartment, which is capable of affording accommodation for about 1000 persons, was pretty well filled. The lecturer first described the constituent parts of plants, and illustrated his observations by chemical experiments. He then referred to the elementary substances contained in the various soils, from which the nutriment of the plant is derived, and explained the principle of the application of manure to the soil to supply those substances required for the growth of the plant, of which the soil might be found deficient. The circumstances of the agriculturist, at the present time, required him to have recourse to all available resources to improve the fertility of the soil, and enable him to compete with the foreign grower. When the soil was not naturally fertile, a high degree of fertility might be produced by the judicious application of manure, and the employment of the various means which science and art placed at his disposal. These several means—such as draining, the introduction of improved implements, collecting the waste of large towns, economy in the management of the farm-yard, and the judicious application of imported and manufactured manures—the lecturer noticed at considerable length, and was repeatedly applauded.

THE NORTHUMBERLAND AND NEWCASTLE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY'S FLOWER-SHOW.—ROTUNDA OF THE TENT.



RAVENSWORTH CASTLE, FROM AN ORIGINAL SKETCH.

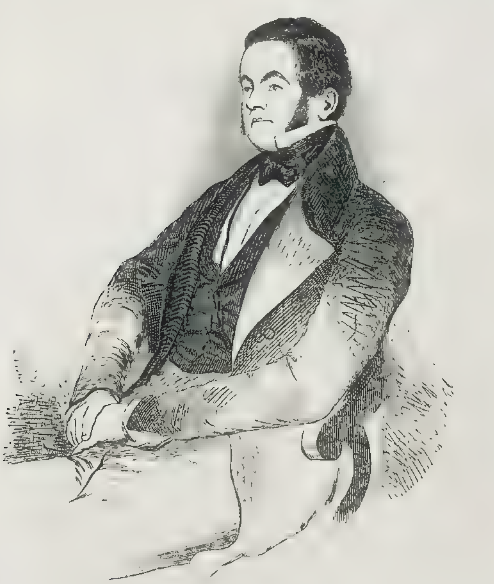
After the Lecture had been concluded, a discussion took place, in which Mr Smith, of Deanston, and several other gentlemen took part, the proceedings occupying rather more than three hours. This terminated the proceedings of the day in connexion with the Royal Society.

In the evening, the Theatres and Circus were open for the more humble pleasure-seekers; while the spacious Assembly Rooms, in Westgate-street, were occupied by the northern aristocracy, and crowded by splendidly-dressed company.

On Wednesday, the visitors to the town were numerous; and the carriages of the nobility and gentry residing in the counties of York, Durham, Cumberland, and Northumberland, gave the streets a very gay and animated appearance. The attendance at the Show Ground to view the implements was much greater than on the previous day. The Horticultural Fête in the Bull Park was again crowded; and the members of the Northumberland Horticultural Society had, with that liberality that generally characterizes the northern societies, permitted the children of the national and parochial schools, the private soldiers of the garrison and their wives and children, to view the Show free of charge.

During the day, visitors flocked into the town very fast; and it was expected that the Pavilion would not be sufficiently capacious for those who intended to dine there on Thursday.

At half-past nine o'clock in the evening, the Judges awarded the Prizes for the Cattle.



MR WILLIAMS, M.P.

We have also engraved the Great Pavilion, erected for the Dinner of the Society, on Thursday. It is built on a piece of Corporation ground called the Forth, adjoining to the Cattle Market. It is 140 feet long, by 84 feet deep, and capable of accommodating about 1200 persons at dinner; the seats being so arranged that everybody can both hear and see the chairman and principal guests, who sit on a raised platform. The roof of the building is supported by ironwork and covered with floor-cloth, being completely impervious to the weather; the whole has been raised by Mr. Manning, of Holborn.

We have likewise engraved Ravensworth Castle, in Durham, the magnificent seat of Lord Ravensworth, who entertained his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, and a distinguished party, during the Meeting. The Castle occupies the site of an ancient fortress; it is protected, to the north and west, by a fine forest of oak, which, in part, shuts out the rude Gateshead-fell; whilst Samesbery Vale affords a pleasant view to the east. Its style is varied, being a selection from the castellated architecture of different periods: the principal front was designed by the Hon. Henry Thomas Liddell, eldest son of Lord Ravensworth, and M.P. for North Durham.

It has a fine Interior: the Great Hall is a vast apartment in the Early Perpendicular style: it is 100 feet in length, 50 feet in height, and 40 feet wide: and the whole structure has all the appliances of a noble ancestral mansion, whilst the interior exhibits the picturesque architecture of a remote age.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

MR. WILLIAMS, M.P.

Mr. Williams, member for Coventry, seconds, we might almost say surpasses Mr. Hume, as objector-general to all the Estimates. During the time that Mr. Hume was without a seat in the House, some two years since, Mr. Williams quite took his department, as scrutineer of the public expenditure, and now assists the hon. member for Montrose with great zeal and assiduity. Indeed he goes beyond his predecessor in this respect. Mr. Hume has of late years relaxed somewhat in his suspicion of Treasury accounts, having in fact succeeded in compelling them to be drawn up more intelligibly. He still pounces on a stray Estimate here and there, and on Monday evening last placed in some danger the salaries of the Poor-Law Commissioners. But Mr. Williams takes a wider view of the question, and cavils at almost every vote, leading the Secretary of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer weary lives of it on each Estimate night; on Monday he had the satisfaction of perplexing both sides of the House at once; the late officials only being able to answer questions of detail as to the past year. It is but right, however, that some one should pay attention to these matters, though the task is irksome, and, at times, somewhat ungracious; it implies a suspicion of "official" remissness at the least. The following brief sketch which Mr. Williams gave of the increase in the public expenditure in the last ten years, justifies inquiry and remark:—

"He hoped it would be one of the first things to be considered by the present Government. In 1835 the amount of the public expenditure was £48,780,000; for 1846 it was £55,500,000, being an increase of £6,720,000 in the latter year over the former. In the interval there had been a saving of £600,000 a-year by the reduction of the Three-and-a-Half per Cents., so that there was an actual increase of £7,320,000. That increase was not in their naval and military services only, but in every department; even the Miscellaneous Estimates had increased from £2,000,000 to £3,400,000. The increase in the cost of collecting the revenue was perfectly astonishing."

Mr. Williams is one of those practical men of business, to whom the Reform Bill opened the door of Parliament: they have had a visible influence on the tone of the House and the debates, in which there is less declamation, less of eloquence, perhaps, than of old; but more terseness and direct applicability to the matter in hand. It must be disheartening to the sticklers for the "classics" and "ancient models," to see the men of the counting-house and factory better listened to, and more powerful over votes and Cabinets, than those who have spent their best days with Homer and the Greek tragedians. Nor are these to be despised; but the age is becoming practical, and sends up the Cobden class to the higher places; it does not see what authority Cicero can be to us, as he never dreamed of the power-loom; or Homer, who, in all his visions, never saw a railroad.

Mr. Williams is not a very frequent speaker, but takes a fair share in debate: a member more attentive to the less public duties of his post could not be found. He is a stout, square-built man, apparently not to be overdone by a little labour; and if he sets about reforming the public expenditure, he will need all his strength, for the task is Herculean.

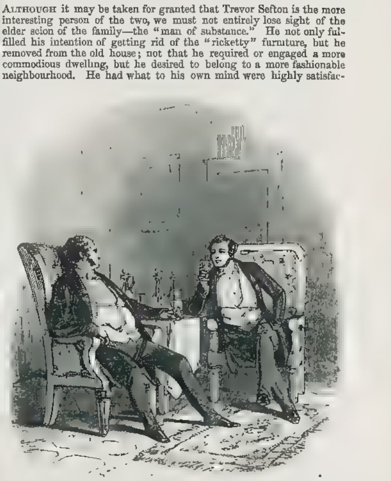
GOLD; OR, THE HALF-BROTHERS.

A STORY OF LIFE IN THE MIDDLE STATION.

BY CAMILLA TOULMIN.

CHAPTER II.

Although it may be taken for granted that Trevor Sefton is the more interesting person of the two, we must not entirely lose sight of the elder scion of the family—the "man of substance." He not only fulfilled his intention of getting rid of the "ricketty" furniture, but he removed from the old house; not that he required or engaged a more commodious dwelling, but he desired to belong to a more fashionable neighbourhood. He had what to his own mind were highly satisfactory reasons for all his proceedings; indeed, he would have felt ashamed of doing anything without a motive.



It was quite a bachelor residence that he selected, and he fitted it up in a corresponding style. Not that ladies were by any means excluded from its precincts; on the contrary, he gave very gay parties, and entertained them frequently. But, without his ever having said so, it was somehow understood that the wealthy stockbroker was "not a marrying man." Rather a 'vantage ground this from which to choose a wife! But there were many schemes floating in the busy brain of Charles Sefton, and the gaining a partner that should do honour to his name, grace an establishment, and bring him an increase of fortune was but one, and at that moment, perhaps, not the most important of them.

He had been entertaining four or five friends at dinner: a small party, but the appointments had been of the most choice and elegant description. The cook had appeared an absolute creator of appetising viands; and the wines had been pronounced unsurpassable. Nevertheless, the dainty pleasures of such a meeting must come to an end, and the guests had all departed save one. They did not know that the little réunion had been proposed with the expectation of it leading to the tête-à-tête which seemed to have come about in a perfectly accidental manner.

"You need not hurry away, my dear Mr. Joyce," exclaimed the host, stirring the fire, which, at his bidding, sent up a cheerful blaze; and, drawing a commodious easy chair towards the hearth, for his guest, "you need not go, though it happens, so unfortunately, that our friends have evening engagements. It is quite early, I assure you; and, if it were not, we are by no means pledged, in this house, to roost with the birds, or rise at cock-crow."

The crackling fire, and the outstretched arms of the lounging chair, seemed to second the host's entreaty; and the two gentlemen settled in for a cosy chat. Over a fresh bottle of wine, ordered up from a very particular bin, the conversation warmed to an absolutely confidential pitch—that is, confidential for the parties concerned in it, both being a great deal too shrewd to let out a word, even in the melting after-dinner hours, that would not bear the next morning's reflection. And, as the events I have to relate belong to the fifth decade of the nineteenth century, they did not forfeit the character of gentlemen by Cassio's offence —suffering "the enemy" to "steal away their brains." Oh, no; the wine was only used as a good friend or servant.

"Depend upon it, my dear Sir," said Mr. Sefton, "that the time is coming when the Railways of England will be so extended—will demand such an amount of capital, that they will become the vehicle of a National investment. Fortunes will be made by the clear-sighted, the long-sighted, and —— "

"The lucky," interrupted Mr. Joyce, with a smile.

"I apprehend that the clear-sighted and the long-sighted, figuratively speaking, are the lucky," returned the other.

"Yes, if they have also prudence, caution, and self-control. But, to return to the subject of my daughter's fortune. I have not the least power over it, as I explained to you: it is in the hands of trustees until she becomes of age or marries. At the same time, I have that firm reliance on her word, that, though as a minor it might not be legally binding, I would fearlessly risk all upon it. She has just passed her twentieth birthday; it would not be very difficult to raise the money for a year, if she would consent; and, though certainly my entering on these speculations depends on her assistance, it appears to me that I should be able to add considerably to her property as well as to my own."

"I have little doubt we should make her twenty thousand pounds, thirty. Surely you have influence to persuade her to your wishes?"

"I almost doubt it. My second marriage has separated Catherine from me in a painful degree; and though I well know feelings of dislike and suspicion towards Mrs. Joyce were first instilled into her mind by her mother's sisters, now that they are dead and gone, and my child once more under my roof, the evil impression still remains."

"Somehow or other, stepmothers never are liked."

"Theirs is a most thankless office. I believe that the most perfect of her sex could scarcely escape censure in the fulfilment of it. The fact is, all the relatives of the first wife arm themselves for a conflict, which is ninety-nine times out of a hundred of their own seeking: they put themselves upon the defensive; determine not to allow any virtue, any merit in the living, as if such a concession would inflict purgatory on the ghost of the departed."

Mr. Joyce spoke warmly, for his second wife was a sensible and amiable woman, and deserved both gratitude and affection, instead of the calumnies she had met.

"But is there no friend who might influence Miss Joyce?" asked Mr. Sefton.

"Upon my word," he said, after a moment's pause, "upon my word I don't know any one she cares about, except a Miss Clifford, the governess to my younger children, with whom she has recently struck up a very warm friendship. In fact, lifting her out of her sphere, in a manner I do not altogether approve; for she is a nobody, I believe. Her father, unfortunate in business, died, leaving two or three girls to support their mother; the old story, of which there is a new version every day."

"Ah, storks; there are plenty of them in the world."

"Storks! What do you mean—I don't understand?"

"Why don't you know the natural history of the storks; those dutiful and affectionate creatures, that take such care of the old and feeble birds, and are held up as patterns of filial devotion in children's story-books, to edify the rising generation? But the simile is not mine; it has been bandied about this long time, though I do not think it has travelled into print yet."

Neither of these men of the world would have given utterance to such an idea on any account, but they did not the less speculate in their own minds on the probability that the co-operation of a "stork" might, very possibly, be purchased: if not avowedly, by some dexterous stratagem.

(To be continued).

FINE ARTS.

The Town and Castle of Heidelberg. Engraved by T. A. Prior, from a Picture by J. M. W. Turner, Esq., R.A. Published by the Engraver, 3, Elizabeth-place, Putney; and Griffiths, 121, Pall Mall.

This is Heidelberg, with the broad and transparent Neckar rolling at its feet, and bounded by its fairy-land of wood and mountain. The summit of the latter is shrouded in an atmospheric veil, such as Turner paints with unearthly [illegible]. We will, however, borrow the description from Goethe.

"The city, in its site and its whole environs, has, one may say, something ideal, which we can only rightly give a conception of when we are familiar with landscape painting, and understand what reflective artists have taken from nature, and what they have infused into it. I wandered in recollection of former days over the lovely bridge, and to the right bank of the Neckar. There you see the city and the whole scene in their most fascinating features before you. The town is built along a narrow space between the mountains and the river; the upper city-gate abuts close upon the rocks, leaving [illegible] width of the highway towards Neckar-Gemünd. Above the gate stands the old dilapidated Castle, in a state of vast and solemn half-decay. The way up to it marks itself out to the eye by a row of small houses glancing through the trees and thickets, and is a pleasing object in the view, because it shows the connexion of the old Castle with the peopled and stirring city. Below this, the well-built church displays its [illegible], and around it the city with its houses and towers, over which a thickly-wooded mountain heaves itself suddenly far above the Castle-hill, showing in huge patches the red rocks out of which the Castle was built. * * * The bridge from this point presents itself in a beauty, such as perhaps no other bridge in the world possesses. You see the Neckar flowing through its arches towards the level Rhine country, and the distant azure hills beyond the Rhine. On its right bank a wooded cliff with ruddy sides connects itself with the region of vineyards, and closes the view."

The success with which the fine atmospheric effects of Turner have been multiplied by the engraver's burin, has long been recognised; and, the present performance will, in every respect, extend both painter's and engraver's fame. All that we have here to regret is the absence of colour: the exquisite skill with which the whole scene is depicted through a mist, is indescribably beautiful; and the supernatural shroud of the mountain the fleecy forms and darkening hues that hang about the thickly-wooded height—are all triumphs of the engraver's art, inappreciable in our descriptive columns. The grandeur of the Castle ruins and the minuteness with which its architectural character is prese[illegible] of another class, from that displayed in portraying the solemn mag[illegible] this most beautiful and extensive ruin of Germany. Then, too, we have the [illegible] the houses noticed by Goethe, ascending from the town to the C[illegible] is," says Simrock, "as if you saw Heidelberg in procession, marching [illegible] the sanctuary of its ruined palace. The Geisberg, with its scanty remains of the still older castle, looks down u[illegible] which the town owes its name, with its lov[illegible] finely-rounded head, termed the Konigstuhl, now ornamented with a light and lofty tower, in honour of the visit of the Emperor Francis II., called the Kaiserstuhl, and which, from Neuenheim, falls pleasantly on the eye. Rapidly flows the Neckar amongst its projecting granite rocks down to the bridge, where it gathers its waters, and thence, with fuller current, sweeps on, leaving its mountain-land behind it."

The poetic feeling displayed by painter and engraver in this picture is evident at every touch: the bright bits in the foreground, and the blendings of light and [illegible] throughout the harmonious whole, render this one of the finest works ever produced in the English school of engraving, an honour to the art of the country as well as to the single-handed enterprise of the engraver, who possesses the original—one of Turner's finest water-colour pictures. The size of the Engraving, we should add, is 21½ by 14¼ inches.

IRELAND

Arrival of the new Lord-Lieutenant in Dublin.—The Earl of Besborough has arrived in Dublin. A Privy Council has been held at Dublin Castle, after which the Earl of Besborough was sworn in Lord Lieutenant. His Lordship was escorted by a guard of honour to the vice-regal Lodge, Phœnix Park. As his Excellency left the Castle-yard several hearty cheers were raised by the crowd assembled; a signal-rocket was sent up from the top of the Castle, and answered from the lodge in the park. The joy bells then sent forth a merry peal.

The Repeal Association.—At the meeting of the Association on Monday, the Old Irelanders and the Young Irelanders [illegible] place between Mr. Meagher and Mr. O'[illegible] "apostate" in reference to a gentleman who w[illegible] under the Whigs. Mr. O'Connell said he should consider it unjust to prevent Repealers from taking office under the Whigs, but reiterated his determination to continue a peaceful agitation for Repeal. The Report of the Committee of the Repeal Association was read, explaining the objects of the body, and disclaiming all violence and physical force.

Shocking Death of an Infant.—On Sunday evening last, about ten o'clock, an infant, aged one year and four months, son of a man named Thomas Smith, came by his death, at Rye, Suffolk, in the following shocking manner. From the evidence given at the inquest, it appeared that a police-officer, on passing the house, heard some one say the house was on fire; he entered, and found a cradle in flames, and heard a child cry. After throwing the burning clothes out of the house, he discovered the child near the fire-place; its clothes were all burnt off; a candlestick, and the remains of a candle were found in the cradle, which it is supposed the child pulled from the table, and thus caused the fire. The father and mother were both at a public-house at the time, having left the child alone in the house. Medical assistance was procured, but the child was literally burnt from head to foot. The Jury returned a verdict of Accidental death, caused by the parents' negligence.

LITERATURE.

The Scenery and Poetry of the English Lakes. By Charles Mackay, L.L.D. Longman and Co.

In a very slight preface to this work, Dr. Mackay briefly describes its object—to combine the romantic history and poetry with the description of the scenery of "the Lake District." The author is too much of an utilitarian to aim at su[illegible] ng the ordinary guide-books in one respect. In his opening page, he quizzes "Mr. Wordsworth and his sonnets against steam," and is elsewhere smart upon "Anti-Steam Poetry." He starts with a day's stroll over the ancient town of Lancaster, visits and describes the mounts, lakes, forces, and torrents, of the district; gossips of its castles and monastic ruins; of his visit to Wordsworth; recollections of the lamented Southey; and ends, as he started, with antiquarian lore, in the romantic and poetic history of the border city of Carlisle. Taking Wordsworth as his text-book, Dr. Mackay discourses very pleasantly, making his book, with few exceptions, a fit companion for the educated tourist and seeker of the picturesque. With deeper reverence than that in his opening page, Dr. Mackay speaks of Wordsworth as "the presiding genius of the district," and of "a plan which he seems to have formed, of allowing no object of interest or beauty within the compass of twenty-five or thirty miles around Rydal to escape the illustration of his pen."

By this means, the interest of the district has been somewhat forestalled: nevertheless, Dr. Mackay writes with much vigour and cultivated feeling on the natural beauties of the district; though he is evidently no great respecter of antiquarian associations, or of such objects as are only recommended to notice by their extreme age. The main charm of the volume, we predict, will lie in its exquisite illustrations, some sixty in number, engraved by Thomas Gilks, from drawings by Harvey, M'Kewan, D. Cox, W. C. Smith, Fennell, Dickes, and others; and, for picturesqueness of effect, rarely equalled. The work, too, is admirably printed.

Soyer's Cookery. The Gastronomic Regenerator, a Simplified and Entirely New System of Cookery. By Mons. A. Soyer, of the Reform Club. Simpkin and Co.

The Kitchen of the Reform Club has been one of the sights of the Metropolis, to the privileged few, from the day of opening the palatial edifice in Pall Mall, and in no portion of Mr Barry's superb design has the cognomen of the Club been more effectively carried out. Here we have none of the slovenly groups which the painters of still life have so picturesquely illustrated: such wanton waste is reformed altogether; the whole place is in "Heaven's first law," and exemplifies M. Soyer's motto, "Cleanliness is the soul of the kitchen." The reader will, probably, recollect that we engraved, in our first volume, a sectional view of this kitchen; a more complete adaptation of means to the end can scarcely be imagined. The visitors who flocked to inspect the cuisine became desirous of carrying away more of its system than they could retain in their memoria, and hence the publication of the bulky volume before us, as M. Soyer [illegible] the request of several persons of distinction." And, all this has been accomplished within the last ten months, during which our chef de cuisine has furnished 25,000 dinners for the gentlemen of the Reform Club; 38 large dinner parties, comprising above 70,000 dishes, and has received 15,000 visitors to inspect the kitchen department.

The book is, from first to last, a most remarkable production, and evinces the zeal of the author in every branch of his art. It is not merely a book of receipts in cookery; but, as accessory to its perfection, the volume contains a minute description of the Reform Club Kitchen, (which has now been worked six years,) and the application of its arrangement to kitchens of every scale, from that of the patrician mansion to the humble one of the cottage. We agree with the author that such an important department deserves some little attention, "for food uncomfortably prepared is almost always unsightly, unwholesome, and consequently indigestible, not being cleanly prepared." What would the luxurious Romans have given for such order: they attended so closely to these matters, as to watch their mullet cooking in crystal; how Asinius Celer, who gave £[illegible] for one of these sea wood-cocks, would have enjoyed a walk through the basement of the Reform Club.

The work opens with M. Soyer's New Mode of Carving, by which the carver may leave the meat, game, or poultry, fit to reappear at table in an inviting state.

Next are given Directions for Larding, in which the French method is simplified for inexperienced hands. Then follow the Seasons of Articles, exemplifying them when out of, or before, their proper season. "How everything should be in Cooking," contains the canons—the requisites of the art. This preliminary section concludes with a list of the number of stewpans and kitchen utensils required in kitchens of a certain scale—from that of the Reform Club to the bachelor's and the cottage kitchen: these are two useful pages for "persons about to furnish."

The Table of Contents includes 2000 Receipts for Sauces, Soups, Fish, Hors d'œuvres (dishes to be handed round), Removes, Flancs, Entrées; for Second Course, Roasts, Savoury Dishes, Vegetables, Entremets, and Removes. The several Instructions have none of the "roundabout" of the Mrs. Glass school, or the misleading gossip of Kitchiner; but they are directly intelligible, and to the purpose.

The Appendix contains some recherché receipts, and the bill of a Lucullusian dinner, lately given at the Reform Club: it comprises, according to the epicurean taste of the gentlemen who gave it, "the most novel, luxurious, and rare edibles to be obtained at this extravagant season" (May). the most expensive dishes were the mullets, the salmon, poulardes à la Nelson, and, above all, the crawfish, which, when dressed, cost seven guineas! The carte, by the way, contains a remarkable instance of railway transit: "at seven o'clock," says M. Soyer, "the live Severn salmon was brought to me, it having just arrived direct from Gloucester, and was boiled immediately, being just ten minutes before the dinner was placed upon the table, and was eaten in its greatest possible perfection." The chef, by the way, contemplated a most elaborate addition, in a dish of two dozen of ortolans, which he intended to have incased in as many truffles, and to have braised in a stock, in which Lacryma Christi formed an item; but a change in the weather prevented the arrival of the ortolans from Paris!

Next, is described the kitchen of the Reform Club, with a ground-plan and well-executed engravings of the several ingenious contrivances prese[illegible] [illegible]ous batterie de cuisine: thus, we have the ice-drawers and dres[illegible] vegetable boxes; the suspended frame for meat, game, &c.; the meat-safe [illegible] pestle and mortar; the marble fish-slab; the charcoal stove and hot plate; the roasting range; the dinner-lift, by which the dishes are conveyed direct from the kitchen to the eating-room, the kitchen table, and steam-closet. The roasting fire-place is on a plan entirely new; the size is 7 feet wide, and 5 feet 6 in high; the bars are perpendicular and vertical, opening at one end, and supported upon castors, which allows the cleaning of it with much more ease, and affords access for repairing the boiler without pulling down any of the works around it; at the back of the stove, in front of the boiler, are thick Welsh lumps, by which hot water can be obtained twenty-four hours after the fire is put out. The great advantage of this range is that, from the smallest bird to the largest joint, even a baron of beef, can be cooked to perfection, although there is only 4½ inches depth of coals. The broiling, too, can be done in a superior style, by means of a double gridiron suspended from an extending bracket, hooked over the top bar.

We must not omit to notice the new gas stove, with its separate compartments, pipes, and cocks, so that the whole five or only one may be burnt. You obtain also, the same heat as from charcoal the moment the gas is lit: it is a fire that never requires making up; is free from carbonic acid, which is so pernicious, especially in small kitchens; it creates neither dust nor smell (except the gas should neglectfully be not properly turned off); and, by the last improvement, is also now quite free from smoke. With the aid of a new octagonal trivet, nine stewpans can be placed over, without the fear of upsetting either, some only simmering, and others boiling at the same time, which is invaluable, as by the gentle simmering, you are enabled to extract all the fat from soups or sauces, assisting in the clarification, and causing them to digest more freely. The economy of the gas stove in being lit and put out in a moment, and the absence of heat in the kitchen by its use, need not be insisted on.

Lastly, in the Reform Club Kitchen, is the bain marie, sink, hot plate, and rack for sauté pans; with the sink trap-bell, by which all stoppage of drains, and offensive effluvia are prevented.

Next are detailed the author's Kitchen at Home, and the Bachelor's Kitchen; both by aid of ground plans: and then a system of cuisine bourgeoise, or domestic cookery; in this is detailed the French pot-au-feu; "out of which earthen pot comes the favourite soup and bouilli, which has been everlastingly famed as having been the support of several generations of all classes of society in France; from the opulent to the poorest individuals, all pay tribute to its excellence and worth. No dinner in France is served without soup, and no good soup is supposed to be made without the pot-au-feu." This chapter of the work is a cookery book, of itself.

Added are the author's new Pagoda-like Entrée Dish, and several cleverly designed ornamental pieces.

As might be expected from a chef de cuisine, this work has been produced in season. Ibrahim Pacha has just left our shores with a grateful recollection of the luxuries of the Reform Club on his palate; and the public may, by means of the work before us, be initiated into the mysteries by which his Highness was thus right royally regaled in Pall Mall.

Poems. By Camilla Toulmin. Orr and Co.

The majority of these poems have already been printed in various periodical publications; but, they are certainly entitled to rescue from such shadowy and fleeting fame, by reproduction in the more substantial form of a volume. They are penned in the right vein of poetic fervour, beneath which we trace a strong current of philanthropy, ever aiming to exalt the condition of humankind. Poets are too prone to deal with social wrongs in the opposite way, and to aggravate, rather than seek to amend. There is, however, some excuse for the ire of the following stanzas from one of Miss Toulmin's recent poems, "The Cry of the Felon," suggested by Mr. Dickens's letter of "burning truth" on "Ragged Schools."

Yes! shackle my limbs, and bind me fast,
  Through the hooting crowd to press,
Away to the Judgment Hall; at last
  The Doom of my life I guess.
Think not the spasm that shoots through my frame
  Is the quiver of wounded pride;
What hath the felon to do with shame,
  Or the pangs unto shame allied!

Ye are ranged as Foes—and my heart doth swell
  With hate and a dull despair;
Though your laws compel me the Lie I tell
  With a calm and truthful air.
Oh, where is not brave if I cheated you,
  [illegible]old!
My thin blood warms at the thought anew,
  And the Lie grows strong and bold.

* * * * *

My world was a night—where Ignorance lay
  Like a pall o'er my trampled heart,
I never knew childhood's careless day
  Nor aught that could joy impart.
Tell me not Power cannot touch this Wrong,
  It hath skill to bring Me here,
It hath gold to fee the slippery tongue
  Of my foe, the pleader there.

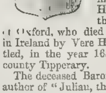
It hath strength to mould that marvel
  An army of willing men
And to rest secure in pride and state,
  Above the vulgar ken:
Surely it were a lighter task
  To scatter a little gold!
Feed us, and Teach us, are all we ask,
  And the Pauper Youth to mould.

Burns's Fireside Library.

This cheap series has just been completed in twenty-one volumes, and a very attractive home library they form for the cheffonier shelf. In its course of publication, we have commended the series, both as regards the editorial selection of the works printed, their clever illustrations; and, altogether, the elegant yet economical fashion in which they have been presented to the public. Why! the cost of the entire collection of twenty-one volumes, a "family library" in itself, does not exceed the price of one of the quartos of old. It may be worth while to recapitulate the classification and subjects. The Tales predominate; there are twelve vols.—for all ages: thus, we commence with "Household Tales and Traditions" (Little Red Riding Hood, &c.); then a volume of "Fables," new to most English readers; next, "Twelve Nights' Entertainments," from various lands: three volumes of minor "Stories and Sketches;" till we reach six volumes of Tales from the German of Fouque, Hauff, Lissli, Grossi, and Pichler—a very galaxy of fairy romancists. Then we pass to five volumes of Ballads, Songs, and Metrical Tales, from English, Scottish, French, and German history; including some of the masterpieces of Schiller's muse. Three volumes of biographettes are next on the list; these are a selection from Plutarch, and from the Worthies of England in past days, among which are a few excellently written "religious lives." Lastly, is the Rev. Mr. Poole's volume on "Churches, their Arrangement and Decoration;" from which all controverted points are omitted. On the illustrations of the Series, we can only remark that in no cheap publication within our memory has so much genius been concentrated: they are designed in true poetic and artistic spirit, and altogether belong to a higher school of art than has been hitherto developed in the embellishment of books for young readers.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

SIR AUBREY DE VERE, BART.



This respected gentleman, whose death took place on the 5th instant, was only son and heir of the late Sir Vere Hunt, Bart., of Currah, county of Limerick, by Elinor, his wife, daughter of William-Cecil, Lord Glentworth, Bishop of Limerick, and assumed, by Royal license, in 1832, the surname and arms of De Vere, to mark his descent from the marriage of Henry Hunt, Esq., of Gosfield, in Essex, High Sheriff of that county, with Jane, daughter of the Hon. Aubrey de Vere, second son of John, Earl of Oxford, who died in 1580. The family of Hunt was established in Ireland by Vere Hunt, Esq., an officer in Cromwell's army, who settled, in the year 1657, at Currah, county Limerick, and Glangoole, county Tipperary.

The deceased Baronet distinguished himself in literature, and was author of "Julian, the Apostate," and the "Duke of Mercia," dramatic poems, published in 1822 and 1823; and of "A Song of Faith," and other poetic pieces, which appeared in 1842.

At the period of his decease, Sir Aubrey was in his 58th year. He married, 12th May, 1807, Mary, eldest daughter of Stephen Edward Rice, Esq., of Mount Trenchard, county Limerick, and sister of Lord Monteagle, by whom he has left issue, five sons: Sir Vere Edmund de Vere, the present Baronet; Stephen Edward, a Barister; Aubrey-Thomas, author of "The Waldenses," and other poems; William-Cecil, a naval officer; and Francis-Horatio; and one surviving daughter, Elinor-Jane-Alicia-Lucy, married to Robert O'Brien, Esq., fourth son of Sir Edward O'Brien, Baronet, of Dromoland, and brother of Mr. Smith O'Brien, the Member for the county of Limerick.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange (Friday).—The present week's arrivals of English wheat have been on a very limited scale, yet the stands were fairly supplied with Monday's unsold samples. All descriptions met a very dull inquiry, and previous rates were with difficulty supported. The show of foreign wheat was again large, owing to which the sale for that article was excessively heavy, at almost nominal figures. Grinding barley and the best parcels of malt moved off at late rates, but all other kinds were quite neglected. Owing to the continued influx of foreign oats the oat trade was heavy, and the quotations had a downward tendency. Beans, peas, and flour as last [illegible].

Arrivals [illegible] barley, 1070; oats, 1260. Irish: wheat, ——; barley, [illegible] 70; barley 1530, oats, 15,270. Flour, 780 sacks; malt, 110 quarters.

[illegible] Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s to 56s; ditto white, 47s to 59s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, [illegible]s to 48s, ditto white, 50s to 55s, rye, —s to —s; grinding barley, [illegible]; distilling, [illegible]; malting ditto, 30s to 32s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 56s to 60s, brown ditto, [illegible] ton and Ware, 58s to 60s, Chevalier, 61s to 62s, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire [illegible]; potato ditto, 30s to 33s, Youghal and Cork, black, 21s to 25s; ditto, white, 22s to 26s, tick beans, new, 34s to 38s, ditto old, 35s to 38s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 36s to 38s, white, 40s to 42s, boilers, 42s to 44s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 47s [illegible] Suffolk, 43s to 44s, Stockton and Yorkshire, 41s to 42s, per 280 lbs. Foreign—Free [illegible], Dantzig, red, —s to —s, white, —s to —s. In Bond.—Barley, —s to —s; [illegible], peas, —s to —s, per quarter. Flour, American [illegible] to 28s; Baltic, 2[illegible] per barrel.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 8d to 8½d; of household ditto, 6d to 7½d per 4lb loaf.

The Seed Market.—[illegible] have had several parcels of new rape, canary, and caraway seeds on offer, but they [illegible]d very little attention. The best linseed cakes [illegible] support late rates [illegible] articles, exceedingly little is doing.

Linseed, English, sowing, 54s to 57s; Baltic, crushing, 42s to 44s, Mediterranean and [illegible] to 46s. Hempseed, 31s to 36s per quarter. Coriander, 11s to 15s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 10s to 14s, white ditto, 10s to 12s. Tares, 7s 9d to 8s 3d per bushel. English [illegible] to £26 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £10 5s to £10 10s [illegible] 0s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £6 5s per ton. Canary, 45s to [illegible] Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s, extra, 52s to 55s, white, 60s to 62s, extra, up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat 52s 3d; barley, 27s 7d; oats, 24s 3d; rye, 33s 11d; beans, 37s 11d; peas, [illegible].

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 52s 5d; barley, 27s 5d; oats, 23s 7d; rye, 33s 1d; beans, 36s 11d; peas, 34s 7d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 5s 0d; barley, 4s; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 4s; beans, 4s 0d; peas, 4s 0d.

Tea.—This market still continues in a very inactive state, at barely last week's quotations.

Sugar.—All kinds of sugar—raw as well as refined—are heavy, and the prices may be considered 6d to 1s per cwt. lower. The supplies on offer are not to say extensive.

Coffee.—In this article we have very few sales to report, yet the quotations rule about stationary.

[illegible] and the best Carolina has advanced 6d per cwt. In other kinds of rice a steady business is doing.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 4s; clover ditto, £4 4s to £5 15s; oat straw, £1 10s to £1 [illegible]; wheat straw, £1 [illegible] to £1 14s per load. New meadow hay £2 5s to £3 5s per load.

Oils.—All des[illegible] command very little attention, and the quotations have a [illegible].

Potatoes.—New potatoes—the supplies of which are on the increase—are in good request, at from 5s to 12s per cwt.

Tallow.—The trade continues to purchase cautiously, yet previous rates are supported. P.Y.C., on the spot, is selling at 41s 9d to [illegible], and for delivery in the last three months 41s 6d to 41s 9d per cwt. The [illegible] tallow is large [illegible] the net price is 39s 9d per cwt.

Provisions.—There has been a very steady demand for Irish butter this week, at fully the late advance in the quotations. English butter is in good request, at 94s to 98s for Dorset; 84s to 90s per cwt for Devon, and 10s to 13s per dozen for fresh. The Bacon market is firm, at previous quotations. In hams, a good business is doing, yet we can notice no alteration in value. English cheese steady, at late rates. Eggs are in demand, at 5s to 6s 3d for Scotch, and 5s [illegible] to 6s 6d per 120 for French. Scotch [illegible] butter goes off at 80s to 81s [illegible]. Dutch butter is heavy, at 90s to 96s for the best Friesland, and 88s to 92s for fine [illegible]. Other kinds of provisions rule about stationary.

Hops (Friday).—Our market, owing to the favourable accounts which are almost daily reaching us from the plantations, continues in a very inactive state, at barely stationary prices. Duty, £140,000. Sussex pockets, £5 0s to £6 6s, Kent ditto, £5 5s to £6 10s; Mid and East Kent ditto, £6 6s to £8 15s per cwt.

Coals (Friday).—Adair's, 13s; Stewart's, 15s 9d; Lambton, 15s 6d; Hartlepool, 14s, and [illegible], 15s per ton.

Smithfield (Friday.)—Although the supply of beasts on sale here, to-day, was limited, the beef trade was in a very inactive state, and previous rates were barely supported. There were on offer 90 beasts, 240 sheep and lambs, and 10 calves from abroad. With sheep we were fairly supplied, while the sale for them was firm, at full prices. Lambs—the number of which were good—moved off steadily, at late rates. In calves, only a moderate business was transacted, and the quotations were somewhat on the decline. The same may be said of pigs. Milch cows dull, at from £16 to £18 each.

Per 8lb. to sink the offal.—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 4d to 2s 6d, second quality ditto, [illegible]d to 3s 0d; prime large oxen, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 8d to 3s 10d, coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 2d to 3s 6d, second quality ditto 3s 6d to 3s [illegible], prime coarse-woolled ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d. large coarse calves. 3s 6d to 4s 0d, prime small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 6d, large hogs, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; neat small porkers 4s 8d to 4s 10d; lambs, 5s 0d to 6s 0d. Suckling calves, 18s to 29s, and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 19s each. Beasts, 570; cows, 138; sheep and lambs, 11,340; calves, 407, pigs [illegible].

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a very slow general inquiry this morning on the following terms:—

Per 8lb. by the carcase.—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d, middling ditto, 2s 6d to 2s 8d, prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; large pork, 3s 4d to 4s 0d; inferior mutton, 3s 4d to 3s 8d, middling ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; veal. 3s 4d to 4s 4d, small pork, 4s 2d to 4s 10d; lamb, 4s 10d to 5s 10d. Robt. Herbert.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The absence of all political excitement at home, and the tranquil aspect of foreign affairs, has, for the present, completely deadened speculation. The past week has scarcely witnessed a fluctuation of more than one quarter per cent in either the English or Foreign Market. At the commencement of the week, the Consol Market was tolerably firm, at 95⅞, 96 for Money, but the absence of business, and general dulness, caused a slight decline towards the close, Consols leaving off at 95⅝ ¾, for the Opening. The Exchequer Market has not fluctuated since Monday. The last price is 15 to 11 premium. Reduced closes at 96⅛ to [illegible] New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents, 97⅝ ¾; Bank Stock, 208 to [illegible], and India Bonds, 22s. premium.

The Foreign Market has scarcely varied a fraction in any of its usually most active stocks. Mexican, of which the new issue has just appeared in the market, did not suffer from the unfavourable news received on Wednesday. The new stock quotes 26⅞ to 27¼. Spanish Passives advanced a turn on Tuesday, in consequence of a good purchase, and close at 5⅝. The Three per Cents have been, and remain at 35¼. Dutch Four per Cent Certificates are 97⅞. The Two-and-a-Half per Cents 59¾. Columbian are 15½; Brazilian 85. The settlement on Thursday passed off without difficulty, money being tolerably easy to respectable borrowers.

The preparations for settling in the Share Market have occupied some portion of the week, and business has consequently been more than ordinarily limited. Nevertheless an improved feeling has been evinced, and the dividend-paying lines being firm at rather improved quotations. In the country markets there is also a steadier business doing, but in both cases this must be understood to refer to the finished lines. For Scrips no marked improvement can be quoted, nor is an advance very probable, in the present state of the Money Market. The closing prices of the Shares last dealt in is subjoined:—Aberdeen, 8¾; Birmingham and Gloucester, 131; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 4; Boston, Stamford, and Birmingham, ¾ dis; Caledonian, 13½; Derby and Crewe, 6; Direct Manchester (Remington's), ⅝; Direct Northern, 1; Eastern Counties, 24⅝, Ditto, New, 8⅞ pm; Ditto, Perpetual, ½ pm; Ditto, York Extension, 2; Goole, Doncaster, and Sheffield, &c., ⅞ dis; Grand Junction, Quarter Shares, [illegible]; Great North of England, New, 60; Great Western, 152; Do., ½ Shares, 22½; Do., Fifths, 33¾, Guildford, Fareham, and Portsmouth, 5¼; Lancaster and Carlisle New, 10; Leeds and Bradford, 65; Leicester and Bedford, ⅝ dis.; Liverpool, Manchester, and Newcastle Junction, 1½; London and Birmingham, 228; Ditto Quarters, 30¼; Ditto Fifths, 26¼; London and Blackwall, 9½; London and Brighton, 66⅞; Ditto Fifths, 42¼; London and Croydon, 23¼; London and Greenwich, 9½; London and South Western, 79, London and York, ¾; Ditto Half Shares, 1; Manchester and Leeds, Quarters, 9⅞, Ditto Extension, 2¼ pm.; Manchester and Birmingham, —; Ditto Quarter Shares (C), 10⅓; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, ½; Manchester and Southampton, 1½; Midland, New, 40¼; Newcastle and Darlin[illegible], New, 11⅝; Ditto New Brandling, 45½; Newcastle and Berwick, 26¼, Norfolk, 28; North British, Carlisle Extension, 2⅞ [illegible] and Eastern, 75; North Kent and Direct Dover, 1½; North [illegible] 3½ pm; Portsmouth Direct, 4⅝; Preston and Wyre, 31¼; [illegible] and Birmingham, 2½; Shropshire Union, 1⅝ dis.; South Midland [illegible] [illegible]stern and Dover, 45⅝; Ditto New (iss. at £32, No. 1) 22½; Do., New ([illegible] 6s. 8d, No. 2), 16; Do., New (do. £30, No. 3), 20½; Do., New (do. £15, No. [illegible]) 3¼; South Wales, 1½; West Riding Union, 2⅜ p; York and Carlisle, ⅞; York and North Midland, Scarborough Branch, 50; Ditto Selby, 78; Ditto Extension, 3 [illegible]; Ditto East and West Riding Extension, 13⅝; Boulogne and Amiens, 12¾; Demerara, 2⅜; Dutch Rhenish, 6¾; Luxembourg, 2; Namur and Liege, 3¼; Northern of France Constituted, 13½; Orleans and Bordeaux, 8½; Paris and Lyons Constituted, 5⅞; Rouen and Havre, 28.

SATURDAY.—Although some animation existed yesterday in the Consol Market, no alteration occurred in quotations, with the exception of Exchequer Bills, which were a point lower. The Foreign and Share Markets remained unaltered.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JULY 14.

WHITEHALL, JULY 11.—The Queen has been pleased to direct Letters Patent to be passed under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, appointing Henry Charles Duke of Norfolk to be Master of the Horse to her Majesty.

CROWN-OFFICE, JULY 14.

MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT.

Borough of the Tower Hamlets—Charles Richard Fox, Esq., Surveyor-General of her Majesty's Ordnance.

[illegible]

Town of [illegible]—The Right Honourable Fox Maule, Secretary at War.

Borough of Halifax—The Right Honourable Charles Wood, Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Borough of Taunton—The Right Honourable Henry Labouchere.

Borough of Greenwich—James Witley Deans Dundas, Esq., one of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

City of Gloucester—Captain the Honourable Maurice Frederick Fitzhardinge Berkeley, one of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

City of Chester—John Jervis, Esq., her Majesty's Attorney-General.

Borough of Evesham—The Right Hon. Arthur Marcus Cecil Hill, commonly called Lord Marcus Hill, Comptroller of her Majesty's Household.

Borough of Tiverton—The Right Honourable Henry John Viscount Palmerston, one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

Borough of Devonport—The Right Honourable Sir George Gray, Bart., one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

Borough of Manchester—The Right Honourable Thomas Milner Gibson, Vice-President of the Board of Trade.

Borough of Plymouth—Hugh Fortescue, Esq., commonly called Viscount Ebrington, one of the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury.

BANKRUPTS.—G. S. WHITECHURCH, Fleet-street, hosier. F. BELLONI, Shaftesbury, Dorsetshire, clock and watchmaker. W. BUNDEY, Stamford-bridge, Fulham-road, builder. A. GILFILLAN, Pomeroy-street, Old Kent-road, draper. R. SPOONER, Buckingham-street, Strand, licensed victualler. [illegible] GRAY, Mollcent-cottages, Dalston, Middlesex, lodging-house-keeper. T. W[illegible], plasterer. W. H. OSBORN, the younger, St. James's-street, Piccadilly, [illegible] [illegible]OLDEN and A. H. LAFARGUE, Gould-square, Crutched-friars, ship owners. [illegible] PEASE and W. H. THOMPSON, [illegible] Fenchurch-street, [illegible] W. GROVES, Hunt[illegible] [illegible]cer. D. MACLEAN, Upper Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, brickmaker. [illegible] and J. GARSED, jun., Leeds, flax manufacturers. T. READ, Manchester, sugar dealer. J. S. WALTERS, Bakewell, Derbyshire, surgeon. E. C. NICHOLLS, Bristol, broker.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—W. ROBERTSON, jun., Glasgow, merchant. ISABELLA [illegible]NNY, Deanfoot, Peebles. W. PROVAN and Co., Paisley, spirit merchants.

[illegible]DAY, JULY 17.

ADMIRALTY, JULY 7.

Corps of Royal Marines: Serjeant-Major G. Dibben, to be Quartermaster.

COMMISSION SIGNED BY THE QUEEN.

The Royal Cornwall and Devon Miners' Militia. Captain W. Ward to be Adjutant.

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY LORDS LIEUTENANT.

Herefordshire Militia. J. Morris to be Surgeon.

[illegible]

BANKRUPTCIES ANNULLED.—E. WEEKS, King's-road, Chelsea, hothouse builder. D. JOHNSTONE, Chorlton-upon-Medlock, Lancashire, joiner.

BANKRUPTS.—D. KEMPTON, Bermondsey-street, bed and mattress-manufacturer. R. H. EASUM, Commercial-road-east, rope-maker. J. BENSTEAD, Fleet-street, hosier. E. BOULT, Isleworth, grocer. E. HODGES, Circus-street, New-road, Marylebone, victualler. W. HUNT, High-street, Marylebone, printer. C. W. GRAHAM, King's Arms-yard, Coleman-street, merchant. W. H. BROAD, Stourport, Worcestershire, maltster. R. COOK, Gainsborough, Lincolnshire, surgeon. R. HODSON, Everton, Nottinghamshire, farmer. E. [illegible]ds, grocer. J. SEATON, Frickley-cum-Clayton, Yorkshire, farmer. R. PRIESTLEY, Manchester, grocer. J. L. BUTLER, Liverpool, coal-merchant.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—W. PUGH, Edinburgh, chemist. W. WILSON, White-[illegible] boot and shoe maker.

BIRTHS.

At No. 5, Carlton-terrace, the Countess of Caledon, of a son.—At Brighton, the lady of Jacob Montefiore, Esq., of a son.—At Grosvenor-square, the Countess of Galloway, of a daughter.—At Curzon-street, the lady of Robert Dickson, M.D., of a daughter.—At Clapham, the lady of Major William Soltau Pillans, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

At St. Pancras Church, Freeman William Coe, Esq., to Catherine Jane, the eldest daughter of St. John Chiverton Charlton, Esq.—At Kilmore, John Edward Vernon, Esq., to Miss Har[illegible] [illegible]ngest daughter of the Lord Bishop of Kilmore, Elphin, and Ardagh.—At St. [illegible] M. G. [illegible], Esq., to the Hon. Eliza Molyneux, relict of [illegible] Mary's, Marylebone, James Grace, Esq., to [illegible]ter of the late Alexander Brodie, D.D.

DEATHS.

At [illegible]ower Clapton, Mary, widow of the Rev. T. Clements.—[illegible] Strand, John Paternoster, Esq., aged 8[illegible].—On the 8th instant, the Rev. Isaac Bridgman, M.A., minister of St. John's Chapel, Walworth.—At Reading, Sarah, widow of the late Rev. Thomas Salmon.—At Broadstairs, Captain Martin Cole, Royal Navy.—At Dunstable, in the 75th year of his age, William Frederick Brown, Esq., late High Sheriff of the county of Bedford.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—M. PERROT most respect[illegible] for the Last Time this Season, Bellini's celebrated Opera, I PURITANI. Principal Characters: Elvira, Mdme. Grisi; Giorgio, Sig. Lablache; Arturo, Sig. Mario; and Riccardo, Sig. Fornasari.

To Conclude with an entirely new and original Ballet Divertissement, in three tableaux, by M. Perrot, the music by Sig. Pugni, entitled LES TRIBULATIONS D'UN MAITRE DE BALLET. The Scenery by Mr. Charles Marshall. The principal parts by Mdlle. Taglioni, Mdlle. Cerito, Mdlle. Louise Taglioni, Mdme. Petit Stephan, and Mdlle. L[illegible] Grahn, Mdlles. Honore, James, Demelisse, Cassan, Julien, and Lamoreux; M. St. Leon, M. Gosselin, M. Venafra, M. Gouriet, M. Bertrand, M. Di Mattia, and M. Perrot.

[illegible] expressly for this occasion by M. Perrot, to be entitled LE PAS DES DEESES, by Mdlle. Taglioni, Mdlle. Lucile Grahn, Mdlle. Louise Taglioni, and Mdlle. Cerito; M. St. Leon and M. Perrot.

Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven o'Clock; the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven.

THEATRE ROYAL COVENT GARDEN.—M. JULLIEN'S GRAND BAL MASQUE, MONDAY NEXT, JULY 20.—M. Jullien has the honour to announce that his GRAND BAL MASQUE, the only one this season, will take place on Monday Next, July 20. Every preparation is being made to render this Entertainment in every respect equal, if not superior, to M. Jullien's former Bals. The decorations, both illuminative and [illegible] Private Boxes from £3 3s. upwards. Persons taking Private Boxes will have the [illegible] of passing to and from the Ball-room without extra charge.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—Under the especial Patronage of her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince [illegible], the Prince of Wales, and Princess Royal. Overflowing Houses!—Unexampled Success of the present Brilliant Entertainments!—Monday next, and during the week, the Grand [illegible] the whole Stud and Company. Novel and Unique SCENES of the ARENA, [illegible] Inimitable Clowns, Wallett and [illegible] Drama. For particulars see bills of the day. Box-Office open from 11 to 5. Commence each evening at 7. Lessons in the Art of Riding daily. Stage-Director, Mr. T. Thompson.

COLOSSEUM.—LONDON BY NIGHT.—NOTICE.—The Nobility and Gentry are most respectfully informed, the Colosseum will remain Open [illegible] Panorama of London by Night, will take place every half hour. Grand Orchestral Organ, from Three to Five, and Eight till Half-past Ten. Holiday Prices continued.

DAY EXHIBITION. [illegible] —Classic Ruins—Mont Blanc and Mountain Torrent, &c., &c.

EVENING EXHIBITION. London by Night—Museum of Sculpture—Conservatories, and Flower Show, brilliantly illuminated—Swiss Cottage, Mont Blanc, and Mountain Torrent, represented by Moonlight—Open from Ten till Half-past Five, and Half-past Seven till Eleven. The whole projected and designed by Mr. W. BRADWELL.

VAUXHALL OPEN EVERY NIGHT, EXCEPT SATURDAY.—An entire change of the Scenes in the Circle.—Extraordinary and Astonishing [illegible] Ducrow, and Francois Tourniaire.—Grand Concert. Mr. A. Lee, Conductor. Singing by the [illegible] John Roe. Diavolo's Descent on a Fiery Dragon.—The Gorgeous Chinese Procession.—Firing of the Monster Dragon Tower. Magnificent Illuminations and Astounding Fireworks.

On WEDNESDAY NEXT, the 22nd inst., A GRAND IRISH FETE, when the Concert will [illegible]

On WEDNESDAY, the 29th, under Distinguished Patronage, A SCOTTISH FETE, on [illegible] many gentlemen connected with the Highland Society have expressed their [illegible] in the Costume of the various Clans. The CONCERT will [illegible] of which will be duly announced.—Doors open each evening at 8.—Admission 2s.

THEATRE ROYAL DRURY LANE.—The Celebrated Brussels Opera Company, under the immediate patronage of the King of the Belgians, has commenced a series of Performances with Meyerbeer's Grand Opera of "The Huguenots," which had been received with the greatest enthusiasm by crowded and fashionable audiences. Nights of Performing this week—Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. On Tuesday will be produced Meyerbeer's chef d'œuvre, "Robert le Diable," in which the eminent artistes, Madame Laborde and Madame Julien, M. M. Laborde, Zelger, and Boulo, will appear. Doors open at Seven. Opera commences at Half-past Seven.

WILL CLOSE on SATURDAY NEXT, the 25th inst., the TWELFTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION of the NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS. Now open at their Gallery, 53, Pall Mall, near St. James's Palace.
JAS. FAHEY, Secretary.

CREMORNE GARDENS, CHELSEA.—THE NASSAU BALLOON.—Mr. CHARLES GREEN has the honour to announce an ASCENT with ten or a dozen friends, in the above named stupendous and wonderful aerial machine, on MONDAY NEXT JULY 20, 1844. In consequence of the immense success of the Public Breakfast and Morning Concert, entitled Ranelagh Revived, or 100 Years Ago, that magnificent entertainment will be repeated on WEDNESDAY, JULY 22nd, 1846. The Magnificent Grounds, Park, Maze, Shrubberies—the Banqueting Hall, its superb and lofty Galleries—the newly-erected Lavender Bowers, and the Million-and-one natural attractions of this truly Noble Domain, are thrown open to the Public, for Promenade and Inspection, every Sunday, at Half-past Four o'clock. No charge is made for admission, but every visitor is expected to take a Refreshment Card to the amount of Sixpence.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A new and Interesting Lecture, by Dr. RYAN, on the PHENOMENA and EFFECTS of HEAT and COLD, at Half-past Three Daily; and on the Evenings of Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at Nine o'Clock. Professor BACHHOFFNER'S LECTURES on NATURAL PHILOSOPHY, with brilliant experiments, Daily. MACINTOSH'S REVOLVING ENGINE, COLEMAN'S PATENT LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE for ascending and descending Inclined Planes, FAR[illegible] ARCHIMEDEAN RAILWAY, the ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, all in action. [illegible] ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY VALVE. The OXY-HYDROGEN MICROSCOPE, exhibiting a fine Collection of Living Objects. A beautiful Picture of the CHAPEL in the CONVENT of St. CATHERINE, near Jerusalem, by Mr. Charles Smith, is one of the series of DISSOLVING VIEWS just introduced. Admission, 1s; Schools Half-price.

JUST OUT, PRICE EIGHTEEN-PENCE,

THE COMING HOME.

A COMIC PANORAMA, DRAWN BY LEECH.

[illegible] ACKERMANN [illegible] Strand; RENSHAW and KIRKMAN, 12, Budge-row; EWIN[illegible], Amen Corner; WESTLEY, 163, Strand; DORLING, Epsom; and all Booksellers.

[illegible]

THE JEWISH MANUAL; or, Practical Information in Jewish and Modern Cookery. With a Collection of Valuable Recipes and Hints relating to the Toilette. Edited by A LADY.
T. and W. BOONE, Publishers, 29, New Bond-street, London; and to be had of all Booksellers.

MARTIN, THE FOUNDLING; or, The Adventures of a Valet de Chambre, EUGENE SUE'S new Novel, appears regularly in the FAMILY HERALD, the most popular periodical of the day—a successful attempt to blend wisdom with [illegible] News-Agents sell the FAMILY HERALD.

DR. MADDOCK on DISEASES of the LUNGS and HEART. "We seriously recommend all persons who are predisposed to, or are suffering under, these complaints, to consult this able work. The treatment pointed out is at once novel, simple, and natural, and is undoubtedly highly efficacious."—Literary Journal.—Third Edition, price 5s. 6d.—SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row.

HOW TO LIVE. Price 1s.; by post, 1s. 6d.,

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, AND AVOID; addressed to the Nervous and Dyspeptic.

By R. J. CULVERWELL, M.D., M.R.C.S., &c.

Sherwood, 23, Paternoster-row; Carvalho, 147, Fleet-street; Hannay, 63, Oxford-street; Mann, 39, Cornhill; and the Author, 21, Arundel-street, Strand.

THE PIANO; or, Cabinet of Vocal and Instrumental Music, No. 8, contains:—"Trip hither, my Love," a favourite ballad sung by Mr. Allen, music by Robert Guylott. The "Seguedilla," the celebrated Spanish dance, as danced at the Opera, arranged by D. Corri. The "Gondolier," a favourite song, sung by Mr. W. Harrison, at Drury Lane Theatre, with an accompaniment by Marliani. "British Triumphs in India," composed by T. B. Phipps, a splendid descriptive piece, emblazoning the military exploits of our gallant countrymen during the war in the Punjaub, &c. Sixteen Pages of full-sized Music for 1s.
Published by DUNCOMBE, 10, Middle-row, Holborn.

Published every Saturday. Price Threepence.

CONTINENTAL TRAVEL: FRANCE. To be followed by Northern Italy—Switzerland—Rhenish Germany—Belgium, and also Southern Italy—Central Germany, forming Nos. 16, 17, and 18, of THE TOPIC, a new weekly periodical, price threepence each number. The articles by writers of eminence.

 Information of the climate and circumstances of every place worthy of note, will be found in these brief but comprehensive papers; which, together, form a very [illegible] to persons contemplating foreign travel, or desirous of information relative to places now [illegible] visited. C. MITCHELL, Red Lion-court, Fleet-street; and at all the railway [illegible]

HERR PISCHEK'S SONGS.—The Music, with the German Words and English Translations, by GEORGE SOANE, A.B., elegantly printed in Music Folio, for the Family Pianoforte, only Threepence each, in THE MUSICAL TREASURY. The Standard Bearer, and My Heart's on the Rhine, now ready. DAVIDSON, Water-[illegible], leading from Blackfriars-bridge towards the Temple; of whom may be had, gratis, Lists of above 300 Pianoforte Pieces, vocal and instrumental. Recently issued: Lucy Neal, and the Buffalo Gals, 3d. each. The May Queen, the two parts, 3d.; Stradella Quadrille, Crown Jewels Quadrille, Ethiopian Quadrille, or the Melodies of the Serenaders, and the celebrated Lancers Quadrille, 3d. each; the 8 best Vocal Pieces from Stradella, in 4 threepenny sheets; the Overture, 6d.; Fantasia on Di Tanti Palpiti, 3d.; Maid Marian's Song, Queen Catherine's Death-bed, and Robin Hood is Lying Dead, three original songs, by E. J. Loder, 3d. each.

CHEAP EDITION. VOL. IV.

D'AUBIGNE'S REFORMATION, price 5s., is Now Ready, in post 8vo. cloth. Also, OLIVER and BOYD'S STANDARD EDITION of the Four Vols., being the only English Edition [illegible] Autograph, post 8vo., cloth. Price of the whole, 14s. Extensive Additions, not hitherto published, have been made by Dr. D'Aubigne to this Edition; and, in a new Preface, written expressly for it, he says—"I have revised this translation line by line, and word by word, and I have restored the sense wherever I did not find it clearly rendered. It is the only one which I have corrected. I declare, in consequence, that I acknowledge this translation as the only faithful expression of my thoughts in the English language; and I recommend it as such to all my readers."—OLIVER and BOYD, Edinburgh; SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co., London.

Just Published, price 1s., the Fourth Edition (Translated from the Nineteenth French Edition).

CONSTIPATION DESTROYED; or, Exposition of Natural, Simple, Agreeable, and Infallible Means, not only of Overcoming, but also of Completely Destroying Habitual Constipation, without using either purgatives or any artificial means whatever (discovery recently made in France by M. Warton) followed by numerous certificates from eminent physicians and other persons of distinction. Free by post, 1s. 6d. Sold by JAMES YOUENS and Co., Tea Dealers, 45, Ludgate-hill, London, and by all Booksellers in the United Kingdom.

COINS of ANCIENT EGYPT, GREECE, and ROME.—PETER WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins and Medals, 46, Strand, London, has just published a short catalogue of his coins and medals, which can be had by post, by sending two stamps. Assignats of the French Revolution, 1s.; Ancient Roman Brass Coins, with good portraits of the Emperors, 1s. each. Pennies of the Conqueror, 2s. and 2s. 6d. each. Coins sent by post. Coins, &c., Bought, Sold, and Exchanged; Valued, Catalogued, &c.

TONIC ALE.—This splendid new description of Bottled Beer is now in high perfection. It is strongly recommended by the Faculty as possessing peculiar stomachic qualities, promoting appetite, &c. Sold in quart and pint bottles, secured by Betts's Patent Capsule. JOSEPH STOCKTON, Sole Agent, 51, Lambs Conduit-street.

HOBY'S IMPERIAL BLACKING [illegible]: its lasting polish equals patent leather; it softens the upper leather, prevents it breaking, and alleviates the pain of corns and tender feet. In bottles, 4s. St. James's-street, London, and BENETFINK, 81, Cheapside. Edinburgh: Duncan, 59, Princes-street. Dublin: Hodges and Son, Westmoreland-street.—Also, HOBY'S EMOLIENT WATERPROOF WAX, for shooting and fishing boots, which, after thirty years' [illegible], has proved to be the only composition wh[illegible] boots and shoes [illegible]. In bottles, 5s.

LADIES before leaving Town would be thoroughly repaid by [illegible] reasonable and pretty Summer Stock of French Canzous, Guimpes, Habit Shirts, Sleeves, Collars, Pocket Handkerchiefs, Lace Visites, &c.; also, Dress, Bonnet, and Night Caps, all shapes, makes, and prices. Amongst a number of other articles that may be menti[illegible] worthy of notice, is a quantity of Imitation Old Point Laces, almost equal to the real, with this difference—what would cost 10s. a yard, real, can be obtained for 10d. About 500 Infants' Needle-Worked Long Robes and Short Frocks at 2s. each—yes, 2s!!!—MARTIN NUNN, 253, R[illegible]

THE SUMMER RIDE or PROMENADE.—The peculiar virtues of C. and A. OLDRIDGE'S BALM of COLUMBIA completely removes the difficulty experienced by ladies in preserving their ringlets after exercise. Its use so invigorates [illegible] and 11s. per bottle. No other prices. Oldridge's Balm, 1, Wellington-street, the second house from the Strand.

BUTLER'S TASTELESS SEIDLITZ POWDER, in one Bottle.—This useful aperient preparation, besides forming an equally efficient, and far more agreeable draught than that produced with the common Seidlitz Powders, is made in much less time, and with infinitely less trouble. To allay fever or thirst, a teaspoonful, in [illegible] injured by humidity during the longest sea voyage or land journey. Sold at 2s. 6d. the bottle [illegible] in a case, and accompanied by a measure and spoon), by the Preparers, BUTLER and HARDING, Chemists, 4, Cheapside, corner of St. Paul's, London; and may be obtained of J. SANGER, 150, Oxford-street, DAVENPORT and STEDMAN, 20, Waterloo-place, Edinburgh; and also of their Agents in every part of the kingdom.— Be careful to order "Butler's" Tasteless Seidlitz Powder, and to observe the address.

LONDON and BRIGHTON RAILWAY.—GOODWOOD [illegible] Course, will be despatched as follows from London Bridge, calling at Reigate about forty minutes afterwards.

FARE[illegible]

	First.	Second.	Third.
At 6 30 A.M., with First, Second, and Third Class Carriages, arriving at Drayton at 10 A.M. At 7 A.M., with do. do. do., 10 30 A.M.	12s. 6d.	8s. 0d.	6s. 0d.
At 8 A.M., Express, with First and Second Class Carriages, arriving at Drayton at 10 45 A.M. At 8, 30 A.M., an Express with First and Second Class Carriages, taking passengers at Reigate from the South-Eastern Railway, and arriving at Drayton at 11 15 A.M.	15s. 0d.	12s. 6d.
FROM DRAYTON [illegible]
At 5 0 P.M., with First, Second, and Third Class Carriages [illegible]	12s. 6d.	8s. 0d.	6s. 0d.
At 7 0 P.M., Express, with First and Second Class Carriages, arriving at London at 10 0 P.M.	15s. 0d.	12s. 6d.

Day Tickets will not be issued by the Extra Trains.

[illegible] The ordinary 7 0 P.M. Up Train from Chichester will call at Drayton and all Stations, and proceed through to London.

An Extra Train will start from the Hastings and St. Leonard's Station at 9.0 A.M.

Extra Trains will also start from Brighton as late as 10 30 A.M.

[illegible]

London Terminus, 15th July, 1846. T. J. BUCKTON, Secretary.

AIR-GUNS and AIR CANES.—An entirely New and further Improved Assortment of these portable and silently-destructive weapons now on sale, adapted by REILLY, Jun., for killing Rabbits, Rooks, Sea-fowl, &c., with ball, small bird with shot, fish with harpoons, &c. &c., from 55s. each.—REILLY, Gun-Maker, 316, Holborn.

MINERALOGY, CONCHOLOGY, and GEOLOGY.—Mr. TENNANT, Mineralogist to her Majesty, 149, Strand, London, has lately received an extensive Assortment of SHELLS, MINERALS, and FOSSILS. He arranges Elementary Collections, which will greatly facilitate the study of these interesting branches of science, and also gives Private Instruction in Geological Mineralogy.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of pric[illegible] of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

SILVER PLATE for the DINNER and TEA TABLE.—A Pamphlet is published containing Drawings and Lists of Prices of Silver Spoons and Forks, Tea and Coffee Services, and all the articles of silver required in family use. It may be had gratis, or will be sent postage free to any part of Great Britain, Ireland, or the Colonies. A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London (opposite the Bank).

ROMAN CAMEOS.—Recently Received, a few ROMAN CAMEOS, by some of the best Italian artists, the subjects consisting of the Graces—Hebe—Rebecca at the Well—and various Classical and Historical Designs. They are mounted in Gold as Brooches. The price is from 20s. to 6 guineas each, and upwards.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the statue of the Duke of Wellin[illegible]

EDUCATION.—The Sons of the Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and [illegible]tlemen, are prepared by Mr. E. POCOCKE for the Universities, East [illegible], and Professional Life in general. Ready access is granted to a well-[illegible] the Oriental Students have the additional advantage of numerous MSS. [illegible]sic and Arabic. A prosp[illegible] tion to the Principal, Mr. E. POCOCKE, Arno's Court, Brisl[illegible]

BED FEATHERS.

Mixed	1s. 0d. per lb.	Best Foreign Grey Goose	2s. [illegible]
Grey Goose	1s. 4d.	Best Irish White ditto	2s. 6d.
Foreign	1s. 8d.	Best Dantzic ditto	3s. 0d.

HEAL and SON, 196, opposite the Chapel, Tottenham-court-road.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, Fire-proof Safes, and Cash Boxes.—Chubb's New Patent Detector Locks [illegible], and also give immediate notice of any attempt to open them. Chubb's Patent Fire-proof Safes, Book-cases, Chests, &c. [illegible] Cash Boxes, and Deed Boxes of all sizes, fitted with the Detector Locks.—C. CHUBB and SON, 57, St. Paul's Churchyard.

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS and GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, kitchen ranges, fenders, iron bedsteads, fire-irons, general furnishing ironmongery, tinned copper, iron and best tin cooking vessels, best Sheffield plate, and table cutlery, japanned trays, tea urns, ornamental iron and wire works, for verandahs, lawns, &c., and flower-stands. Every article is warranted, and marked at the lowest prices, in plain figures, for cash.—Adjoining the Royal Bazaar, 58, Baker-st[illegible]

CHILDREN'S AND INVALIDS' CARRIAGES. Invalids' Wheel Chairs, from £3 to £35, with hoods, second-hand as well as new; Spinal and Self-Acting Chairs, Children's Chaises, vis-à-vis Waggons, Phaetons, Barouch[illegible] 10s. to 20 guineas. Immense and varied collection on sale or hire, at INGRAM'S Manufactory, 29, City-road, Finsbury-square.—N.B. Illustrated Catalogues.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to Pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted. Millinery Rooms.

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very Low Prices, for C[illegible], by JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linen-Drapers to the Queen, at their Family Linen Wareroom, 26, Regent-street, two doors below Piccadilly Circus. Parcels above £5 sent throughout England carriage paid.

John Capper and Son's General Linen-Drapery Business, established for nearly Seventy Years, is continued in Gracechurch-street, without change.

A SCOTCH TWEED GOTHA JACKET FOR 30s. This Jacket, which is well suited to be worn by Gentlemen when shooting, angling, in the library, or country ramble, is made to measure, in a first-rate style of fit and workmanship, for 30s.; best ditto, dit[illegible] [illegible]S, fashionable tailor and trowsers maker, 313, High [illegible]

TROWSERS! TROWSERS!! TROWSERS!!!—A good fit in this garment can seldom be obtained.—R. GRAVES, Fashionable Trowsers' Maker and Tailor, 313, High Holborn, after many years' experience and study, is enabled to assert without fear of contradiction, that he can fit gentlemen with this garment better than [illegible] other person in London. The characteristic of his fitting is a gentlemanly style, with perfect ease for stooping, sitting, walking, or riding. A well-assorted stock of the newest designs to select from.—R. GRAVES, 313, High Holborn.

REGISTERED PALETOT OF LLAMA CLOTH.—This Garment, mostly used as an Overcoat, is, during the hot weather, both in this country and abroad, worn without another coat; the same one will happily suit both purposes. To its gentlemanly appearance and moderate price, joined to the peculiar elasticity and lightness of the material, may be ascribed the cause of its being universally a public favourite. It can be bought only of the Patentees in London, and care should be taken to observe that whether supplied by Agents in the country or abroad, each are stamped on the inside, H., J., and D. NICOLL, 114, Regent-street, and 22, Cornhill.

BERDOE'S WATERPROOF OVER COATS, for the SUMMER; also SHOOTING JACKETS.—The reputation of these well known garments has been so long established that they now need no other recommendation. For quality, workmanship, style, a quiet, gentlemanly and respectable appearance, lightness, convenien[illegible] moderate cost, durability, and especially for being really waterproof (and not so in name on[illegible]), they are unquestionably still unrivalled, notwithstanding the numerous competitors their well-known extensive sale has produced [illegible] men and gentlemen of the highest rank and title they have long been patronized. Made only by W. BERDOE, tailor and over coat maker, 69, Cornhill (north side), and shortly at 96, New Bond-street.

FOR THE HAIR.—DAWSON'S AUXILIAR.—This long-established public favourite is the only sure means of restoring [illegible] and of giving a graceful beauty to unsightly hair. 3s. 6d., 7s., 10s. 6d., [illegible] saving in the larger bottles. Also,

DAWSON'S DEPILATORY removes unsightly hairs from any part of the skin, without the least unpleasantness or alteration of the skin. 3s. 6d. and 6s. Sold by most respectable [illegible]mists and perfumers. Beware of base imitations under other names.

GOWLAND'S LOTION.—This elegant preparation, an original formula of the late Dr. Gowland, for all impurities of the Skin, continues to maintain a repute commensurate with its specific properties of speedily eradicating every descripti[illegible] Eruptive Malady, Discoloration, &c., and in improving and enhancing the beauty of the complexion by a congenial action upon the skin, as perfectly innocent as it is agree[illegible] [illegible]cacious.—"ROBERT SHAW, LONDON" [illegible] without which none is [illegible] and Chemists.

GIBBINS' CREAM of ROSES and ROSEMARY.—This esteemed and elegant Article is most respectfully offered to the Public, by GIBBINS, Court Hairdresser and Perfumer (from Paris), 7, King-street, St. James's-square, as the most delicate and effectual Preservative of the Hair. Being a pomade, it will be successfully applied in promoting its growth and luxuriance.

GIBBINS' EXTRACT OF ROSES AND ROSEMARY is a liquid made from the above-named plants, and when applied in washing the Hair, renders it soft and glossy, or, after illness, its astringent properties prevent the Hair from falling off.
No. 7, King-street, St. James's-square, London.

THE HAIR.—The celebrated QUIN-JULEP and POMADE, for strengthening and restoring the Hair, and preventing its prematurely turning grey, [illegible] plied to the part affected gives instantaneous relief. Prepared only by J. S. ERWIM, Son of Mrs. Parker, 3, Ranelagh-street, Pimlico, where it may be obtained, and of the following authorised Agents: Butler and Harding, 4, Cheapside; Sanger, 150, Oxford-st[illegible] [illegible]ston, 88, Cornhill; T. Prout, 229, Strand; F. Dunn, 235, Oxford-street, near Hyde-par[illegible] Rouse, 1, Wigmore-street, Cavendish-square; [illegible], 174, Regent-street; J. Dex[illegible] Queen's-row, Pimlico, Collins, 54, Piccadilly; White, [illegible] street; Bollingham Brothers, 390, Strand.

METCALFE'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—Useful Inquiry.—For proof of the extreme durability, power of cleaning, and true economy, ask all who have used Metcalfe's Brushes. The Tooth brush performs the highly-impor[illegible] divisions, and cleaning in the most extraordinary manner; hairs never come loose. 1s. Peculiarly penetrating Hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russia bristles, which will not soften like common hair. Improved Clothes-brush, that cleans harmlessly in one-third the time. The new Velvet [illegible] Establishment, 130 B, Oxford-street, one door from H[illegible]

CAUTION.—Beware of the word "from" Metcalfe's [illegible]

FOR FILLING DECAYED TEETH.—DALE'S ENAMEL. [illegible] perfectly excluding the access of air, it arrests all further possible progress of decay. This preparation, before use, is in a soft state, and continues so for a short time, and it may, therefore, be used by any person with perfect facility, and is warranted to succeed in every case. [illegible] Manchester. Sold in packets, at 2s. 6d. each, by most respectable Druggists and Medicine Vendors in the Kingdom.—Directions for use are enclosed with each packet.—Wholesale agents, Messrs. MOTTERSHEAD and ROBERTS, Manchester; and BARCLAY and SONS, 95, Farringdon-street, London.

THE NEWLY-OPENED HOUSES.

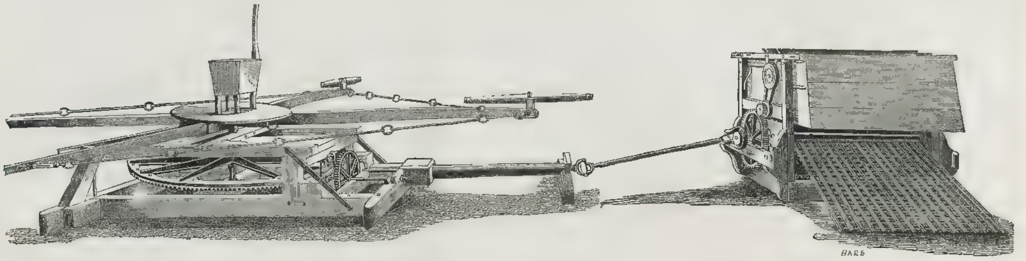
(A BRIEF OUTLINE.)

[illegible] extensive New Establishment of E. MOSES and SON is now open for the transaction of the various features of its business; and the Proprietors are anxious to state the principles upon which it is conducted, and the improvements under which it has opened. Bespoke customers have now devoted to them a spacious range of Show Rooms, entered by a Private Waiting Hall, 81, Aldgate. There are also apartments for cutting and measuring, and a select Waistcoat Room. Ladies are informed that a private hab[illegible] E. MOSES and SON have made other additions [illegible] [illegible] consequently be despatched with much greater facility. This department [illegible] Aldgate. The Hat Depot is at 83, Aldgate, and is furnished with every [illegible] tinguished for the worth and variety of its articles, from w[illegible] chases are made. The Outfitting and General Clothing Department [illegible] has equal recommendations, and is an important feature in the New Houses of E. MOSES and SON. Let it be remembered that "Economy! Economy!! Economy!!" is the maxim at the new Establishment, as it was at the old, and be it also remembered, that the Proprietors still adhere to the marking of the articles in plain-figured prices, from which no abatement can be made. Let it be borne in mind, also, that any articles may be exchanged, or that the price of the article may be returned, without the least hesitation. For particulars [illegible] Present, and Future," which may be had gratis and post-free, of the Prop[illegible]

E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Woollen-drapers, Clothiers, Hatters, H[illegible] General Warehousemen, regret to be obliged to guard the pub[illegible] having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood "of being connected w[illegible] no connection with any other house in or out of London; and those who desire genuine cheap clothing, should, to prevent disappointment, call at or send to the Minories or Aldgate, opposite the Church, City, Lond[illegible]

NOTICE.—The entrance to the Bespoke Department is at 84, Al[illegible] is resumed till twelve o clock.

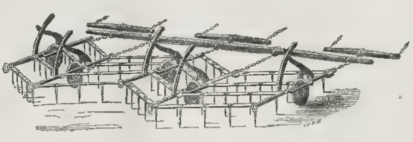
GREAT MEETING OF THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF ENGLAND.—PRIZE IMPLEMENTS.



GARRETT'S PATENT FOUR-HORSE BOLTING THRASHING MACHINE.—Prize £5.

The following is a list of the Implements for which prizes were awarded by the Judges appointed by the Society:—

	£
Best plough adapted to heavy land (Mr. John Howard)	10
Best plough adapted to light land (Mr. J Howard)	10
Best drill for general purposes, and also for distributing compost in a moist or dry state (Mr Hornsby)	15
Best turnip drill on the flat, and also for distributing compost in a moist or dry state (Mr Hunter)	10
Best turnip drill on the ridge, and also for distributing compost in a moist or dry state (Mr. Teasdale)	10
Best Scarifier (Mr. Crosskill)	10
Best chaff-cutter (Mr. Cornes)	10
Best machine for making draining-tiles or pipes (Mr. Scragg)	20
Best harrow (Mr. Coleman)	5
Best drill presser, depositing manure and seed (Mr. Hornsby)	10
Best churn (Mr Robinson)	5
Best weighing machine for farm produce and live cattle (Mr. James)	10
Best steaming apparatus for roots (Mr Robinson)	5
Best skim or paring plough (not sufficient merit)	5
Best subsoil pulverizer (Mr. Read)	10
Best horse seed dibbler (not sufficient merit)	15
Best hand seed dibbler (Mr Crawford)	5
Best linseed crusher (Mr. Crosskill)	5
Best one-horse cart (Mr. Crosskill)	5
Best thrashing machine (Mr. Garrett)	25
Best set of draining tools and instruments (not sufficient merit)	10
Best steam power, applicable to thrashing and other agricultural purposes (not sufficient merit)	25
Best horse power, applicable to thrashing and other agricultural purposes (not sufficient merit)	25



COLEMAN'S PATENT EXPANDING HARROW.—PRIZE £5.

MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES.

Hayband maker (Mr. Pierce)	3
Corn crusher (Mr. Zachariah Parkes)
Winnowing machine (Mr. Hornsby)	3
Rowan's patent axle (Mr. Robinson)	5
Hay-rake (Mr Grant)	3
Haymaking machine (Messrs. H. Smith)
Norwegian harrow (Mr. Stratton)
Tile machine (Mr Garrett)
Grubber (Messrs. Smith)	Silver medal
Spike roller (Messrs Barrett and Ashton)	Silver medal
Wheels and axle (Mr. Crosskill)	Silver medal
Kent drill (Mr Garrett)	Silver medal
Root washer (Mr. Richmond)	Silver medal
Whipple trees (Mr. Harding)	Silver medal

We have engraved the following:—

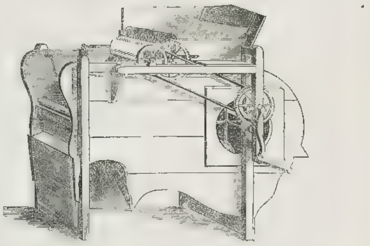
Garrett's Patent Bolting Thrashing Machine for Four Horses, for thrashing wheat, without either bending, bruising, or otherwise injuring the straw. It may be worked with two, three, or four horses.

Coleman's Patent Expanding Lever Harrow, suitable either for level or for ridge land; the flexibility of the joints allowing its adaptation to the most abrupt inequalities.

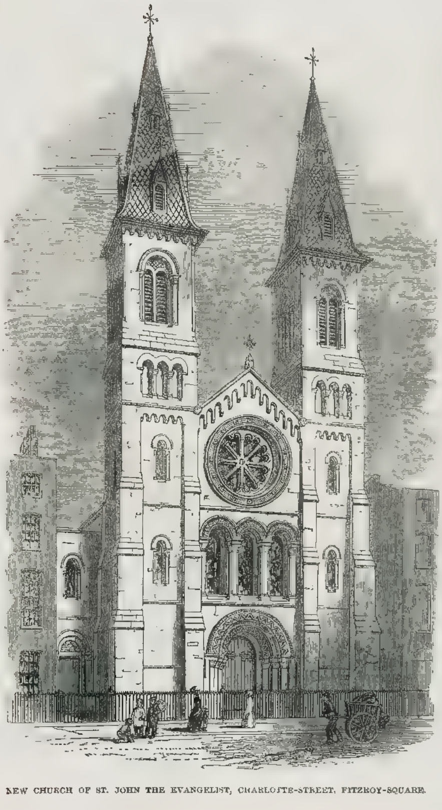
Crosskill's Single-horse Cart; the body much larger than Scotch carts, the iron-work more complete in several parts.

Hornsby's Winnowing Machine, capable of separating the corn from the chaff as it comes from the thrashing machine, without the use of a jack riddle. The advantage this machine has over others, when separating the corn from the chaff in a rough pulsy state, not riddled, is, its being fitted with a spike rolle working through a grating, the roller and grating being so arranged as to form a hopper; and it can be adjusted to suit corn either in rough chaff or in any other state. It is also fitted with a shaking screen at the bottom, which more effectually cleans the corn from all kinds of small seeds than a fixed screen.

CROSSKILL'S SINGLE HORSE CART.—PRIZE £5.



HORNSBY'S WINNOWING MACHINE.—PRIZE £3.



NEW CHURCH OF ST. JOHN THE EVANGELIST, CHARLOTTE-STREET, FITZROY-SQUARE.

NEW CHURCH, CHARLOTTE-STREET, FITZROY-SQUARE.

This additional spiritual provision for the large and populous parish of St. Pancras, situate in Upper Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square, was consecrated, with the accustomed ceremonies, by the Lord Bishop of London, on Thursday last.

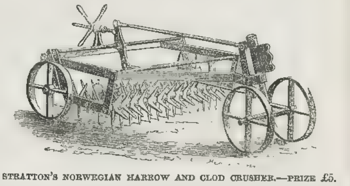
The new church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, has been built from the design of Mr Hugh Smith, of Bedford-row, and reflects great credit on his architectural taste: t is picturesque and pleasing, throughout. It is in the Norman style of the twelfth century; the architect having, evidently, had an eye to the fine old twin-towered German churches which are so much admired by the profession.

The structure, towards Charlotte-street, occupies the frontage of three houses. The design consists of a lofty centre, with a recessed porch, enriched with mouldings of tasteful character. Above is a triple window; and over that, a noble rose window, and embellished gable. In the original design, the centre is flanked with two towers and spires, the latter of wood, covered with diamond-shaped slates; the entire height of tower and spire being 120 feet. One of these towers has not yet been completed; but, to do justice to the architect, we have engraved both; as, doubtless, funds will soon be raised for the erection of the second tower. The materials of the church and tower are Kentish rag, with Bath stone dressings.

The interior of the church is divided into a nave and side aisles, by Norman columns and arches, above which are well-proportioned clerestory windows; and there is a large window of corresponding style at the east end. The roof is of open timbers, and the height from the floor to the ridge is 51 feet 10 inches; the nave is 86 feet in length, and 58 feet 5 inches wide; and the chancel is 30 feet, by 10 feet 6 inches. In the aisles, and across the west end, are imitative oaken galleries, with fronts of light, open, intersecting arches. In the western gallery is placed, temporarily, a small organ; but, it is proposed to erect a larger instrument, of low elevation, that it may not obstruct the light from the triple window. The pulpit is of circular design, very neatly sculptured in Caen stone: it is placed against the wall, and is entered by a low doorway, direct from the vestry, so as to avoid the loss of room by a staircase, rarely otherwise than unsightly. There is, likewise, a stone font, of Norman design.

The Communion appointments are in good taste; the Decalogue, &c., are emblazoned within five circular-headed compartments. The seat-fittings, also, are in corresponding architectural style. The Church will accommodate 1048 persons: viz., 629 in pews; free-seats, 299: children, 120.

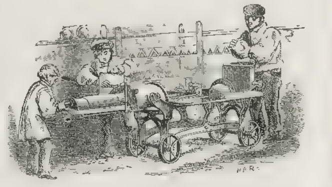
The cost of the entire structure may be stated at about £6,400. The purchase-money of the site, in addition, was £5,300. The foundation work was expensive, the artist having to provide 20 feet of concrete and gravel for the tower-base. The funds were thus raised:—£5,000 left by a benevolent lady, for building a Church, the site to be chosen by the Bishop of London; the remainder furnished by the Church Commissioners, and by public subscription.



STRATTON'S NORWEGIAN HARROW AND CLOD CRUSHER.—PRIZE £5.

Stratton's Norwegian Harrow, improved by an entirely new mode of raising and lowering the implement, and of regulating the depth at which it works in the ground, or of raising it quite out of the ground, so as to put it instantly in a condition to be transported from field to field. By this construction a child may do all that is required to lift the heaviest implement, as he can instantly transfer the power of the horses from the onward draught of the implement to the raising it out of work.

Garrett's Patent Hand Pipe and Tile Machine, is made entirely of iron, occupying a space of only 8 feet by 2 feet, very simple, easily drawn on its wheels between the hakes, and worked by a man and boy with a lever purchase. It has two vibrating cylinders; while the tiles are being forced out of the one, the other is filled, so that no time is lost, the piston acting both ways; and, from its construction, the machine requires less care and is easier filled.



GARRETT'S PATENT HAND PIPE AND TILE MACHINE.—PRIZE £5.

Mr. Garrett also exhibited a patent inclined stone mill, invented by W. Broughton, of London, working engineer, possessing the important advantage of grinding without breaking the material. Its peculiar construction admits of its instant adjustment with perfect ease, for the purpose of grinding wheat, barley, beans, peas, or any other material, of either a coarse or fine quality, and prevents the dressing of the stones from being destroyed by the concussion or contact of their surfaces.

The Harvest in Cambridgeshire.—We saw some wheat cut in the parish of Chesterton last Wednesday; and the wheat crop generally in this neighbourhood appears ripe for the sickle. Cambridge Advertiser of Wednesday.

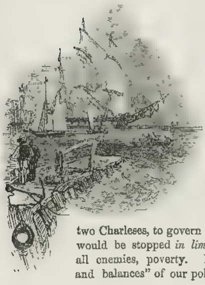
Attempt to Overturn a Railway Train.—Three young men, named Isaac Green, Thomas Gray, and Henry Harsall, were examined at Bristol, on Wednesday, and committed for trial on a charge of placing a hurdle across the down train of the Bristol and Exeter line, near Bristol. A young woman named Shepherd deposed to seeing them, in company with another man, unhang the gate, and throw it over the bridge on to the line, at twelve o'clock at night. Two trains felt the shock, and the engine belonging to the goods train was battered by a stone thrown at it as it was passing under the bridge the same night.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, July 18, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 221.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 25, 1846. [Sixpence.

THE SUGAR QUESTION.



OF the many Illustrations of the extent of damage that commerce sustains when it is made to wait on legislation, the Sugar Duties afford a striking one. In accordance with a constitutional principle, a considerable part of the revenue must be raised by taxes continued from year to year only; so that, should the Sovereign ever attempt, like the two Charleses, to govern without a Parliament, he would be stopped in limine by that most potent of all enemies, poverty. It is one of the "checks and balances" of our political system, the advantages of which would become more evident in times of trouble and danger than they can be made at present, when, there being no peril of the Crown becoming despotic, we are more keenly alive to the inconvenience of taxation being uncertain. Immense masses of capital, labour, and all the thousand ramifications of the demand and supply of a great article of consumption, are kept in suspense, hanging on a yearly vote of the House of Commons, and that vote one which has been made the battle ground of two opposite parties and principles.

The consequences, even from this cause alone, have been disastrous enough ; but they have been complicated and intensified by the results of the abolition of slavery in our colonies, and the struggle on the part of those who effected that great work, to keep up a moral distinction between what is slave grown and what is produced by free men, in this same article of sugar, the distinction being wholly impracticable upon any other commodity, and in a thousand ways violated even upon this. No one article, in all the varied list of commerce, has been so unfortunate ; no dealers and producers so much to be commiserated as those who have in any way been connected with sugar. If we go back, we shall find the West Indian planters held up for years as the monsters of the human race, and painted to the world in colours so dark and hideous, that we shrink even from the memory of them. The planters, on the other side, claimed a right of property recognised by British laws and Parliaments, and the fierce struggle was at last terminated by a compromise. The institution of slavery was abolished, and the responsibility of English law for its existence was acknowledged at the same time ; we had permitted a great wrong, and we expiated it by subjecting ourselves to an enormous burden ; in fact, we purchased our fellow subjects' freedom "with a great sum." For the reputation, and, we believe, no less the welfare of the Empire, no number of millions was ever better bestowed.

Out of the altered social condition of our Colonies caused by this measure, arises the present state of the whole question in all its bearings—commercial and moral. The principles and course of action by which the existence of slavery was destroyed, we can no longer use or apply ; the enemy has been driven from our own soil ; we cannot enter the possessions of others with the fire and sword with which he was here pursued. We may advise other nations to be just and humane, but we have no power to make them so; and, besides, men will not be virtuous "on compulsion." They resist interference with their internal policies : "Who made thee a judge and ruler over us," is the infallible reply. The question, too, of cost, comes into play again : if we could not root out the weed of slavery, save by the strength of gold, are those interested in its continuance in other lands, less powerful than they were here ? On every side by which the question can be approached it is beset with difficulties.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER'S STEAM-SHIP, "SIDON."—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

In our own Colonies the solving of the problem, as far as the existence of slavery was concerned, created difficulties of another kind; they will, however, bear contemplation better than those of the old system, and show that mankind at large has wonderfully gained by the change, though the owners of Colonial estates have been reduced to the verge of ruin. The Negroes, few in number compared to the amount of labour required, easily earned enough to keep them, and naturally enough preferred play to work, seeing that they could afford it. So estates went out of cultivation, exports decreased, ships could not get cargoes, profits sank, and planters went into the Gazette, or worked their estates from year to year imperfectly; and, for that reason, at a loss. Sambo, in the meantime, worked when he chose, at high wages, or not at all if he liked that better, seeing that, by merely scratching the earth and planting a few vegetables, he could defy hunger, the climate rendering clothing all but a superfluity.

The ages of lash-compelled toil have been somewhat compensated, and there seems a measure of justice in it; on the whole, the picture of Negro independence, leisure, high wages, and lordly aversion to more toil than is absolutely necessary, is rather an agreeable one. They are free men, and, if as free agents, they can live, and enjoy life without work, they are happier than millions of free men nearer home : they actually are what we are all trying to be, and most of us with slender success. But this state of things is evidently too good to last long ; the struggle for life is too keen in too many places to permit such earthly elysiums to exist continuously ; and, but for the fact that labour under a tropical sun is certain death to an European, whole Irish counties would have shipped themselves off bodily to Jamaica, and Andover Union would long since have been without inmates. Cutting sugar canes is better, any way, than crushing bones ; and we have not heard lately of any of our black brethren being driven to eat putrid carrion : such work and such diet are only for Englishmen. But, the climate is the insurmountable barrier ; the laws of Nature are the laws of God ; and with them, however wishful of a change, poor frail mortality contends in vain. The Negro at present has the sole command of the labour market, and acts accordingly ; the land lies idle for want of hands ; the labour of Europe cannot go there ; proprietors complain of ruin, and inwardly perhaps sigh for the "good old times" of coercion, and the lash, and cry aloud for more and longer "protection." What, in the midst of all these circumstances, is to be done ?

While the great evil the Colonists labour under, is an inability to produce half as much sugar as they might, it is evident that no Minister will venture to confine the people of this country to that market for their supply of it ; what the planters want is greater production, not a forced increase in the price of what they do produce. The idea of protection is deluding them. If not an ounce of any foreign sugar was admitted through a British Custom House it would not help them out of the difficulty ; the price would rise, and the consumption would fall, and the old vicious course of things act and re-act as before.

Their only chance of revival lies in meeting the principle of slavery, in its produce, with the produce of free labour, to which they may justly demand access. If Englishmen could live in the West Indies, and labour like the blacks, Englishmen would assuredly go there , but, as they cannot, we see no reason why African Negroes, their freedom preserved inviolate, should not be encouraged to do so ; they would become better men than under their savage princes, and the lands of the colonies would resume their fertility, the more welcome for being purchased without blood and tears. With such means at their command, they need not fear the competition of any slave-holding nation whatever.

Protection is gone ; it is useless now to invoke it. To exclude the produce of countries with whom we have friendly intercourse because they have not yet abolished slavery, is impossible. We might as well at once raze Manchester and Liverpool to the ground. The adjustment of the whole question of the Sugar Duties is imperative ; and the gradual assimilation of the produce of all countries, with the access afforded to free labour, and the rendering the duties retained certain and perpetual instead of annual, which are the main features of Lord John Russell's plan, is as fair a practical settlement of the great question as could be realised. Let not the Protectionists be too rash ; the Agriculturists refused with contempt the eight shillings fixed duty of the Whigs, and by their own hands the duty was wholly abolished ! Will the lesson be vain ? The fable of the Sybil's books obtains perpetual application.

COMMODORE SIR CHARLES NAPIER'S STEAM-SHIP, "SIDON."

This noble steam-ship has been built in the Government dockyard at Deptford from a design by Commodore Sir Charles Napier. The gallant architect maintains that his model possesses certain advantages of construction, which he has long maintained in his place in Parliament, should be secured in the designs for Government-built steam-ships.

Among these advantages, are certain facilities and ample room on the upper and lower decks for firing her guns ; excellent accommodation for the officers and crew, and a very large space for her engines and boilers, the latter being so placed that they are three feet under her water-mark ; all the vulnerable parts of the engines are of gun-metal ; and, in the event of a shot going into the boilers, there is an escape for the [illegible]. The powder magazines are, also, remarkably secure ; and very easy access can be had to them.

The figure of the Sidon appears to be one of great stability ; and at a short distance above her water mark, she is thrown out considerably on her sides, which give a large additional breadth to her decks. She has ample room for stores sufficient for lengthened voyages. She was commenced on June 24, 1845, and launched on the 26th of May last, so that she was eleven months in construction. The following are her main dimensions

	Feet	Inches.
Length between perpendiculars	210	9
Ditto of keel, for tonnage	188	0
[illegible]eme	37	0
[illegible]	36	5
[illegible] ..	35	11
Depth in hold	2[illegible]	[illegible]

Burden in tons, 1328 67 [illegible] Horse-power, 560

The Sidon drew, when launched, 9 feet ; and, with everything on board, will be under 14 feet ; she will take in coals until her main deck ports are within 6 feet of the water, which will be between 700 and 800 tons. She has two 56-pounders pointing right ahead ; and two, right astern. On the upper deck are four [illegible]-pounders on the broadside, which can be pointed two on each bow and quarter. [illegible]e has ten 32-pounders on the main deck, two pointing right ahead, and three [illegible] astern , or two right astern, and two on the quarter, out of the Captain's [illegible], running clear outside the ports. She is upwards of 500 tons less than the Terrible ; and 300 tons less than the Retribution : the latter vessel having no guns at all on the main deck.

In order the better to show her dimensions we have also engraved her in section [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] Boilers below the water-l[illegible]

C. C. Water-tight Tanks for containing [illegible] sumed, the tanks are kept filled, to keep the [illegible]

D. D. Extent of Wheels—with full com[illegible]

E, E. ——— [illegible] ——— when part of coals and stores are consumed

[illegible] ith everything on board, except coals.

[illegible] when part of the stores and coals are consumed

[illegible]e is to be fitted with her engines by Seaward and Co.

[illegible] The [illegible] (Saturday) afternoon at [illegible] yard of Ditchburn and Mare the Sharpshooter, an iron [illegible] two sweep guns, similar to the Bulldog, built at H M. Dockyard, Chatham ; the Antelope, a large iron steam-boat, also for Government ; and a large wood steamer, built for the Spanish Government, similar to the Volcano

Public Income and Expenditure.—The balance-sheet of the public income [illegible] for the year ending the 5th of July has been published. The balances in the Exchequer on the 5th of July, 184[illegible], were £[illegible],041, 19 1s. 10¾d, and on the 5th of July last they amounted to £7,351,758 15[illegible]

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE

The Paris papers this week bestow much attention upon the present position of [illegible] Ministry. Most of them appear to despair of the Government [illegible] to maintain its position. Even the Debats seems to participate [illegible] this [illegible] paper of Monday says - "It is evident that the position of the Whig [illegible] and, even if it should succeed in getting happily out of the sugar question, grave difficulties still await it. Everything de[illegible] on the attitude which the friends of Sir Robert Peel will assume

The Presse goes further, for it describes his Lordship's position as utterly [illegible]. The liberal journals express much disappointment, and some of them appear to consider that we are again in a state of Ministerial crisis.

The Débats gives the following as the state of electioneering matters in Paris :

"The candidates for the twelve arrondissements of Paris are now generally known. In the first the Conservative party give their votes to M. Casimir Perier. His opponent is not yet known. In the second M J Lefebvre will again obtain from the electors a mark of confidence, which he has always shown himself worthy of Up to the present time he is the only candidate In the third M. Decan has refused to stand, though called on to do so by a certain number of electors M. Taillandier was the late member. The Conservative party will support M. Bertand. President of the Tribunal of Commerce of the Seine. At the last [illegible] on M. Taillandier was returned by a majority of only three out of 1645 voters. In the fourth we only know of M. Ganneron, the late member. In the fifth it is said that M. Blanqui, of the Institute, opposes M. Marie, the late member ; and that, in the sixth, M Cotelle, the mayor of the arrondissement, stands against M Carnot, the late deputy. In the seventh, M. Moreau, the late member, has as yet no competitor. In the eighth, the Conservative party hope to restore to M. Beudin the trust he formerly so honourably fulfilled ; the late member is M. Bellmont. In the ninth, M A. Portalis stands against M. Locquet, the late member, one of the firmest members of the Conservative party. In the tenth, there are seven or eight candidates, whose names we shall give hereafter. In the eleventh, M. Zangiacomi stands against M. Vav[illegible], who in 1812 had a majority of only seven votes. In the twelfth, the only candidate yet known is M. Boissel, the late deputy "

The papers mention the fact of the sinking of a portion of the unfinished Orleans and Vierzon Railroad, near to Orleans, on Saturday night. Happily no lives were lost, but the accident is so likely to retard the completion of the line, that it was not deemed probable that it will be completed by the month of October, as had been expected

This occurrence seems to have exercised [illegible] unfavourable influence on the shares of the Paris and Lyons, and, indeed on those of all the railroad companies of France. Something like a panic took place in the share-market at the Paris Exchange on Monday.

The Journal de la Somme of Sunday contains the following "About four o'clock on Saturday evening, at the moment of a heavy shower, a portion of the tunnel of the Amiens and Boulogne Railway, situate in front of the Convent of the Sisters of Mercy, suddenly fell in. The accident was attributed to various causes, which, however, we shall not mention, as they will most certainly be [illegible] inquired into by the chief engineer charged with the direction of the works. The storm had most fortunately caused the workmen to quit the tunnel, otherwise a great loss of life would have most probably ensued."

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

The packet-ship Montezuma has arrived with New York papers to the 3rd inst., being two days later than those last received The news in them, so far as the domestic affairs of the Union are concerned, is unimportant.

The House of Representatives was still engaged in debating the Tariff Bill members vied with each other who could be most loquacious on the subject. Nothing of importance had taken place in the Senate

Mr. Buchanan had taken leave of the State Department, and was nominated for one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, for the circuit of Pennsylvania.

The Philadelphia United States Gazette says that the President will in a few days send a message to Congress, recommending the issue of letter of marque commissions. This is done in consequence of a letter received by the department from the United States Consul at Rio de Janeiro, in which it was stated that a gang of buccaneers was afloat under the Mexican flag, on the seas in that vicinity, and had recently overhauled a British vessel

Important intelligence had been received from Mexico The revolution against the Administration of Paredes had spread to the department of Jalisco. The revolt broke out in the city of Guadalaxara, and the Government troops having, after a short skirmish, surrendered, the insurgents, headed by Don Jose Maria [illegible]nez, issued a formal declaration, proclaiming Santa Anna their chief, and declaring that a new Congress be elected by the people, according to the electoral laws of 1824, to frame a new and anti-monarchical Constitution. The decree also provides that the Congress meet [illegible] months after the liberating army should [illegible] in possession of the capital of the Republic. Don Juan Cambado was recognised as Provisional Governor of the Department, and, according to the accounts published in the New Orleans Picayune, under oath to repel the aggressions of the American States. This statement, if authentic, bears a most important relation to the duration of the existing war. Late accounts from Havannah state that Santa Anna still remained there Letters from Yucatan report that the commander of the United States brig [illegible]mers had received despatches from the Government, proclaiming the neutrality of the State [illegible], therefore, immediately left for Vera Cruz. A private letter from New York adds to the above statement- "Paredes has capitulated" The correctness of this is doubted, however.

THE WEST INDIES

West India papers have been received by the Trent. The dates are from Demerara, the 17th ; Barbadoes and Dominica, the 20th ; Jamaica and Antigua, the 3rd ; and St. Lucia, the 25th ult.

The chief feature of the intelligence is the welcome statement that a favourable change had taken place in the weather, and that the long drought had been succeeded by copious and seasonable rains in almost every island ; it had, as a matter of course, put the inhabitants in good spirits, and the prospects of the crops are more encouraging.

At Trinidad, 19,000 hogsheads of sugar had been shipped for England , the crop will be about 22,000 hogsheads. At Barbadoes, the crop of sugar shipped for England amounted to 15,000 hogsheads, and ten or twelve vessels were still loading. In Demerara the crops will be about a quarter short of last year, on account of the long dry weather

THE OVERLAND MAIL FROM INDIA.

The Overland Mail has arrived, with files of papers from India and China, of the dates following —Bombay, May 30 ; Calcutta, May [illegible]6 ; Madras, June 9 ; and China, May 25. The political news is scanty, but there is an account of an appalling accident at Loodianah. The fort of Kangra had not been surrendered at the date of the last accounts, the 11th of May. Viscount Hardinge was at S[illegible] of May, having returned thither from a visit to the interior. [illegible] Madras, we regret to learn, was confined by illness at Vellore. [illegible] was still raging at Rajpoor, among the troops of the 22nd Regiment

Commercial matters at Bombay were in much the same state as those last received. At Calcutta, the markets were without much alteration. At Madras, sales very trifling. In China, generally speaking, trade was very dull.

The Emperor of China had issued a proclamation announcing that Chusan was to be immediately evacuated. Mr. Elmslie, who has so long faithfully exercised the office of Secretary to the Superintendant of Trade, was to have the honour of bearing the Imperial assent as to the right of entry into Canton for the ratification of the Queen of England.

The accident to which allusion is made above, occurred during a hurricane at Loodianah on the 20th of May. The barracks there were blown down, and 8[illegible] men, women, and children of her Majesty's 50th Regiment had perished, 135 have been wounded, and four privates are missing.

Some details of this calamity are given in the following letter, dated Loodianah, May 21 .

"Loodianah is now mourning under the anger of the Lord ; eighty [illegible] were hurried into eternity in an instant, last night The victims are men, women, and children of her Majesty s 50th Regiment We had a very heavy storm of dust, wind, rain, thunder, and [illegible] about six last evening. The wind blew with terrific violence for a time, and [illegible] seemed to concentrate its power on the mud or kucha brick barracks of her [illegible] Regiment The 6th company barracks first fell a victim to the fury of [illegible] elements, and within five minutes of its fall every other barrack shared its fate , the only parts saved of the whole nine buildings were the [illegible], the sergeants' quarters they, having some supports inside, withstood the storm.

"It seems the barracks have been built on a new principle. It is true [illegible] were only temporary buildings, run up hastily to shelter the regiment. [illegible], but, as they have been standing more than two seasons, it is to be feared [illegible] good solid brick barracks would not have been thought of again, though originally designed, had not these been blown down. This is an awful proof of the penny-wise and pound-foolish system I never witnessed so awful a scene of desolation and death as the barracks presented this morning. That part of the station looked desolate enough before, the Sikhs having destroyed th[illegible] several bungalows and one splendid-looking hospital, even these filled you with gloom when you looked at them ; but to them you have now to add nine barracks, and the recollection that numbers of human beings have perished in the ruins. An officer of the 50th has just been with me, and has given me the last return of killed and wounded, up to eleven A M

45 men killed.	115 men wounded.
14 women ditto.	4 women ditto
20 children ditto.	5 children ditto.
79	124

This shows a return of 213 killed and wounded, including four men m[illegible] much fear we shall find more dead bodies, and of the wounded some must ultimately sink under their injuries One or two have had their [illegible] injured, some [illegible] in arms and thighs—some broken legs."

The [illegible] Bombay Castle was destroyed by fire on the 28th of May, at Sau[illegible]r.

[illegible] Death of Mr Wakefield Q.C.—We regret to announce the sudden death of Mr. Daniel Wakefield, the well-known Queen's Counsel, who was found dead in his shower-bath at an early hour on Monday morning. Mr Wakefield was in perfect health on Saturday, and was to have replied in a cause in the Vice Chancellor's Court on the day when he was found dead. An inquest was held on Wednesday, on the body of the deceased gentleman. He was seized with [illegible] on the morning of Monday, while taking a bath, and expired in the evening. The jury being quite satisfied with the testimony of the servants and the medical man, returned a verdict [illegible] Died from natural causes

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The German journals relate numerous instances of the Christian humility of the new Pope. "His cook (says one of these journals) one day [illegible]ed for his dinner seven different dishes ; Pius IX. sent for him, and told [illegible] that when Cardinal he never had more than three, and that he would not now change his habit. His Holiness has reduced almost all the expenses of his household. 4000 Roman Scudis which were annually spent in rare plants have been cut off from the budget, and half o[illegible]e been sold."

The Hereford Times says it has received several reports of the recurrence of the potato disease, not only in the neighbourhood of that city but also in several parts of the county.

The Post-Ampt Gazette of Frankfort states from Kiel, 10th inst., that the King of Denmark had been ill, and had been several times bled, but [illegible] not considered in any danger

A letter from Berlin of the 12th (says the Débats) states that the Prussian Ministry is on the eve of a crisis, or at least that some important changes are about to take place. M. de Flottwell, Minister of Finance, has just tendered his resignation, which has been accepted by the King

During the last passage made by the Great Britain iron steam packet from New York to Liverpool, it was ascertained, by accurate nautical observation made on Saturday, June 13, that this leviathan, propelled by her screw, actually ran no less than 330 knots in the course of 24 hours, producing an average rate of going, throughout the day, of nearly 16 statute miles per hour, a speed never before equalled on the ocean by any paddle-wheel steamer, or by any sailing vessel whatever. Such a velocity, had it continued through the voyage undiminished, would have brought her from New York to England in eight days and a half.

As an illustration of the little dread entertained of the recent alteration of the Corn-Laws, a farm belonging to the Truro Charities has just been let by tender, for a term of fourteen years, at an advance of more than 45 per cent.

The aggregate length of the railway concessions sanctioned by the French Legislature in 1845 was 2309 kilométres, or about 1562 miles. The average length of the concessions authorised in 1846 is 2059 kilometres, or about 1358 miles. Of the 2059 kilométres authorised in 1846, 1336 of new lines have been actually conceded ; 419 of new lines authorised to be conceded, and credits opened for 304 of extensions

The territorial tribunal of Madrid has to pronounce in a case which is perhaps unexampled. Whilst so many persons are seeking by every manœuvre to obtain public appointments, there is an individual whom the authorities have brought before the tribunals, because he has refused the place of registrar of mortgages.

The German papers, after mentioning the intended divorce of the Prince Royal of Denmark, and his approaching marriage with the sister of Prince Frederic of Hesse, announce a marriage between the latter and a Swedish Princess, daughter of King Oscar. The Prince of Hesse is widower of a daughter of the Emperor of Russia. This union is said to have obtained the assent of the Cabinets of St. Petersburgh and Berlin.

The Grand Duke of Tuscany has ordered the establishment of electrical telegraphs in his States, and appointed as Director in-Chief of the new system M. Mattucci, a gentleman who has acquired considerable celebrity by his experiments in electricity

Sir Robert Peel before leaving office granted the following pensions ; The Misses Shee, daughters of the President of the Royal Academy, £200 ; the Rev. S. Bloomfield, author of theological works of great merit and research, £200 ; Mrs. Haydon, widow of the late artist, £50 , C. B. Winstanley and J. Lloyd, annuitants of an old pension which had been considered hereditary, £[illegible] each, in addition to other pensions already mentioned

A vessel having the name of Richard Cobden, which has arrived in the West India Docks, from St. Jago de Cuba and Cienfuegos (Foreign West India islands), has brought, among various descriptions of articles from the latter place, 28 000 jars of corn. The importation of so large a quantity of corn in a vessel so named, and reported in so singular and unusual a manner from the place mentioned, possesses a degree of interest which would not otherwise attach to it, and is worthy of especial notice

A letter from Ischol of the 12th states that, whilst the Archdukes Albert and Charles-Ferdinand of Austria were out on the previous day, driving on the borders of the Lake of Hallstadt, a thunder-storm came on. The electric fluid fell quite close to the carriage, and frightened the horses so much, that the leaders jumped into the lake, and the others dashed against a rock and were killed instantaneously. The Princes were not hurt.

Letters from St. Petersburgh state that the Grand Duchess Olgar was married, on the 7th of July, to the Prince Royal of Wurtemburg. The marriage took place at the Palace of Peterhof, on the day that the Emperor completed his fifty-first year

The Anti Corn-Law League do not intend carrying on the registration of county voters ; but some zealous Free-Traders have come forward to carry out the work commenced by the League, and by that means to place on the forthcoming registry those votes which were in January last made at the instigation and through the exertions of the Anti Corn Law League.

"It is confidently stated," says the Constitutionnel, "that the Bey of Tunis has informed the European representatives of his intention to proceed to new reforms in his states, and that amongst the measures which he proposes to introduce is the creation of a council of state to advise in all civil, commercial, and criminal matters. This institution is to resemble those of a similar character existing in Europe

A Constantinople letter, of the 6th, states that the British Consul in Smyrna having been unable to obtain justice there against the murderers of Sir Laurense Jones, Sir Stratford Canning has taken up the subject very seriously, and obtained an assurance from the Porte that full justice shall be done, although the only witnesses to the crime were Christians whose evidence the authorities at Smyrna had refused to receive against Turks.

Accounts from Alexandria of the 9th inst. state that Mehemet Ali, embarked for Constantinople on the 4th, in the Turkish steamer E[illegible]. The Viceroy was accompanied by his son-in-law, Kamil Pacha ; his [illegible], Mustapha Bey ; and two Greek merchants, Messrs. Tossizza and [illegible]. His grandson, Abbas Pacha, was to hold the reins of Government during his absence, or until the arrival of Ibrahim Pacha

Within the last few days there has been a great increase at the various metropolitan hospitals and dispensaries of English cholera in a very acute form. It is attributable more to atmospheric influences than to the use of fruit, to which it is generally ascribed.

Notwithstanding the opposition given by the Spitalfields weavers to the passing of the late Free-Trade measures, it is a fact that they have not been in such brisk employment as at present for many years past. There is not in the whole district of Bethnal-green or Spitalfields a narrow silk weaver out of work.

The town of Rosenberg, near Breslau, was partly destroyed by fire on the 8th instant ; upwards of fifty houses had been destroyed. Incendiarism is supposed to have been the cause of the disaster.

The Athens Ministerial journals of the 10th inst. state, that the Greek Government had discovered a conspiracy, in which were implicated several well-known agents of the Opposition, who had been lately engaged in organizing bands on the Turkish territory for the invasion of Greece

The reported failure of the potato crop in Ireland has again produced a great demand for Indian corn. Large quantities have been sold in Liverpool at a slight advance in price. It is still, however, the cheapest article of food that can be purchased

A letter in the Patrie contains the following details of an episode of the terrible catastrophe on the Northern railroad : "The Marquis d'Audiffret, Peer of France, and President of the Cour des Comptes, was travelling with his family in the train of the 8th instant. The Marquise d'Audiffret was thrown into the water, and would have perished, but for the courage of an Englishman, who extricated her at the imminent risk of his own life. This brave man immediately withdrew without stopping to receive the expressions of gratitude of the person whom he had so nobly preserved. His name is unknown."

The whole amount of Sycee silver offered by the Government for public sale has been purchased by Messrs. Rothschild, at the price of 60d. per ounce. This is considered an exceedingly high price. On the last occasion of [illegible] sort, the Bank of England took the quantity offered at 59⅝d.

During the week ending the 19th of July, the number of persons [illegible]—at Boulogne, [illegible],749 ; at Calais, 605 —total, [illegible]

Madame Laffarge, the heroine of the romantic cause célebre, so notorious a few years ago, has for some time been in a sta[illegible] health [illegible]vented her quitting her cell On Sunday last, however [illegible]ent, in the penitentiary dress, to hear mass in the prison chapel [illegible] Madame Laffarge [illegible] as a favour to be [illegible] to devote herself to the service of [illegible] been charged with [illegible] of the infirmary

It is calculated that 300,000 [illegible] now find employment in the various operations in the smuggling trade. In the time of Charles II. the number of persons so employed was estimated at 1[illegible],000.

The Augsburg Gazette has the following from Vienna, 12th inst.: "Mr Waghorn has addressed to the Ambassadors of Prussia Bavaria, and Wurtemburg, a circular, stating that Germany should lose no time in establishing, as soon as possible, a railroad between the Adriatic and the North Seas, if she wishes to prevent the superiority of France, which proposes to form a line from Marseilles to Boulogne Mr Waghorn requests the Ambassadors to transmit [illegible] circular to their respective Governments

During the imprisonment of Prince Louis Napoleon at Ham, the numbers of the Progres du Pas de Calais, edited by his friend Frederick Degeorges, were regularly forwarded to him by post. After his escape the current numbers were returned to the office of the journal with the usual stamp, [illegible] applicable in this instance, "Gone away without leaving his address.

We read in a Swiss paper .—"Professor Schonbein recently presented to the Society of Natural History of Basle, a specimen of cotton prepared by him, more inflammable than gunpowder, and exploding with a capsule. Several trials were made with it. A small quantity, equal to the sixteenth part of an [illegible] and three quarter [illegible]

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS MONDAY.

THE SEES OF ST. ASAPH AND BANGOR. The Earl of Powis moved the second reading of the Bill to Dissolve the Union of the Sees of St. Asaph and Bangor The motion gave rise to a discussion upon the subject, similar to that which has taken place for the last three sessions.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE opposed the bill, and moved that it be read a second time that day three months. The bill was supported by the Bishops of London, Bangor, Salisbury, and Oxford; the Earl of ELDON also supported the bill.—It was opposed by Lords Vivian, Stanley, the Bishop of Norwich, and Earl Grey.—On a division, the second reading was carried by a majority of 38 to 28, being a majority of ten in its favour.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said he should not offer any further opposition to the bill, but he should leave the matter to the discretion of the noble Earl (Powis.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

NEWLY-ELECTED MEMBERS.—Colonel ANSON and Mr. C. BULLER took the oaths and their seats, on being re-elected, the former for South Staffordshire, and the latter for Liskeard.

Sir R. PEEL was present in the House this evening for the first time since his recent accident. The right hon Baronet, who walked with some difficulty, leaning on a stick, took his seat upon the Opposition benches, between Sir James Graham and Mr. Goulburn.

Mr O'CONNELL also returned to the House this evening, and took his seat on the Ministerial side of the House.

THE ALLEGED DEATH FROM MILITARY FLOGGING AT HOUNSLOW In answer to Dr. BOWRING, Mr. FOX MAULE made an explanation respecting the alleged death of Frederick White, a private of the 7th Hussars, in consequence of a military flogging. The right hon. gentleman stated that the surgeon had not thought it necessary to interfere during the punishment. After the punishment, it was thought that the man would soon have been fit for duty again, but he became ill, and died on the 11th of July. A post-mortem examination was immediately made by the surgeon of the regiment, assisted by a medical officer unconnected with the regiment The examination had been so far satisfactory as to enable those officers to report that the punishment of the man had nothing whatever to do with his death; and this examination was not only instituted by army medical officers, but by a medical man selected by the Coroner's Jury themselves, and that medical gentleman came to the same conclusion with the medical officers belonging to the army. It appeared that the public had been horrified with a statement to the effect that a piece of skin had been removed from the back of the man. But that was done after death, while the body was being submitted to a post-mortem examination.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL'S PLAN RESPECTING THE SUGAR DUTIES.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL, in a Committee of Ways and Means, submitted his promised plan for the regulation of the sugar duties. The noble Lord began by saying that if the new Ministers had merely consulted their own ease, they would not at this period have interfered with such an important matter; "but" his Lordship proceeded "there are, in our opinion, considerable evils suffered by the country in consequence of the present state of these duties. (Hear, hear.) We consider that the great body of the public are sufferers by the increased price of sugar—a commodity upon which no less than £12,000,000, or a sum ranging from £11,000,000 to £13,000,000, is expended by the public in this country: we think that the revenue is a very considerable sufferer by the mode in which these duties have been hitherto raised, and the prohibition of sugars of a certain class from the markets of this country: we are also of opinion that it is most desirable, for the sake of the public, for the sake of the interests which are most concerned, for the sake of the trade and commerce of this country, to endeavour to arrive at some permanent settlement, and not to expose this question any longer to discussion, debate, and doubt, from year to year," (Cheers.) The noble Lord read some calculations respecting the price of sugar, to show that it greatly augmented, and argued that the calculations made by Mr. Goulburn in his financial statement respecting sugar had completely failed. The noble Lord calculated the supply required for the coming year at 330,000 tons, and said, according to that estimate, supposing the duties were to be near what they were last year, there would be less than 20,000 tons required for the increased consumption of this country."

The noble Lord proceeded thus: "I have here an extract from the circular of a well known house Messrs. Truman and Cook—dated the 2nd of February, 1846, which says

> The only proposed alteration in the duty (that of the late Chancellor of the Exchequer) is the reduction of 3s. 6d. per cwt. on foreign free labour sugar, which, if nothing further is done either by treaties or otherwise, will have very little effect upon the market, as the quantity which can be received will not, it is now evident, be of material importance

(Cheers.) Sir, I believe that statement, made by a firm of experience in the trade, to be thoroughly borne out by the fact, and that the increased price will limit the consumption; that you will be disappointed of obtaining the supply you wish; that your revenue will not increase as it ought to do, by increasing the supply of sugar; and that the people will suffer from the price they must pay owing to the limit you place on the quantity that comes into your markets. (Cheers) Now let it be borne in mind that, supposing the consumption is [illegible]0,000 tons, an increase of price to the amount of 6s. only per cwt. would be a tax on the people of this country in the price of their sugar of £1,500,000 a-year (cheers), and that a tax which does not go into the Exchequer (cheers); it is paid by the people, but gives nothing whatever to the state. (Cheers.) In that state of the supply of sugar, what I should naturally be disposed to propose, therefore, would be the admission of other sugar—other foreign sugar into the markets of this country, to supply the deficiency under which it is evident we should otherwise suffer during the present year. But we are here met by an objection, contrary to the system which has prevailed during the last four or five years, but more decidedly in the present year, allowing the people to buy where they could in the cheapest market—an objection is made that, 'by so doing, by admitting all foreign sugars, you would encourage slavery, and give an increased stimulus to the slave trade, these are moral considerations which overbear all financial and commercial views, and all views connected with the comfort and welfare of the people of this country.' In examining that argument, I will just point out where I think it fails, both in completeness and in efficacy. (Cheers.) That argument fails in completeness; because, while you refuse admission to your home market of the sugars of foreign countries, you place no such bar on the admission of other productions (cheers)—the cotton, the tobacco, the copper, and other articles which are produced by slave labour Therefore, Sir, you do not actually carry into effect, or even pretend to carry into effect, those humane views which the persons who are most opposed to the admission of slave produce consistently entertain. I hold in my hand a circular with respect to the sugar duties, which is headed "urgent," and which begins with stating, as a very great misfortune, that which Ministers and statesmen of this country have regarded year by year as a very great advantage, namely, the great increase in the import and consumption of cotton from the United States. It has been thought by the great majority of this House that a very large increase in the import of cotton, affording the means of industry and livelihood to hundreds of thousands of our people, making our manufacturing towns busy and flourishing, was a great advantage to the State; but these persons state the increase of cotton from 1790 to 1845 as a reason for calling down the indignation of all moralists and philanthropists against it. They go on to say that, 'if it be stated as a reason for excepting the United States from the principle of excluding slave produce, that the slavery existing in that country is characterised by none of the horrors of the African slave trade, the Committee would observe that that atrocious traffic has been succeeded there by another, in some features, still more revolting the breeding of slaves, whose value is regulated by the price of cotton wool in the British market' Nobody can forget the eloquent statements that were made by my right hon. friend the member for Edinburgh (Mr. Macaulay) with respect to the slave trade in the United States, nobody can deny the force of the observations he then made, or the facts which are here stated by the Anti-Slavery Committee, that the consumption of cotton wool in this country, and the use of it in our manufactures, gives an impulse and encouragement to the slave trade in the United States; and yet, if any one were to say that we would not allow cotton wool to come into this country if we were to say that before we would admit cotton wool we would force the United States to a solution of that tremendous problem that hangs over them that tremendous problem, whether they shall keep their black population in a state of slavery, or whether, applying the great articles of their declaration of rights, they shall, at once, give them the supreme power in many states—the power they would be entitled to, of electing the majority of representatives to say, that we would insist on the emancipation of all their slaves, or that we would not take their cotton wool, would be nothing less than insanity. (Cheers.) Sir, it is the same thing with respect to several other productions, it is the same thing with regard to copper, with respect to which the slaves employed in the mines of Cuba are as great sufferers as any that are employed on the worst sugar estates in that country, and yet, so far from having proceeded on this consistent plan of the Anti Slavery Committee, we have, of late years, diminished the duties on the admission of copper ore, and totally abrogated the duties on cotton wool. (Cheers.) Such, then, is the first instance to show that your policy, if it were to proceed on an exceptional rule, is incomplete and unsatisfactory, even to those who most strongly maintain it. But you have not been able to maintain it even on that ground. You have not been able to say we will admit sugar only from our own colonies and possessions in which we have enacted that slavery shall no longer exist. We have been obliged, the late Ministry has been obliged, by the necessity of the case, by the insufficient supply which comes from our own colonies, to admit the sugar of other countries to our markets. The consequence has been a [illegible] complication of the problem You have had to decide what was the state of society in those particular countries, what was the state of [illegible] in Java, for instance, and whether the obligation to cultivate sugar [illegible] did not amount to a state of slavery. You have had to consider, also, [illegible] was the state of society in Manilla; and you have also exposed yourselves to the decision, according to the interests of the Dutch Commercial Company, at one time disposed to give you a large supply of sugar, and at another to withhold it; but, besides this, you are obliged by the principles of your law and your treaties, to admit other countries which have treaties with you providing that their produce shall be received on the terms of the most favoured nation, into competition with the free labour states. You could not do otherwise"

Lord JOHN RUSSELL then combated the other arguments used against the admission of slave-grown sugars on the ground of morality:—"You do, no doubt, to a certain degree, diminish the price in the ports and markets of that [illegible] but the resources of commerce are infinite, and the spirit of commerce is too strong to be bound by stipulations of this kind, which are against the natural interests of commerce. What the merchants do, therefore, is to take care to find a market for that sugar in some country; they search the north of Europe, they search the shores of the Mediterranean, they send to Hamburgh, they send to Petersburgh, they send to Genoa,—they search, in short, for a market anywhere [illegible] they may obtain a sale for that slave-grown sugar, and obtain supplies in return, which they can dispose of in the English market, and they then pay the Spanish producers of Cuba with those English manufactures which they might as well have sent to them direct without this intervening transaction (Hear, hear.) With a good deal of inconvenience, with a good deal of loss to English commerce, but, above all, with a loss to the English consumer, this does in fact provide that which you seem to dread, that to which you so much object, namely, that the employer of slave labour in Cuba and Brazil shall be able to sell his sugar and obtain a profitable return for it from some part of Europe. That object is attained. (Hear, hear.) And this, again, destroys the whole morality of the proceeding. I see it popularly said, when there are meetings of persons who are a good deal inflamed upon this subject, 'This slave-grown produce is, in fact, the produce of a felony, it is the produce of crime; these are stolen goods which you ask us to consume.' It may be very well to say that these are stolen [illegible] that in the instance of an individual, what would be thought of the an[illegible] If a person should come with a quantity of sugars known to be really stolen from a warehouse, and should bring them to a shopkeeper and ask him to buy them, what would be thought if his answer were, 'No, I cannot buy them, I know they are stolen goods; but I have a neighbour who has no scruple in taking them, I will direct you to him, he will give you a return in value for that which you have stolen, and if you will bring me what he gives you, I will buy it of you?' ([illegible] Of course, the whole pretence of morality would be demolished by that. (Hear.) I, therefore, for these several reasons, which I will not any further dwell upon, hold that the ground which has been hitherto taken is not tenable; that you must in this instance, as in the various instances in which, upon the proposition of the late Government, means have been adopted for taking away restrictions and admitting the people of this country to the best markets,—proceeding upon the same principle, you must admit the sugar of these foreign countries into the markets of the United Kingdom. (Hear, hear.) But while I say that you have no sufficient grounds any longer to refuse to the people of this country that benefit, and that you ought not to deny to them the power of obtaining their sugars at £1,500,000 or £2,000,000 less of price than they now pay, I must admit that there are considerations which the West India body urge, and there are other considerations pertaining to the interests of the state, which forbid you to make that immediate equalisation. Sir, the West India body urge, in the first place, and they urge with truth, that the change from slavery to freedom was an immense revolution effected by law; that it changed the relations, changed the mode of proceeding, changed the social condition of the labourers of the West Indies; that it reduced their produce from 4,000,000 cwt. of sugar to 2,500,000 in the course of a very few years; and that even your £20 000,000 of compensation, large, liberal, and bountiful as it was on the part of the people of this country, has not been a complete and full compensation for the losses which in those first years they have sustained. They say, moreover, that having had to attempt to reconcile themselves to this great change, to employ labourers by new means, to offer wages instead of compulsion, to entice them away from the temptations of indolence and enjoyment, which to men just set free must have been so powerful, this country did not allow them a full admission to other markets of the world, where they could obtain free labour. Now, I think they are somewhat justified in this complaint. I do not think the Government of this country, or the Parliament of this country, was wrong in being exceedingly jealous in the beginning, lest anything like the slave trade should be resorted to. Such was the cause of the orders in Council which prohibited the procuring any labour from Africa; such was the cause of the complaints made in the House of Lords of those orders in Council which permitted the Hill Coolies of India to be employed in Guiana, and of the refusal by this House to admit them into another colony. That was a justifiable reason, no doubt, and cause of the refusal of an increase of labour in the West Indies, but it was not the less a real grievance to the proprietors in those colonies; it was not the less a reason why they should equitably demand delay in respect to any scheme to equalise their produce with that of foreign nations. But there are reasons connected with the revenue likewise, which I think are sufficient to induce this House not to consent to immediate equalisation, but to propose that it should be for some time delayed. Any sudden or abrupt change of duty would no doubt most seriously affect the revenue, not only by causing an interruption in the cultivation of your own colonies and in the East Indies, but by causing the markets not to be supplied for a considerable time before the reduction of duty was to take place. I therefore, Sir, in what I mean to propose to the House, shall propose at the present time a reduction of duty, a complete withdrawal of the present prohibitory duty, and a very slight change, after the first year, till the duties are entirely equalised."

The noble Lord then announced the changes he proposed "I shall propose that in the present year, instead of the prohibitory duty of [illegible], and the duty of [illegible]s. 4d., there shall be on all foreign Muscovado sugar a duty of 21s per cwt.; and I shall propose that that duty be diminished in the following manner:—duty to July 5, 1847, 21s. per cwt.; to July 5, 1848, 20s., per cwt.; to July 5, 1849, 18s. 6d.; to July 5, 1850, 17s.; to July 5, 1851, 15s. 6d.; and that from July 5, 1851, a similar duty of 14s. shall apply to all muscovado sugars. (Hear, hear) Now, I say nothing here of the propriety or the advantage that might be derived from a still further reduction of the 14s. duty; considering that this is an operation which is to be carried over five years, that in the present state of the revenue, and in the present state of the session, it would not be right in us on any speculation to ask for any considerable reduction of duty below the reduction made last year." (Hear.)

The noble Lord then turned to the question of Revenue, and having shown, from the statements of the late Chancellor of the Exchequer, that there would be a deficiency in the year 1847-48 of half a million, calculated that under his proposed scale of Sugar Duties he would realise an increased sum of £725,000, which would thus more than cover the deficiency of next year. As he looked on this plan as a permanent settlement, he proposed to found a bill upon the resolution ,and thus avoid future annual discussions on the duties; and, in order to maintain the constitutional principle of an annual discussion on some duties, he would endeavour to find out a substitute

Lord John Russell concluded by anticipating great advantages by the abandonment of a restrictive system:—"Impelled by energy, and invigorated by the spirit of freedom in commercial transactions, my belief is that the colonists will gain, and not suffer, by this great change in our policy. (Hear, hear.) I believe that the cultivation of sugar itself will be advanced to a greater extent, when the colonists know that they must compete in the market of the mother country with the productions of other countries. I believe that they will derive fresh energy from being allowed to seek where they like for the cheapest markets in other countries of the globe, and from bearing in mind that we will not part with this great advantage, and that neither in this country shall we ever impose differential duties as against the colonists, nor will the colonists ever impose such duties against us. This is commerce secure in war as well as in peace—commerce that is not exposed to the danger of conflicting tariffs, but in which customhouses are regulated only for the benefit of the whole (Hear, hear) The colonists, I think, derive great advantage from being connected with this country, and from having the benefit of all the skill and the accumulated capital of this country; and this empire has an immense advantage, also, in the loyalty and assistance of the colonists. But these colonists must not hereafter exist on the limited and restricted system of former days; that must be acknowledged to be erroneous, and other principles must prevail. I believe that both the [illegible] country and the colonists will flourish all the more for the abolition of useless [illegible] of discontent, we shall acknowledge, both in this country and in the magni[illegible] possessions belonging to us, that we have been heretofore mistaken in following the former policy of restriction, and that the affection felt reciprocally will be all the stronger when neither party is subject to any restrictions imposed by the other (cheers);—when the colonists are neither obliged to submit to restrictions for some supposed benefit to the mother country, and when the mother country is not deprived of the benefit of some of the choicest productions of the globe for the sake of the colonial interest, favoured by her imperial laws. The colonial empire of this country is an empire of which every British statesman is most justly proud, and to which the people of this country attach the highest value. (Hear, hear.) I trust that, when this better system has been adopted, we [illegible] colonies increase and flourish that we shall be proud of them as our creat[illegible] that we shall continue to see them in the enjoyment of that liberty which we have given them, and that both they and the mother country may flourish in union for ever. (Cheers.) I shall now conclude by proposing a resolution for the continuance of the present duties on sugar, and by laying on the table the resolutions, the nature of which I have explained to the Committee. I trust that these resolutions will be hereafter adopted, and, if they should be, I think the present Ministry, however short may be its existence, will not have administered the affairs of the country without effecting some national advantage." (Hear, hear.) The noble Lord then proposed a resolution for the temporary continuance of the present Sugar Duties

Lord G. BENTINCK said, that the announcement that the vicious system of renewing the Sugar Duties yearly would be discontinued, and the intimation that facilities for the transmission of labour to the West Indies would be afforded, were agreeable to him and to his friends. But, with respect to the whole measure, the outline of which had just been stated, he could not promise it his support, or the support of those acting with him. True to the principles which they had professed, they could not consent to admit slave-grown sugar, nor remove from the East and West India interests that protection which they at present enjoyed.

After a discussion, the Resolutions to continue the duties for a month were agreed to, and the consideration of the Resolutions for the permanent alteration of the duties was postponed till Friday

The House went into Committee of Supply, and some votes for the Navy were taken

The House adjourned at two o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS —TUESDAY

The St. Asaph and Bangor Diocese [illegible] ordered to be read a third time on Th[illegible] [illegible]s for Free Churches in Scotland, origi[illegible] followed.

THE SUGAR DUTIES Lord BROUGHAM gave notice that he would, on Friday [illegible] mit a resolution against the adoption of any measures which, directly or indirectly, could have the effect of encouraging the slave trade. [The noble and learned Lord, however, on Thursday, intimated that the proposed amendment of Lord George Bentinck might render this resolution unnecessary, and he should [illegible] e postpone it for the present.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS WEDNESDAY.

The House met to-day at twelve o'clock.

NEWLY-ELECTED MEMBER.—Lord Morpeth took the oaths and his seat for the West Riding of Yorkshire

THE SUGAR DUTIES Lord G. BENTINCK gave notice, that, on the motion for the Speaker to leave the chair, to go into Committee on the Sugar Du[illegible] would move as an amendment, that, in t[illegible] [illegible] in the British East and West Indian possessions, the proposed reduction of duty upon foreign slave-grown sugar is alike unjust and impolitic, as tending to check the advance of production by British free labour, and to give an additional stimulus to the slave tra[illegible]

THE CHARITABLE TRUSTS BILL.—Sir G. GREY asked Mr. Hume to postpone until next session the further progress of the Charitable Trusts Bill. The principle of the bill had been argued, and the Government was disposed to give the subject its most careful consideration. Mr. HUME said he would postpone it [illegible] Wednesday next, and would then postpone it for the session if Government would undertake the care of it in the next session of Parliament.

[illegible] passed through Committee

[illegible] Washhouses Bill passed through Committee.

NEW WRIT. A new writ was ordered to issue for Dundalk, in the room of Mr. Redington, the Irish Under-Secre[illegible]

[illegible] the morning, the temporary Sugar Duties Bill, whi[illegible] [illegible] sent duties for one month, or until Parliament shall otherwise provide, was read a first time.

The House was "counted out" about five o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS —THURSDAY.

THE RELIGIOUS DISABILITIES BILL Lord LYNDHURST moved that the Religious Disabilities Removal Bill be committed for the purpose of introducing certain amendments. The noble and learned lord expressed a hope that her Majesty's Government would take charge of the bill —The Marquis of LANSDOWNE [illegible] the willingness of the Government to do so. The Bishop of LONDON [illegible] her Majesty's Government did take charge of the measure that they would postpone it until next session, as two parts of it were very objectionable. [illegible]r a few words from Lord LYNDHURST, their Lordships went into Committee on the bill, and the amendments were ordered to be printed.

On the motion of the Earl of Powis, the St. Asaph and Bangor and Manchester Dioceses Bill was read a third time and passed, and their Lordships adjourned at an early hour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS —THURSDAY

NEW MEMBER.—Mr. Brown was introduced by Mr. Th[illegible]ely and Mr. Brotherton, and took the oaths and his seat for South Lancashire, in the room of Lord F Egerton, now Earl Ellesmere.

LORD HARDINGE—The SPEAKER informed the House that he had received a letter from Lord Hardinge, Governor-General of India, acknowledging the receipt of the vote of thanks of Parliament, and expressing great pleasure that his services had given satisfaction to the Legislature. The second letter conveyed the satisfaction the army felt on receiving the vote of thanks of the House.

REPEAL OF THE UNION. Mr. O'CONNELL gave notice that early next session he should move for certain returns relative to the effect which the legislative union between Great Britain and Ireland had on the prosperity of the latter country, with a view of founding a motion for the repeal of the legislative union.

FAILURE OF THE POTATO CROP IN IRELAND.—Mr O'CONNELL said he wished to ask whether the Government had received any information relative to the anticipated failure of the potato crop in Ireland, and whether they intended to take any measures to meet the suffering which such an occurrence must necessarily occasion. Mr. LABOUCHERE said, that from various quarters, some private and some official, Government had received information, that although there was every prospect of an excellent harvest in those things which constituted the food of the people, yet with regard to the potato crop, the disease which produced such sad effects last year had made its appearance. With regard to the second question, as to whether Government intended to take measures to provide for the emergency, he hoped the House as well as the Honourable and Learned Member for Cork would see that it was highly important gentlemen should have time to consider a measure which ought not to be prematurely decided upon (Hear, hear.)

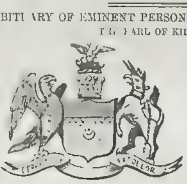
POSTPONEMENT OF THE RESOLUTIONS ON THE SUGAR DUTIES—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER took occasion to intimate that Lord John Russell would not be able to attend on Friday, as was proposed; and, therefore, the discussion of the Sugar Duties was postponed till Monday.

POOR REMOVAL BILL. Sir G. GREY moved the order of the day for going into Committee on the Poor Removal Bill. The right hon. Baronet said the Government intended to proceed with this measure without delay. Mr. WODEHOUSE said, as he understood that the Government intended to bring forward a more extended bill on the subject next session, he should now move, as an amendment, that the House go into Committee on this bill that day six months.

Mr. HUME was of opinion that the whole laws relating to the poor ought to be taken into consideration at the same time; he, therefore, felt bound to second the amendment for postponing the Committee for six months. Mr. S. WORTLEY supported the bill.—The bill ultimately went through committee, and the House adjourned.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

THE EARL OF KILKENNY.



EDMUND BUTLER, Earl of Kilkenny, and Viscount Mountgarrett, died at Ballyconra, his seat, in the county of Kilkenny, on the 16th instant. For many years his Lordship had suffered from mental disease, but the illness which caused his death was only of a few days' duration. By his demise, the Earldom of Kilkenny, which was conferred upon himself 20th December, 1793, becomes extinct; but the old title of Mountgarrett devolves on his nephew, Henry Edmond, now 13th Viscount, who was born in 1816, and married, in 1844, Frances Penelope, only child of Thomas Rawson, Esq., of Nidd Hall, county York.

The deceased Nobleman had completed his 75th year, and was a widower; his wife, Mildred, eldest daughter of Dr. Robert Fowler, Archbishop of Dublin, having died without issue, the 30th December, 1830.

This branch of the great House of Ormonde, was founded by the Hon. Richard Butler (second son of Pierce, Earl of Ormonde and Ossory) who was created Viscount Mountgarrett, in 1550: and died in 1571. His grandson, Richard, third Viscount, took up arms in 164[illegible], under an apprehension that the extirpation of the Catholics was in contemplation; and obtaining possession of the city of Kilkenny, was appointed General of the Irish forces. He was soon afterwards defeated by the Earl of Ormonde, at Kilrush, and forced to fall back upon Kilkenny, where he was chosen President of the Supreme Council, assembled there in the summer of 1642. From the time of this, the celebrated Lord Mountgarrett, the Butlers of Ballyconra have ever been conspicuous as leaders of the popular party in Ireland.

THOMAS GOOLD, ESQ., Q.C

THIS learned gentleman, whose death occurred on the 16th inst., at Lissadell, county Sligo, was formerly known as Sergeant Goold, and occupied for many years, a conspicuous position in the professional circles of Dublin. His call to the Bar bears date Trinity Term, 1791; and, from that period until his appointment to a Mastership in Chancery, he enjoyed extensive practice. Of his daughters, the second, Caroline-Susan, married, in 1830, Sir Robert Gore Booth, Bart.; and the third, Augusta, is the present Viscountess Adare.

The Rev. Charles Wordsworth, son of the late Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, and nephew of the eminent poet, has been appointed as Warden of the new Episcopal College at Perth. Immediately after the rev. gentleman's nomination was made known to him, he sent the munificent donation of [illegible] towards the funds of th[illegible]

THE ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY, on Wednesday last, awarded a medal [illegible] handsome pecuniary present, to Mr William Haviland, [illegible] manufactory of Messrs. John Penn and Son, Greenwich, in ap[illegible] merit in having saved two persons from being drowned in the Thames, [illegible] Greenwich, on Sunday morning, the 21st ult.

SCENES FROM THE WAR IN KAFFIRLAND.

WE resume our Illustrations, (from page 40 of our Journal of last week), with a Scene of Bush-fighting, such as is described at page 39. In the right-hand corner of the View are shown two Kaffirs stripping the body of one of their slain enemies; another is shouting with triumph; and, in the distant bush, a Kaffir is just falling beneath the fire of a Malay soldier; whilst, all around the conflict is "fast and furious."

The second scene shows a brave re capture of Ammunition Waggons by our troops, infantry and mounted.

A Correspondent of the Times, writing from Fort Beaufort, [illegible]

> The Kaffirs are entirely changed since the last war, by the general possession of fire-arms; they now come on boldly, and are most expert in bush fighting, which is the great thing in this horribly tangled country. In fact, they are a nation of tirailleurs and sharpshooters So the army have found to their cost. They lost half their bagg[illegible] and ran the gauntlet through thousands of these savages, banging at them from every bush that is, from almost every [illegible] country, and causing much loss and annoyance. A horrible feature of this warfare is the ferocity of the Kaffirs to the wounded: when one of our men is down [illegible]y rush at him in spite of guns, great and small, drag him off, rip hi[illegible]p, and [illegible] One unfortunate man they got hold of, they actually [illegible]ured waggons. We have found a much more [illegible] [illegible]hich promises a long and severe war; we [illegible] [illegible] them but I fear they [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the country in the night as the Kaffirs are less alert than in the day. Martial law has been proclaimed for the whole colony,

THE KAFFIR WAR.

KAFFIRS BUSH-FIGHTING.

and the Burgher force has been summoned from every district. Levies of Hottentots are also being made, who will be organised into provisional companies. In the meantime, large parties of Kaffirs are entering the colony above and below us, murdering stragglers and couriers on the roads, driving off cattle, and burning the detached farmhouses. There are constant skirmishes between them and the Burghers.

"The ammunition is the great attraction to them now. The adroitness with which they carry off cattle is almost miraculous; you never know they are near till they suddenly appear in the midst, and then, with a peculiar whistle, they make the beasts follow them with a run. They lie hid, and creep along, so that our sentries can seldom see them; only the Hottentots' eyes can match the Kaffirs, and detect them."

RESCUE OF THE AMMUNITION WAGGONS.

MR. EWART, M.P.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

MR. EWART, M.P.

National Education is becoming every day a more important question. it has forced itself into a Prime Minister's announcement of his policy. This result is owing in no slight degree to the exertions of such men as Mr. Ewart, Mr. Wyse, and others, who have gone beyond the comparatively narrow ground of party politics, and given social wants something of their study. Mr. Ewart has more faith in the efficacy of the Prussian system, and a greater admiration of it, than we can venture to express: perhaps, in a freer political atmosphere, the same education might be less detrimental to independence of thought, than it seems to be under the despotisms of Germany; but, with many of the hon. gentleman's objects and purposes we feel a perfect sympathy. The establishment of Public Libraries, with a free and not restricted access to them; the infusing new life and efficiency into the many Endowed Schools of the country, now nearly useless from a cause which Sir Robert Inglis reverences—a strict adherence to the "will of the founders" these are most practical things, pregnant of results, and not difficult to accomplish. What can be said in defence of such a state of things as the following statement reveals:—

"For a long time there had been a source of education in this country which had been nearly dried up and exhausted he meant the ancient grammar-schools, which, since the year 1819 had been the subject of inquiry by commissioners, who three years ago had presented their report, which had been laid before Parliament. It appeared that immense sums had been given to these schools by our ancestors, and that the Bank Stock, mortgages, and other personal property, were not less than £6,000,000 or £7,000,000; he knew not whether any portion of this fund could be properly applied to general education without interfering with the intentions of the founders. No Government, however, had yet introduced any bill to regulate them, except the Charitable Trusts Bill, which had been thrown out in the other house; but that some such measure was necessary was beyond all doubt. Certain he was, that the schemes of many of the grammar-schools might be extended in perfect accordance with the wills of the founders, for he found that some were founded to 'teach grammar, and other learning," others to 'teach grammar and other literature,' some to 'teach grammar and manners,' and another to 'teach grammar and other virtues,' terms sufficiently large to admit of a wide extension; and, indeed, under a recent act, the Court of Chancery had authorised the teaching of mathematics and the French language."

When these schools were established, they gave the learning of their time, and in proportion to the population were effective. We firmly believe, keeping the same proportion in view, that the people of Shakspeare's day were quite as well educated as they are now; we are confident there was not so much total and brutal ignorance; we have improved in manners, rather than in mind, among the masses. Before establishing new systems, we think it but reasonable to try and get the greatest amount of good out of the old. Other and kindred subjects have engaged Mr. Ewart's attention, particularly the Punishment of Death, for the abolition of which he makes an annual motion. The political events of the day have prevented him from bringing it forward this session. It is a question that is making its way in men's minds; but immediate success for the denouncers of the extreme penalty cannot be anticipated.

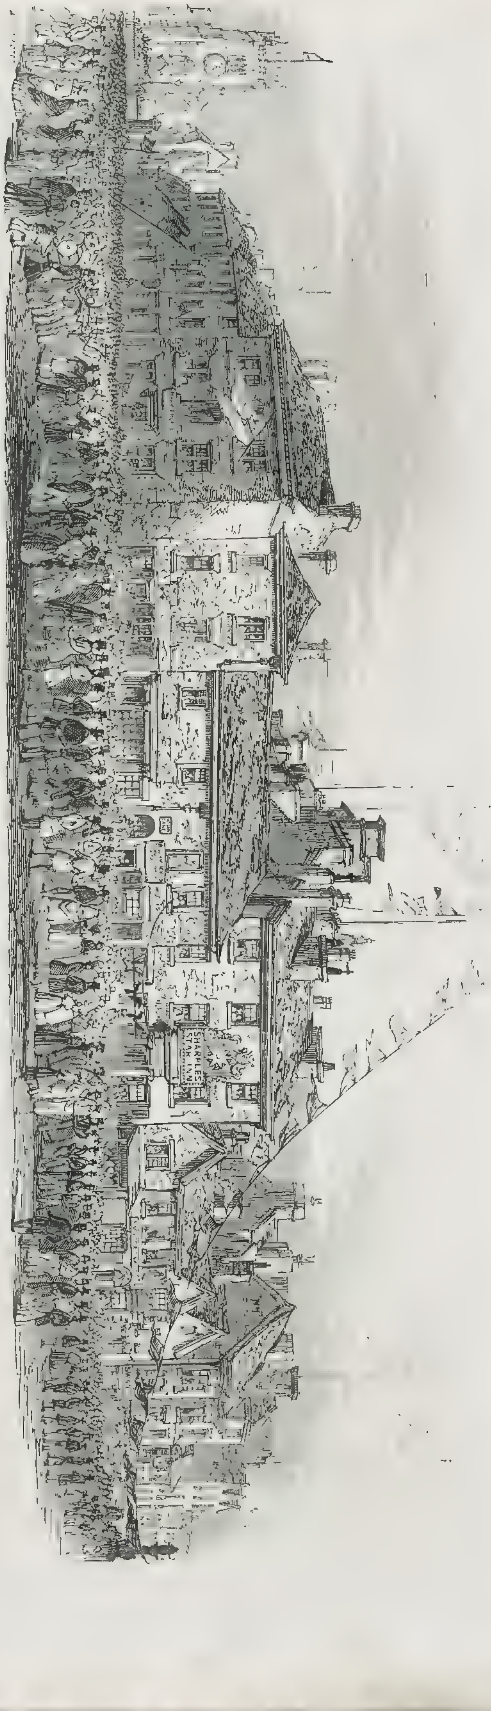
Mr. Ewart is the son of a merchant of Liverpool; he has received a legal education, and been called to the Bar. In politics he is one of the freer and more liberal section of the Whigs, approaching what in former days was called a Radical. He sits for the district of Dumfries; he has been in Parliament ever since the year 1830, having represented Liverpool, Bletchingley, and Wigan.

RE-OPENING OF SADLER'S WELLS THEATRE.

This very popular theatre will be re-opened for the season, to-night, with Shakspeare's play of "Henry IV.," Part I.; Mr. Phelps sustaining the part of Falstaff: the piece will be put on the stage after the manner of "King John" and "Henry V.," as produced by Mr. Macready.

We are happy to find that the success of the theatre during the two past seasons has stimulated the Managers to persevere in their exertions to preserve "the legitimate drama" intact, on their stage. During the recess, the auditory has been greatly improved, both in appearance and convenience. The pit has been considerably enlarged; and a dress circle of boxes has been planned with a separate entrance.

SADLERS' WELLS THEATRE, NEW ENTRANCE.



MASONIC PROCESSION AT BOLTON—CHURCHGATE.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Externally, various repairs have been made in the irregular old pile; and, a neat arcade or portico has been added to the pit and box entrances, which we have engraved. We now commend the managers' exertions to playgoers, with our best wishes for the prosperity of "the Drama's Home," which this little theatre may not inappropriately be termed.

GRAND MASONIC FESTIVAL IN LANCASHIRE.

The election of the Right Hon. the Earl of Ellesmere, (late Lord Francis Egerton), to fill the important office of Grand Master of the Freemasons of the Eastern Division of Lancashire, was celebrated with great ceremony at Bolton, on the 9th inst. From an early hour, the town was crowded with visitors from all parts of Lancashire, and adjoining counties. The Temperance Hall, Little Bolton, was fitted up for the occasion, and an organ placed in the gallery, at which Mr. George Pitt, of Manchester, presided. Notwithstanding the rain, which fell heavily during the morning, the members of the fraternity continued to arrive; and, when the business commenced, there were nearly 500 present.

At twelve o'clock, Stephen Blair, Esq., D.P.G.M., opened the Provincial Grand Lodge in due form, and an appropriate prayer was offered up by the Rev. Gilmour Robinson, P.G.C. for the Western Division of Lancashire.

The Deputy Grand Master then stated that the Earl of Ellesmere, the Provincial Grand Master of the Province, had been prevented from attending the meeting as early as was expected, in consequence of the consecration of the new Church at Worsley, by the Lord Bishop of the Diocese.

The usual annual business of the province having been transacted, intimation was given of his Lordship's arrival. His Lordship was installed with the customary pomp and ceremonies, the Right Worshipful Deputy Provincial Grand Master for West Lancashire, Brother John Drinkwater, taking the leading part in the business. The brethren having paid the usual homage, and the officers whom his Lordship had installed, having been similarly complimented, the Grand Lodge was duly and solemnly closed. The Craft Lodge was closed also, down to the first degree.

The business of the Lodge being thus concluded, the brethren proceeded to form in procession in front of the Temperance Hall. The weather, fortunately, had now cleared up, and the town presented a gay and animated appearance. The bells were ringing merrily, mingled with the roar of cannon firing a salute; flags were flying on various buildings in the town; and the streets were lined with thousands of spectators, from the Temperance Hall to the parish Church. Every window from which a glimpse could be had of the noble Provincial Grand Master, and the fraternity in general, was densely crowded, chiefly by Lancashire Witches, whose beaming countenances seemed to say that such a body of men could not be associated for any other purpose than a laudable one. At the Star Inn, Churchgate, a line of banners, of various descriptions, floated from the top of the Museum to the opposite side of the street, and in front of the house were hung up, chained to their perches, a number of beautiful paroquets, cockatoos, &c., of different colours, which had a very novel appearance. The Engraving shows this extremely gay scene, from a clever sketch, by a Correspondent.

The procession having entered the parish Church, the brethren occupied the body of the edifice, the galleries being left for the accommodation of the public. The evening service was read by the Rev. John Sheffield, of Rochdale. The Rev. Gilmour Robinson, P.G.C.W.L., preached a very excellent and appropriate sermon from the first epistle of Paul to the Thessalonians, 5th chap. and 22nd verse—"Abstain from all appearance of evil." After the sermon, a collection was made in aid of the funds of the Bolton Dispensary, amounting to the handsome sum of £30 3s.

At half-past five o'clock, the members of each Lodge formed in procession, and proceeded from the Temperance Hall to the Grand Banquet, provided in St. George's School, which was tastefully fitted up, and had a very pretty appearance, the walls, drapery, &c., being adorned with Masonic banners, emblems, &c. The banquet was provided by Mr. Ward, of the Swan Hotel, and both the provision and the wines were excellent. The number who sat down was about 300. The Provincial Grand Master, the Earl of Ellesmere, took the chair.

We regret that we have not space to report the entire proceedings. After the customary loyal toasts, the health of the Provincial Grand Master was proposed by the Rev. Gilmour Robinson; and his Lordship, in returning thanks, thus gracefully referred to his recent elevation to the Peerage. "Allusion had been made, by the reverend gentleman who proposed the toast, to the novel name which he would henceforth have to bear—viz., Ellesmere. [The company here rose, and cheered most enthusiastically.] He named the circumstance, not with any [illegible] as a matter suggestive of deeper and more honourable reflection. He alluded to it on account of the name with which he had now parted; and he could assure them, that, deeply as he estimated [illegible] the Crown, and greatly as his gratitude was called forth by that gracious condescension, he could not part with his old name without a feeling of regret. (Cheers.) He brought it with him as a stranger into this county, and he could not but remember that it was associated with the connections which then commenced, and had continued to the present time. He alluded not to any political connection, but to those of a resident lan[illegible], which were far more endearing than any mere [illegible] (Applause.) With that name he had succeeded in establishing, in his own neighbourhood, a mutual feeling of good-will, and that feeling towards himself he trusted he should not forfeit in parting with the name. (Continued applause.) The name he had now to adopt was one which had been dormant for centuries, and which, whilst it gave him a due sense of the honour conferred, would also impose upon him new duties, in the discharge of which he might hope to render himself more extensively useful to his fellow countrymen. (Applause.) It was in this sense that he reconciled himself to the assumption of a new name. (Continued applause.)"

The Earl of Ellesmere, previously to retiring, proposed "The Ladies," assuring them that there was nothing in Masonry inconsistent with due submission to our wives. (Great laughter, in which the ladies heartily joined.) He meant, of course, that degree of submission which was expected, and which, he trusted, would ever be exacted, in all well-regulated families. (Continued laughter.) At the same time, he was bound to say that there were some secrets which Masons were bound not to disclose; and he would recommend all his brethren to allay the fears of their wives or sweethearts by convincing them, by their conduct, that, in their secrets, there was nothing to lessen in any degree that devotion and admiration of the sex which form the happiness and the ornament of our [illegible] (Cheers.)

The noble Chairman retired at nine o'clock; and, after several more Masonic toasts, songs, and glees, the Lodge was closed, and the proceedings terminated at half-past ten o'clock.—Abridged from the Bolton Chronicle and the Preston Guardian.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, July 26.—Seventh Sunday after Trinity.
Monday, 27.—Revolution in Paris, 1830, lasted three days.
Tuesday, 28.—Robespierre guillotined, 1794.
Wednesday, 29.—Fieschi's "Infernal machine" exploded, 1835.
Thursday, 30.—Uranus rises at 9h 54m. p.m.
Friday, 31.—Greenwich Hospital founded, 1696.
Saturday, Aug. 1.—Lammas Day.

High Water at London-bridge, for the Week ending August 1.

[illegible]		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
4 [illegible]	4 37	[illegible]	[illegible] 10	5 26	5 43	6 2	6 21	6 42	7 4	7 29	7 7

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"W. C. E.," Dalkey.—The Still-room was an apartment in the mansions of Old England wherein distillation was conducted, when it formed part of our domestic economy; but the "Lady Bountifuls" and "strong waters" are out of date, or, rather, their charity is taken up by public institutions; and the Still-room now exists but by name in a few of the largest establishments of the English gentry.

"H. S.," Jersey.—The originality of the Painting will, in great measure, depend on the treatment of the subject.

"R. C.," Rotherham.—How droll!

"H. B.'s" (Windsor) hint as to the folding of our Journal shall receive attention.

"An Old Subscriber."—Toddington Park is the property of Lord Sudeley, whose elevation to the Peerage was a gracious act of homage by the Sovereign to Art, in thus ennobling one of its most distinguished patrons. The mansion at Toddington [illegible] 1835, from the designs of the noble owner, then C. H. Tracy, [illegible] Tewkesbury. It is in the style of the monastic edifices of the Middle Ages. An elaborate description of the mansion has been published by Mr. Britton, F.S.A.

"Z. Z. A."—Defacement of the coin of the realm, by gilding, or otherwise, is illegal.

"Nihil."—Next week.

"Grenadier."—We have not room for the French Revolutionary Names of the Months.

"A Housekeeper."—The price of "Soyer's Cookery" is One Guinea.

"Steam v. Water" should consult Baines's elaborate "History of the Cotton [illegible]

"A [illegible]ader" is thanked.

"[illegible]criber."—The appointment of a Gentleman-at-Arms is always ob[illegible]rchase, unless a death occurs; and then the vacancy is, we believe, in [illegible]ge, or, at all events, in the recommendation of the Captain. That [illegible] proper channel of application. The corps is composed of no class [illegible]

"[illegible] Peer, as [illegible]moner, can be "Premier." Lord [illegible] Grey, and a host of other noblemen, have held, at various periods, the office of Prime Minister. The transaction of public business requires that the Cabinet be composed of Members of both Houses of Parliament.

"Verax."—We do not think the fact of writing with the left hand would incapacitate a person from holding a clerkship, or situation under Government.

"T. R.," Donington.—A commission may, under particular circumstances, and through especial favour, be obtained without purchase. The price of an Ensign's commission is £450; and of a Lieutenant's, £700. Application should be made to Lord Fitzroy Somerset, Horse Guards.

"M. A. M."—At Mr. Hebeler's, the Prussian Consul, in Fenchurch-street, every information desired by our Correspondent is politely given.

"Hera[illegible]."—It is not at all necessary that the entry referred to by our Correspondent be made in the Records of the Heralds' College. Of course, as a matter of private feeling, it may be done, and at a small cost, if both the coats of arms be already recognised by the authorities there as correctly borne.

"L. B."—An application to "J. Burke, Esq., Author of the 'Peerage'," 25, Gower-street, London, will obtain for our Correspondent the genealogical information she requires.

"An Old Subscriber."—At the death, without issue, of G. J., the last male representative of an ancient family, the descendants of the four sisters of his paternal grandfather (there being no intermediate branches) would be entitled to quarter the arms of G. J. with their own paternal coat, although they inherited no property through the connexion. "Lysons's History of Devon," and "Pole's Collections," contain ample lists of the families of that County, together with the arms they are entitled to.

"Enquirer."—An action for sums under £20 is tried in the Sheriff's Court.

"Poeticus."—The present Somerset House was built about 1776, by Sir W. Chambers. The Tower of London was, indeed, used by Henry VIII., and for most atrocious purposes: the White Tower was built in 1078, and rebuilt in 1638: the other portions are of various dates. Our Correspondent's suggestion is under consideration.

"A Lover of Beauty."—Perhaps.

"R. A.," Hoxton.—To the next heir.

"W. L. W.," Plymouth.—The Monthly Prize Essays are published by Malcolm and Madden. The pressure of news has hitherto prevented our noticing this very commendable attempt to raise the character of our Periodical writing: it is full of originality and genius.

"A. P. A. B.," Edinburgh.—"Harding's Universal Stenography," price 3s. 6d.

"H. A. M.," Norwich.—"A Five Pound Note" was our Correspondent's nom de circonstance.

"J. A."—There are fourteen Asylums for Orphans, in the metropolis: the admission is mostly by election; for names and conditions, see the very useful volume—"The Charities of London," published by S. Low, Lamb's Conduit-street.

"Hibernicus."—We have not heard of the MSS. (Phœnician) stated by our Correspondent to be on view in London.

"D. B.," Cupar Fife.—We are not answerable for the pretensions of medical men.

"F. M. G."—Mrs. Keeley's maiden name was Goward: from her first appearance the lady became a favourite with the play-going public.

"W. K.'s" silly suggestion cost 1s. 4d. postage from Newfoundland!

"A Constant Reader."—Apply to Mr. Richard Taylor, the Printer, for information: we have not seen the work alluded to.

"W. B."—The Sardinian Chapel, in Warwick-street.—Taglioni has been married. The Orchestra of Her Majesty's Theatre amounts to 72.

"A Looker at the Paper."—Mdlle. Rachel is not married.

"G. C."—See the "Cyclopædia of Practical Receipts."

"A. F.," Enniskillen.—See our present Number.

"A Reader," Ayrshire, should advertise.

"W. B.," Weston-super-Mare, must be in error, or the omission was accidental.

"C. R.," Cambridge.—"Haydn's Dictionary of Dates," 18s.

"M. W."—The settlement will be legal.

"A Subscriber," Lyme Regis.—Sherry Cobbler is a mixture of ice, sherry, and sugar.

"G. J.," Manchester.—We cannot reply to our Correspondent's question.

"H. L. B. G.," Wexford.—The Mystery, Royal Thames Yacht Club yacht of 25 tons, the property of Lord Alfred Paget in 1844, when she was purchased by Lord Seaham, was, and is, undoubtedly, an iron boat; but whether our "mentioning" this will "settle a dispute" between our Irish friends is another affair.

Errata.—Among the Prize Implements at Newcastle, engraved in our last week's Journal, Garrett's Flour-Mill should be £25, not £5.—The Cattle Show was on the Moor, and not at the same place as the Great Pavilion, which a line beneath the first Engraving at page 48 might lead the reader to expect.

The number of lives lost at the East Wheal Rose Mine, by the recent inundation, was 40, not 43, as stated last week.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 25, 1846.

It is often observed that certain kinds of accidents come in numbers together: "one woe does tread upon another's heel." Thus, no sooner does a frightful railway accident happen in France, than we have one here, which fortunately did not equal the former in the extent of destruction. But all the elements of a catastrophe are to be found in the details: a little more speed, a little more weight in the train, and a few more passengers, and we should have had nothing to congratulate ourselves upon, on the score of the smaller loss of life at Stratford. When we see the certainty and safety with which trains travel, even at high speeds, on the best managed lines, and compare it with the continual uncertainty and irregularities on the line that has just afforded so striking an instance of mismanagement, it is impossible to avoid asking who are at the head of the establishment?

It adds nothing to the influence of the Railway King to hear that Mr. Hudson is the Chairman of a Board that permits more irregularity, and subjects the public to more risk, than any line in the kingdom. If he is King in anything but name, let him show his authority, and compel amendment. We suspect that parsimony or poverty—the second not improbably a consequence of the first—to be at the root of the evil. Labourers turned into drivers, messengers doing the duty of signal men, servants unacquainted with regulations they are bound to observe, trains behind time and before time, and everything going on seemingly without head or method, read very disagreeably as public statements. They will infallibly tell on the "dividends" unless amended; and if King Hudson can be affected by a diminution of the Royal revenue, there is in that fact some hope of a change.

There are no pleasanter places in or around the metropolis than those charitable refuges, which most of the guilds and trades of old, or benevolent individuals of various crafts, established for the "decayed" members of the body. The world goes not equally well with all, wealth is an uncertain good, while old age and sickness are evils sure in their coming; and, when poverty and sickness meet, at the time when the spring and strength of life are gone, how many would sink but for the aid which these asylums afford—an aid that may be taken without that feeling of shame or degradation with which the law of the land has invested poverty? They are pleasant even to the eye, generally wearing an antiquated appearance, a last century look, compared with the buildings around them, for the City has, in many cases, overtaken them, though they were built amid trees and fields. And we are glad to find that the disposition to raise these places of repose, these retirements from the whirls and eddies of the great stream of life, is not dead among us; it might be oftener exercised, perhaps, but it still exists, and in existence there is always hope for the better. The thought of the last house of all gives pause to many a man in the fierce chase of riches; but a dwelling may be needed for the dead in heart and hope, fallen in the struggle, for many a year ere the tomb opens for them. Could the successful—the "fortunate overmuch" of the world—make a better sacrifice of a little than in providing a refuge to which there is at least a possibility that they may come themselves?

The ancients believed that a prosperity too long continued was to be feared; and they would deprive themselves of something, in order to propitiate the power they supposed held the balance of good and evil fortune between man and man. Gratitude for great gains could not express itself in a better form than by raising a shelter for the victims of great losses. So the Booksellers seem to have thought; and, on Tuesday last, a "Retreat" for decayed members of the trade was opened at Abbots Langley. Sir Edward Bulwer-Lytton was present at the celebration of the event, and ad[illegible]d to the representatives of the "Row" a speech too full of [illegible] respecting another class of men—those who write the books the trader sells. The author's position is, in a worldly sense, far the worst of the two. Perhaps, when all parties are agreed on the theories and practice of commerce, something may be done among us for the thinkers; but, as yet, we are sadly deficient in the means of employing them to advantage. As the author of "Rienzi" publishes no more, what he says has a greater value; and, as we said before, in the following extract there is but too much truth:—

> It is a remarkable fact (and it proves much) that while in France, in Germany, in countries where suitable honours and provision await those distinguished in letters, the average lives of literary men exceed the standard of longevity, few in England, if without other resource than literature, attain to the natural age of man. Can you wonder at it? Why, what calling on earth so precarious, so beset with cares, so harassed by the disappointments of honourable ambition, as that of the English man of letters? Johnson sums up the curses of the scholar "in the patron and the gaol,"—we have lost the patron, we have kept the gaol.

And again:

> At a time when we have been specially invited to examine the wide field of Social Reform, this is one of the anomalies that demand our most serious consideration. When I see Burns, the great peasant, beside whom the crowns of kings grow pale, at an age before the schoolmaster was abroad and the diffusion of knowledge had become a vulgar-cant cry, devoting his generous energies to the establishment of libraries in the villages of Scotland, and then dying himself a broken-down exciseman,—when I see Haydon, amidst his difficulties and distress, yearning to diffuse through the empire that knowledge of the principles of art and design which is so essential to the excellence even of manufactures, and smitten by frenzy down to his bloody grave,—I do pause and ask if these things are worthy of England. I do pause and ask if it be not possible, by the institution of professorships upon the extended and liberal scale of Germany; by a more fair distribution of the honours which should belong to intellect, and the emoluments which should reward industry; to bring art and genius into the pale of available professions, and make those whose gloomy fate now only serves as a beacon to the young, their safe exemplar as well as their honoured teacher.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

RETURN OF THE COURT TO TOWN.

Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal Family have returned to town from the Isle of Wight.

On Wednesday, her Majesty and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Princess Royal, took an airing in an open carriage and four.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Kent and the Duke of Cambridge visited her Majesty on Wednesday.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback, on Wednesday, attended by Lieutenant-Colonel Seymour.

Sir William C. Ross, R.A., had the honour of taking a second sitting on Wednesday for a portrait of her Royal Highness the infant Princess, by command of the Queen.

THE ROYAL CHRISTENING.

The Lord Chamberlain, by her Majesty's command, has issued invitations for a grand banquet at Buckingham Palace, to-day, (Saturday), in honour of the baptism of the infant Princess.

The royal invitations to the banquet are confined to the principal members of the government, and the Duke of Norfolk, and the chief officers of State.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Gloucester, the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, the Duchess of Kent, the Prince George of Cambridge, and his Serene Highness the Prince of Leiningen, are to dine with her Majesty and the Prince Consort on the auspicious occasion.

It is probable that the King and Queen of the Belgians may arrive in this country, expressly to be witnesses at the solemnity.

The baptismal ceremony will be performed in the Royal Chapel at Buckingham Palace, when his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury will officiate.

We hear that the distinguished personages honoured with invitations are to assemble at the Palace at half-past six o'clock, and the christening is to take place previous to the banquet.

Her Majesty will have an evening party after the banquet, the Lord-Chamberlain having caused cards of invitation to be issued to above 300 personages of distinction. The hour appointed for the company to assemble is mentioned on the cards to be half-past nine, and that the company be in full dress.

Banquet at Devonshire House.—On Monday the Duke of Devonshire gave a magnificent banquet at Devonshire House to a large circle of Royal and distinguished personages. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, attended by Lady Caroline Murray, and the Hon. Captain Liddell, came precisely at eight. The Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, had previously arrived, attended by Lady Augusta Cadogan, and Mr. E. St. John Mildmay. His Royal Highness Prince George, attended by the Hon. Captain Macdonald, came at a few minutes after eight o'clock. The banquet was served at half-past eight o'clock, covers being laid for fifty-two. After dinner a grand concert took place, at which the leading Italian singers were assisted by some instrumental performers of the highest standing. A grand ball succeeded the concert.

Lady Wilde's Fete at Bowes Manor.—Lady Wilde gave a very elegant fête on Tuesday at Bowes Manor, her Ladyship's villa residence, near Southgate. The réunion was honoured with the presence of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, their Royal Highnesses the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, his Royal Highness Prince George, and a numerous circle of the leading members of the aristocracy. The beautiful grounds of the villa afforded a delightful promenade for the guests during the early part of the afternoon, and at [illegible] a superb [illegible] was served under a marquee erected [illegible] the lawn at the [illegible] of the mansion. The Royal party lunched with a select circle, covers being laid for eighteen only, in the dining-room. The Duke of Devonshire, the Duke of Wellington, the Duchess of Bedford, the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry, the Marchioness of Aylesbury, and Lord Lyndhurst were among those who had the honour of joining the Royal table. After the déjeûner, the marquee was converted into a salon de danse.

Sir Robert Graham.—The old Scotch title of Viscount Preston is about to be assumed by Sir Robert Graham, Bart., of Esk, in Cumberland, who is now residing at Cheltenham. The father of this very ancient Baronet succeeded his cousin Charles as fourth Viscount, in 1739, but not succeeding to the family estates (which are in the hands of Sir J. Graham, late Home Secretary) at his Lordship's decease, in 1774, his eldest son Charles allowed both the baronetcy and viscountcy to lie dormant: he dying in 1795, his next brother became heir, and in 1809 took up the inferior title of Baronet.

Departure of Ibrahim Pacha.—Ibrahim Pacha left England on Friday evening (last week) in the Avenger, in which vessel his Highness embarked at Spithead. The Mayor and Town Council of Southampton presented an address to his Highness before he left the Railway Hotel, which he very graciously acknowledged.

Proposed Aristocratical Marriage.—The Hon. Sydney Herbert, late Secretary of War, is soon to lead to the hymeneal altar Miss A'Court, daughter of Lord Heytesbury.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Cabinet Council.—A Cabinet Council was held, on Tuesday afternoon, at the Foreign Office. Lord John Russell, the Lord Chancellor, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Minto, Sir George Grey, Viscount Palmerston, Earl Grey, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir John Hobhouse, the Earl of Clarendon, the Marquis of Clanricarde, Viscount Morpeth, the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay, and the Right Hon. H. Labouchere, were present. The Council sat an hour and a half.

The Free-Trade Club.—The members of the Free-Trade Club celebrated by a banquet, on Saturday night, the passing of the Corn Bill. The [illegible] occupied the chair, and was supported by the Right Hon. T. M. Gib[illegible], M.P., Vice-President of the Board of Trade; Wm. Ewart, Esq., M.P., George M[illegible], Esq., M.P., H. Warburton, Esq., M.P., W. A. Wilk[illegible], Esq., James W[illegible], Esq., Dr. Cook Taylor, George Thompson, Esq., A. H. Wylee, Esq., and about sixty other members of the club.

Metropolitan Improvements.—The whole of the old and miserable dwellings on Saffron-hill and its vicinity are to be forthwith demolished, for the formation of the new street from the end of Farringdon street to Islington, which has been delayed till the result of the Parliamentary report on the Metropolitan Railway Termini should be known.

Changes in the Names of Streets.—The following streets have lately received different names from those they have generally been known by, causing a great deal of confusion to strangers, as well as the miscarriage of parcels, letters, &c. We therefore subjoin the more recent of the alterations for the information of our readers:—Charlotte-street, Bedford-square, and Plumtree-street, Holborn, are now called Bloomsbury-street; Hanover-street (Long Acre), Belton-street, and the Bowl-yard, are now united, and called Endell-street; Petticoat-lane, Whitechapel, now bears the name of Middlesex-street; Water-lane, Fleet-street, is now called Whitefriars-street; Monmouth-street, St. Giles's, is now Dudley-street; Leg-alley, Long-acre, is now Langley-court; and Phœnix-alley is Hanover-court; Charles-street, Covent-garden, is now called Wellington-street North.

Births and Deaths in the Metropolis.—The number of births in the metropolis during the week ending Saturday, July the 18th, was, males, 624; females, 638; total, 1,262, being the smallest number in any week for thirteen weeks. Deaths, 1,053, being the greatest number in any week for thirteen weeks, being also 155 above the average of five summers, and 86 above the average of five years. The mean temperature of the week was 64 deg. 9 min., being 1 deg. 4 min. above the average temperature of the corresponding week for [illegible] years.

Fatal Fire in the City.—On Sunday morning, shortly after three o'clock, a fire broke out on the premises of Mr. Fenn, chop and coffee-house keeper, 26, Newgate-street, City. Water was abundantly supplied, and the engines were worked without intermission, but not the least stay of destruction could be made until the premises of Mr. Fenn were completely destroyed, and great damage done also to the property of Mr. Mackenzie, a Berlin-wool dealer, adjoining. Mr. Fenn escaped by clinging to some timber at the back of his house, used for supporting those opposite while the sewer was under repair, from whence he was dragged by a City police constable into his window. One of the lodgers, however, named Cookson, was not so fortunate, for he jumped out of the window, and on being picked up, was conveyed to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, where every attention was paid to the case, but he died in the course of a few hours. Mr. Joseph Payne held an inquest on Tuesday evening, at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, on the body of the deceased, Mr. Cookson. The inquest on the body of the deceased involved also an inquiry into the cause of the fire. A great many witnesses, inmates of the house, were examined, but it could not be ascertained from what cause the fire arose. It was, however, generally believed to have commenced in the dust-hole on the ground floor. The evidence having proved the death of the deceased from the burns he received, a verdict was returned of "Died from burns received at a fire in Newgate-street, but how that fire was caused there was no evidence to show."

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. FRIDAY.

The House sat only for about an hour, and nothing of consequence occurred.

THE SUGAR DUTIES. Lord BROUGHAM gave notice that he should, on Monday next, present a petition on the subject of the Sugar Duties and the Slave Trade from Thomas Clarkson, a President of the Anti-Slavery Society. On the following day, he would state the course he intended to pursue with respect to the motion of which he had given notice.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

NEWLY ELECTED MEMBERS.—The O'CONOR DON took the oaths and his seat for Roscommon. Lord W POULETT took the oaths and his seat for St. Ives, in the room of W. Praed, Esq., deceased.

FLOGGING IN THE ARMY. Dr BOWRING gave notice that on the order of the day being read for going into Committee on the Army Estimates, he should move a resolution to the effect that flogging in the army be immediately abolished.

SUGAR DUTIES.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved the order of the day, for going into Committee on the Sugar Duties (No. 2) Continuance Bill.

Lord G. BENTINCK then rose, and having said he should postpone his former amendment till Monday, urged the Government to pass a bill on the same principle and on the same terms as the last, in order to afford the merchants engaged in the sugar trade some chance of escaping the ruin which would follow if the measure now proposed by the Government were [illegible]. The noble Lord concluded by moving an amendment to continue the present duties till the [illegible]h of July, 1847, instead of 5th of September, 1846.

This amendment was, of course, opposed by the Government.

On a division, the numbers were—

For Lord George Bentinck's amendment	38
Against it	121
Majority against the amendment	—83

The bill then went through Committee.—Report on Monday.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON'S STATUE. Mr. C. BERKELEY moved that an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying her Majesty to withdraw her consent to the placing of the statue of the Duke of Wellington upon the archway at the top of Constitution-hill.—Mr. H. BAILLIE seconded the motion.—Lord MORPETH said he must confess that he had some misgivings as to the propriety of erecting the statue at the place intended. He could wish [illegible] the subscribers would amongst themselves consent to some other site; but as her Majesty's approval had been obtained to erect the statue on the arch at Hyde Park, it was difficult to say what ought to be done.—Eventually, the proposal of Mr. C. Berkeley was withdrawn, on the understanding that the Government would take some steps in the matter.

A debate then took place on the contract with Mr. Cunard for the North American [illegible] of steamers, for which Government agreed to grant a committee of [illegible]

Mr. T. DUNCOMBE moved for a committee to investigate certain charges against the Governor of Milbank Prison for alleged cruelty and mal-administration, on which a division took place—

For the motion	10
Against it	56
Majority against	46

The House then went into Committee of Supply. Sir R. INGLIS moved a vote of £45 000 for the British Museum.

The Navy Estimates were next brought forward by Mr. WARD; and, after a very conversational debate, the House resumed, and adjourned.

WINDSOR, Friday Evening. (From our own Correspondent.)—The whole of the gentlemen of the Chapel Royal (many of whom also hold the appointments of lay clerks at St. George's Chapel) have received the Royal commands to be [illegible] Christening of the Infant Princess, at Buckingham Palace, to-morrow evening. Those residing at Windsor left for town, this morning, for the purpose of attending a rehearsal of the sacred compositions (and especially a piece by the Prince Consort) which will form part of the musical service. The rehearsal was to take place at Buckingham Palace this day, at two o'clock. The choristers of the Chapel Royal will also be present. Her Majesty's private band, under the leadership of Anderson, which will perform in the Grand Saloon, will be reinforced by several of the members of the Philharmonic Society, at the Concert which will take place at the conclusion of the Banquet. It was expected, when the Court left the Isle of Wight, that it would return to Osborne House after the expiration of about a fortnight. It is now stated that the period of the departure of her Majesty and the Prince Consort from Buckingham Palace, for the Sovereign's marine re[illegible], will greatly depend upon the issue of certain political events, which is, at present, considered to be a matter of extreme uncertainty. In consequence of the expected speedy return of the Court, at its departure, to Osborne House, the whole of the Royal equipages and stud of horses were left at the Isle of Wight (instead of [illegible] removed to Windsor), to await the arrival of the Sovereign and Prince Albert. It is stated that her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, and his Serene Highness the Prince of Leiningen (who is now on a visit to her Majesty), will return to the Continent with the King of the Belgians, who is hourly expected to arrive at Buckingham Palace, to be present at the christening of the infant Princess.

RE-ELECTION FOR ROSCOMMON. The O'Conor Don has been returned for Roscommon, without opposition.

MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE. On Thursday the marriage of Lord Lindsay, eldest son of the Earl and Countess of Balcarras, with Miss Margaret Lindsay, eldest daughter of the Honourable Colonel James Lindsay, of Balcarras, was solemnized at St. George's Church, Hanover-square.

WILL OF THE LATE CHIEF JUSTICE TINDAL.—Probate of the will and codicil of the late Right Hon. Sir Nicolas Conyngham Tindal, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of Common Pleas, has been granted to his executors, Charles John Tindal, James Whatman Bosanquet, and Daniel Smith Bockett, Esqrs. The personal estate was valued at £45,000. His will was made in Sept. 1842. He has devised certain freeholds at Chelmsford and Aylesbury to his eldest surviving son, Louis Symonds Tindal, and his only other son, Charles John Tindal; and has directed his executors and trustees to dispose of and convert into money the rest of his freeholds, with all manors and hereditaments, and all other estates, real, leasehold, or per[illegible]. Bequeaths to his daughter, Merelina, wife of the said J. W. Bosanquet, a legacy of £2000 having amply provided for her on her marriage. Directs his executors to invest £8000 for the widow of his son Nicolas, and their two infant daughters, and has also made provision for other members of his family; has left legacies to his servants, and, by his codicil, made in February last, leaves to his faithful housekeeper, who has been thirty years in his service, an annuity of £40. The residue of his property, of every description, to be equally divided between his two sons.

DEATH IN A RAILWAY TUNNEL.—On the first day of the Maidstone Assizes, a gentleman, engaged in a civil action, was proceeding by the South-Eastern Railway to Maidstone, when, in passing through the Merstham Tunnel, a fellow-passenger, sitting opposite to him, was astonished at finding his neighbour suddenly thrown into his lap, and apparently unable to recover his place. What was his horror on emerging from the tunnel to discover that he was dead! An inquest was held on the body on Wednesday, when a verdict was returned of Died by the Visitation of God.

THE ACCIDENT ON THE EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY.—We are sorry to announce the death of one of the sufferers through the frightful accident which occurred on the Eastern Counties Railway (See page 55). In the list of injured passengers is mentioned, not by name, a gentleman living at Victoria Villas, Dalston, who was said to have sustained a concussion of the brain. This [illegible] died yesterday morning, about half-past nine o'clock, at his residence [illegible] of the above-named villas. His name was Mr. Hind, principal in the [illegible] of Hind and Son, silk-fringe manufacturers, in Wood-street, Cheapside, and well known and highly respected throughout the London and Coventry silk [illegible] It was by the merest chance that he happened to be on the ill-fated line. He had left his home for a walk on Saturday afternoon, between two and three, in high health and spirits, and being opposite the station in Shoreditch just as a train was on the point of starting, suddenly determined to take a run as far as [illegible] back

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

TURKEY AND PERSIA. The long-pending dispute between Turkey and Persia [illegible] finally settled. Mohamra, on the Persian Gulf, is restored to Persia, and the Sandjak of Soolimanieh is to be retained by Turkey.

AUSTRALIA. The last Indian Mail has brought to the Royal Geographical Society the gratifying intelligence from Singapore, of the arrival of Dr. Leichardt and his party at Port Essington, after sixteen months' journeying in the desert, during which they experienced privations and difficulties seldom met with and overcome. In the neighbourhood of Carpentaria, Mr Gilbert, the naturalist, and Mr. Calvert, having been separated from the main body, went to sleep on the ground without keeping watch: they were surprised by the natives, and Mr. Gilbert was first speared, and then his brains were dashed out with a club; Mr. Calvert, although speared in both legs, managed to rejoin his party. They at length reached Port Essington, on the 2nd of December, 1845, and were most hospitably received by the commandant, Captain Macarthur. After a six weeks' sojourn to recruit, they sailed for Sindey in the Heroine.

DEATH OF AN IR[illegible]TER IN CHANCERY.—The Dublin papers announce [illegible]e persons named as likely to succeed [illegible] Judges of Assize on the Munster Cir[illegible] r the East Riding of Cork County; and [illegible]r for the County of Tipperary.

INAUGURATION OF [illegible] MONUMENT.—The Committee of Management of the Sir Walter Scott Monument are sparing neither labour nor expense to render the celebration of the next birth day of the illustrious author one of the most memorable in the annals of Edinburgh. It is proposed that the Grand Masonic Lodge shall meet in the High School, and the procession will be formed in the school grounds, where they will be joined by the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Council, attended by the High Constables and the other public bodies. The members of the Original Subscription Committee and the Auxiliary Subscription Committee are expected to muster, almost to a man, to do honour to this, the successful termination of their labours. Several of the trades are already about [illegible] meetings preparatory to making arrangements for joining in this public demonstration to the memory of one of the most talented and worthy sons of Caledonia. It is proposed that they should meet in the Queen's Park in the forenoon, and walk in procession to the High School gate, to meet the other part of the procession. The inauguration is to take place on the 15th of August.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

THE ALLEGED DEATH OF A SOLDIER FROM FLOGGING, AT HOUNSLOW.

On Monday, Mr. Wakley, M.P., resumed the long investigation, at the George the Fourth Inn, Hounslow Heath, respecting the death of Frederick John White, a private in the 7th Hussars, which was alleged to have been caused by punishment inflicted under the sentence of a court-martial for insubordination, the principal charge against him being that he had struck his sergeant across the breast with a poker.

Mr. Wakley appealed to the brother of the deceased man as to his age.

It appeared that he was born in January, 1819, and that he was consequently in his 27th year.

George Sparkes, of the 7th Hussars, deposed that he was present on the 15th of June, when the deceased was punished for the crime of which he had been found guilty, the punishment having taken place in the riding school, in the presence of the whole of the regiment. The punishment was inflicted by two farriers, named Critton and Evans, both of them being attached to the regiment. Deceased was fastened to a ladder, which was nailed to the wall of the riding school.

Colonel Whyte, the commanding officer, sent in a request that he might be permitted to attend, but Mr. Wakley peremptorily refused.

The witness, in reply to questions put to him by Mr. Wakley, and Mr. George Ireland Mills, the Deputy Coroner, proceeded to say that in addition to the military persons who were called to witness the punishment, Dr. Warren, the regimental surgeon, was present, and stood three or four yards from the deceased man. The "cat" was first taken by the senior farrier, who inflicted 25 stripes out of the 150 to which the deceased man was condemned. The second farrier then took the whip and inflicted the next 25 stripes, and so it continued until 100 stripes had been inflicted. The "cats" were then exchanged for new ones, with which the remaining 50 stripes were given. The stripes followed in quick succession, the whole number occupying less than half an hour.

By order of the Coroner, the "cats," or whips, used for flogging in the 7th Hussars, were here produced. There were five of them, two being tolerably new, the other three being discoloured with blood. The handles were about eighteen inches long, and the thongs nearly as long.

The witness, on examination, by the Coroner, said the principal wounds were received between the shoulders. While he was being flogged, the deceased man maintained perfect silence, except asking for a drink of water after the first twenty five stripes had been administered. This was given him out of a quart pot. When he had received 100 stripes, he cried "Lower, lower;" but he (the witness) did not perceive that any attention was paid to the entreaty. When the 150 lashes had been administered, deceased was released from the ladder, water was thrown on his shirt which was placed loosely upon him, and over that a cloak. He then walked deliberately to the hospital, undressed himself, and went to bed. To his wounds, lukewarm water and rags were applied. During the course of the punishment, several of the men fainted, and were carried off the ground.

By the Coroner: After the deceased had left the riding-school, Colonel Whyte said something about its being a brutish affair.

The Coroner: Use the Colonel's own words. Witness: Colonel Whyte addressed the whole regiment in a loud voice, and said he was sorry that such a brutish exhibition should be performed in the regiment; but when the deceased came out of the hospital, his comrades might tell him that whenever he was again guilty of such like offence, he should have the same punishment, as he was determined to put a stop to such conduct in the regiment. The Colonel meant the conduct of White towards the sergeant.

Thomas Pegg, examined: I am a private in the 7th Hussars; was in the hospital as a patient when the deceased was brought in for treatment for the injuries to his back. Had never before seen a man in that state. The deceased complained of the severity of the punishment. The skin was broken, and it was bleeding. I can't compare it to anything else but like a person cut to pieces. It was a most severe flogging in my opinion.

A Juror: That's right, my man: speak your mind.

John Thomas Mathewson, examined: I am a private in the 7th Hussars. Was present when deceased described the pain to the surgeon. Dr. Warren said to deceased, "How are you, White?" That was on the Wednesday before his death. Deceased made no answer. Dr. Warren immediately [illegible], cheer up, it was for no disgraceful crime that you were punished." White then said, "This is through the lash that has caused my illness." The doctor made answer, "I know it is," three several times. He did not explain what he meant by this.

Other soldiers of the regiment were examined at considerable length. Their evidence went to show that the deceased had been publicly flogged, that the surgeon did not attend him until the day after he was sent to the hospital, that he complained of severe pains in the chest and side, resulting, as they believed, from the injuries he had received, and that at last death relieved him from all bodily suffering.

The Coroner remarked that a large piece of skin had been cut out of the back [illegible] Jury.

Mr. Potter produced it [illegible] appearance of a large piece of common leather.

Mr. Horatio Day, of Isleworth, surgeon, in answer to a question from the Coroner, said he had compared the piece of flesh now produced with the piece cut out of the body, but they did not at all correspond.

The respective witnesses were subjected to a like examination, and said that they had seen the back of White before he died, and that the piece of flesh bore little resemblance to the lacerated portion of his back, which was covered with boils some days before his death.

The inquest was adjourned till Monday next.

On Wednesday morning the body was exhumed, pursuant to the Coroner's warrant, and examined by Mr H. G Day, of Isleworth, and Mr. Erasmus Wilson, Lecturer on Anatomy at University College, who had been appointed by Mr. Wakley to make the examination in conjunction with Mr. Day. While these gentlemen were thus engaged, Mr. Hall, and Dr. Reid, the surgeons of the military medical staff, by whom the first post mortem examination of the body had been made by direction of the Horse Guards, entered the churchyard, but were stopped, and informed by Sergeant Jeeks that he had the Coroner's orders not to permit any persons but the two surgeons operating and the parochial authorities to be present at the examination. The examination of the body was proceeded with by Messrs. Wilson and Day. Of course the result will not be permitted to transpire until it is given in evidence at the adjourned inquest.

ALARMING AND FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY.

Last Saturday afternoon, an accident of a very dreadful character, whereby nearly twenty persons were more or less seriously injured, and two or three, it is feared, fatally so, occurred on the Eastern Counties Railway.

The scene of the accident was the Stratford Station, on the Colchester line, the melancholy occurrence arising from a train of empty trucks having been driven into a passenger train while stopping at that station. This station is situated about three miles and a half from Shoreditch, and about 500 yards below the point where the Cambridge line diverges. In the immediate vicinity of the station the railway is on a level, but a few yards further east it enters a shallow cutting, perhaps half a mile in length. A bridge is thrown across the line within a few yards of the station, immediately after passing which the railway makes a curve of considerable radius. At a distance of about 300 yards another bridge is thrown across the line, which latter, however, is not visible from the station. A signal on Halle's principle is erected about 150 paces from the second bridge, and this is intended as a guide to all drivers traversing the up-line. The signal may be seen by drivers about fifty yards before reaching the second bridge from the station, but the station itself is not visible until some distance further down the line, nor could any train stationary thereat be observed from the point referred to.

The accident occurred between four and five o'clock in the afternoon. The up-train from Ipswich, due at Stratford at 56 minutes past three, did not arrive at that station until some minutes after its usual time. Several passengers had alighted, others were in the act of entering carriages, and the engine-driver was taking in a supply of water, when a train was observed passing the signal-post before alluded to, and coming rapidly towards the station. Mr. Richardson, the station master, was upon the platform at this moment, superintending the dispatch of passengers, &c. The noise of the approaching train at once attracted his attention, and, looking eastwards, he saw the imminent danger in which the passengers of the stationary train were placed. He immediately ran towards the engine, intending to induce the driver to go on with the train then at the station; but, before he could explain his object, the collision took place, and, on returning along the platform, a scene presented itself which almost baffles description.

The train, which but a moment previous, had consisted of seven or eight first and second-class carriages and two horse-boxes, now presented little more than a mass of broken framework and rubbish. A second-class carriage which had been attached to the train at Romford, and placed in the rear of the two horse-boxes, was knocked to pieces, and the unfortunate passengers which it had contained, were seen, bleeding and wounded, lying about the railway in various directions among the fragments. Two other second-class carriages were so crushed as to be rendered entirely useless, scarcely one of their hapless inmates escaping some serious fracture or contusion, and of the remaining carriages, all [illegible]ss broken, and their inmates seriously shaken and [illegible]ise in[illegible] [illegible] in a very few minutes Messrs. Elliott, Vi[illegible] Vallance, and Kennedy, all medical gentlemen residing at Stratford, were upon the spot vying with each other in their attention to those wounded.

The worst cases were forwarded with as little loss of time as possible to the London Hospital, and some persons, also very seriously injured, after being medically attended, were sent, by their own request, to their respective residences.

The following is a list of the sufferers:—

Mr. William Millward, bandbox-maker, Bethnal-green, the large toe of the left foot cut off and otherwise much mutilated.

Henry Olive, one of the company's porters, a fracture of the right leg.

John Smith, one of the company's porters, chest and back much injured.

William Prentice, porter, a very bad fracture of the leg.

Mr. Hiram Morris, Hoop Inn, Deptford, the left foot partly cut off, and the right jaw much injured.

Mr. Richard Murphy, Hendon, Middlesex, solicitor, contused left leg.

[illegible]

James Stone, gentleman's servant, a severe contused face.

The following persons were sent to their own residences, after having been attended to by the medical gentlemen at the station:—

Mrs. Payne, of Ilford, Essex, a comminuted fracture of the two bones of the left leg below the knee.

Mrs. W[illegible] fracture of the left thigh and dislocation of the small [illegible]

Mrs. Brombey, a cont[illegible]

A gentleman residing at Chelmsford, leg seriously injured.

A gentleman living at Victoria Villas, Dalston, a concussion of the brain.

It is a somewhat extraordinary circumstance in connexion with the accident, that none of the carriages which retained their wheels, nor the engine which caused the accident, were thrown of the rails, nor were the rails themselves injured in the slightest degree. The engine, after striking the last carriage mounted on its ruins, and remained in this position until forcibly removed, when it fell over and slightly injured the platform of the station. It was, however, again placed on the rails, and removed without further difficulty.

Mr. Roney, the Secretary of the Company, with great dispatch commenced investigation into the origin of the accident. With that view he summoned together all such persons as, from their respective duties when the collision took place, were likely to know anything of the circumstances.

Mr. Richardson, the station master, stated that the [illegible] P.M. up-train from Ipswich, usually arriving at the Stratford Station at 56 minutes after three, was 20 minutes behind its usual time on Saturday. A cattle train from Colchester had just been cleared off into the siding, when the passenger train arrived. The passenger train was about starting for London, when witness observed a train of empty trucks approaching the station. Witness ran towards the driver of the passenger train; but, before witness could reach the engine, the collision had occurred, and the fireman of the passenger train was thrown off the engine on to the railway. Mr. Richardson further described the manner in which the carriages were destroyed, and passengers thrown about the line. The servants at the Stratford Station (Colchester branch) consist of a foreman, a porter, a goodsman, a signal and point man, and a lad about 18 years of age, who does errands and other work. When the collision took place, the regular signal man was attending to the cattle train on the siding, and the signal was in charge of the youth alluded to. The signal-man had left his duty to attend the cattle train by witness's order, and witness had directed the lad to watch the signal. Witness saw the lad lower the fan properly after the Ipswich train had passed, as a signal for no other train to approach.

Edward Unwin, the youth above alluded to, stated that he was on duty at the windlass communicating with the signal post when the Ipswich train arrived, and he positively averred that, after it had passed, he put down the signal to denote that no other train should pass.

At the close of the investigation, Mr. Roney announced that William Clare, the driver of the truck train; William Quentin, the stoker; Thomas Green, the signal-man; and an under foreman, named Nicholson, who was riding upon the engine of the truck train when the collision took place, had all been given into custody, they appearing to be the four persons through whose negligence the accident had occurred.

It is a fact worthy mention, that the signal referred to differs from those now employed on any other line of railway. The person in charge is stationed at a windlass, distant from the signal-post upwards of 300 yards, and the only communication therewith is by a rope, partly of wire and partly of yarn. It is a very easy matter to draw up the signal—not so, however, to lower it.

Sir John Tyrell, Bart., Mr Cotton, late Governor of the Bank, and several other well-known gentlemen, are also described to have been passengers in the same train.

Mr. Hudson, M.P., Chairman of the Company, was on the spot at seven o'clock on Sunday morning, making a minute examination of the spot where the accident occurred. The hon. member was accompanied in his investigation by Mr. Richardson, the station-master.

On Monday morning Messrs. Davis and Mashiter, county magistrates, assembled at the Great Ilford Gaol, Essex, to investigate charges preferred by the Eastern Counties Railway Company, against William Clare, engine-driver; William Quentin, stoker; Thomas Green, a signal-man; and Henry Nicholson, [illegible]r foreman in the locomotive department, for negligently causing the fearful accident on the above line on Saturday afternoon, whereby many of the lives of [illegible]r Majesty's subjects had been seriously injured, and placed in imminent danger. Captain Coddington, the Deputy Government Inspector of Railways, was present watching the proceedings. On the part of the company Mr. Roney, the secretary; Mr. Samuels, resident engineer; Mr. Scott, the superintendent of the line; and Mr. Widdecombe, the solicitor, attended. Mr. Rawlins, a solicitor, of Romford, appeared for the prisoners. After hearing evidence to the effect of the statements above given, the magistrates decided upon committing the prisoners to the quarter sessions for trial, and refused to take bail.

Captain Coddington, the Deputy Inspector-General, proceeded immediately after the termination of the judicial inquiry, to make a minute inspection of the Stratford Station, to measure the distance from the station to the signal-post, and to collect all the information possible, to enable him to make a report to the Railway Department as to the cause of the accident.

LAMENTABLE ACCIDENT ON THE MIDLAND RAILWAY.—A fatal accident took place on Wednesday (last week), near the Barnsley Station, whereby John Salter, aged twenty-nine, a cloth-dresser, in the employ of Messrs. Gott, at Bean Ing, near Leeds, was killed on the spot, and Mr. Robert Neale, of the Bull and Mouth Tap, Briggate, received such severe injuries, that he died soon afterwards. The deceased (John Salter), along with Mr Neale, and other friends, left Leeds with the first of two special trains, conveying the members and friends of the Leeds Mechanics' and Literary Society, on a pleasure-excursion to Wentworth House, the seat of Earl Fitzwilliam. Salter, shortly before the accident, was standing upon the end of the centre seat of the carriage (a third-class one), Mr. Neale being immediately behind him, with his back to the end of the carriage; and, as the train was approaching the Barnsley Station, the steam being turned off to slacken the speed, caused a sudden jerk of the carriages one against the other, which threw Mr. Neale backwards, and, in his endeavours to recover himself he caught at Salter, and pulled him over the end, both falling down between the carriages. Salter, who was killed on the spot, was mutilated in a very dreadful manner, several carriages passing over his body. Salter has left a wife and one child; and Mr. Neale was a widower, with two children.

EXTRAORDINARY SUICIDE BY A CHILD. The Cambrian (a Swansea paper) of the 9th of last month, announced the suicide by hanging, in a loft over the stable, of a person named John Thomas, residing at Cowbridge. On Tuesday (last week) his son, a child about seven years of age, was found lifelessly suspended by the very beam on which his father had terminated his existence. It is supposed that the child, whose curiosity had been excited by hearing people describe the manner in which his father came to his death, had proceeded to the loft with the view of making experiments. It appears he did so with the same fatal result.

THE RE-ELECTIONS.—Since our last the following members have been re-elected:—Lord Morpeth, for the West Riding of Yorkshire; Thomas Maitland Esq., for Kirkcudbright; C. Buller, Esq., for Liskeard; the Hon. Colonel Anson, for Staffordshire. In addition to these, William Brown, Esq., has been returned for South Lancashire, in the room of Lord Francis Egerton, now Baron Ellesmere. Lord Powlett, brother of the Duke of Cleveland, has been elected for St. Ives.

THE DAGUERREOTYPE.—We have recently witnessed the great improvements made by M. Claudet, in his Daguerreotype portraits. By the assistance of M. Mansion, a very clever miniature painter, M. Claudet is enabled to give a life-like appearance to his portraits, by an after process of colouring, so as not only giving the natural hue to the flesh, &c., but, at the same time, to take away the glare of light reflected in the ordinary Daguerréotype plates. M. Claudet has likewise executed portraits on paper by the Talbotype process, which, when touched by M. Mansion, have the exquisite finish of sepia drawings.

FINE ARTS.

DIANA SURPRISED BY ACTÆON.

WE have engraved Mr. Frost's clever picture in the present Exhibition of the Royal Academy. To the entry in the Catalogue is appended the following epigraph:

> [illegible] a vale, with pine and cypress cl[illegible]
> Refreshed with gentle winds, and brown with shade
> (The chaste Diana's private haunt.)
>
> * * * * *
>
> Here the bright Goddess, toiled and chafed with h[illegible]t,
> Was wont to bathe her in the cool retreat
>
> * * * *
>
> Here did she now with all her train resort,
> Panting with heat, and breathless from the sport;
>
> * * * *
>
> W[illegible] Actæon, wildered in the wood,
> To the cool grot by his hard fate betrayed.
>
> OVID'S Metamorphoses.

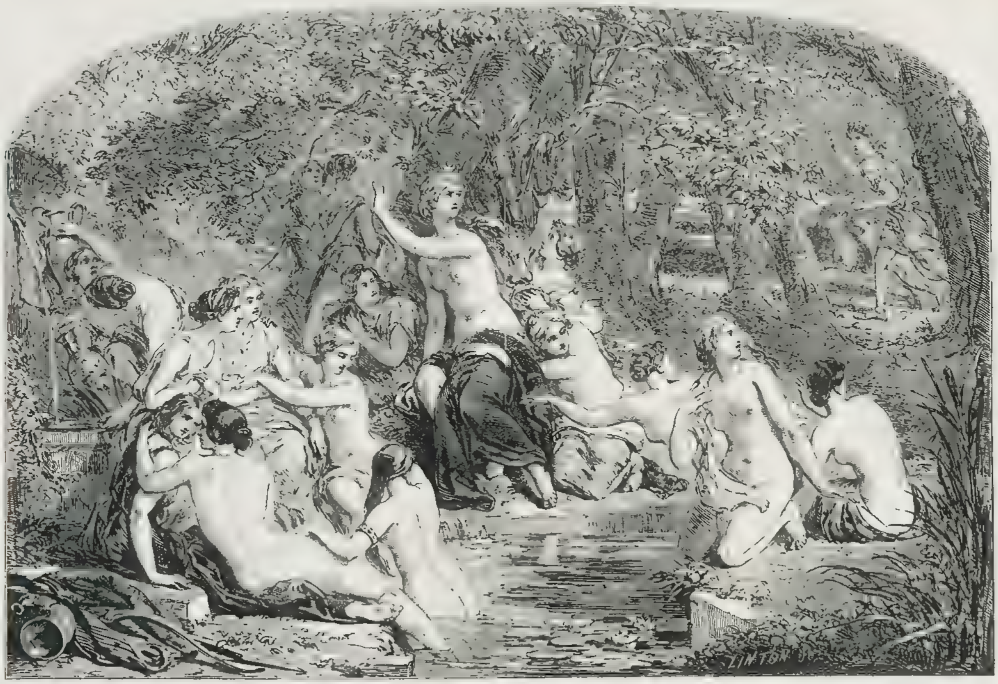
"REPOSE."—PAINTED BY GAINSBOROUGH.

THIS exquisite specimen of Gainsborough's talents as a Landscape Painter, is probably, one of the finest pictures he ever executed. The materials of the composition are simple, consisting of three cows, neither of them remarkable for their beauty; two very old and seemingly overworked horses, a ruined cistern or well, some trees, and a very little "bit" of distance; yet, how marvellous is the effect of the whole! The grouping of the cattle, the lights on the clouds and horse, and the general forms of the trees, are most skilfully arranged; the style of colouring and the touch are in Gainsborough's happiest manner—transparent, rich, and forcible, in the highest degree. The sentiment of the picture is preserved throughout, with the utmost nicety of feeling; for the evening tone of the atmosphere—[illegible] quiet of the trees, which are evidently undisturbed by the faintest [illegible]my, half-shut eyes of the cow, and old Dobbin—and the sound slumber of the herdsman, who has stretched his "listless length" on the grassy sward—all betoken a complete state of "Repose," which even the clouds do not interfere with, as they are evidently creeping along in the blue ether. The shattered tree in the foreground was an after-thought of Gainsborough, as there exists an impression from an etching which the Painter made of this very subject, but in which the tree in question was not introduced, nor the herdsman stretched on the grass. On comparing the etching with the picture, the improvement made in the general harmony of the whole group by the introduction of this tree, is strikingly apparent. The vigorous style in which the thought was transmitted to the canvass is admirable, as though the thought and painting were the work of a mom[illegible]

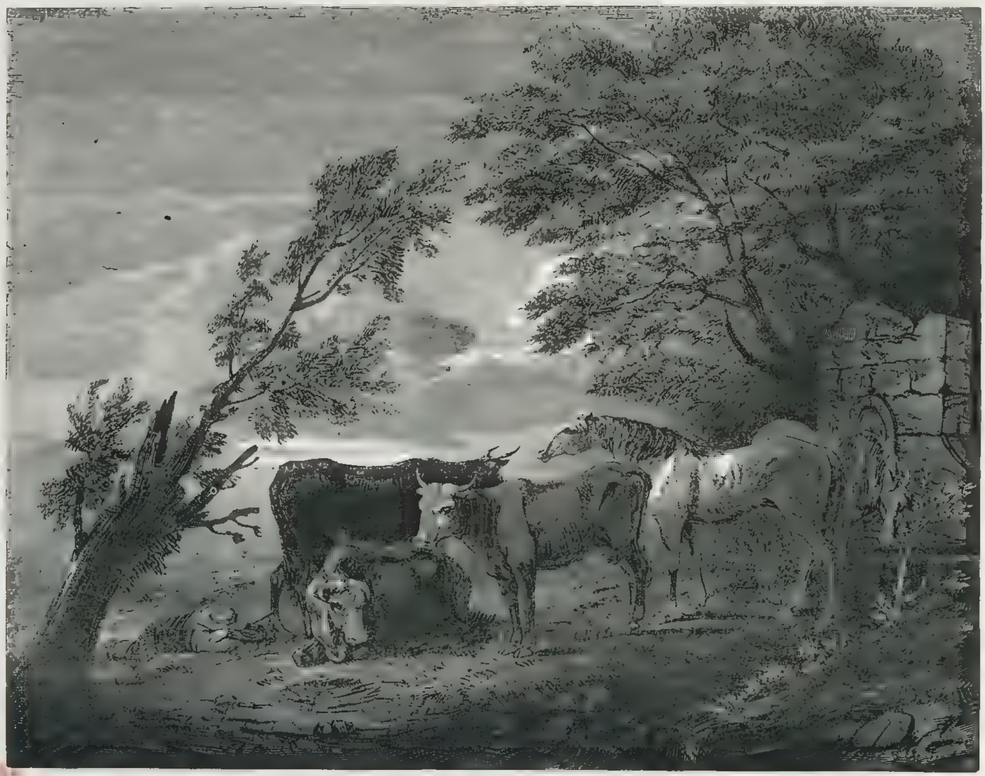
This beautiful picture having been in private hands, prevents much history being attached to it, beyond the simple fact of its having been bequeathed by the Painter to his favourite daughter, as his best production. It was highly prized by the lady, who refused large sums for its purchase; but, at length, friendship accomplished what money failed to do, and she gave the painting, long before her death, to the late possessor, then residing with her at Acton. They who knew Sir George Beaumont, who remember his pilgrimages to see

FINE ARTS.

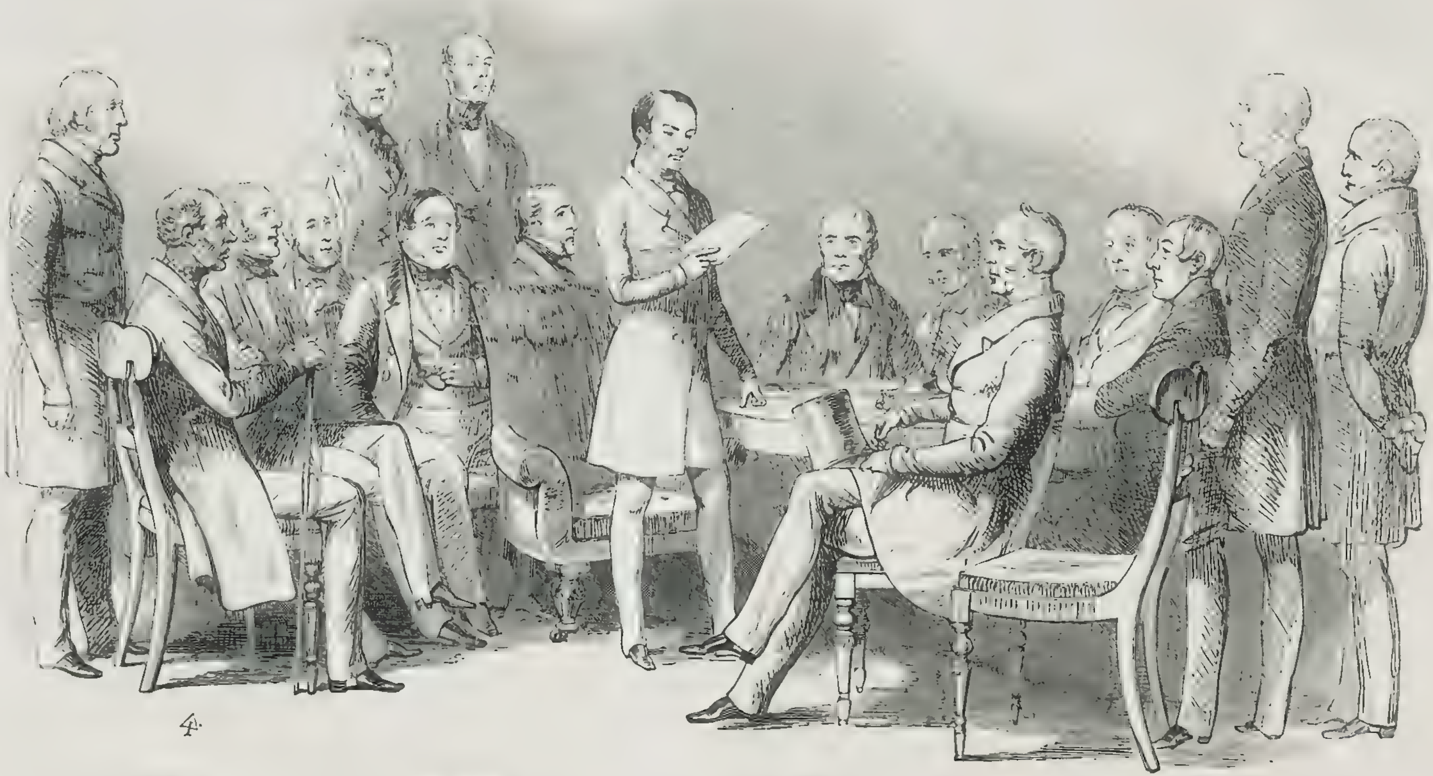


"DIANA SURPRISED BY ACTÆON."—PAINTED BY W. E. FROST.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

" the finest landscape in the world," and "enjoy one of the finest drives out of London:" such were his expressions as to this picture. It was removed by Mr. Briggs, from Acton, when he broke up his establishment, to Cheltenham; where, by the kindness of that gentleman, it was long a "lion." It is now in the possession of Mr. Hogarth, of No. 5, Haymarket, who has kindly allowed our Artist to engrave it. Mr. Hogarth, also, possesses two other pictures by Gainsborough: a hilly scene, with trees, &c.; and the third, a portrait (Admiral Collier or Collyer), are genuine specimens of Gainsborough's handiwork. They are for sale, and merit places in our National Gallery; as the landscapes are exquisite specimens of Gainsborough's skill in that walk of art, and the portrait would stand comparison with the celebrated "Gevatius," by Vandyke—it is speaking and lifelike, and entirely devoid of affectation, either in attitude or style of colour. We hope they may attract the notice or kind consideration of the trustees, so as to induce them to ask Parliament for the small sum necessary for their purchase.



"REPOSE."—PAINTED BY GAINSBOROUGH



1. MR. MACAULAY.
2. EARL GREY.
3. SIR GEORGE GREY.
4. MR. CHARLES WOOD.

5. LORD M[illegible]
6. LORD COTTENHAM.
7. THE MARQUIS OF CLANRICARDE.
8. LORD CAMPBELL.

9. LORD JOHN RUSSELL.
10. THE MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE.
11. MR. LABOUCHERE.
12. LORD PALMERSTON.

13. LORD MINTO.
14. THE EARL [illegible]
15. THE EARL [illegible]
16. SIR JOHN CAM [illegible]

HER MAJESTY'S CABINET MINISTERS.

THE CABINET MINISTERS.

Packs and sets of great ones,
That ebb and flow by the moon. Lear.

The "Cabinet" [illegible] heads of departments, who [illegible] numbers or opinion in the House of Commons—implying "confidence" or "want of confidence" in a Ministry. The "Cabinet" does not include more than a [illegible] by the revolutions of politics, and the numbers of the division lists. Thus, it is possible to be a Member of the Government and not have a "seat in the Cabinet;" consequently, [illegible] and the inclusions in it [illegible] least ten times as many members of that right honourable body who are not in the Cabinet. This is, in fact, a select body, in whom the whole of the Royal authority for the time being is vested; the other Ministers being considered as subordinates, and the instruments for carrying into effect such measures as the Cabinet may determine upon. These measures are broached, discussed, and arranged at meetings of the select few, popularly known as "Cabinet Councils;" and when they are summoned with unusual frequency, it indicates that there is more than ordinary difficulty and danger in the aspect of public affairs, or the critical position of the Cabinet itself. The decisions are taken by votes, and a Minister may find himself in the double difficulty of being in a minority in the Cabinet and in the Legislature at the same time: in such a case, his resignation is inevitable; or, having a majority in Parliament, he may, in the same situation, "break up the Cabinet," receive the Royal command to form a new one, and select colleagues more compliant, or with views more consonant with his own. Or, [illegible] may be left what are called "open questions," that is, when they come under discussion, each Minister may vote according to his individual opinion upon them, without regard to his official position. But when any matter is [illegible] the coming repeal of the Corn-Laws, a statement that was, for a time, refused belief, the credit of the journal hanging in the balance till doubt was converted into certainty. The "Cabinet," therefore, it will be understood, is the "collective wisdom" of the Ministry, as Parliament is the "collective wisdom" of the nation.

We, in a recent number, gave biographies of all the present Cabinet Ministers from a recognised authority; we now present our readers with their Portraits, grouped together by the pencil, as they are bound up with each other by policy. Of several, we have in former numbers given detached portraits and memoirs; to add any biographical matter here, would, therefore, be to go over twice-travelled ground. But, to many persons the nature and duties of the various offices of the State are comparatively unknown; in connection, therefore, with portraits of the Ministers, we give a description of the functions they have to discharge. The particulars are taken from the work on "Dignities, Privilege, and Precedence," by C. R. Dodd, Esq., a most useful volume to all who are interested in public affairs and public men, as it gives full and complete information on [illegible] respecting which clear and correct knowledge is rarely possessed.

FIRST LORD OF THE TREASURY.

LORD JOHN RUSSELL.

I sat beside
A throned King, and was his councillor;
And we knit laws together.

The duties once performed by the Lord High Treasurer have, in modern times, been divided among a board of five persons, styled Lords Commissioners for executing the office of High Treasurer, in the same manner as the Board of Admiralty has superseded the ancient office of Lord High Admiral. The First Lord of the [illegible] for the time being, or the "Head of her [illegible] the Exchequer [illegible]

The office of Lord High Treasurer was held, as every person is aware, during the pleasure of the Crown, and was conferred by letters patent; its duties consisted in the government of the Court of Exchequer, the custody of the King's treasure, the appointment of all employed in collecting the revenues of the Crown, and the regulation of public revenues. All these powers are now delegated under letters patent to the Commissioners, and the First Lord is, for all practical purposes, the Lord High Treasurer; but his connection with the Court of Exchequer is now merely nominal.

Killing the Lord High Treasurer during the execution of his office is high treason.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.

LORD COTTENHAM.

Thou robed man of justice take thy place. Lear.

[illegible] whose authority is declared by statute (5 Eliz., [illegible] cessarily by patent or writ. The mere delivery of the king's great seal into his custody constitutes him Lord Keeper, but as Lord Chancellor he usually receives [illegible] The origin of the name is, according to Sir Edward Coke, "a cancellando," on account of his power of cancelling the King's letters patent, when they are granted contrary to law. The office is very ancient, and said to be derived from the Roman Empire, thence transferred to the Roman Church, and thus arose the chancellor of a diocese.

The Lord Chancellor is, by prescription, Speaker of the House of Lords, and, by virtue of his office, a member of the Privy Council. He appoints all Justices of the Peace, though usually upon the recommendation of the Lords Lieutenant of the several counties. He is patron of all livings in the gift of the Crown rated below the value of twenty pounds a year. He is the visitor of all hospitals and colleges of Royal foundation; the general guardian of all infants, idiots, and lunatics, and the highest judicial officer in the kingdom. When Royal Commissions are issued for opening the session, for giving the Royal Assent to bills, or for proroguing Parliament, the Lord Chancellor is always one of the Commissioners, and reads the Royal Speech upon the occasion. When the Sovereign opens or closes the session in person, the Lord Chancellor stands on the right of the throne, and hands to the Monarch the speech opening or terminating the annual labours of the Legislature. In his person the Lord Chancellor enjoys considerable protection, for it is high treason for any one to put him to death, it being considered that during the execution of his office, he is the immediate representative of the Sovereign.

As the mere delivery of the Great Seal to the custody of this functionary is the mode of his appointment, so the resumption or resignation of that instrument constitutes the Chancellor's dismissal or retirement.

The title of Lord High Chancellor is also given to the Chancellor for Ireland.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL.

THE MARQUIS OF LANSDOWNE.

The Magnifico
Hath got in his effect a voice potential. Othello.

The Lord President of the Council is appointed by letters patent, under the great seal durante bene placito, and resigns his office with the political party to which he belongs. His duties include attendance on the King's person as an [illegible] of State, and he manages all debates in the Council, proposes matters at [illegible] Sovereign's command, and reports the resolutions of the Council which may [illegible] eed to thereupon. From the reign of King John to that of Elizabeth he [illegible] Principalis et Capitalis Consiliarius, but in that Queen's reign the office was suspended, and the Lord Keeper supplied his place. Charles I revived the office on one occasion, but it subsequently remained vacant till the Council was remodelled by Charles II., in 1679, since which period it has been regularly occupied by a Peer of considerable political importance.

SECRETARIES OF STATE.

Your Secretaries
Of State attend me, sire, to render up
[illegible]

The three Chief Secretaries of State are—Earl Grey, for the Colonies; Lord [illegible] ment. The nature of their several duties will be suggested by the names of the offices over which they preside; but their rank, position, and powers, will require some little explanation.

Though in modern times it has been the practice to entrust the duties of Secretary of State to three individuals, yet this division of labour is only an arrangement to facilitate the despatch of public business, and the three Secretaries are in theory but [illegible] for their duties may all be [illegible] and their authority [illegible] co-ordinate, each is competent [illegible] other two. To the Secretary [illegible] throughout all [illegible] governors, [illegible] vernors, and all other public [illegible] menation. To him is entrusted the appointment of all ambassadors, envoys, and other diplomatic ministers, the conduct of all negotiations and transactions with foreign powers, and the general superintendence and management of our [illegible] ernment of the co[illegible] to regulate the administration of justice, and in effect to exercise the prerogative of mercy. It is evident then, that the office [illegible] and the Colonies. Each of these being now [illegible] considered as a distinct branch of the executive government; for the only remaining trace of their original concentration under a single officer, consists in the fact, that no exchange of departments among the three is considered as a new acceptance of office under the Crown, and it therefore does not unseat such Secretaries of State as are members of the House of Commons. Secretaries of State are always Privy Councillors, members of the Cabinet, and of Parliament. It generally happens that there are two Secretaries of State in the Lower House, and one in the Upper; this, however, is sometimes reversed, [illegible] same branch of the Legislature.

The Secretaries of State are appointed, as in ancient times, by the Crown delivering to them certain seals of office; but in addition to this investiture, they have in modern times received also a patent under the great seal; formerly, however, no patent accompanied this delivery of the ensigns of office.

The Secretary of State is, ex officio, a magistrate throughout every portion of the country, [illegible] Lord Chief Justice [illegible] judgment respecting the well-known John Wilkes, who was arrested under a general warrant, in 1763, said, "that he should consider a Secretary of State's warrant throughout the whole affair as nothing superior to the warrant of a common justice of the peace."

The origin of the office of Secretary of State, and the gradual alterations which took place at different periods in his powers and authority, afford a striking exemplification of the manner in which the English constitution adapts itself to circumstances, without the frequent interference of legislative enactments, or the violence of sudden change.

Until about the end of Elizabeth's reign this officer was in no respect a member of the Government, his duties being confined to the Royal correspondence, and the communication of such of the Sovereign's commands as were given in writing. The title of "Principal Secretary of State" arose from the existence of a secretary for the French language as well as one for the Latin language, both during and subsequent to the reign of Henry VIII. In 1539 the first important change took place, in the constitution of this office, for then the duties were divided between two persons bearing the same title, performing analogous functions, and entitled to a similar rank; but for many years after the reign of Elizabeth there was but one principal Secretary of State; and in the forty-third year of that Monarch's reign the first instance occurred of this officer being styled "our Principal Secretary of Estate." Soon after the union with Scotland the number was professedly increased to three, by the swearing in of James, Duke of Queensberry, who, as well as his successors in office, were considered to be Secretaries of State [illegible] present day, there have never been [illegible] one for the Home Department, one for Foreign Affairs, and one for the Colonies.

Until about the year 1782, it was the practice to describe the two departments, one as "Northern," and the other "Southern," but about that period these terms were discontinued, and the duties divided into "Home" and "Foreign;" the former of these performed the duties of Colonial Secretary till a separate officer was permanently appointed in 1794. The Northern Department used to include Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Poland, Russia, &c., while the Southern included France, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, Portugal, and Turkey. The designations at present in use of Home and Foreign require no explanation.

In 1794, the increase of business consequent upon the war, occasioned the appointment of the Right Hon. Henry Dundas, afterwards Viscount Melville, as Secretary of State for War, an office which must not be confounded with that of Secretary at War. In the year 1801, the business occasioned by the Colonies was transferred to the Secretary of State for the War Department, and the two offices have ever since remained consolidated, notwithstanding an attempt which was made in 18[illegible] in the House of Commons, to this effect, was negatived on the ground that, although the war, for which the office was established, had ceased, yet the Colonial branch of his business was sufficiently important and extensive to require the undivided attention of a distinct officer.

Each department includes an extensive establishment of under-secretaries and clerks. The business of the Home Department is conducted in Whitehall, while the Colonial and Foreign offices are in Downing-street.

There are altogether six Under Secretaries of State, two for each department. One of these two is generally a member of Parliament, and is appointed or resigns with the political party of which he is a member. The other Secretary in each [illegible] in the absence of the principal [illegible] parliamentary organ of the department to which he belongs.

The Secretary for Ireland is subordinate to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for whom he may be said to act in all Irish business. That office is at present filled by Mr. Henry Labouchere, M.P. for Taunton.

The Secretary-at-War is the medium of communication between the Army and the Army and the Government of the day, just as the Adjutant-General is the channel of intercourse between the Commander-in-chief and the military forces of the country. His department has an especial bearing upon the financial portion of the government of the Army. He is bound to give effect to the orders of the Commander-in-Chief, so long as they are consistent with the known resources of the service; but when they appear likely to occasion an excess of expenditure, he refers for further instructions to the Treasury, by whose decisions he is bound to abide. His duty is to prepare the Army Estimates, and lay them before Parliament; he is always, therefore, a member of the House of Commons. He is occasionally, though not always, a member of the Cabinet, but he is usually a Privy Councillor. The office was established in 1666; and the first person who held the appointment was detached from the Secretary of State's office, so intimately connected were the two [illegible] of the Articles of War, and the investigation of complaints against the military, all fall under his control.

This office is discharged by The Right Hon. Fox Maule.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER.

MR. CHARLES WOOD, M.P.

Boy! what money is in my purse?—Sir J. Falstaff

When the fat Knight above quoted resolved himself into a Committee of Ways and Means, the urchin he interrogated unconsciously performed the great duty of a Chancellor of the Exchequer, which is to make a statement of the general condition of the finances. "What money is in my purse?" is an important question, both to individuals and nations: it is that question which the Chancellor of the Exchequer has yearly to answer. May the Whigs escape that "deficiency" with which Sir John, like many other great men, was troubled, and rejoice in a continuation of the "surplus" they inherit from Sir R. Peel!

The Chancellor of the Exchequer is a Lord of the Treasury, and must always be a member of the Lower House; the Peers not having the power of altering, [illegible]

Among the duties of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, is [illegible] year a general statement of the financial condition of the country. This speech is technically termed "the budget," and embraces a review of the income and expenditure of the last year, as compared with those of preceding years; remarks upon the financial prospects of the country; an exposition of the intended repeal, modification, or imposition of taxes during the session; a detail of the public expenditure during the current period, with its grounds of justification; an account of all operations relating to the national debt; and, finally, the excess of income over expenditure, or vice versâ, accompanied by such observations as the occasion may seem to require.

On the death of a Chancellor of the Exchequer, it has been the practice to commit the Exchequer seal (which he holds) to the custody of the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench.

FIRST LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY.

LORD AUCKLAND.

On the seas, he is Absolute master.—Marc Antony.

The Board of Admiralty now discharges the duties once attached to the office of Lord High Admiral, which was always conferred on a Prince of the Blood. James the Second, when Duke of York, filled this post, in the reign of his brother Charles, commanding in person in the Dutch War. The last case in which the office was held by an individual was that of the Duke of Clarence, for a short time, in 1827 and 1828. The duties had, long before that period, and have been ever since, performed by a number of "Lords Commissioners," commonly known as the "Board of Admiralty," of which the First Lord is the chief. Besides him, the Board consists of four, or more usually six, junior Lords, and two Secretaries. Two of the Lords at least are always naval officers, but the others may have no professional connexion with the service. All the power and authority is vested in the Chief Lord, and he [illegible] Lord High Admiral, the other Lords merely acting as his advisers and council. All the Commissioners and the First Secretary hold their offices during pleasure [illegible] therefore, [illegible] commission is, of course, made out whenever any change takes place in the responsible advisers of the Crown; but, even when the object is to confer a seat at the board upon one individual instead of another, it is the practice for an entirely new commission to be issued, re-appointing those who are to continue, and substituting the name of the new Lord for that of the person retiring.

The majority of the Lords of the Admiralty are usually members of Parliament; the First Lord is ostensibly, as well as really, the head of the department, and may or may not be a peer; but he is always a Privy Councillor and a member of the Cabinet, and is responsible in Parliament for the conduct of that branch of the public service. When he happens to be a member of the Upper House, the First Secretary to the Admiralty is always chosen from amongst the supporters of Ministers in the Commons, and accordingly represents the department in that branch of the Legislature.

The functions of the Lord High Admiral, or the Board of Admiralty, consist in the government of the navy, both in peace and war. By their orders, all ships [illegible] laid up [illegible] ture, put into commission or out of commission, armed, stored, and provisioned, employed at home or on foreign stations. All appointments and removals of commission and warrant officers, with the exception of masters and surgeons, are at [illegible] officers in command. From this Board also proceeds all promotion in the several ranks; and in consequence of their recommendations, all honours, pensions, gratuities, and superannuations are granted [illegible] official returns from the fleet, and every practical detail respecting the discipline and condition of the ships, are addressed. All orders for the payment of money on account of the navy are given by them, and they prepare that portion of the annual estimates which concerns their department of the public service. Re[illegible] and storage [illegible] them after public advertisement.

PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF TRADE.

THE EARL OF CLARENDON

Her great ones are traffickers of the Ear[illegible]

The Board of Trade is a [illegible]

The Pres[illegible]

LORD PRIVY SEAL

EARL OF MINTO.

The Lord Privy Seal is appointed by Letters Patent: and, as the name implies, has the especial custody of the Sovereign's Privy Seal, which is affixed to all charters, warrants, grants, and pardons, before the Great Seal is applied to them. It is his duty to apprise the Monarch of any inconsistency that may exist between the common law of the land, and any instrument he is directed to seal.

PAYMASTER-GENERAL.

MR. T. B. MACAULAY.

I sent to you
For gold to pay my legions. [illegible]

The Paymaster-General holds one of those offices which are conferred and resigned at the formation of every new Ministry. He is invested with no discretionary powers, but makes payments [illegible] Paymaster-General, Treasurer of the Ordnance, and Treasurer of the Navy.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

THE MARQUIS OF CLANRICARDE

Bear thou this letter to Mistress Page, and thou this to Mistress Ford
Merry Wives of Windsor.

This is, perhaps, one of the most modern of the great offices of the State; and, from the name itself, the nature of its functions must be apparent to every one. A department so entirely practical, so unchanging in its purpose, and so little affected by, or affecting political changes, ought certainly to be exempted from the list of the "ins and outs." A permanent chief of this great national establishment, thoroughly acquainted with its working, and above the trammels of routine and red-tapism, would be of great public advantage. But it is an improvement yet to be made.

LORD MORPETH—LORD CAMPBELL.

There are two other [illegible] post of First Commissioner of Woods and Forests, held by Lord Morpeth; and the Chancellorship of the Duchy of Lancaster, which has been given to Lord Campbell. The duties of the first are principally the administration of the Land Revenues of the Crown; of the latter, the legal business of the County Palatine.

MUSIC.

THE BRUSSELS OPERA COMPANY AT DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

Since our last publication, Meyerbeer's "Huguenots" has been [illegible] was executed. On Wednesday, Auber's "Diamans de la Couronne," and Adam's "Chalet" were played. Such has been the order of the course; and finer performances in the tragic and comic lyrical drama have never been witnessed in this country. Rarely has there been a greater treat than that afforded by "Robert le Diable." Madame Laborde was the Princess. In the "Idole de ma vie," with the florid passages, and in the impassioned "Robert toi que j'aime," she created equal sensations of delight and admiration. [illegible] has been fortunate in having had the opportunity afforded her, by Mdme Julien's indisposition, of displaying her vocal and histrionic talents in the beautiful part of Alice. Her lower notes are exquisite; in the upper part of the register she has to acquire pure intonation. She enacted Madeleine, in the "Postillon," with infinite archness and spirit, and, having youth and beauty on her side, is likely to be as popular here as she is in Brussels.

M. Laborde's Robert is energetic, but is not so well sung as we have [illegible] from Nourrit, Duprez, Mario, &c. Laborde always improves as [illegible] ceeds—in the earlier scenes his voice is flat and uncertain [illegible] and his concluding act full of vigour, although his voice evinced symptoms of fatigue from the long and trying ordeal he had undergone. Boulo, the second tenor, [illegible] This clever artist has played Raoul in the "Huguenots," on Laborde's indisposition—these Belgians, by the way, seem to be perpetually ill—the Postillon, and the chief tenor parts in the "Crown Diamonds" and the "Chalet," with infinite ability. His organ is of delicious quality. Barielle is another remarkable artist in this troupe, as a basso, and Massol, who appears to-night in "Guillaume Tell," is one of the best of European baritones. Condere the inimitable comedian, has yet been too ill to appear, but we shall see him on Monday next in Halevy's "Mousquetaires de la Reine."

Judging from the state of the houses, the grand opera seems to attract the public more than the comic opera. In the former it is all recitative; in the latter there is speaking. This fact speaks volumes in favour of English taste for the grand and intellectual in art, and it ought not to be lost sight of by our own managers, composers, and artists. Let a tragic opera be well invented in the subordinate as well as the principal parts, let the Chorus be as effective as the Orchestra, let the reliance be placed on the ensemble, and not on two or three [illegible] the beautiful.

We most earnestly [illegible] to attend the representations of the Brussels Company. It will then be seen what organisation, study, practice, and rehearsals will accomplish. It will be shown that one of the first requisites to make a truly great artist is the utter abandonment of self consideration, and that by exertions to render the general execution complete, every one gains in estimation. Meyerbeer's masterpieces, the "Huguenots" and "Robert le Diable," have been indeed nobly interpreted in all their complicated details. The wonderful orchestration of these mighty works exacts the utmost delicacy and precision in the execution, and the concerted pieces require the greatest attention to the part singing.

It is not anticipated that the advent of the Brussels Company will be a successful speculation, as it deserves to be; but that their example in the getting up of operas must have a beneficial effect, we can entertain little doubt. It is to be regretted that the troupe arrived so late in the season.

SURREY THEATRE.

The operatic season of the above theatre has proved most successful. M[illegible] Albertazzi, as prima donna, Miss Betts, Messrs. Donald King, Weiss, Horn[illegible] and Clement White, sustaining the principal characters in "Cinderella," [illegible] schütze," "Fra Diavolo," the "Love Spell," &c. &c. The chorus was small, but good. The band, although not augmented according to the promise held out by the bill of announcement, was effective.

DEATH OF JOHN BERNARD LOGIER

This musical professor died on the 14th inst., at his residence in Stephen's-green, Dublin. He was born a Hanoverian, and was partially educated at Gottingen. He very early displayed a passion for military music; and, whilst yet a [illegible] the instructor of nearly all the military bands in Ireland. He played well all military instruments, and suggested [illegible] many, which he afterwards manufactured in Dublin. [illegible] grave his compositions, to spare the inconvenience and delay of a correspondence with Dublin; he contrived to make the necessary tools, he wrote to Dublin for the pewter plates, characteristically omitting to explain their purpose, and duly received a dinner service. His purpose, however, was at last effected, and he was his own composer, engraver and printer.

For the convenience of his profession, he established himself in Dublin [illegible] became a manufacturer of brass military instruments. Here he perfected [illegible] securing a good position of the hand to the pianoforte [illegible] invention, [illegible] in his [illegible] sprung [illegible] of teaching the pianoforte to his daughter. It was shown to the celebrated Clementi, who addressed these words to the inventor:—

"I have been all [illegible] should hold your [illegible]

The house of Clementi joined Logier in procuring a patent, and published the works by which the practical portion of his new system of musical education was to be effectually carried out. Shield, Cramer, Wesley, and the most eminent [illegible] of the Chiroplast, and Mr. Kalkbrenner, who afterwards associated himself in [illegible] with Logier and S. Webbe, publicly advertised

"That he had thoroughly and dispassionately entered into a critical examination of Logier's system; the result was an entire conviction of its superior excellence, and he declared that nothing but prejudice or want of knowledge of its true principles could oppose any obstacles to its progress."

Logier introduced his system first in Dublin; on the public examination of his pupils the effect was instantaneous. His door was beset with carriages, and applications for admission to his academy such as never had been seen before.

Sir George Smart and other eminent masters had visited the academy in Dublin, and soon came a rumour across the Channel that all the P. F. teachers in London were about to be ruined, as Logier was coming [illegible]umour was right this time more than usual, for one half the report was true—Logier did come, and the profession was roused to an activity never before heard of. The town was deluged with pamphlets, the daily press groaned under the discussion.

Having attained the summit of his desires, by the establishment of his system in his native country, Logier indulged in comparative retirement in Dublin, to which city he had always shown a great partiality; at the same time he never ceased to exercise his profession and prosecute his system, the efficacy of which he proved to the end of his days, enjoying, in his leisure hours, the pleasure of revising his great work.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

The triumphs of choregraphy have been in the ascendant at Her Majesty's Theatre, during the past week, and we must perforce dedicate our allotted space to them. Taglioni's appearance in "La Gitana" has been hailed with a degree of enthusiasm extraordinary even at this establishment; and on Thursday, a feat of managerial tact, equalling that of the "Pas de Quatre" la[illegible] year, was accomplished. Perrot's new ballet, "Les Tribulations d'un M[illegible]re de Ballet," was to have been produced on this occasion, and during the course of its performance a "Pas" was to have been introduced, combining the three matchless danseuses, Taglioni, Grahn, and Cerito—besides L. Taglioni, Perrot, and St. Leon. This pas was to have formed part of a divertissement, "Le Jugement de Paris," which the aforesaid ballet master was supposed to be getting up; but it appears that on bringing the whole into form, this portion of the composition was found to be of so striking a character, and of such paramount importance, as to be quite out of place introduced merely as an accessory. The "Jugement de Paris" has, therefore, been isolated, and now forms a charming divertissement of itself. As may be anticipated, the "Pas des Déesses" represents the three rival goddesses, Juno, Minerva, and Venus, impersonated by our three great ballerine, contending for the apple thrown by the Goddess of Discord, and which Paris is to bestow on "the most beautiful."

The [illegible] pas [illegible] excellent one; for it is an important qualification in choreg[illegible] story kept up throughout. Without this, danc[illegible] loses half its charm to those who look for some[illegible] and grace of motion. Here there is a purpose in the varied attitudes and graceful evolutions of each danseuse, as she is supposed to be endeavouring to outstrip her rivals, and vindicate her right to the disputed apple; and the effect is a charming one, independently of the interest and excitement that must inevitably attach to the combined performance of such unequalled artists as these. The Graces, enacted by Louise Taglioni, Demessisse, and Cassan; Cupid, by that graceful child, Mdlle. Lamoureux; Mercure, by Perrot, &c., &c., are all numbered amongst the dramatis personæ of the ballet, and a more charming combination could hardly be met with.

Taglioni is, however, the principal "star" at the present moment. Those who have visited her Majesty's Theatre predetermined to find her marvellous talent diminished, and to "regret" her reappearance on the English stage, have come away enchanted, despite themselves, at that marvellous union of unrivalled ag[illegible] fect grace and elegance, in which no dancer has as yet e[illegible]. If there is any change perceptible, she seems to have advanced in her [illegible] person, an increase of embonpoint has proved decidedly favourable to her appearance. It is, no doubt, in the danse noble that she excels; but in every style of dancing the je ne sais quoi of peculiar refinement and grace, for which she is remarkable in her style, distinguishes her. As long as Taglioni continues to dance, she will continue to excite an enthusiasm of applause, as the famous Guimard, styled in 1770, "La Reine de la Danse," had done before her. A peculiar gentleness and amiability of look, and a dignity of manner which never abandons Taglioni, is in admirable keeping with the style of her dancing; and, if we may believe report, these do not belie her real character.

HAYMARKET.

A lady, whose name was not given in the bills, but who, as Mrs. Williams, we believe, has been for some time in a provincial company that of Mr. Pritchard, of the Hull and Leeds circuits and who first performed Lady Townley under his management, made her first appearance in London on these boards on Tuesday evening, as the Widow Belmour, in Murphy's comedy of "The Way to Keep Him." She is, evidently, no novice in the theatrical profession, judging from her perfect self-possession and knowledge of stage business. Her figure is elegant and commanding, and her voice clear and capable of modulation; whilst her reading was marked with judicious emphasis. We should like, however, to see her in some other part before we give a decided opinion upon her merits. There is so little to interest in the comedy, that the utmost exertions on the part of the performer are necessary to fix the attention of the audience. "The Way to Keep Him" is a fair specimen of those dreary five-act productions, conventionally termed "the fine old standard comedies," which we hope before long to see properly buried and forgotten, without a chance of revival. An audience has not the slightest sympathy with the characters; the state of society has so altered that few of the allusions or motives are clearly understood; and the sight of people making morning calls in satin breeches and tail coats lined with white silk, or of one lady in a regular old-standard-comedy feather head-dress talking to another in a neat muslin gown of the present day, has something in it remarkably ridiculous. People admire these comedies as hundreds do white-bait—because they think they must; and are fearful of being shouted at as heretics, if they speak their mind.

Mr. Webster announces his benefit at the above theatre, which he has kept open five hundred and fifty-four consecutive nights, on Wednesday next. Madame Anna Thillon, Madame Celeste, Miss Cushman, the Ethiopian Seren[illegible] talent, w[illegible] in addition to the excellent stock company of the theatre. There is no doubt that the house will be filled to overflowing.

ADELPHI.

The visit of Ibrahim Pacha has furnished this theatre with the subject of a comically absurd interlude called "Abraham Parker,"—such being, as our readers may be aware, the title given to the illustrious stranger by the boys in the streets. The plot and incidents are composed of such wild improbabilities that they baffle description. It will suffice to state that Abraham Parker (Mr. Wright) is a [illegible] pretty deeply involved in railway speculations; and, through the panic, is obliged to make a bolt from a bal masque in an Eastern costume, not stopping until he arrives at one of our seaport towns. Here he is, of course, mistaken by the landlady of the inn for the real Ibrahim Pacha—the similitude of the name favouring the mistake; and a variety of situations crowd rapidly upon each other, exceedingly preposterous, and, at the same time, exceedingly amusing, until the hero comes forward to claim the indulgence of the audience for the trifle.

The piece was quite successful, and the laughter incessant. It is, we believe, written by Captain Addison, a gentleman well known in literary circles as a magazine-writer and a dramatist.

FRENCH PLAYS.

The performances of Mdlle. Rachel continue to be the rage, and scarcely standing room is left in the theatre on the evenings of her appearance. She played in Racine's "Andromache" on Monday, and repeated the Phèdre on Wednesday evening. She is also underlined for Jeanne d'Arc in the course of next week, by which it will be seen that her engagement has been extended beyond the six representations originally agreed for. There was a report, some little time ago, that Mdlle Rachel was studying our language, for the purpose of appearing in some of Shakspeare's tragedies. We trust that this intention has not been abandoned, and that we may next year have the gratification of seeing this inimitable artiste interpret the leading female characters of our own drama. The performance would be most interesting, inasmuch as the genius of Mdlle. Rachel would enable her to discard all the traditional points and readings which our first actors and actresses are too prone to receive from those who have preceded them.

QUEEN'S.

Mr Abington deserves the support of the public for the praiseworthy manner in which he is carrying on the management of this theatre. He made his first appearance in London [illegible] week as Shylock, and gave a careful and intellectual delineation of the character. Mrs Gordon, a new actress from the provinces, is a lady of more than ord[illegible] talent, and would be an acquisition to any company. She performed Portia as we[illegible] ever we saw the character played. Altogether the "Merchant of Ve[illegible] en the applause by a very respectable audience; and Mr [illegible] t its conclusion. It is gratifying to see a gentlem[illegible] himself the management of a theatre w[illegible] land[illegible]

M[illegible] elegant extravaganza of [illegible]ng Beauty" has been revived with great effect at the Prin[illegible] Madame Vestris plays her original character of Princess Isabelle and Mr. [illegible] has his old part of Prince Perfect. The scenery is by Mr. W. Beverley, whose name is a sufficient guarantee for its excellence.

A new apropos prologue, called "Hot Weather," is announced at the Lyceum, in which Mr. Wilmott, the clever stage manager, will take a part. The last time this gentleman appeared was, if we mistake not, as the angry old member in the club-scene, in "Money," who was always wanting the snuff-box. Our readers will readily remember how well the sketch was filled up. A new farce is also about to be produced; and Mr Dance's "Oberon" is already in rehearsal. The cast embraces the entire strength of the company. Oberon will become an Irish sprite, O'Brien; and Sir Huon of Bordeaux will be changed to Sir Bottle of Bordeaux. Most of the names are thus whimsically altered.

Our "unequalled favourite," as Mr. Bunn calls her, Carlotta Grisi, will make her last appearance in London, in a ballet divertissement, at the St. James's Theatre, on the 4th of August, on the occasion of the benefit of her cousin, Ernesta Grisi, on which occasion a miscellaneous and attractive entertainment will be given.

THE BAL MASQUE.

If M. Jullien had done nothing else, he deserves the thanks of the amusement-seeking public, for pulling up entertainments of this kind, from the most dismal and unmeaning riot, to something like decorum and enjoyment. We remember the running about and the screaming, the drunkenness and brutality of the old masquerades, which George Cruikshank has so graphically pourtrayed—with Clowns tumbling over the supper tables, and Huntsmen flogging them and hallooing, and Sailors climbing over the boxes. Now, it seems, that nobody would put anything of this kind down sooner than the visitors themselves, as we several times observed the other eve[illegible]ng. With a large area, brilliantly lighted and decorated in the first style o[illegible]nement and [illegible], and a dozen active masters of the ceremonies, dancing was the main object of the company. And dance they did, with a perseverance actually marvellous, until long after the grey morning crept in through the windows above the gallery.

Every Bal Masqué given by M. Jullien has been an improvement on its predecessor, and we are bound to state that the one on Monday evening was the best of all. It was not quite so numerously attended, but this was an advantage: the costumes were gay, clean, and original: and an excellent arrangement, by which wines were not served until late in the evening, prevented any undue ebullitions of hilarity. Amongst the costumes we particularly noticed a Robespierre—capitally made up with the top boots, large cravat, and long hair, of the revolutionary epoch; a "Papillon doré," or spangled Court beau of the last century; several elegant moyen age costumes; and George the Second dresses in profusion. There were fewer conventional Greeks, Scotchmen, and Don Cæsar de Bazans, than on former occasions; but a perfect shoal of Debardeurs, whose white shirts glittering about the theatre had a good effect. All the boxes were filled with company, evidently of a superior class; and the public seats of the auditory were crowded with spectators, some of whom remained until the very last.

Where the ice came from that was consumed in sherry-coblers, we have not the wildest idea; but we expect that Wenham Lake must have been emptied: and trusses of straw had evidently been cut up into suckers, to meet the demands of the thirsty dancers. A commendable feature of the entertainment was, that all the gentlemen who were not in fancy dresses paid the others the compliment of attending in evening costume—a rule never before so universally observed.

The whole evening passed off without the slightest disturbance, except when a party of foreigners allowed their spirits to come out un peu trop fort in one of the quadrilles. But this was immediately stopped; the police preserving admirable order, without in any way interfering intrusively with the amusements of the revellers.

THE EUPHONIA, OR SPEAKING AUTOMATON.

We were present, on Monday, at a private view of one of the most extraordinary pieces of mechanism ever exhibited; the powers of which are equal to all we have heard of the famous Automaton Chess-player, without the slightest suspicion of collusion of any kind. We allude to the Speaking Automaton, the invention of Professor Faber, of Vienna, which has just arrived in England.

The Automaton is figured like a Turk, the size of life, and of kit-cat proportions, reclining against some pillows. Every portion of the machine is, however, thrown open to the inspection of the company, and its framework is moved about the room. Connected with it is a series of keys, or rather pedals; and, by pressing these down, in various combinations, the articulate sounds are produced. As Mr Faber, the director of the machine, is a German, of course the figure converses more fluently in that language than in our own; but it is equally capable of speaking French, English, Latin, Greek; and even whispering, laughing, and singing: all this depending upon the agility of the director in manipulating the keys.

The breath is felt coming from the lips; and, by compressing the nostrils, it speaks with a nasal accent immediately.

We tried it with the following words, suggesting them as Mr. Faber produced them on the keys:—"Ehrenbreitstein," "Jungfräulich," "Philadelphia," "tres bien," "thwart," and "God bless Queen Victoria"—which last sentence it concluded with a hurrah, and then laughed loudly.

The chief organs of articulation are formed of caoutchouc, and a pair of bellows is substituted for the lungs. We learned that the inventor was seven years in getting the figure to pronounce the vowel E correctly. We repeat that this exhibition is most wonderful.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"R. F. D.," Lisbon. —The solutions you have forwarded are correct. For the solution to No. 4, see notice to "Beta," in this day's Paper.

"S. B."—You may obtain directions for playing the double game, or Chess for four, at Sherwin's, the Chessmen Turner, of Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn.

"J. S."—You can have two or more Queens on the board at the same time.

"Sopracitta."—Your solution is neat, but not equal to that given by the inventor of the Problem.

"Beta," St. Neots.—The solution of the 11th Enigma we have already given. That of No. 4, by Mr. C. Stanley, is as follows: 1. Q to Q B 3rd (ch); Q takes Q. 2. Kt to Q R 3rd (ch); K to B 4th. 3. Kt to Q B 8th; and, play as he can, Black must be mated next move.

"G. B."—It is quite impracticable in the given number of moves.

"True Blue," Senior United Service Club House.—The position you have sent is an inaccurate transcript of one of the many beautiful productions of the same description, for which we are indebted to the genius of Mr. Bolton, and, we remember, became the subject of a friendly wager between the celebrated La Bourdonnais and a relative of the author; the latter betting the Frenchman a guinea, that, from the diagram alone, he could not resolve the problem within an hour. La Bourdonnais accepted the challenge, and won; but he discovered the solution only within a few minutes of the appointed time. The following is the true position of the pieces:—

White.		Black.
K at his R 3rd	B at K R 4th	K at his sq	R at Q R 7th
Q at her R 4th	B at K R 5th	Q at her 7th	B at Q B 2nd
R at Q Kt 5th	Kt at Q B 5th	R at Q Kt 2nd	Kt at K R 2nd
Pawns at K R 6th, K Kt 2nd, K B 3rd, and K 4th.		Pawns at K Kt 3rd, K B 4th, and K 2nd.

White playing first, to mate in six moves.

"B. M. W."—The errors you suspect are all imaginary. The articles in this department of the Illustrated London News have been under the same direction for the last eighteen months, and, in their exemption from inaccuracies, clerical or typographical, are admitted on all hands to be without parallel in the history of Chess publications. We have not space to give the solutions you require.

"Miranda."—See the "Chess-Player's Chronicle" for August, for a brilliant display of Games by the foreign players named.

"A. Z."—The subscription to the St. George's Chess Club is only three guineas per annum.

"A. A. W.," Birmingham.—1. The King can never legally go into check: the next query is unintelligible. 2. If a player by accident move his King into ch[illegible] he must recall that move, and play his King elsewhere. 3. [illegible] for either party in this country; the game, under such circumstances, being considered drawn. 4. You must cry check at once.

"A. Fairservice."—The Economic Chess Board is an invention of Dr. Roget. You can obtain one at Mr. Hurst's, the office of "The Chess-Player's Chronicle."

Solutions by "R. F. D.," "G. A. S.," "C. O.," "A. H. W." "R. T. W.," "Phil.," "R. M.," "Styk," "Alpha," "G. W.," "Punch," "Chapel Rock," "Tim," "Muff," "Marazion," "Valley-field," "T. B.," Bradford; "J. J. G.," "Sinbad," "Avon," "Nemo," "Major ——," "An M.P.," and "Miles," are correct. Those by "J. E. K.," "A Derry Boy," and "Oxoniensis," are wrong.

Solution to Problem, No. 130.

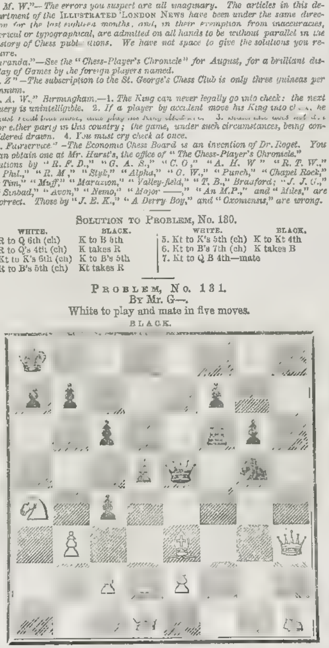
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to Q 6th (ch)	K to B 5th	5. Kt to K's 5th (ch)	K to Kt 4th
2. R to Q's 4th (ch)	K takes R	6. Kt to B's 7th (ch)	K takes B
3. Kt to K's 6th (ch)	K to B's 5th	7. Kt to Q B 4th—mate
4. R to B's 5th (ch)	Kt takes R

Problem, No. 131.

By Mr. G—.

White to play and mate in five moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 28.—By M. Calvi.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R 2nd	K at K R 5th
Q at K 2nd	Q at her R's 2nd
Kt at K B 8th	Kt at K 4th
Ps at K Kt 2nd, K B 2nd, and K B 3rd	Ps at K R 4th, K Kt 4th, Q Kt 3rd, and Q R 4th

Wh[illegible] and mate in 3 moves

No. 29.—By the Same Author.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q B 2nd	K at his R's sq
R at Q 4th	R at Q B sq
B at Q Kt 2nd	R at Q R sq
Kt at K Kt 4th	Kt at Q R 5th
P at K 6th	P at Q B 2nd

White to play, and mate in 3 moves.

No. 30.—By M. Brede.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his R's 5th	K at Q R sq	Ps at K R 4th, K Kt 6th, and Q B 5th	B at Q Kt 4th
Q at her 4th	Q at K B 8th		Kt at K R 7th
B at Q B 8th	R at Q B 2nd		Ps at K R 3rd, K 7th, Q R 2nd and 3rd
Kt at Q B 4th	B at K Kt 2nd

White playing first, mates in three moves.

COUNTRY NEWS.

OPENING OF THE RICHMOND RAILWAY.

The formal opening of this valuable undertaking was celebrated with great éclat on Wednesday. The Directors invited a large party of ladies and gentlemen to accompany them along the line, and to partake of their hospitality, at the Castle Hotel, at Richmond. Shortly after two o'clock the party left the Nine Elms Station of the South Western Railway, in a train of sixteen carriages, drawn by the "Crescent" locomotive, at a slow pace, but which was the more agreeable, as it afforded ample opportunity to examine the country through which the line passes. The South Western line is used for a distance of a little more than two miles; the Richmond line-proper then branches off about the point where the road to the the village of Battersea leaves the Wandsworth-road, and at a short distance from Battersea. It then pursues a pretty course through the villas, orchards, and nursery-gardens, which stud that locality, till it reaches Wandsworth. The river Wandle and the valley are crossed by a splendid viaduct of 22 arches, three of which are of 70 feet span; the entire length of the work being about 1000 feet. Leaving Wandsworth Station, we have for a moment a picturesque peep at the Thames, and the line pursues a southerly direction, through a deep cutting of some extent, till we reach Putney, where it emerges from the cutting and proceeds over a level country to Barnes Common, which it crosses. Mortlake is the next point of notice, and here a very elegant station is nearly completed. The remainder of the course is through fields and gardens, passing a little to the south of the grounds of Kew, on to the terminus in the Kew road at Richmond, where a plain but spacious station is in course of erection. All along the line the inhabitants turned out to welcome the occasion, and at the Richmond Terminus a large crowd was assembled. A triumphal arch, tastefully decorated with evergreens and banners, was erected in front of the station, and on the arrival of the monster train an excellent brass band played the National Anthem, and the bells of Richmond sounded a merry peal. The train started from Vauxhall about five minutes past two, and reached Richmond at thirty-seven minutes past two; having consequently performed the journey in something like thirty-two minutes. The distance, we believe, is rather above eight miles; but of course the above slow speed, which is easily accounted for in the great weight of the train, forms no criterion as to the average rate of speed under ordinary circumstances.

The works have been completed with great celerity, as well as economy. The Act of Parliament incorporating the Company, received the Royal assent on the 21st of July, last year; so that, notwithstanding the difficulties experienced by the Directors in dealing with proprietors on the line, they have had the satisfaction of seeing the Railway opened for traffic within a year and a day. The capital of the Company is £260,000, and the estimated cost of the works, as laid before Parliament, was £240,000; we have, however, the pleasure to state that the actual cost has only been £[illegible]80,000, which is about the amount of the paid-up capital, reckoning the impending call of £5 per share.

The line was constructed under the superintendence of Mr. Locke, the able Engineer of the South Western Company. The engineering features, if we except the Wandle Viaduct, are excellent. It has good gradients and curves, few bridges, and nothing objectionable, if we except one or two level crossings. The country traversed is pretty; and, altogether, the line will prove most advantageous to the town of Richmond, and the public at large.

The line will be opened to the public on Monday, with the very ample accommodation of sixteen trains daily. The fares of the ordinary trains are fixed at 1s. 4d. 1s., and 8d., for first, second, and third-class carriages respectively; and, by express trains, first and second-class carriage fares are twopence more. We must confess, we should like to see the third-class fare reduced to 6d. The Directors, no doubt, contemplate this, as one of their boons to the people, and there can be no doubt that it will, in the end, add more to their exchequer.

It only remains to state that the line is to be worked by the South-Western Company, who are to pay all expenses, and pay to the Richmond proprietors two-thirds of the proceeds, without deduction, until the extension of the South-Western Line to Hungerford-bridge is completed, when another arrangement, mutually satisfactory and advantageous, takes place.

It is calculated that the line will yield considerably more than ten per cent.

The pretty lawn of the Castle Hotel was the point of réunion. A military band cheered the interval between the arrival of the company and dinner, and a small park of swivel artillery [illegible]d various salutes in honour of the occasion, from the beautiful ait below the bridge. The Lord Mayor's barge was in attendance, and his Lordship, accompanied by a numerous party of the fair visitors, enjoyed a [illegible] up the river. About half-past five o'clock, the company, to the number of nearly three hundred ladies and gentlemen, sat down to an elegant repast. The Chair was taken by Mr. W. Chadwick, the Chairman of the Richmond Railway Company, and among the guests present we observed the Lord Mayor, the Hon. and Rev Mr. Eden, Sir William Magnay, Sir James Duke, M.P., Mr. Alderman Humphery, M.P., Dr. Bowring, M.P., Mr. Kemble, M.P., Mr. Alderman Challis, Mr. W. J. Chaplin, Chairman of the South Western Railway, Count Eyre, and Mr. Boothby, Directors of that Company, Mr. Locke, C. E., Mr. Jeremiah Pilcher, Mr. Lawrence, Mr. Anderton, and many other City and railway notables. After the cloth was removed Non Nobis was sung in admirable style by the vocalists.

The Chairman proposed the usual loyal and national toasts. "The Health of the Lord Mayor" was drank with enthusiasm; and, on his Lordship proposing "Prosperity to the Richmond Railway," the toast was received with three times three. A variety of complimentary toasts were afterwards given, and, as usual, responded to. Mr. Harker very ably discharged the duties of toastmaster.

About ten o'clock, the company proceeded to the ball-room, and dancing was ke[illegible] with great spirit till a late hour. The arrangements for the return of the [illegible]pany to town were excellent. The last train arrived at Vauxhall between two and three o'clock in the morning; and we are sure there was complete unity of feeling that it was the termination of a day well spent.

Stay of the American Minister at Liverpool.—William Brown, Esq., M.P. for South Lancashire, entertains at his mansion, Richmond-hill, Liverpool, [illegible] arrived there on Saturday last with the ratified treaty, which he forwarded to America by the steam ship Hibernia on Sunday, under the charge of General Armstrong. The Chamber of Commerce have presented to Mr. M'Lane an appropriate address.

A Romantic Dwelling.—In the cliffs on the other side of Hastings (about a couple of minutes' walk from the town), an Irishman has made himself about as romantic a dwelling place as it is possible to conceive. The cliffs here are more than one hundred feet above the sea. Rather more than half way up, there is a small ledge, below which it is perpendicular; but it is accessible by a side path. Above, the cliffs again rise perpendicularly. It is this ledge that the Irishman chose for his habitation. Scooping out the sand in the face of the cliff, he made an arched cell, where he lives with his wife and an adopted child—a cripple, but very intelligent boy. The man gains a livelihood by breeding rabbits, squirrels, &c., and by the contributions of visitors to his strange abode. Among the latter are a good many artists, and Landseer spent three days on the spot, in sketching it and the surrounding scenery.

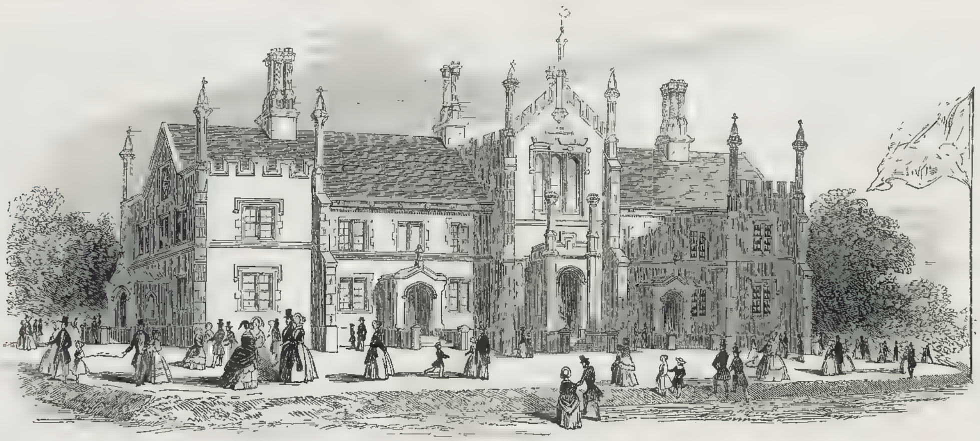
Death of Lord Ward's Gamekeeper.—We have already given an account of the shooting of Mr. John William Norris, one of the gamekeepers to Lord Ward, at Himley, Staffordshire, on Tuesday, the 30th of June, by Zephaniah Hull, also a gamekeeper to his Lordship. Mr. Norris, notwithstanding skilful and diligent medical attendance, died from lock-jaw on Monday last, at half past twelve o'clock at noon. The prisoner Hull, who had been remanded from the 30th of June to the 13th of July, and subsequently to the 27th, was, in consequence, taken by Colonel Hogg, from the station-house, Wolverhampton, to the Cross Inn, Kingswinford, on Tuesday morning, for re-examination. The magistrates present were Samuel Stone Briscoe, Esq., W. H. Cope, Esq., and Charles Henry Molineux, Esq.; and an extended and minute investigation into the circumstances of the affair took place. Mr. Cope proved the dying declaration of the deceased, which had been taken by him, and which was to the effect that the shooting was purposely and deliberately done; and also the voluntary statement of the prisoner that the shooting took place in a struggle, and was accidental. Portions of the evidence bore a favourable aspect for the prisoner; who, however, on the termination of the examination, was committed to the assizes to take his trial for the "Wilful Murder" of the deceased.

Death of Lord William Ru[illegible].—We regret to state that intelligence has been received in town of the de[illegible]h of Major-General Lord William Russell, K.C.B., the brother of Lord John Russell, which took place at Genoa on the [illegible]tant. The gallant off[illegible] was in the fifty-seventh year of his [illegible] Mr. C. H. Russell and Lady Elizabeth Russell had been s[illegible] during his s[illegible] illness at Genoa. The deceased was sec[illegible] of the la[illegible] of Bedford by his first marriage, with the Hon. Georgiana Elizabeth Byng, [illegible] daughter of George, fourth Viscount Torrington. He was born on the 8th of May, 1790; and married, the 21st of June, 1817, Elizabeth Anne, only child of the late Hon. John T. Rawdon, by whom he leaves issue three sons, the eldest of whom, born in 18[illegible]9, is in the Scots Fusilier Guards. His Lordship was a maj[illegible] general, and one of the aides-de-camp to her Majesty. The deceas[illegible] many years Minister at the Court of Berlin from this country, and retired from [illegible] of Minist[illegible]

[illegible]iralty. Sir William Parker ha[illegible] ralty Board, and Sir Charles Adam has been appoint[illegible]

Commander Tindal.—Commander Tindal (son of the Lord Ch[illegible] the Court of Common Pleas), has been appointed to the command [illegible] of war.

Troops for the Cape. Active measures are being taken to restore tranquillity at the Cape of Good Hope. Two regiments have been ordered thither, and further reinforcements are contemplated.



OPENING OF THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT RETREAT, AT ABBOTS LANGLEY, ON TUESDAY LAST.

FETE CHAMPETRE AT BEDFORD LODGE.

Bedford Lodge, the beautiful villa residence of the Duchess (Dowager) of Bedford, at Campden Hill, has obtained a high degree of celebrity among fashionable circles during the last few years, from the delightful fêtes, of which it is annually the scene.

Unlike the somewhat formal gatherings of the aristocracy which we are occasionally called upon to notice, the Duchess of Bedford's réunions possess all that delightful sociality which cannot fail to render them extremelv popular among the high and noble class for whose enjoyment they are especially designed.

At Bedford Lodge, during the London season, not only are all the most distinguished members of the aristocracy weekly visitants and participators in the hospitality of the noble hostess; but Royalty itself, in the person of the Princes and Princesses of the Blood Royal, seldom omits the opportunity of joining the festive scene.

One peculiarity attending the Duchess of Bedford's fêtes is, that her Grace issues no formal invitations. A passing word from the noble hostess, or an announcement in the Morning Post, to the effect that her Grace's fêtes will commence on a particular date, is sufficient to insure the presence of all the leading members of the fashionable world at Bedford Lodge on the appointed day.

Another feature is the opportunity of enjoyment which her Grace affords to the juvenile members of the aristocracy. In the grounds of her Grace's villa, the youthful scions of the nobility meet; and here, probably, lay the foundation of friendships which, in after years, ripen into attachments of a closer and dearer nature.

The above sketch was taken on the 10th instant, upon the occasion of his Highness Ibrahim Pacha, attended by the members of his suite, honouring the Duchess with his presence. His Highness was evidently greatly amused by the scene the gardens presented. The air of freedom and enjoyment everywhere prevailing appeared to have its influence on the Pacha's usually somewhat reserved temperament; and, in a very short time after his introduction, he engaged in earnest conversation with the Duke of Cambridge, Viscount Lascelles, and several other noblemen.

The concluding fête of the season was to have taken place on Thursday last; but intelligence of the death of Lord William Russell having reached town on Wednesday, the réunion was necessarily postponed.

OPENING OF THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT RETREAT.

On Tuesday, the opening of this newly-erected Institution took place under the most gratifying circumstances, save the contretems of a few flying showers, incidental to a July day.

The Provident Retreat, it may be as well to explain, was established in 1843, in connexion with the Booksellers' Provident Institution, for the purpose of affording a comfortable habitation for aged recipients of annuities from the above Society for Booksellers and Boooksellers' Assistants, being members, and their widows. Both Institutions are, therefore, in the main, self-supporting, as, indeed, their titles imply.

The foundation-stone of "the Retreat" was laid on the 3rd of September last, by the Earl of Clarendon, whose high position as a statesman in direct descent from "the great Lord Clarendon," gave a peculiar interest to the ceremony; in every respect equalled by the consummation of the work of benevolence on Tuesday last.

The site of "the Retreat" lies at Abbots Langley, immediately adjoining the King's Langley Station of the London and Birmingham Railway. Thither a special train conveyed a large party of the Booksellers of the metropolis and their friends, numbering considerably above two hundred, including about forty ladies. The company arrived at about twelve o'clock, and at once proceeded to the new building

The Institution, it should here be mentioned, had great difficulty in obtaining an eligible site for their structure; when Mr. John Dickinson, the well-known paper-manufacturer, munificently presented the Society with three-and-a-half acres of ground for the purpose, and has likewise handsomely contributed to the building fund. Thereupon a very neat edifice has been erected, from the designs of Mr. W. H. Cooper, the architect, of Gray's Inn. It is in the Tudor style, of red brick, with stone finishings, which are of an ornamental character—the ribbon or label above the central window bearing the inscription, "Booksellers' Provident Retreat." The plan comprises a centre and two wings, or seven houses of four rooms each; the whole finished with due regard to the comfort of the occupants.

The situation is one of extreme beauty. "The Retreat" is placed upon a raised lawn, somewhat above the level of the Railway (here a lofty embankment), and from which it is but a few poles distant; so that if the rate of the trains will allow, the traveller may obtain a near view of this "happy port and haven" of benevolence. The prospect from thence is picturesque and interesting; truly English in its charm of scenery, as well as in its national associations. In the left hand distance lies Langley Bury, a fine mansion of Charles the Second's time, backed by a noble wood. Adjoining the Railway Station are the gabled mansion and the paper-mills of Mr Dickinson; and, in the right-hand distance, nestling beneath a hill, is the village of King's Langley, looking over the beautiful valley of the Gade, and marking the good taste of Henry III., who built for himself here a stately palace.

The company, on Tuesday, having inspected "the Retreat," and enjoyed a promenade in the grounds for about an hour, at one o'clock, the ceremony of inauguration took place. The Stewards, preceded by a military band of music, walked round the building, and, halting at the central porch, the Architect (Mr. Cooper,) and Honorary Secretary, (Mr. Ives,) described the plan and purposes of the structure. The Rev. Mr. Gee, the Vicar of Abbots Langley, in full canonicals, then read a prayer, imploring the Divine blessing on the undertaking, and the ceremony closed. It was simple but touching; and the scene of the uncovered group in prayer, with a railway train rapidly shooting by, had a most impressive effect.

At two o'clock, the company partook of an elegant déjeûner, provided in a large tent, at a short distance from "the Retreat." The chair was taken by Sir Edward Lytton Bulwer-Lytton, Bart.; and, at the cross-table we noticed the Rev. Mr. Gee, Dr. A. T. Thomson, Mr. T. Longman, Mr. W. Jerdan, &c. There were also present Mr. Dickinson, and the most influential booksellers of the metropolis, and the ladies of the party, in accordance with the graceful custom of recent introduction.

The déjeûner was supplied by Messrs. Staples, of the Albion; and besides a collation, included abundance of fruit, ices, champagne and other wines, all of excellent quality. A military band attended; and a party of vocalists, including Messrs. Kenny, Binge, and G. F. Taylor, executed several songs and glees.

Under the able presidency of Sir E. L. Bulwer-Lytton, the proceedings of the afternoon took the character of highly intellectual festivity. The accomplished Chairman proposed the Health of her Majesty, associated, in good taste, with the prosperity of letters under our female Sovereigns—in the Elizabethan, Augustan, and Victorian ages. The honourable Baronet, in proposing the toast of the day, "Prosperity to the Booksellers' Provident Retreat," eloquently illustrated the relative position of the authors and booksellers of our time; and, we were happy to hear, took occasion to correct some erroneous but popular notions of the condition of men of genius in this country in comparison with that on the Continent, and especially in Germany; very aptly suggesting that the Authors should have their Provident Institutions as well as the Booksellers. The more immediate business of the day, the opening of "the Retreat," was also ably illustrated by Sir E Bulwer-Lytton, who, with much feeling, referred to the munificence of Mr. Dickenson, in not only giving the site for the building, but largely contributing towards its cost; and the company responded to the manly and graceful eloquence of the Chairman by enthusiastically drinking the proposed toast.

FETE AT BEDFORD LODGE, CAMPDEN HILL.

MR. BEDFORD, MADAME ANNA THILLON, AND MR. HUDSON.

SCENE FROM "THE WONDERFUL WATER CURE," AT THE HAYMARKET THEATRE.

The healths of the Earl of Verulam, Lord Lieutenant of the County; of the County Members; of the Chairman; of Mr. Dickenson; of the Treasurer of the Society, (E. Hodgson, Esq.,) and several other toasts, were afterwards given Mr. Dickenson, in proposing the health of the Rev. Mr. Gee, the Vicar of Abbots Langley, explained the benevolent aid of the reverend gentleman towards the building of "the Retreat;" and the worthy Vicar thanked the company in a luminous address, characterised by excellent taste and feeling, which was received with genuine enthusiasm. (To the pious liberality of Mr. Gee, the parishioners and the lovers of art, generally, are indebted for some interesting restorations of portions of the ancient church of Abbots Langley)

In the course of the afternoon, the Treasurer read a long list of subscriptions and donations to the funds; and, at the close of the festival, announced the amount to be upwards of £800, and the Institution "out of debt." The subscription towards its endowment, however, we especially commend to the active benevolence of all who are sensible of the value of books, and the claims of those concerned in producing them, upon the consideration of society.

In the list of donors and subscribers are the following:—

The Earl of Verulam, £20 , Sir E. L. Bulwer Lytton, £20; Messrs. Longman and Co., 100 Guineas , Cosmo Orme, Esq., 50 Guineas; Miss Orme, 10 Guineas; T Gardiner, Esq , £50, Joseph Gardiner, Esq., £50; S. Gage Gardiner, Esq., £20 , John Murray, Esq., 30 Guineas; C Longman, Esq., 20 Guineas; Messrs Chapman and Hall, 20 Guineas; Mr. L. A. Lewis, 50 Guineas; Messrs Tegg and Co., 10 Guineas; Mr. W Benning, 20 Guineas; John Dickenson, Esq , 20 Guineas, H. Butterworth, Esq., 10 Guineas; H. G. Bohn, Esq., 10 Guineas R. Marshall, Esq , 10 Guineas Mrs Marshall, 5 Guineas; J Duncan, Esq , £10; Messrs. Hodgkinson and Co , 10 Guineas Mr S. Hodgkinson 5 Guineas; Mrs. Hodgkinson, 5 Guineas; C. Venables, Esq., 10 Guineas; Mrs. Venables, 5 Guineas , Mrs Edmund Hodgson, 10 Guineas Mr Alderman Kelly, 5 Guineas Messrs Groombridge, 10 Guineas; Mr Virtue, 10 Guineas Messrs. Southgate and Barrett, 10 Guineas; Messrs. Spalding and Hodge, 20 Guineas , Mr C F Strange, 10 Guineas; Mr Sotheran, 10 Guineas, &c., &c

The party returned by special train to town at half-past seven o'clock, highly delighted with the day's proceedings, than which we do not remember a more gratifying commemoration.

Some epigrammatic pleasantries were exchanged during the festival on the Chairman's recent adoption of the Cold Water Cure;" the best evidence of which was his appearance in excellent health.

ASCENT OF THE GREAT NASSAU BALLOON.

On Monday evening, at a-quarter before eight o'clock, Mr. Green, accompanied by twelve ladies and gentlemen, ascended in his Great Balloon from Cremorne-house, in the presence of several thousands of spectators. The ascent was a very grand one; though the Balloon, from the heavy freight in the car, and the great quantity of ballast in the shape of bags of sand, did not mount so rapidly as on previous occasions; indeed, when over that part of the town near St. Peter's Church, Grosvenor-street west, so low did it return towards the earth, that the rope suspended from it swept the roofs of the houses; nor was it till a discharge of sand was resorted to that it mounted high into the air. The clearness of the evening afforded the sight of its transit over the town, and gave those in the car an admirable bird's-eye view of the immense expanse of the city beneath them. After being 52 minutes in the air, a safe and pleasant descent was effected at Leyton, Essex, in a meadow adjoining Leyton Grange, the seat of Mr John Lane. The aeronauts were hardly on terra firma before its generous possessor was with them, with a proffer of hospitality, after partaking of which the party returned to London, highly delighted with the manifold enjoyments of the excursion

Our Artist has sketched the lower portion of the huge Balloon "just before the ascent."

ASCENT OF THE NASSAU BALLOON.

"THE WONDERFUL WATER CURE."

Our Illustration represents a scene in Grisar's popular operetta, in which the fascinating Anna Thillon, the ward of the Charlatan, Dr. Tertaglia (Paul Pedford) declares her preference for him, to the apparent mortification of Belloni (Hudson), her lover, who is disguised as Scaramouch.

NEW MASONIC HALL AT COWES.

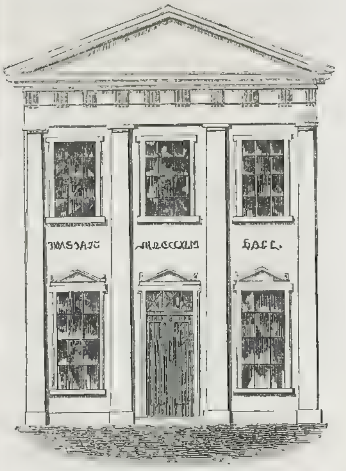
The ceremony of laying the chief corner-stone of the intended new Masonic Hall, was attended with considerable éclat at Cowes, on Monday last. The venerable the Earl of Yarborough, Deputy Provincial Grand Master, though in the roadstead, we regret to state, was prevented by indisposition leaving his beautiful Yacht to come ashore to assist.

The various steamers arrived in the early part of the morning from the opposite coast, loaded with passengers, among which were many of the Brethren from the neighbouring towns of Ringwood, Southampton, Portsmouth, Ryde, and other places; while cars and vehicles of every description entered Cowes, from all parts of the island, filled with visitors, for whose accommodation a capacious platform and galleries were erected by the Provincial Grand Superintendent of the Works, Mr. Frederick Wyatt, the architect and builder.

Lord Worsley (the eldest son of the Earl of Yarborough), the Deputy Grand Master of England, had been announced to assist in placing the chief corner-stone of the building. On the arrival of the Brethren, they at once proceeded to the Town Hall, where a Provisional Grand Lodge was held; from whence, at about eleven o'clock, they proceeded, with their splendid emblems and paraphernalia of the craft, in procession, to attend Divine Service; the line being closed by—

Provincial Grand Swordbearer
The Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master
Officer of the Grand Lodge of England } The Most Worshipful { Officer of the Grand Lodge of England
Deputy Grand Master of England,
Lord Worsley
Provincial Grand Stewards
Grand Tyler, with drawn sword.

From the Town Hall, the procession moved through High-street, the band playing the Masonic March, thence through Cross-street, up Union-road to the Church, which they reached about half-past eleven o'clock. The brethren being seated, an excellent sermon was preached by the Rev. Brother Wallace, the Grand Chaplain of the Albany Lodge, from xxiv. c. Acts, xvi. v. "Herein do I exercise myself to have always a conscience void of offence toward God and toward man." After the Sermon, a collection was made in aid of the Building fund. The procession was then re-formed, and proceeded to the site of the intended building.



NEW MASONIC HALL, COWES, ISLE OF WIGHT.

All being in readiness, the Deputy Grand Master, after invoking a blessing from the Great Architect of the Universe upon the undertaking, assisted by the craft, and the inhabitants of the town, proceeded to lay the stone in due form. A bottle containing the current coins of the realm, was next deposited in the cavity left for that purpose, over which was placed a brass plate with a suitable inscription. The stone was then lowered, the band playing "God save the Queen," the company present simultaneously standing up uncovered. The ceremony being concluded, the procession re-formed and returned by the new road down Castle-hill,

The band, again playing the Mason's March, and Prince Albert's Quick Step passed in front of the Royal Yacht Squadron House, for the gratification of their beloved and respected noble Commodore, the D.P.G.M., who witnessed the procession from his beautiful Kestrel. The yachts in the roadstead at this time added much to the splendour of the spectacle, the whole being gaily dressed with colours, in honour of the departure of the Royal Family, who, at about two o'clock, proceeded out of the harbour in the Fairy, on their return from Osborne House to Buckingham Palace. The procession, having left the Club House, returned to the Town Hall, where their mysteries were again celebrated.

The labours of the day being over, 73 of the craft out of 134 who walked in the procession, adjourned to a sumptuous banquet, prepared at brother Atkins's, of the Grapes, Sun-hill

We have engraved the elevation of the architect's (Mr. Wyatt) neat design.

GOLD; OR, THE HALF-BROTHERS.

BY CAMILLA TOULMIN.

CHAPTER III.

The acquaintance that Trevor Sefton had formed with the Clifford family did not ripen very suddenly to intimacy; for, if the truth must be owned, his mother had a little prejudice against them, consequent on the frequent scoldings, or quarrels, whichever they might be called. And, though it was really very evident that the fretful-tempered, find-fault mother was the cause of these disturbances, the daughters were not those sublime angelic heroines—abstractions of humanity—whom novelists love to paint; who bear every wrong and contumely with such holy resignation, such meek submission, that a more emotional reader sometimes finds sympathy degenerate into pity, or else there steals into his mind a most heterodox doubt that might confound self-control with apathy.

No, the Cliffords were heroines of a finer quality than the statuesque damsels niched in the pages of romance. They were the Heroines of Private Life—of English Middle Life, in this fast moving Transition Age, when the cry is still "On, on," and a lifetime of action and emotion is crowded into a few years. Quick and keen of heart to feel and to suffer, they could not always mutely endure; and out of their home and in their home they had trials to brave more soul-subduing than the encounters which have won coronets and garters, and fame and titles. A hopeful, faithful spirit, and the energy that willed they should "do" and endure, they opposed to the "slings and arrows" of fortune; and for their home sorrows, so much greater and deeper, they had Duty and an affection that struggled to be warmer than it was. I have said they did not always "mutely" endure; but it must be remembered that rebukes, much less quarrels, do not die away without there remaining [illegible] behind, only too ready to ferment on an opportune occasion, even if it be apparently a slight one to the casual observer.

Margaret Clifford was the first of the family who grew to be on intimate terms with Mrs. Sefton; and this was natural, for when Susan and her mother were at the theatre, and the eldest sister secluded, as was her wont, in her own chamber, some pretence or some reality often drew the ladies together. There was a coincidence, too, not without results.

The hour at which Trevor had to leave home, in the morning, to attend lectures, and that at which Margaret started, to commence her daily duties, was the same; and the lecture-room and the pupils' residence lay in a similar direction. If Trevor did chance to overtake her on a showery morning, I don't see how he could avoid carrying the umbrella over her head; and on fine days it would have been hardly civil to pass her with a bow, and it would have been difficult, too, for she was a quick walker in cold weather, and offering her his arm did not compel him to slacken his pace.

Many an agreeable chat had they about every thing in the world; and, really, there are few things more soul-invigorating than half an hour's lively chat with a congenial companion. It is a sort of quinine draught to the mind.

By degrees these accidental meetings became so common, that, long before the winter was over, it would have seemed strange for a week to pass without their occurring twice or thrice; and they seldom failed to heighten the spirits of both, and cheer them for the labours of the day.

"You will never guess what I have come up to consult you about," said Margaret one day, with a smile, to Mrs. Sefton.

She had glanced round the room, and perceived that Trevor was not there. He came in, however, soon afterwards, and did not interrupt the conversation, though his presence might, perhaps, have checked its arising.

"Really, something so very surprising?" asked Mrs. Sefton gaily.

"Nothing more or less important than the truly feminine subject of Dress," returned Margaret. "I am invited to a gay party. Such a thing as this is quite an event in my life, I assure you, and I want the benefit of your taste in making a selection from a not very extensive wardrobe."

Trevor entered at this moment, and Mrs. Sefton insisted on calling him to the council. The merits of white net and worked muslin, blush roses and coral wreath, were discussed with some gravity, and yet with that covert smile which always will accompany such consultations.

To his great astonishment, Trevor Sefton detected in his own mind the wish that he too had been going to the ball. He should like to have seen Margaret Clifford in her robe of filmy white, and with the roses in her hair. Contrasted with her dark merino dress and close straw bonnet to which he was accustomed, the change would have appeared like the butterfly burst of the chrysalis. He wondered if she would be admired? She was naturally so very graceful that he felt sure she must dance well; that is to say, quietly, and like a lady. Then came the wish that he could contribute to her pleasure, in however slight a degree, and it was with quite a thrill of gratification that the idea of a certain offering presented itself to him.

Be sure he did not forget the night of Mrs. Joyce's party. Be sure he listened watchfully for the cab that was to take her thither. Thrice he rushed to the window in mistake, and once was half-way down the stairs, but at last it was really at the door. Margaret was quite ready. People who go out seldom, always begin their toilet in good time; and Trevor had the pleasure of handing her down stairs, and presenting to her a charming bouquet. It was a chilly evening in early spring, and she was enveloped in a large shawl, so he could not judge of the contour of her dress, but he thought the wreath of roses most becoming, and was amazed at the massive plaits of her rich auburn hair, which was commonly twisted round a comb into the smallest possible compass. He had too much delicacy and respect for her to utter any compliments, but perhaps he looked them; or perhaps it was pleasure at his graceful present which brought the colour into her cheeks, and made her look absolutely beautiful.

It was sad extravagance on the part of Trevor Sefton the purchase of that choice bouquet; for the few shillings it cost were as much to him as nearly as many guineas would have been a year ago. I don't mean to say he went without a meal to procure it; for that would have been false economy, since they who deprive themselves of a dinner are likely to require a tremendous supper. But he felt what was worse than temporary hunger,—a prick of conscience for his lavish expenditure, and yet, wicked creature, would not have revoked the deed for the world!

(To be Continued.)

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THERE is a trite saying (the very fine, perhaps, will call it a vulgar), "that every dog has his day." In the current week, the lucky dog was cricket. There were a few race meetings, but not one of any account: some rowing there was, and a little sailing: some "tall" walking, and a little slow betting at Tatters[illegible]'s and elsewhere on the brilliant turf festival for celebration in Sussex next week—but the feature of this instant se'nnight, especially as relates to the sporting of the metropolis, was the "imperious" match at cricket, which came off at Lord's, between the Gentlemen and Players of England. An inspection of the list which sums up our notice, will show that all the eminent hands at bat and ball were engaged in this great encounter. The ground was the cynosure of the whole cricketing world, and the game certainly was worth the company. It was the second match of the season, in which the last wicket was gone in for with one for the tie, and two for the victory: the force of fancy can no further go, to imagine a case of excitement by all engaged or interested.

It is not our office, neither our purpose, to deal with such professional points as arose in the course of this stirring contest. Our reading of the sports of the people is in their relation as social amusements or manly traits of skill and enterprise. In both, the occasion at issue was replete. It was a rendezvous, on characteristic thoughts intent; a tryst, wherein the best would, at all events endeavour to win. "O si sic omnino!" Need it be said the play was superb? that it was "of itself its own parallel?" The match occupied the three first days of the week: we will take it up on Wednesday, when a display of batting was made [illegible] the amateurs [illegible] such as, perhaps, was never exhibited before.

These finished artists were Messrs. Haygarth and Taylor; the former was at the wicket upwards of four hours; the latter turned the whole fortune of the day. Mr. Haygarth having got his 26—including a desperate "shot" from Hillyer—was stumped by Box, and Mr Felix putting himself out—alas! the luck—with his leg before the wicket—things looked far from satisfactory. Mr. Alfred Mynn, too, went out for a single run, and the Hon R. Grimston being hors de combat for two scores, £200 to £5 was laid on the Players. This was a tempting of Fortune, and the jade took the bribe. No sooner was it "done and done," than Taylor [illegible] the invincible....

Quantus
In clypeum assurgat quo turbine torqueat hastam,

now he did wield the bat, and knock the balls about! Hillyer, Lillywhite, Clarke, Dean—they all were at him, with all they knew; but it was no "go," till he had scored 44, and, as aforesaid, turned the fortunes of the day. Mr. W. Mynn went in for his wicket, and people held their breath—for it was the moment when the chivalry of Cricket was to decide the momentous question, "To be, or not to be." Mr. Long, at the opposite wicket, settled the affair of the tie by stealing a bye; and then came the tug of war. From the moment that Taylor was "stumped," the cry was "how many to die?" The face of affairs was now altered, as well as those of the backers of the Players. The multitude stood with eyes rivetted on the moves and feints. "intentique ora tenebant."

There towered Mynn, the Ajax of the fight! First Hillyer challenged, then Lillywhite assailed: they might as well have been bowling at Magna Charta! Caution was the policy of the besieged. They were in no hurry for a sortie—they let the beleaguers bowl their bellyful. Thus, in the spirit of accomplished generals, biding their time, they watched, with eagle glance, the turn of tide, which should lead to fortune. At length it came, the Mynn struck the fatal blow, and the Gentlemen stood masters of the field! When, with flushed brows and quick-throbbing breasts, the excited crowd passed slowly from the ground, you heard on all sides the assurance that no game of similar excellence, or the like intense interest, was known to the modern annals of Cricket. Thus stood the score:—

PLAYERS.

Martingell, b. Bathurst	11	run out	26
Dean, b. Mynn	0	c. Haygarth, b. Bathurst	3
Box, c. W Mynn, b. Mynn	3	c. Pickering, b. Bathurst	7
Guy, b. Mynn	25	run out	31
[illegible] Parr, b. Bathurst	0	b. Mynn	5
Butler, b. Mynn	6	b. Bathurst	11
Clark[illegible]	1	c. Felix, b. Bathurst	3
Sewell, b. Mynn	10	not out	[illegible]
Dorrinton b. Mynn	5	b. Mynn	1
Hillyer, c. W Mynn, b. Bathurst	4	b. Bathurst	11
Lillywhite, [illegible]	4	b. Mynn	3
Byes 1[illegible], Wide Bathurst 1	16	Byes [illegible], Wides, Mynn 1, Bathurst 2	32
	85		140

GENTLEMEN.

W Mynn, Esq., b. Clark	5	not out	2
A Haygarth, Esq., s. Box, b. Hillyer	1	s. Box b. Hillyer	26
N. Felix, Esq., c. and b. Hillyer	6	l. b. w b. Hillyer	0
A. Mynn, Esq., c. Butler, b. Hillyer	13	c. Guy, b. Lillywhite	1
C G Taylor, Esq., b. Clark	23	s. Box b. Hillyer	44
W Pickering, Esq., c [illegible] b. Hillyer	[illegible]	b. Lillywhite	[illegible]
E. Napper, Esq b. Hillyer	0	l. b. w b. Hillyer	3
R. P Long Esq s. Box, b. Clark	[illegible]	not out	[illegible]
Hon. R Grimston, s. Box, b Clark	[illegible]	c. Guy, b. Hillyer	3
Sir F Bathurst, b. Clarke	8	b. Lillywhite	[illegible]
W. Nicholson, Esq., not out	4	b. Hillyer	18
Byes	5	Byes, 18; no ball, 1 (Martingell)	19
	105		126

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—A very dull market, nothing but the four leading favourites for the Goodwood Stakes having been in any kind of favour; like Capel-court, "the Corner" is not in a flourishing condition at present.

GOODWOOD STAKES.

7 to 1 agst The Hero
7 to 1 —— Jonathan Wild (t)
9 to 1 —— Camera Obscura (taken)
10 to 1 agst Connaught Ranger (taken)
20 to 1 —— Morella filly
25 to 1 —— Newcourt
25 to 1 agst Giantess
25 to 1 —— Petitioner
30 to 1 —— The Druid
33 to 1 —— Teetotaler (t)
35 to 1 agst Akbar (t)

GOODWOOD CUP.

4 to 1 agst Grimston
8 to 1 agst Lothario

ST LEGER.

50 to 1 agst The Wrestler (t)
50 to 1 agst Caurouch (t)
50 to 1 agst Tom Tulloch (t)

DERBY.

50 to 1 agst Planet
50 to 1 agst Cassandra colt (t)

THURSDAY.—Lord George Bentinck's mare was in high feather this afternoon for the Goodwood Stakes, and on a respectable outlay, became first favourite; the Hero, Jonathan Wild, and Connaught Ranger were on the decline. These were the only changes of the slightest importance. It is thought that about twenty-five will show at the post. Latest averages:

GOODWOOD STAKES.

8 to 1 agst Camera Obscura (9 to 1 t freely)
9 to 1 —— Jonathan Wild (t, afterwards offered)
9 to 1 —— The Hero (t, aftds offrd)
10 to 1 —— Connaught Ranger (t, aftds offrd)
25 to 1 agst Newcourt
25 to 1 —— Giantess
25 to 1 —— Druid
28 to 1 —— Red Robin (t)
28 to 1 —— Morella filly
30 to 1 —— [illegible]
30 to 1 —— [illegible]
33 to 1 —— [illegible]
33 to 1 agst Bold Archer
40 to 1 —— Humorum
40 to 1 —— A-la-mode
40 to 1 —— Footstool
40 to 1 —— Teetotaller
50 to 1 —— [illegible]
50 to 1 —— [illegible]
50 to 1 —— [illegible]

GOODWOOD CUP.

3 to 1 agst Grimston (t)
7 to 1 agst Lothario

ORANGE PRIZE.

5 to 2 agst Alarm
7 to 1 agst Lothario

ST. LEGER.

5 to 1 agst Pyrrhus the First
12 to 1 —— Brocardo (t)
12 to 1 agst Fancy Boy
30 to 1 —— Joanna colt (t)

DERBY.

40 to 1 agst Epirote (taken freely)
40 to 1 —— Planet (t)
50 to 1 agst Crozier (t)
50 to 1 —— [illegible] (t)
50 to 1 —— Bingham (t)
1000 to 60 —— Van Tromp (t aft [illegible])

SOUTHAMPTON RACES.—TUESDAY.

The Southampton Stakes of 20 sovs, with 50 added.
Mr. Dockeray's Auld Lang Syne .. .. walked over

The Shirley Stakes of 5 sovs, and 25 added.
Mr. Death's Camelia, 3 yrs .. .. .. (Wakefield) 1
Mr. Rolt's Fugitive, 3 yrs 2

A Plate of £50, added to a Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each.
Mr. E. Parr's Vitula .. .. (Wakefield) 1
Mr. Crofton's Rosa 2

The Maiden Plate of £30, added to a Sweepstakes of 13 sovs each.
Mr. W. Saddler's Messenger .. ..(A. Day) 1
Mr. Nunn's f by Samarcand, out of La Fille Mall Gardée 2
Several others started. Won by a length.

WEDNESDAY.

The Stoneham Park Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 50 added.
Mr. Death's Sabreur .. .. (Wakefield) 1
Mr. H. Cochrane's Lady Charlotte 2

The Borough Plate of £25, added to a sweepstakes of 3 sovs each.
Mr. King's Flash of Lightning .. .. .. (J. Sharpe) 1
Mr. Osbaldeston's Prudence 2

The Hunters' Stakes of 5 sovs each, and 20 added, were won by Mr. Anderson's Stittenham (Mr. Sadler), beating Ascot and Tartar in a trot.

The Champagne Stakes of 3 sovs each and 30 added, were won in two heats, easily, by Mr. Rolt's Fugitive, beating Messenger [illegible].

BOAT RACE BETWEEN THE ETONIANS AND THE OXONIANS.—On Tuesday a trial of skill was appointed to come off between the eight Etonians who are to compete with the Westminster School, on Thursday next, between Putney and Mortlake, and eight of the Oxonians. At the start, which took place between seven and eight o'clock, both boats got well off together, and so continued with but little variation for the first half mile. The Etonians then began to draw ahead of their opponents, and after a beautiful display of skill and strength, won the match, amidst the cheers of their friends, by two boats' length.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—During the present week the arrivals of English wheat for our market have been on a very moderate scale, yet the supply on offer to-day was fully equal to meet the wants of the dealers, whose attendance was very small. All descriptions moved off heavily, and Monday's depressed currencies were with difficulty supported. Of foreign wheat the imports have been small. That article [illegible] were pressed, rather lower rates were accepted by the holders [illegible] other kinds hung on hand. The finest malt moved off freely; other kinds slowly, at late rates. The oat trade was in a very depressed state, yet we can notice no alteration in value. Beans, peas, and flour as last advised.

ARRIVALS. English wheat, 1770; barley, 260; oats, 780. Irish: wheat, ——; barley, ——; oats, 8520. Foreign wheat, 1830; barley, ——; oats, 2100. Flour, 1890 sacks; malt, 1270 quarters.

English. Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 40s to 50s; ditto white, 46s to 58s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 39s to 47s; ditto white, 43s to 52s; rye, 32s to 34s; grinding barley, 24s to 27s; distilling, 26s to 28s; malting ditto, 30s to 32s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 56s to 62s; brown ditto, 51s to 53s; Kingston and Ware, 62s to 63s; Chevalier, 63s to 64s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 22s to 24s; potato ditto, 27s to 28s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 2[illegible]s; ditto, white, 22s to 26s; tick beans, new, 36s to 37s; ditto old, 37s to 39s; grey peas, 35s to 37s; maple, 33s to 36s; white, 36s to [illegible]0s; boilers, 40s to 43s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 42s to 46s; Suffolk, 36s to 38s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 35s to 37s, per 280 lbs. Foreign—Free wheat, [illegible] Dantzic [illegible].

The Seed Market.—In [illegible] for forward delivery, at full prices. [illegible], but all other articles are a mere drug.

Linseed, English, sowing, 39s to 45s; Baltic, crushing, 38s to 43s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 42s. Hempseed, 35s to 37s per quarter. Coriander, 11s to 14s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 9s to 11s; white ditto, 7s to 9s. Tares, 3s 0d to 5s 0d per bushel. English Rapeseed, £20 to £23 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £10 15s to £11 0s; ditto foreign, £7 10s to £8 0s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 0s to £5 5s per ton. Canary, 48s to 52s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s; extra, 52s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 8d to 8½d; of household ditto, 6d to 7½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat 50s 10d; barley, 27s 10d; oats, 23s 0d; rye, 36s 5d; beans, 38s 4d; peas, 36s 4d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 51s 11d; barley, 27s 5d; oats, 23s 7d; rye, 33s 4d; beans, 37s 1d; peas, 31s 10d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 6s 0d; barley, 4s; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 4s; beans, 4s 0d; peas, 4s 0d.

Tea.—Although the stock is now upwards of 5,000,000 lb more than at the corresponding period in 1845, the demand for most kinds of tea is steady, at full prices. The exports from China in the last twelve months were upwards of 53,000,000lb.

Sugar.—All kinds of raw sugar move off very slowly, at a decline of from 6d to 1s per cwt. Refined goods are dull, at 66s for brown, and 67s per cwt for standard lumps.

Coffee.—This article is a very slow sale, at late rates.

Rice.—There is very little doing in this market, yet we can notice no material alteration in value.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £2 5s to £3 1[illegible]; old ditto, £3 to £4; new clover, £3 5s to £4 15s; old ditto, £4 4s to £5 15s; oat straw, [illegible]s to £1 [illegible]s; wheat straw, £1 14s to £1 16s per load.

Oils.—Most kinds of oil are in slow request at, in some instances, reduced prices.

Provisions.—Irish butter is a dull sale, at a decline in the quotations of from 2s to 4s per cwt. The arrivals this week have exceeded 5000 firkins. Carlow, landed, 81s to 86s; Clonmel, 86s to 88s; Cork, 82s to 86s; and Waterford and Limerick, 82s to 86s per cwt. Foreign butter is steady, at further reduced prices. The best Dutch may be purchased at 86s to 90s, and inferior qualities, 72s to 80s per cwt. English butter, 1s per cwt lower. Devon, 82s to 88s; Dorset, 90s to 94s per cwt.; and fresh, 8s to 12s per dozen. The bacon market is inactive, at from 50s to 59s per cwt. Prime Irish hams are quite as dear; but all other kinds of provisions are a slow sale.

Tallow.—This market is tolerably steady, at 41s 6d to 41s 9d for prime Y. C. on the spot; but for forward delivery very little is doing. Town tallow steady, at 40s to 40s 6d net cash.

Wool.—The public sales are progressing heavily, at a decline of from 1d to 2d per lb.

Hops (Friday).—The accounts from the plantations are not to say very satisfactory; yet, as the growth of hops this year is expected to be about an average one, the demand here is inactive at the late depression in the quotations. The duty is called £145,000. Sussex pockets, £5 [illegible]; Mid and East Kent ditto, £6 6s to £8 15s per cwt.

Coals (Friday).—Deane's Primrose, 13s 6d; Grace's Hartley, 13s 6d; Killingworth, 14s 6d; Eden Main, 14s 9d; Braddyll's Hetton, 15s 6d; Haugh Hall, 14s 9d; and Cowper's Hartley, 15s per ton.

Smithfield (Friday).—The supply of beasts on sale here, to-day, was moderately extensive, and of full average quality. For most kinds of beef the demand was tolerably steady, at prices about equal to those obtained on Monday, and at which a good clearance was effected. We had on offer 140 oxen and cows, 700 sheep and lambs, and 26 calves from abroad. With sheep we were well supplied; yet the sale for that description of stock was firm, at fully previous quotations—the best old Downs producing 4s 4d per 8lb. Lambs—the numbers of which were good—moved off slowly, at the late depression in their currencies. The veal trade was steady, at very full prices; but pigs were a slow inquiry. Milch cows were dull, at from £16 to £19 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; second quality ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime large oxen, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 10d to 4s 0d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; second quality ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; large coarse calves, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; prime small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 6d; large hogs, 3s 8d to 4s 6d; neat small porkers, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; lambs, 4s 8d to 5s 8d. Suckling calves, 18s to 29s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 19s each. Beasts, 726; cows, 1[illegible]; sheep and lambs, 11,860; calves, 402; pigs, 250.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a slow general inquiry here this morning [illegible] 6d [illegible] large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; large pork, 3s 4d to 4s 0d; inferior mutton, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; middling ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; small pork, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; lamb, 4s 8d to 5s 8d. ROBT. HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Although no alteration has occurred in the value of money for some time past yet within the last month much difference has existed with regard to its plenteousness or scarcity. The gradual emission of deposits, from the Court of Chancery, on account of railway schemes, either passed or rejected, it was conceived, would operate in lessening the value of money ere long. This hope is, however, not now so confidently entertained, the circulation of the Bank of England pretty clearly showing that the money deposited was, in a great measure, indirectly borrowed from that Corporation, either before making the deposits, or shortly after. Doubtless, this has great connection with the present depressed state of the Exchequer market, bills having been deposited for advances, and now redeemed, it is well known, must be ultimately sold to a most unlimited amount. At present there is scarcely anything doing in this Security, the closing price being 14s. to 11s. premium. The Consol Market has been very dull during the week, with very little business. The general belief entertained is, that a depression must ensue. On Monday the closing quotation was 95⅝ ⅞ for Account and 95½ ¾ for Money. From this time the fluctuations have been from an eighth to a quarter per cent the closing price being 95⅝ to ¾ for Money and 95½ to ⅝ for time. From the return of the Quarter's Revenue, the amount of surplus applicable to Government securities for the next Quarter, is £705,118, an amount not likely to support the market against any decided downward tendency. Bank Stock has somewhat improved, closing at 207½ to 208½; Reduced is 95⅞: New Three and a Quarter, 97½; Long Annuities 10 5-16ths.

The absence of business that has existed in the Foreign Market during the week, it is universally admitted has been never equalled. The accounts from Mexico via New York, tend to induce belief that another revolution is fast approaching. In the meantime the conversion of the Bonds is proceeding with, and the nominal price is 26½. Portuguese is better, closing at 46½ for the Four per Cents; Russian has been dealt in at 112. Spanish prices are little better than nominal; the Five per Cents quote 24⅝; Three per Cents, 3[illegible]. Dutch Four per Cent Certificates are 95⅝ ¾; the Two and a Half per Cents, 5[illegible].

The Railway Market is scarcely so buoyant as it was last week, particularly the Foreign lines. In Paris, the dealers find themselves situated in precisely a similar position to our Share Market last year. Prices are consequently yielding; and, as the lines are opening, calls approach, and sales must evidently result. This has produced a decline in all the best lines, especially those which have been laid down by Government, who will shortly require the payment of a large instalment. The Great Northern, Paris and Lyons, Orleans and Bordeaux, and Orleans and Vierzon, have all suffered from this effect. The closing prices are subjoined:—Aberdeen, ; Ambergate, Nott., Boston, and Eastern Junction, [illegible]; Birmingham and Gloucester, 129½; Birmingham and Oxford Junction 5[illegible]; Bristol and Exeter, Do., New, 9; Bristol and Gloucester, 52½; Buckinghamshire, ⅜ dis.; Caledonian, 12⅞; Ditto, Half Shares, ½; Ditto, Extension, 1⅜; Cambridge and Oxford, ; Derby and Crewe, 6½; Direct Manchester (Remington's), ⅝; Direct Northern, ⅞; Eastern Counties, 24½; Do. New, 7¾ pm.; Ditto., Perpet. 5 per Cent., No. 1, ⅝ pm.; Ditto, York Extension, [illegible]; Eastern Union, Cambridge and Ely, ⅝; Exeter, Yeovil, and Dorchester, 3½; Great North of England, 232; Ditto, New, 45½; Great Western, 150½; Ditto, Half Shares, 84; Ditto Quarter Shares, 21¾; Guildford, Fareham and Portsmouth, 5⅝; Hull and Selby, 106½; Leeds and Bradford, 69; Leicester and Bedford, ⅞ dis.; Leicester, Tamworth, &c., 1 dis.; Liverpool, Manchester, and Newcastle Junction, 1⅞; London and Birmingham, 229; Ditto Quarters, 32; London and Blackwall, 8⅜; Ditto, New, ; London and Brighton, 64⅝; London and Croydon, 23; Ditto, Guarant., ; London and South Western, 79, Ditto, New, ; London and York, ⅞; London, Salisbury, and Yeovil, 1; Londonderry and Coleraine, 2¼; Lynn and Ely, ; Lynn and Dereham, 11; Manchester and Leeds, Fifths, 11¼; Ditto, Extension, 2¼ p; Manchester and Birmingham, 85; Ditto, Quarter Shares (C), 10⅝; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, ½ p; Manchester and Southampton, 1⅞; Midland, 148; Ditto, New, 38; Ditto, Birmingham and Derby, 121; Newcastle and Darlington Junction, 45; Do. New, 11⅞; Ditto, New, Brandling, 44⅝; Newcastle and Berwick, 26⅝; Norfolk, ; Ditto, Tenths, 2⅝; Ditto Extension, 2; North British, 35; Ditto, Half Shares, 13⅝; Ditto, Carlisle Extension, 2⅞; North Kent and Direct Dover, 1⅜; North Staffordshire, 3 pm.; Northampton, Banbury, and Cheltenham, 1[illegible]; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 7⅝; Portsmouth Direct, 4[illegible]; Preston and Wyre, 34; Ditto, Half Shares, 7; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 1⅝ dis; Richmond, 18; Scottish Midland, 6⅞; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 2; Shropshire Union, 1⅜ dis; South Midland, ¼ pm; South Eastern and Dover, 44¼; Ditto, New (paid £32), No. 1, 22½; Ditto New (do. £33 6s 8d), No. 2 15½; Ditto, New (do. £15), No 4, 3¼; South Wales, 1¼; Waterford and Kilkenny, 2⅞; West Riding Union, 2⅝ p.; Wisbeach and St. Ives, 2⅜; York and North Midland, ; Ditto, Extension, 41[illegible]; Ditto, East and West Riding Extension, 14; Boulogne and Amiens, 11⅞; Bordeaux, Toulon, and Cette (Espolete) ¾; East India, 6¾; Luxembourg, 1⅛; Northern of France Constituted, 12⅝; Orleans and Bordeaux, 7⅜; Paris and Lyons Constituted, 5⅛; Sambre and Meuse, 4.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Prices were a trifle firmer in the English Market, yesterday, but quotations remained unaltered. In the Foreign House, Portuguese Four per Cents. were flat, closing at 41½. In Railways, no material changes occurred.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, JULY 21.

WHITEHALL, JULY 20.—The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, constituting and appointing the Right Honourable George Earl of Auckland, G.C.B.; Vice-Admiral Sir Charles Adam, K.C.B.; Rear-Admiral James Whitley Deans Dundas; Maurice Frederick Fitzhardinge Berkeley, Esq. Captain in the Royal Navy, Lord John Hay, C.B. Captain in the Royal Navy; and the Honourable William Francis Cowper, her Majesty's Commissioners for executing the office of High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the dominions, islands, and territories thereunto belonging.

CROWN OFFICE, JULY 21.
MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT.

Borough of Liskeard: Charles Buller, the younger, Esq., Judge Advocate General.

Stewartry of Kirkcudbright: Thomas Maitland, Esq., her Majesty's Solicitor-General of Scotland.

County of Stafford, Southern Division: The Honourable George Anson, Clerk of her Majesty's Ordnance.

West Riding of York: The Right Honourable George William Frederick Howard, commonly called Viscount Morpeth, First Commissioner of her Majesty's Woods, Forests, Works, and Buildings.

WAR OFFICE, JULY 21.

11th Foot: Assist.-Surg. R. Dane, M.D., to be Surgeon, vice West. 12th: Ensign G. R. Littlehales to be Lieutenant, vice Holler; H. A. Norris to be Ensign, vice Littlehales. 13th, Captain J. E. G. Elmsall to be Captain, vice Brevet-Major H. C. Wade; Lieut. R. Rattray to be Captain, vice Elmsall; Ensign J. F. Woodhouse to be Lieutenant, vice Rattray; R. Peel to be Ensign, vice Woodhouse. 29th, A. M. Macbeth to be Assistant Surgeon, vice Dane. 34th: Lieut. J. T. Still to be Captain, vice Dickenson; Ensign M. G. Best to be Lieutenant, vice Still; C. Thorold to be Ensign, vice Best. 65th: Lieut. D. Campbell to be Lieutenant, vice Marshal; Ensign S. Blake to be Lieutenant, vice Campbell; J. W. H. Williams to be Ensign, vice Blake.

1st West India Regiment: Ensign T. Clark to be Adjutant, vice Bingham.

Royal Canadian Rifle Regiment: Lieut. S. Blake to be Lieutenant, vice Knight.

BREVET.—Captain J. E. G. Elmsall to be Major in the Army.

HOSPITAL STAFF.—To be Assistant-Surgeon to the Forces: W. Westall, M.D.; T. Parr; G. F. Fletcher.

MEMORANDUM.—Lieutenant John Pye Woolcock, of the 56th Foot, has been permitted to assume the surname of "Pye," instead of that of "Woolcock," and should therefore be styled Lieutenant "John Pye Pye." The Christian names of Ensign Wildams of the 41st Foot, are Fleming Gough Howel Games.

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE, JULY 18.

Royal Regiment of Artillery: Brevet Major J. Eyre to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Smith; Second Captain F. Dunlop to be Captain, vice Eyre; First Lieutenant A. H. Graham to be Second Captain, vice Dunlop; Second Lieutenant F. Lambert to be First Lieutenant, vice Graham.

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY THE QUEEN.

[illegible]

West Essex Regiment of Militia: Captain Hugh Pearson to be Adjutant.

Carnarvonshire Militia: W. G. Griffith, to be Adjutant, with the Brevet rank of Captain, vice Chapman.

DECLARATION OF INSOLVENCY.—J. CAINES, Chilton Cantelo, Somersetshire, [illegible].

BANKRUPTCIES SUPERSEDED.—D. THOMAS, Narbeth, Pembrokeshire, corn merchant. H. J. MARCUS and J. NAYLOR, Leeds, sharebrokers.

BANKRUPTS.—C. PULLMAN, Strand, hosier. S. WARD, Lillypot-lane, lasting manufacturer. W. GREEN, Middlesex, boarding-house-keeper. I. BRYANT, Stoke Newington, builder. A. and J. ALEXANDER, Exeter, opticians. J. TAYLOR, Hollinwood, Lancashire, rope manufacturer. J. STENDALL, Hucknall-under-Huthwaite, Nottinghamshire, [illegible]. W. HOLDSWORTH, Ripley, Yorkshire, apothecary. W. WOOD, Shrewsbury, Salop, [illegible] merchant.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—D. THOMPSON, Paisley, manufacturer. E. MACPHEE, [illegible] merchant. R. LOCHART, Glasgow, post-master. C. M'CANCE, Glasgow, [illegible]. [illegible] COCHRAN, Edinburgh, laceman. A. GRAHAM, Hawick, merchant.

FRIDAY, JULY 24.

WAR-OFFICE, JULY 24.

3rd Dragoon Guards: Cornet E. H. Turton to be Lieutenant, vice Coote; A. D. Menteath to be Cornet, vice Turton.

1st Foot: Lieut. J. A. G. Campbell to be Lieutenant, vice Leader. 3rd: Assist.-Surg. G. F. Cameron, M.D. to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Gordon. 14th: Ensign R. Macdonald to be Lieutenant, vice Hamilton; Ensign E. L. Thorp to be Ensign, vice Macdonald. 25th: Ensign A. C. Smith to be Ensign, vice Dickson. 36th: A. V. Bond to be Ensign, vice B[illegible]. 63rd: J. K. Carr, M.D., to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Cameron. 79th: Lieut. T. L[illegible] to be Lieutenant, vice Campbell; E. W. Cuming to be Ensign, vice Smith. 9[illegible]: [illegible] W. A. Middleton to be Ensign, vice Thorp.

Rifle Brigade: Second Lieut. C. P. Pennington to be First Lieutenant, vice Brown; Ensign A. [illegible].

1st West India Regiment: Ensign and Adjutant T. Clark to have the rank of Lieutenant; Ensign G. Jones to be Lieutenant, vice Dobson; S. D. Stubbs to be Ensign, vice Jones.

Ceylon Rifle Regiment: Lieut. W. H. Mansell to be First Lieutenant, vice A. Watson; Second Lieut. J. Hill to be First Lieutenant, vice Mansell; W. H. Humphreys to be Second Lieutenant, vice Hill.

BANKRUPTS.—J. GERRY, Gilbert-street, Oxford-street, builder. E. CAWTHELL, Kingston-upon-Hull, dealer in hardware. F. GARBANATI, Woolwich, carver and gilder. J. KNIGHT, Minories, draper. F. SYDER, Fakenham, Norfolk, grocer. H. MAYHEW, Parson's-green, Fulham, newspaper proprietor. W. C. EATON, Maidstone-wharf, Upper Thames-street, flour-dealer. T. TOUT, Ashburton, Devonshire, grocer. E. LILLEY, Kingston-upon-Hull, timber merchant. R. NEWTON, Fleet, Lincolnshire, cattle-dealer. W. WILLIAMS, St. Mary, Brecknockshire, victualler. W. WREFORD, E. C. NICHOLLS, and W. E. WREFORD, Bristol, and Bank Chambers, Lothbury, City, stockbrokers.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—J. BUCHANAN, Barnellan, Stirlingshire, farmer. D. SMITH, Dundee, wright. J. REID, Rawyards, Lanarkshire, ironstone-contractor. J. M'GREGOR, Ramsay Lodge, Castle-hill, Edinburgh, accountant. A. DRUMMOND, Glasgow, wool merchant.

THE CASHEL RAILWAY.—The main trunk line, now completed, extends from Dublin to Cherryville, about four miles beyond Kildare, at which point the Car[illegible] fifty-six miles of railway, which only awaits inspection to be opened for public traffic.

BIRTHS

At Stamford-hill, the Lady of Benjamin Oldham, Esq., of a daughter.—At [illegible] the Rev. J. B. Bourne, of a daughter. Mrs. Charles H. Offley, [illegible] [illegible] Park square, the wife of Peter Laurie, [illegible] nham. Mrs. Thomas Letts, of a [illegible]

[illegible] Wight, to Jane [illegible] daughter of Lord and Lady Carew [illegible] Esq., to Alicia, relict of the late Handcock [illegible] Jane Elizabeth [illegible] s, Bishopsgate, [illegible] vus Monck, nephew of Vis[illegible], to Harriett, second da[illegible] At Kimpton, Herts, Captain [illegible] Barbarina Charlotte, daughter [illegible]—At Brompton, W[illegible] Esq., to Ann Emily Mary, eldest daughter of the late Thomas Snepp, Esq., R.N.—On the 15th inst., at Walmer, Robert Ogle, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, only son of R[illegible] ham Hall, Northumberland, to Mary, daughter of Captain Stanry, R.N.

DEATHS

[illegible] d the packet-ship Everetta while on his homeward voyage from Sydney [illegible] with exemplary Christian patience, Captain Wm. Henry Clarke, late of her Majesty's 4th or King's Own Regiment.—At St. [illegible] Thanet, Sir Thomas [illegible] rate of the county of Kent and [illegible] 8, Sophia Bartley, the last remaining [illegible] d of Mr. and Mrs. Bartley, formerly of Covent [illegible] Colonel 3rd Fusilier Guards [illegible] relict of the late Sir Th[illegible] mas Bernard, Bart., aged 7[illegible] At Leamington, in the 7th year of her age, Georgiana Louisa [illegible] of John Tollemache [illegible] On the 18th inst., the Rev. [illegible] of St. James's Chapel, Pe[illegible]ville.—On the 5th inst., Rebecca, the [illegible] Harriett, the eldest, beloved daughters of Mr. A. Cosser, Bel-[illegible]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—SIGNOR MARIO most respectfully informs the Nobility, Patrons of the Opera, his Friends and the Public [illegible] BENEFIT will take place [illegible] th 1846, when will be presented Donizetti's Opera Buffa, entitled DON GR[illegible] [illegible] Count Giulio, Signor Fornasari [illegible] onarda, Madame Bellini, Gilda, Madame [illegible] comprising a new and original Grand Pas, composed expressly for this occasion by M[illegible] titled LE PAS D[illegible] by Mdlle Taglioni, Mdlle [illegible] and Mdlle Cerito, repre[illegible] Honore, representing the pas of Les Graces [illegible] Lamoreux, L'Amour; Mdlles. Cassan and Demelisse, Nymphes [illegible]'s admired Opera, IL PIRATA compressed into [illegible] and Gualtiero, Sig[illegible] entertainments in the BALLET DEPARTMENT, in which Mdlle Taglioni, Mdlle [illegible] Grahn and Mdlle [illegible] James Demelisse, Cassan, Julien and Lamoreux; M. St. Leon, M. Gosselin, and M. Perrot, [illegible] for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade, [illegible]; the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr [illegible] Under the especial Patronage of her Majesty the Queen, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Royal. Tremendous overflows. The present productions nightly hailed with the most rapt[illegible] Second week of the Phantom Horseman 50 [illegible] On Monday next, and every Evening during the week, the Grand Spectacle of [illegible] our Victories of 184[illegible] introducing the whole [illegible] Military Brass Band. [illegible] Picturesque Scenes of the Hippod[illegible] Curriculum, by British and Foreign [illegible] The whole concluding w[illegible] of the PHANTOM HORSEMAN [illegible] Widdicombe, Walett and Rocl[illegible] Box-Office open from 11 [illegible] tor, Mr. T. Thompson.

VAUXHALL GARDENS. On Wednesday, the 29th, a GRAND SCOTTISH FETE [illegible] the different Clans have expressed their intention of visiting the G[illegible] Highland Costume [illegible] st interest our fêtes [illegible] and other attracti[illegible] The Illuminations, which gave such universal satisfa[illegible] sible, be surpassed, and [illegible] The concert will consist [illegible] s and ballads by Burns, and other po[illegible] rs and the overtures wi[illegible] at any and those of [illegible] Doors open at 8 [illegible]

VAUXHALL OPEN EVERY NIGHT (EXCEPT SATUR-[illegible] s Troupe. New Scenes in th[illegible] Brilliant Firew[illegible] a Tower—Grand C[illegible] Messrs Sinclair, [illegible] and J. W. Sharp [illegible] John Roe, and Mrs [illegible] of the Golden [illegible]

WILL CLOSE, on SATURDAY Next, the 1st of AUGUST. The EXHIBITION of th[illegible] BRITISH ARTISTS [illegible] is OPEN Daily, from 9 A.M., till D[illegible] Admittance, One Shilling [illegible]

Exhibitors are requested to send for their Works on Tuesday, the 4th, or Wednesday, the [illegible]

COLOSSEUM.—A Grand Mexican ALOE, or Century Plant [illegible] splendid Attractions [illegible] ut ful Plant is a [illegible] It has some thousand flowering buds [illegible] cultivated between [illegible] xas, has been brought a dista[illegible] Proprietor of the Co[illegible] Atmospheric Effects in the marvellous PANORAMA OF LONDON by [illegible] peated every half hour. Holiday Prices co[illegible] Music, 3 till 5, and 8 till ha[illegible] projected and des[illegible]

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A Lecture [illegible] RYAN, on CHEMISTRY at H[illegible] of Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at Nine o'Clock. Professor BACHHOFFNER'S LECTURES on NATURAL PHILOSOPHY with brilliant experiments [illegible] LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE [illegible] Inclined Planes, FARRELL'S ARCHIMEDEAN RAIL-WAY [illegible] ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY VALVE [illegible] ture of the CHAPEL [illegible] of St. CATHERINE, near Jerusalem, by Mr Charles Smith. [illegible] es of DISSOLVING VIEWS just introduced [illegible]

CREMORNE GARDENS, CHELSEA.—A never ceasing [illegible] of amusements. MONDAY The Wonderful Performances of th[illegible] [illegible] FETE ET BAL COSTUME, or a R[illegible] with a Grand Ba[illegible] and other attractive amus[illegible] an immense band, conducted by M. Laurent [illegible] Supper, Five Shill[illegible] TUESDAY [illegible] IDAY A night for the Chil[illegible] Tom Thumb's Fairy Cow, [illegible] and all manner of fun [illegible] Children Half-price [illegible] No performances, but the Tavern and Ground [illegible] Omnibuses for Six[illegible] and by the Steam [illegible] its superb and lofty Galleries [illegible] mission, but every [illegible] expected to take a [illegible]

Larger and Cheaper Edition, Now Ready, bound in cloth, price 2s., post free 6d. extra,

THE COLD WATER CURE of VINCENT PRIESSNITZ, the Discoverer: its Principles, Theory, and P[illegible] ication and a tri[illegible] By VINCENT PRIESSNITZ, the I[illegible]

[illegible] Publication ever off[illegible] Public, in respect both to Quality and Quantity.

HANDEL'S SACRED ORATORIO, "THE MESSIAH," in [illegible] with a Separate Accompaniment for [illegible] VINCENT NOVELLO. The whole Work will be complete in Twelve Monthly Numbers. [illegible] 6 pages each, [illegible] ELLO, 69, Dean-street, Soho, [illegible] Co., and to be p[illegible]

[illegible] SUE'S BEST WORK. Price 3s [illegible] bound, with 34 Illustrations and [illegible]

THE FEMALE BLUEBEARD BY EUGENE SUE. [illegible] Sue's many extraordi[illegible] This is by fa[illegible] exciting wor[illegible]

PERSONS VISITING PARIS [illegible] the HANDBOOK [illegible] and Engravin[illegible] public buildings, hotels, [illegible] and attraction, [illegible] siderably enlarged and corrected to th[illegible]

BRETTELL'S HANDBOOK TO THE ISLE OF WIGHT. [illegible] Royal Yacht Squadron Steam [illegible] ns and Tours th[illegible] and all Booksell[illegible] and the Isle of Wight.

MANY MILLIONS OF MONEY [illegible] each Book of Letters; post free, 4d. ev[illegible] of the alphabet (be care[illegible] stating what particu[illegible] CLAIMED DIVIDEND BOOKS of the [illegible] names address[illegible] sums of money [illegible] the public fun[illegible] which have been accu[illegible] can now be recovered [illegible] somely bound together in one [illegible]

W. STRANGE, 21, Paternoster-row, and all Booksellers.

GOODWOOD RACES.

THE COMING HOME. A COMIC PANORAMA DRAWN BY LEECH. PRICE EIGHTEEN PENCE. London: ACKERMANN and Co. [illegible] RENSHAW and KIRKMAN, 12, [illegible]

MARTIN, THE FOUNDLING; or, The Adventures of a Valet de Chambre, EU[illegible] new Novel, appears regularly in the FAMILY [illegible] the day a suc[illegible] and wisdom with [illegible] fluence and utility with ent[illegible] Order No. 166, of [illegible] All Booksellers and Agents sell the FAMILY [illegible]

DR. MADDOCK on DISEASES of the LUNGS and HEART. "We seriously recommend all persons who are predisposed to, or are suffering under, these complaints, to consult this able work. The treatment pointed out is at once novel, [illegible], and natural, and is undoubtedly highly efficacious." Literary Journal. Third Edi-[illegible] SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, P[illegible]

TENDER FEET Price [illegible] s., or sent post-free upon receipt of 14 stamps,

TEN MINUTES' ADVICE on CORNS, BUNIONS, CHIL-BLAINS, and other Diseases of the Feet [illegible] those who have and those who would avoid having, these painful diseases of the f[illegible] recommend this litt[illegible] work to our readers." Spectator. W. STRANGE, 21, Paternoster-row [illegible]

NOTICE!

VOL. IX. OF MISS STRICKLAND'S LIVES OF THE QUEENS OF ENGLAND, Dedicated by Permission to her Majesty, Comprising The Life of MARY OF MODENA, CONSORT OF JAMES II. Will be ready for delivery with the Magazines, on the 31st of July, and those who desire to obtain copies on the day of publication are requested to send their orders immediately to their [illegible]

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

Now Ready, Fourth Edition, entirely re-written, price 10s 6d., cloth,

THE ART OF CHESS-PLAY; New Treatise on Chess. By GEORGE WALKER. Comprising all the best methods of playing the Openings [illegible] of Games, and including the new discoveries of Von Der Lasa, Von Jaenisch, St. Amant, K[illegible] Calvi, &c.

WALKER'S CHESS MADE EASY exclusively for Beginners, 3s. 6d.

WALKER'S EDITION of STURGES' GUIDE TO THE GAME OF DRAUGHTS, [illegible]

WALKER'S CRIBBAGE [illegible]

[illegible]

UNRIVALLED COLLECTION OF [illegible] GAMES.

THE CHESS PLAYERS' CHRONICLE, for AUGUST, [illegible] contains a remarkably interesting Collection of Games and Problems by the [illegible] be enumerated the parties lately played between Messrs. Horwitz and St. Amant, Messrs. Horwitz and Kieseritzki, Messrs. [illegible] together with the last blindfold games between MM. Kieseritzki and Harrwitz. [illegible] Number will also be found some instructive Games at the odds of Pawn and two moves, between Mr. Staunton and Capt. Kennedy, [illegible] played at V[illegible] Von H. de Laza and M. Grimm and MM. Lowenthal and Harrwitz. Also, Chess in America, Chess in the Provinces [illegible]

FOR SCHOOLS AND PRIVATE INSTRUCTION.

WHITTAKER'S ELEMENTARY WORKS.

[illegible]
Taylor's History of France. 3rd edition, 12mo. [illegible]
[illegible] bound, 8s.
Woodbridge's Ge[illegible] th edition, 18mo. [illegible] 3s. 6d.
Historical Epitome [illegible] th edition, 12mo., bound, 5s.
[illegible]'s Reading Lessons for Every Day in the Year. 12mo., 5s.
[illegible]mson's First Book of Arithmetic [illegible] (Key, 1s.), 1s. 6d.
Ayres's Young Ladies' Ari[illegible]
[illegible]'s Dictation Spelling Ex[illegible]
Duncan's English Exp[illegible] 1s. 6d.
[illegible]'s Schoolmistress's Register [illegible]

 An Explanatory Catalogue of Messrs. Whittaker and Co's. School and Elementary Books can be had gratis, of any bookseller.—WHITTAKER [illegible], Ave Maria-lane.

FOR SCHOOLS AND PRIVATE INSTRUCTION.

WHITTAKER'S IMPROVED EDITIONS of PINNOCK'S SCHOOL HISTORIES, &c.

History of England [illegible] 6s.
H[illegible]
History of Greece [illegible] 6d.
[illegible]
[illegible] nd Book, or, Mentorian Primer, [illegible]
[illegible]
Explanatory English Spelling Book, 12mo., bound, 1s. 6d.
[illegible] der, for Children from Four to Seven Years. 12mo. 1s. 6d.
[illegible] tion to the Explanatory Reader [illegible]
Explanatory English Reader. Prose and Verse. 6th edition, 12mo., 4s. 6d.
A[illegible] metical Table of Weights and Measures [illegible]
[illegible]

 An Explanatory Catalogue of Messrs. Whittaker and Co.'s Educational Books can [illegible]

WHITTAKER and C[illegible]

WHITTAKER'S IMPROVED EDITIONS of PINNOCK'S CATECHISMS of the ARTS, SCIENCES, and LITERATURE. Illustrated with M[illegible] Plates and Woodcuts [illegible] the names of [illegible] rs to be given they would b[illegible] ed to include th[illegible] of men the most distinguished [illegible] their various prof[illegible] comprise the [illegible] England and Wales [illegible] wo parts)—Arithmeti[illegible]

RELIGION. Religion. Evidences of Christianity. Liturgy of the Church of [illegible] [illegible] Philosophy—Astronomy—Anatomy—Chemistry—[illegible] ics—Pneumatics.

FINE ARTS, &c. Architecture—Drawing—Painting in Oil. Perspective—Music.

NATURAL HISTORY [illegible] tany (coloured 1s.) Natural History. Conchology. Horticul-[illegible]

MISCELLANEOUS. First Catechism. General Knowledge—[illegible] culture—English Law—Heraldry—Medicine. Moral and Social Duti[illegible] Chess. WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane, London.

Just Published, price [illegible] s., the Fourth Edition (Translated from the Nin[illegible]

CONSTIPATION DESTROYED; or, Exposition of Natural, Simple, Agreeable, and Infallible Means, not only of Overcoming, but also of Completely Destroying Habitual Constipation, witho[illegible] purgatives or a[illegible] in France by M. Warr[illegible] or persons of distinction [illegible] YOUENS and Co., Tea Dealers, 45, Ludgate-hill, London, and by all Bo[illegible]

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS AND GREAT [illegible] EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, ki[illegible] fire-irons, general furnishing i[illegible] ry, tinned coppe[illegible] and best tin cooking v[illegible] Sheffield plate, and table cutlery, japanned trays, tea urn[illegible] and flower-stands. [illegible] adjoining the P[illegible]

A RARE OCCURRENCE, even in times of Great Sacrifices. [illegible] DISON has purchased of a retiring Manufacturer the [illegible] and is determined to give his cus[illegible] the benefit of his speculation. [illegible] The price is only Two [illegible] the Full Flounc[illegible] Normandy Lace, is very durable and [illegible] should be quickly embraced by La[illegible]

SELLING OFF the SUMMER STOCK at an IMMENSE REDUCTION IN PRICE. Ladies about leaving [illegible] the following goods, which KING and SHEATH are SELLING OFF at HALF PRICE. 3000 Real Shetland Shawls, 2 yards square, reduced to 5s. 6d. each.
[illegible] of black and coloured Spitalfields Silks, at 1s [illegible]
[illegible] thousand Muslins and [illegible] s, from 6½d. per yard.
[illegible] 0 yards of white [illegible]
Swiss Embroid[illegible]
[illegible] n Curtains, 8 yards long, 6s. [illegible]
[illegible] s and English Thr[illegible]
[illegible] adding in any part [illegible]
[illegible] d SHEATH, 264, Reg[illegible]

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.—Price 2s. 6d. [illegible] and his Royal Highness Prince Albert.

MR. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM for Stopping Decayed [illegible] ver large the cavity. It is placed in the tooth in a soft state, without any [illegible] or pain, and soon becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in t[illegible] ny years, rendering extraction unnecessary, [illegible] nger, 150, Oxford-street, [illegible] Vendors in the [illegible] Teeth on [illegible] eration whatever [illegible] 1st, 64, Berner[illegible]

GOODWOOD RACES.—LONDON and BRIGHTON RAIL-WAY. GOODWOOD RAC[illegible] EXTRA TRAINS [illegible] Race Course will be desp[illegible] m London Brid[illegible] forty minutes afterwards.

[illegible]	First.	Second.	Third.
At 6 30 A.M., with First, Second, and Third Class Carriages, ar-[illegible] miles from the C[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
At 7 A.M., with do. do. do., 10 [illegible]
At 8 A.M., Express, with First and Second Class Carria[illegible]
[illegible] g at Drayton at [illegible]
FROM DRAYTON.
[illegible] 0 P.M., with First, Second, and Third Class C[illegible]
[illegible] press, with First and Second Class C[illegible] arriving at London at 10 0 P.M.		12s. [illegible]

[illegible] rt from the Hastings and St. Leonard's Station at 9.0 A.M. [illegible] n Brighton as [illegible] may secure Compartments in the Carriages, but n[illegible]

London Terminus, July 15, 1846. T. J. BUCKTON, Secretary.

PIANO-FORTE TUNER.—Mr. W. TIERNEY, Rolls-[illegible] Terms as usual [illegible] tes at any [illegible]

COINS of ANCIENT EGYPT, GREECE, and ROME.—[illegible] published a short ca[illegible] which can be had by post, by [illegible]

KENT.—STROOD FAIR. This an[illegible] is holden on the [illegible] ust. The fair-field is immediately [illegible] al advantages [illegible] application desirable, and by letter only, prepaid, addr[illegible] H. H., JOHN BILLING'S, Esq. [illegible]

DRESSING-CASES. FISHER, 188, Strand. A large stock [illegible] s, with the new and improved Mortised Partitions, which ca[illegible] warranted to stand the T[illegible] Gentlemen's may [illegible] Work-boxes. Leather [illegible] sks, &c.—188, Strand.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. [illegible] HOWELL, of 340, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-st[illegible] Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes [illegible] to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, [illegible] finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to pupils. Apprentices and Improvers Wanted. Millinery R[illegible]

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very Low Prices for C[illegible] JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linen [illegible] 6, Regent-street, two doors b[illegible] cels above £5 sent th[illegible]

John Capper and Son's General Linen-Drapery Business, established for near[illegible] [illegible] ed in Gracechurch-str[illegible]

FOREIGN SILKS and LACES.—(Late Tinkler's.)—RIGG, WAKEFIELD, and R[illegible] respectfully invite the Nobility, Gentry and the Public to inspect their recherché Stock of FANCY SILKS, Laces, and Embroideries, Por[illegible] Batiste de Chine, Bareg[illegible] and Muslin Dresses, Barege and Cachmer[illegible]

CHILDREN'S and INVALIDS' CARRIAGES. Invalids' Wheel C[illegible] with hoops, s[illegible] Spinal, and Self-acting Chairs. Children's Cha[illegible] from 10s. to 20 guineas. Lounge and va[illegible] Sale or hire at IN[illegible] Manufactory [illegible] nd, Finsbury-squa[illegible] ated Catalogues.

PERVILE pretio vendere negotiari tutissime, et globus nivalis perinde cumuluro procur[illegible] ar; or, in other words, who sell the cheap[illegible] the snow ball, gat[illegible] Acting ever faithfully on this [illegible] the [illegible] PANY can secure to the Public TEAS, in 6 lb [illegible] 3s. 10d. per lb. and COFFEE at 9d. [illegible] s., 1s. 2d., and 1s. 5d., at the old warehouses, No. 9, G[illegible]

HEAL and SON'S LIST OF BEDDING, containing a full description of weights, sizes, and prices, by which persons are enabled to judge the art[illegible] that are best suited t[illegible]

HEAL and SON, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, Tottenham-court-road.

A SCOTCH TWEED GOTHA JACKET FOR 30s.—This Jacket, which is well suited to be worn by Gentlemen when sho[illegible] [illegible] is made to measure in a first-rate style [illegible] workmanship, for 30s.; best ditto, ditto, 38s.—At GRAVES'S Fashionable Tailor and Trowsers Maker, 3.3, H[illegible]

TROWSERS! TROWSERS!! TROWSERS!!!—A good [illegible] garment can seldom be obtained [illegible] Trowsers Maker and Tailor, 13, High Holborn [illegible] years' experience and study is enabled to assert, without fear of [illegible] his garment better than [illegible] person in London. [illegible] characteristic of his [illegible] style, with [illegible] for stooping, sitting, walking, or riding. A well-assorted stock of th[illegible] [illegible] s to select from.—R. GRAVES, 3.3, High Holborn.

CHUBB'S LOCKS, Fire-proof Safes, and Cash Boxes.—Chubb's [illegible] also give immed[illegible] patent Fire-proof [illegible] Deed Boxes, of all si[illegible] fitted with [illegible] CHUBB and SON, 57, St. [illegible]

HOBY'S IMPERIAL BLACKING has no unpleasant smell; [illegible] polish equals patent leather, it softens the [illegible] prevents it breaking [illegible] ns and tender feet [illegible] BENETFINK, 8[illegible] Hodges and Son, Westmoreland-s[illegible] HOBY'S EMOLLIENT WATERPROOF [illegible] g and fishing boots, which, after thirty years' [illegible] has proved to be [illegible] n which renders boots and shoes [illegible] tly waterproof [illegible]

REGISTERED PALETOT OF LLAMA CLOTH.—This [illegible] ly used as an Overcoat, is, during the hot weather, both in this c[illegible] e will happily suit both purposes. In its gentlemanly appearance [illegible] It can be [illegible] the Patentees in London and care should be [illegible] each are stamped on the inside, H[illegible] 14, Regent-street, and [illegible]

BERDOE'S WATERPROOF OVER COATS, for the [illegible] SHOOTING JACKETS. The re[illegible] ell known garments [illegible] that they now need no [illegible] workmanship, style, a quiet gentlemanly, and respectable appearance, lightness, convenience, [illegible] t, durability, and especially [illegible] ill unrivalled, notw[illegible]

GIBBINS' CREAM of ROSES and ROSEMARY.—This [illegible] and elegant Article is most res[illegible] ed to the Public, by GIBBINS, [illegible] Perfumer (from Paris), 7, King-street, [illegible] delicate and effectual Preservative of the Hair. Being a pomade, it will be success[illegible] applied to promoting its growth and luxuriance.

GIBBINS' EXTRACT OF ROSES AND ROSEMARY is a liquid made from the a[illegible] named plants, and when applied in washing the Hair, renders it soft and glossy, or, a[illegible] Loss. its astringent properties p[illegible]

[illegible] 7, King-street, St. James's-square, London.

TURNING LATHES of best London manufacture.—G. and J. DEANE invite attention to their Stock of LATHES, and Machinery therewith connected; together with the very best description of Lancashire TOOLS of every kind. G. [illegible] having established a fa[illegible] artists who have [illegible] heir deter-[illegible] uch articles as may be o[illegible] and their ap-[illegible] is constructed on the m[illegible] his promptly at-[illegible] s of machinery built to order.—[illegible] 30, King Wil-[illegible]

METCALFE and CO'S. NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH [illegible]—For proo[illegible] of the [illegible] ve used Metcalfe's [illegible] performs the hi[illegible] divisions, and clearing [illegible] brushes with the durable unble[illegible] new Velvet Improved Clothes-[illegible] ne unbleached Smyrna S[illegible] FE and C[illegible]

THE NEWLY-OPENED HOUSE. (A BRIEF OUTL[illegible] [illegible] tablishment of E[illegible] and the Proprietors are [illegible] on which it is conducted, and the improvements under which it has [illegible] ious range of St[illegible] ed by a Pr[illegible] o are a so a artm[illegible] measuring, and a select Waistcoat Room [illegible] consequently be dispatched with much greater facility. This departmen[illegible] tinguished for the wo[illegible] and 155, [illegible] has equal recommendations, [illegible] s an important featu[illegible] JOSES and [illegible] Let it be remembered th[illegible] lishment, as it was at the old, and be it also remembe[illegible] the Proprietors stil[illegible] exchanged, or that the Self-Measurement, and other essential information, obtain the [illegible] 154, 155, 156, 57, Mi[illegible] nd SON, Tailors, Woo[illegible] General Wareh[illegible] hem, or it's [illegible] prevent disappointment, call at or send to th[illegible] osted at this Establishment from sunset Friday [illegible]

[illegible] OF THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL INSTITUTE OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

(From [illegible] own Correspondent.)

The Third Annual Meeting of this highly influential Institute commenced on Tuesday last, in th[illegible] time-honoured cit[illegible]; and we feel justified in stating, that, as far as our report of the pro[illegible], the assemblage has proved in every [illegible] ve and important objects which t[illegible] Members of [illegible]

The First Annual [illegible] Institute was held at Cant[illegible] in September, 1[illegible] last year at Winch[illegible]

W[illegible] ived in York on Monday aft[illegible] oon, after a ri[illegible] h, in these days of locomotive velocity, must [illegible] n as tedious our zig-[illegible] ney on the Birmingham and Midland line [illegible] occupied [illegible] This is an evil which, happily, will be remedied in [illegible] between London and York. At the same time, [illegible] must do justice to the [illegible] way, who issued return tickets to the Members of the Institute, available for ten days, at very reduced rates. We wish we could say as much about the liberal conduct of the citizens of York—those of them, we mean, who have had to do with the accommodation of visitors during the past week; the innkeepers charging five shillings for a single bed, and the lodging-house keepers demanding for the week eight, and, in some instances, as much as ten guineas for a lodging of by no means first or even second-rate quality. However, the infliction is over; and, besides, as the world wags, the citizens of York are by no means singular in their eagerness to "make hay while the sun shines."

MEETING OF THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL INSTITUTE OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

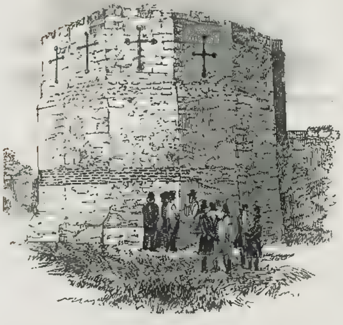
For the furtherance of the objects of the Institute, the place of meeting, for the present year, has been chosen with singular felicity. The city of York dates its origin from the earliest ages of our history; and it may be safely affirmed that few places, if any, could be found more richly stored with objects of interest to "antiquaries and historical inquirers."

THE OUSE BRIDGE, YORK.

As a proof of the Roman origin of York, we may mention that one of the angle towers and a portion of the old wall of Eboracum are at this day remaining in an extraordinary state of preservation. In a recent removal of a portion of the modern wall and rampart, a much larger portion of the Roman wall, comprising the remains of two towers and the foundation of one of the gates of the station, were found buried within the ramparts; and it is worthy of remark that indications of extensive suburbs exist in the numerous remains of monuments, coffins, urns, baths, temples, and villas, which, from time to time, and especially of late years, have been brought to light. Numberless tiles, bearing the impress of the Sixth and Ninth Legions, fragments of Samian ware, inscriptions, and coins, from the age of Julius Cæsar to that of Constantine, concur with the notices of ancient geographers and historians to render indisputable the fact of the Roman origin of the time-honoured City of York.

The morning of Tuesday was rainy; towards noon, however, the weather cleared up, and the afternoon was as fine as could be wished. The business of the week was commenced by a General Meeting of the Members of the Institute, at one o'clock, in the Festival Concert Room, which was crowded to excess. Upon the platform we noticed the following distinguished personages:—The Marquis of Northampton, the Earl Fitzwilliam, Viscount Downe, Lord Alleyne Compton, the Very Rev. the Deans of Hereford, Westminster, Ely, and York; Dr. Plumptre, Master of University College, Oxford; the Venerable Archdeacons



MULTANGULAR TOWER, YORK.

Wilberforce, Churton, and Creke; Sir John Boileau, Bart.; Professor Phillips; Sir J. Guest, Bart., M.P., the Lord Mayor and Sheriff of York; Alderman W. S. Clark; Sir R. I. Murchison; M. W. Bloxam, Esq.; E. Hawkins, Esq.; Sir R. Westmacott, R.A.; the Rev. R. Willis, Jacksonian Professor at Cambridge; J. H. Parker, Esq.; Jabez Allies, Esq.; the Hon. T. Stapleton; M. R. Hawkins, Esq.; A. Cotes, Esq., the Pro-Bailiff of Malton, &c. &c.

The Marquis of Northampton, who was received with loud cheers opened the business of the meeting. He had a task, to himself a most agreeable one, that of proposing to place in the chair one who would fill it much better than himself. He begged to propose that the Earl Fitzwilliam should be elected to fill the President's chair during the ensuing year. (Cheers.) The noble Marquis congratulated the members of the Institute at the flourishing condition at which they had arrived, under circumstances of peculiar difficulty; he congratulated them also upon the felicity of choice, which had selected as their place of meeting the renowned City of York, which contained within its walls more relics of days gone by, than any other city in the kingdom; and, above all, he congratulated them upon their good fortune in being able to elect for their President so able and distinguished a nobleman as his friend the Earl Fitzwilliam. The noble Marquis then proceeded to enforce the great utility of such societies as the "Archæological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland," expressing a hope that it would continue, as he was sure it would continue, to promote the science of Archæology, with all the success which had hitherto attended its exertions. After referring to the great loss which the Institute had sustained in the death of Mr. Gally Knight, and paying a well-merited compliment to the liberality of the Lord Mayor and Corporation of York. The noble Marquis concluded his address by requesting Earl Fitzwilliam to take the Chair—a request which was seconded by the prompt and vehement cheering of the company.

Earl Fitzwilliam begged to return his best thanks to the members of the Institute for the high honour they had done him in electing him to the dignified office of President for the year ensuing. He should endeavour to fulfil the duties of that office to the best of his ability, and hoped that, at the close of his year, he should have as much satisfaction as he then felt in contemplating the flourishing condition of the Institute. In the course of his speech, the noble Earl ventured to suggest that, as the objects of the Archæological Institute, if successfully carried out, would confer a great benefit upon the city of York, it was but fair that a portion of the expense of the present meeting should be borne by the local authorities. (Hear, hear.) The noble Earl then called upon

The Dean of Hereford, who concluded a speech of great point and effect (which we regret we cannot fully report in consequence of our limited space) by proposing, that the thanks of the members of the Institute should be voted to the most noble the Marquis of Northampton for the kind and liberal manner in which he had performed the duties of President during the past year. This motion was seconded by the Hon. T. Stapleton, and was received by the meeting with thunders of applause.

The Marquis of Northampton, who appeared sensibly affected by his flattering reception, rose and returned thanks for the compliment which had been paid to him. During his year of office, he had done his best, and he would still continue to do his best, to forward the views and interests of the important Society, of which he was a member. He would also call upon the people of York to do their best in the same way; for the antiquities of their glorious old city were well worthy of all the care which the most enthusiastic Archæologist could bestow upon them. (Loud cheers, especially from the body of the meeting.)

The Dean of Westminster then proposed a vote of thanks to the Vice-Presidents, Committee, and Officers of the Institute, for their zealous and valuable services during the past year; which was seconded by Dr. Plumtre, Master of University College, Oxford. Mr. Hawkins, of the British Museum, returned thanks on the part of the Officers and the Institute.

The Marquis of Northampton then rose, and proposed a vote of thanks to Earl Fitzwilliam for his kindness in consenting to take the chair.

The Dean of York seconded this motion; and in doing so, begged to state that the Dean and Chapter would do all in their power to contribute to the gratification of the members of the Institute; with which object they had given directions that all places of note in the city should be open to the members on presenting their tickets.

The Lord Mayor then briefly addressed the meeting, expressing the great desire of the local authorities to do all in their power to forward the objects of the Institute. His Lordship invited the members to a soirée at the Mansion-house, an invitation which, we need scarcely remark, was received with considerable applause. The meeting then terminated, and the members formed themselves into groups, for the purpose of inspecting the various objects of interest with which the city of York abounds. In the first instance, the members directed their attention to the Museum of the Yorkshire Philosophical Society, where they found an interesting and valuable collection of relics. Next in order came the famous Multangular Tower (of which our Artist has executed a faithful view), situated in the gardens of St. Mary's Abbey. Dr. Lister has given a full account of this interesting relic ("Abridg. Philosoph. Transact.," vol. 3), which, like all antiquarian disquisitions, is very learned and very lengthy. For the information of our readers, we make a brief extract:—

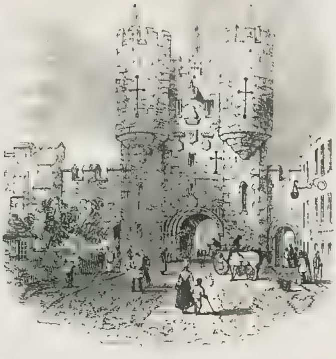
"The outside to the river," says Dr. Lister, "is faced with a very small saxum quadratum of about four inches thick, and laid in levels like our modern brickwork; but the length of the stones is not observed but as they fell out in hewing. From the foundation, twenty courses of these small stones are laid, and over them five courses of Roman brick. These bricks are laid some lengthways and some endways in the wall, and were called lateres diatoni. After these five courses of brick, other twenty-three courses of small square stones, as before described, are laid. which raise the wall——feet higher, and then five more courses of the same Roman bricks are laid; beyond which the wall is imperfect and capped with modern building. Note, that in all this height there is no casement or loophole, but one entire and uniform wall, from which we may infer, that the wall was originally built some courses higher after "the same order."

From this description and the engraving annexed, such of our readers as have never visited York will be enabled to judge of the character and appearance of the far-famed Multangular Tower. We may observe, that, since Dr. Lister's time, a considerable portion of the old Roman wall, connected with this tower, has been discovered in a state of wonderful preservation, as also a monumental stone, 21 feet long and 11 feet wide, bearing in very legible characters the inscription, "GENIO LOCI FELICITER."

The members of the Institute next inspected the Hospitium of St. Mary's Abbey, with the collection of antiquities therein; afterwards Clifford's Tower, and the Bars and Posterns of the City. Clifford's Tower, situated at the southern extremity of the walls in the angle formed by the confluence of the rivers Ouse and Foss, is peculiarly interesting from its being the only relic of the old Castle of York, built after its subjugation by William the Conqueror. This tower took its name from the Cliffords, whom William appointed the first Governors of the Castle. The Bars or Gates of York are four in number, viz.—Micklegate-Bar, to the south-west; Bootham-Bar, to the north-west; Monk-Bar, to the north-east; and Walmsgate-Bar, to the south-east. Of these, Micklegate Bar, having a fine Roman arch in high preservation, engaged the chief attention of the assembled Archæologists. The arch in question, the chief in Micklegate, by the portcullis, is a triplet of the Tuscan Order, and supports a massy pile of Gothic turrets, &c. Although erected, in all probability, full 1600 years ago, this arch seems to bid defiance to the ravages of old Time, who certainly, in this instance, has not supported his claim to the title of "arch-leveller!" In the vicinity of Micklegate-Bar, there is to be seen another very curious relic—"the greatest and most remarkable," says Drake, "that we have yet made"—namely, the Sepulchral Monument of the Standard Bearer of the Ninth Legion. A full description of this curiosity is given by Thoresby, and will be found at page 320 of his "Ducatus Leodisensis."

VIEW FROM THE WALLS OF YORK.

A portion of the visitors next proceeded to inspect the Walls of York, from which the view of the city is in the highest degree picturesque and interesting. The walls of the Roman station, Eboracum, were wholly on the north bank of the Ouse; the present walls extend about two miles and a half; and, having recently been put into complete repair, form a pleasing promenade for the inhabitants. Another portion of the company crossed the Ouse in the ferry boat; and, by so doing, obtained an excellent view of the Guildhall, and the famous Ouse Bridge. The former is a fine Gothic building, erected in the year 1446; 96 feet in length, and 43 feet in width. The Ouse Bridge is a handsome modern structure, composed of three arches of freestone; it was commenced in 1810, and completed in 1820, at a cost of £80,000, and is the third bridge which has been built over the Ouse at the same spot.



MICKLEGATE BAR, YORK.

We have now followed the members of the Institute through the chief of their proceedings on Tuesday, and have only further to state that the day closed with a splendid entertainment given by the Lord Mayor to the President, the ex-President, and the Committee of the Institute. About 50 sat down to dinner; and in the evening, there was a grand ball, to which the leading inhabitants were invited, together with the officers of the regiment quartered in the city.

On Wednesday, the Architectural Section met at eleven o'clock, in the Festival Concert-room. The business of the day was opened by the Rev. J. L. Petit, who read a very interesting and valuable paper, contributed by Charles Winston, Esq., "On the Painted Glass in the Cathedral and Churches of York." Professor Willis next presented himself to the meeting, and read his paper, "On the Cathedral of York." It is scarcely necessary for us to state, that this paper was a truly learned and elaborate essay; it was, in fact, "the paper" of the day, and excited a lively interest amongst the members of the Institute. In the course of his remarks, the Professor called the attention of members to Mr. Brown's valuable work upon the Cathedral; observing that he could not agree in all which that gentleman had advanced, as he thought him mistaken in his conjectures respecting the dates of the structure of various parts of the Cathedral. This remark called up Mr. Brown; and, after a brief discussion, the question at issue was settled to the satisfaction of both parties.

As soon as Professor Willis concluded, the members adjourned, on a visit of inspection, to the Cathedral, and were much pleased at the various explanations that were there afforded to them by the learned Professor.

At two o'clock, the "Historical Section" met at the Hospitium of St. Mary's Abbey, when the following papers were read:—"On the Endowment and History of the Holy Trinity, or Christ Church, at York, a Cell to the Abbey of Marmontier, near Tours, in France," by the President of the Section; "Notes of MSS. named in Wills Entered on the Register at York;" and "An Account of the Progress of King Henry VIII. in Yorkshire," both contributed by the Rev. J. Hunter. The reading of these essays having been concluded, the members proceeded, as on the previous day, on a tour of inspection through the city. In the evening there was a meeting at the Festival Concert Room, at which papers were read "On the Parliaments of York," by the Rev. C. H. Hartshorne; and "On the Causes which Arrested the Progress of Mediæval Sculpture," by Mr. R. Westmacott, A.R.A. The proceedings of the day were closed with a splendid entertainment, given by the Very Reverend the Dean of York to the officers and members of the Institute. As on the previous evening, at the Mansion-house, the social intercourse at the Deanery was kept up until a late hour; and it is scarcely necessary for us to state, that the noble President and his friends were highly delighted at this second proof of the hospitable spirit with which their visit has been received by the leading authorities of the city of York.

We much regret, that the early period of the week at which we are compelled by our large circulation to go to press, renders it utterly impossible for us to continue a bonâ fide record of the proceedings beyond Wednesday night. In our next Number, if the pressure of other matter will permit, we hope to be able to bring our report down to the final close of the Meeting. In the mean time, we give a programme of the order of business, as officially arranged by the Committee of Management.

Thursday.—The three Sections will assemble, at eleven o'clock, at their respective places of meeting, for the reading of papers. At six o'clock, a public dinner will take place at the De Grey Rooms, St. Leonard's place.

Friday.—An excursion, in the morning, to Rievaulx Abbey. In the evening, a general meeting will be held at the Festival Concert Room at eight o'clock.

Saturday.—An excursion to Fountain's Abbey and the Cathedral of Ripon. In the evening, a general meeting at the Festival Concert Room, at eight o'clock.

Monday.—A general meeting of the Institute will be held at twelve o'clock, in the Festival Concert Room, when a general report of the proceedings of the Central Committee, and a financial statement for the year, will be submitted to the Members. The annual election will be made, and the place of meeting for the ensuing year selected.

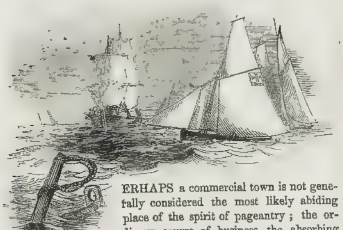
LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, JULY 25, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

BEST, LELOIR, SC. A PAR. S.

No. 222.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, AUGUST 1, 1846. [Sixpence.

PRINCE ALBERT IN LIVERPOOL.



PERHAPS a commercial town is not generally considered the most likely abiding place of the spirit of pageantry; the ordinary course of business, the absorbing pursuit of wealth, the preference of the useful to the ornamental in every arrangement, for which a great trading locality is remarkable, is utterly at variance with the leisure and ease that ask for enjoyment, and also, it may be, with the tastes that create a love of the picturesque. The cotton bale and the sugar cask are not certainly beautiful objects in themselves, though, when associated with the convenience and enjoyment of life they bestow, a large amount of pleasing contemplation may be extracted from them; they have their "sermons" as well as stones, and partake of the good to be found "in everything." This is all the beauty that the generality of mankind, we believe, concede to those centres of activity where merchants most do congregate—great trading, commercial and manufacturing towns. They admit a pleasing and useful result, but nothing of beauty, to the processes that precede it; ships are but boards, warehouses piles of bricks, quays, only masses of paving stones, and casks, cases, and bags, things offensive to the eye and nostril of those who tread the carpeted saloons of "Belgravia."

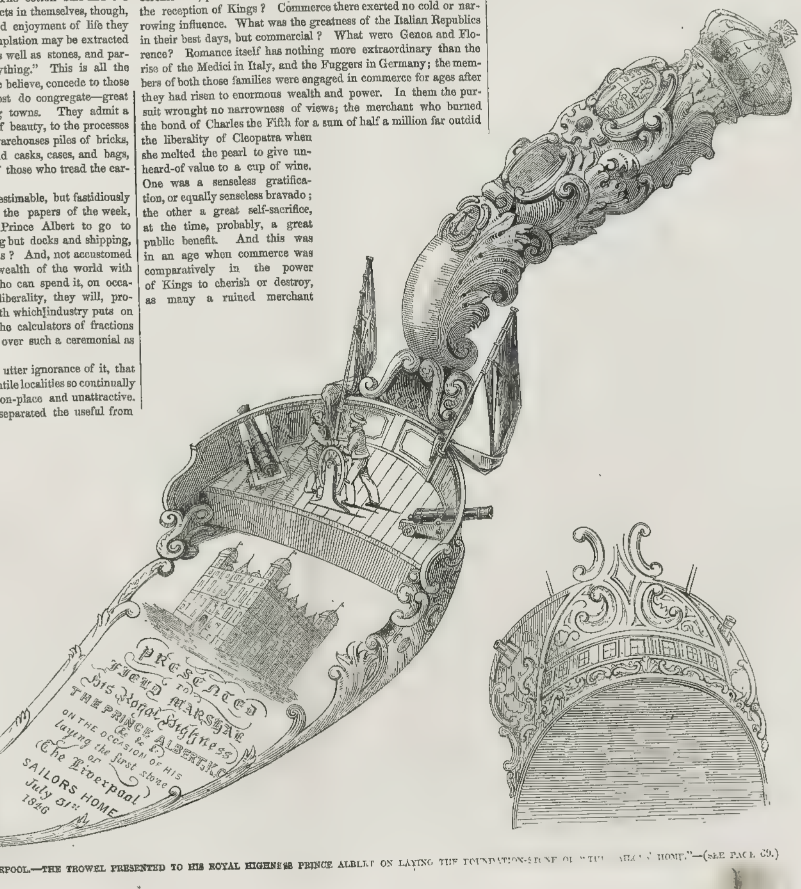
At this moment, we doubt not, many estimable, but fastidiously minded individuals, languidly perusing the papers of the week, are asking what could have induced Prince Albert to go to Liverpool, a place where there is nothing but docks and shipping, and men who make money and railroads? And, not accustomed to believe that those who gather in the wealth of the world with the greatest judgment, are also those who can spend it, on occasion, with the most magnificence and liberality, they will, probably, be much astonished at the ease with which industry puts on a festal garb, and the splendour which the calculators of fractions and the watchers of markets canthrow over such a ceremonial as the welcoming of a Prince.

It is only forgetfulness of history, or utter ignorance of it, that associates mercantile pursuits and mercantile localities so continually and inseparably with all that is common-place and unattractive. We have too much and too constantly separated the useful from the ornamental, and thus produced or countenanced the notion that the two things were incompatible. But there is nothing whatever in the spirit of commerce to destroy that love of the beautiful, which, though often repressed by modern habits, is never quite extinct.

In former times, men gave freer play to their feelings in such things; and even now, in other countries, the separation between business and pleasure is not so complete as with ourselves; we separate our social and daily life as much as possible from our worldly business; the merchant does not live in the sphere of his diurnal action. The Dutchman and the German contrive to blend the two portions of existence more together; in the Dutch towns, the gorgeous drawing-room of the rich merchant may be seen over his store-house, crane and pulley working close beside plate glass windows and splendid hangings. We remove the splendours of our social existence as far as possible from the vicinity of the labours that procure it. There may be some advantages in both modes of proceeding; it is quite certain that in neither case does the keenest pursuit of wealth, and the most complete absorption in the business of commerce, deaden the faculties for the appreciation of what is required for embellishing and adorning life. But those who look only at one side of the question, sometimes lose sight of the truth in this matter.

If we go back to History, what examples shall we not find of the splendour, the magnificence, and the pageantry that have been summoned up at the bidding of Commerce! To pass over the mysterious wealth and grandeur of Tyre and Sidon, and the wide traffic of the old Phœnicians with nations whose products they bore home, but whose names and localities they jealously kept secret, and descend at once to ages more within the grasp of certain knowledge, what was the splendour of Venice when she "held the gorgeous East in fee," but commercial? Yet, what magnificence of ceremonials, processions, feasts, and decorated palaces opened for the reception of Kings? Commerce there exerted no cold or narrowing influence. What was the greatness of the Italian Republics in their best days, but commercial? What were Genoa and Florence? Romance itself has nothing more extraordinary than the rise of the Medici in Italy, and the Fuggers in Germany; the members of both those families were engaged in commerce for ages after they had risen to enormous wealth and power. In them the pursuit wrought no narrowness of views; the merchant who burned the bond of Charles the Fifth for a sum of half a million far outdid the liberality of Cleopatra when she melted the pearl to give unheard-of value to a cup of wine. One was a senseless gratification, or equally senseless bravado; the other a great self-sacrifice, at the time, probably, a great public benefit. And this was in an age when commerce was comparatively in the power of Kings to cherish or destroy, as many a ruined merchant and plundered town found to their cost. To come to our own country: our history is full of the pomps and pageantries of the merchants of London; masques full of "quaint device," and enriched with such poetry as could be commanded for the occasion; not always the best, for Pegasus is ever restive in harness, even when the collar is a golden one. Do not our chronicles speak of tapestried streets and conduits running with wine—with jousts and allegories played at the gates and barriers? And all these, be it remarked, were enjoyments for every one. The mistake that has made expenditure unpopular is that the magnates now admit no one to partake; the masques and all out-door celebrations have disappeared, necessarily so; but nothing has taken their place which the age would admit.

Are we in any course of amendment in this respect? We would willingly hope so. The out-of-door splendours of Prince Albert's reception at Liverpool—the gaiety open to all—is an approach to what, we think, might be done more systematically. What is great and magnificent in reality, need not be apprehensive of being so in appearance; and a little more attention to what is graceful and pleasing in life would relieve commerce from the unjust reproach of being destructive to the beautiful, and favourable only to what depresses and repels.



THE ROYAL VISIT TO LIVERPOOL.—THE TROWEL PRESENTED TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT ON LAYING THE FOUNDATION-STONE OF "THE SAILORS' HOME."—(SEE PAGE 69.)

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

Paris has again been thrown into agitation by another attempt to assassinate Louis Philippe. Such of the particulars as were known at the time of our going to press will be found on page 80.

Some interest was excited by a speech made at a banquet given to M. Guizot, by his constituents at Lisieux, on Monday. Nearly 600 guests were present, and many persons were excluded for want of room. Between 4000 and 5000 persons promenaded in the garden in the hope of catching a few sentences of the speeches of the gentlemen who addressed the meeting. After the customary toasts, which were received with the most devoted loyalty, the health of M. Guizot was proposed, and received with the utmost enthusiasm. His speech was one characterised by his usual eloquence. He alluded to the numerous parties which had divided the country for sixteen years without any ultimate [illegible] of their common views, and defended with much energy the course he had felt himself called upon to adopt. He claimed the merit of being the head of what ought fairly to be denominated a "Liberal Government," and vindicated to himself the merit of having done the utmost in his power to preserve intact freedom of opinion. He declared that the notions of equality which were prevalent at the last French Revolution were extravagant, but had subsided into demands which were just and social. M. Guizot professed his determination to adhere to Conservative principles. He said —"During sixteen years, through many obstacles, oscillations, experiments, that party developed itself, took form and consistency, struggled and conquered. (Bravos.) How—with what—and by what means? By our [illegible] by publicity, by discussion, by the elections, by the liberty of the tribune, of the press, of votes; by a continual appeal to the intelligence, to the reason, to the real wishes, to the well-understood interest of the country. Always in the bosom of the country—in its serious thought, in its reflection, will that Conservatism come to renew its strength and vigour. The Crown, the Chambers, the Electoral Colleges, the National Guards, the tribunals, the citizens, all the great public powers, all the Constitutional forces of our régime have maintained their place in this struggle—have shared in this victory. I do not hesitate to say that, without our free institutions, under any other form of Government, under forms of Government more tranquil, more easy, more sure in appearance but in reality less powerful and less efficacious, we should not have obtained this great and difficult result. (Bravos.) If power had stood alone, left to itself—if it had not been constantly sustained, warmed, revived by the energetic concurrence of the public liberties, surely the revolutionary movement excited in 1830 would have prevailed—the torrent would have burst its dykes—the country would have been led astray. Yes, we can confide in our institutions, for we owe them gratitude; they have been the strength of Conservative policy, they have given it the victory. (Bravos.) Thus we ought to be, and we are, a Government of liberty—a liberal Government. I insist upon these two words. France feels the necessity of being governed—she does not demand new revolutions nor considerable changes. No; she desires a Government worthy of the name—a regular, firm Government, feeling its rights, its mission, respecting itself, making itself respected, determined to accomplish truly all its duties. France wants also a Liberal Government—that is, one which accepts frankly and fully the institutions and the liberties that are the guarantee of our social society and of its conquests. And such a Government is ours."

The authorities of Paris are occupied in taking the Census. This has been completed for the city of Paris and the department of the Seine. Paris, which, five years since, contained only 97[illegible],000 inhabitants, or 1,150,000, including the suburbs, has, at present, a population of upwards of a million, or, with the suburbs, of more than 1,200,000. Building is going on on all sides—new regions rising, as if by enchantment, composed of houses five or six stories high, in each of which are from fifty to one hundred inhabitants.

A fire broke out, on Monday morning, at about three o'clock, in the forage warehouse of the Hippodrome, adjoining the stable and the costume-room. From the nature of the materials, the fire burnt so rapidly, that, before effectual means of checking it could be applied, the portion of the building near the forage-room was destroyed. The horses were got out safely, except one, which was burnt. All the costumes, including a quantity valued at 30,000 francs, which were only delivered last week for an intended tournament, were destroyed. The fire was not got under at about four o'clock. No cause can be assigned for the fire, as a light is never permitted at the Hippodrome. The premises and stock were insured.

PORTUGAL.

Our Letters from Lisbon of the 20th ult. announce that the expected change of Ministry had taken place. The Duke de Palmella still remains President of the Council, and others of his colleagues remain, but Mousinho d'Albuquerque and Colonel Leureiro had resigned. The Ministry, as far as it was settled, was thus constituted: Duke de Palmella (old), President; Senhor Soure (old), changed to Marine; Count Lavradio, (old), Foreign Affairs; Viscount Sa da Bandiera (new), War; Senhor Aguia (new), Justice; Julio Gomes Sanches (new), Interior.

Portugal continued quiet, but reports, which have been for some time in circulation, prevailed that the Queen, whose popularity had greatly declined, entertained serious thoughts of leaving the country. In that case, her destination would undoubtedly be England.

The telegraphic communication between Oporto and Lisbon had been destroyed by the peasantry.

The news from the northern provinces is, on the whole, more satisfactory, and the Miguelite movement had not met with any sympathy from the people in general.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE. THE WAR WITH THE KAFFIRS.

Accounts have been received from the Cape to the 30th May, by the brig Mutine (upwards of a fortnight later than the advices last received); St. Helena, to the 17th of June; and Ascension, to the 23rd of June.

The Mutine has had a long and tedious passage from the Cape, with light and contrary winds nearly the whole period.

She brings complete files of papers, and an extract of a letter from Cape Town, which gives a tolerably good idea as to the tone of opinion in that quarter. A total want of timely preparation and consequent panic is manifested throughout. No attempt has as yet been made to check the Kaffirs, although a force of nearly 5000 troops, burghers, &c., have long since reached the frontier.

Her Majesty's ships President, 50, Captain Stanley, flag of Rear-Admiral Dacres, Commander-in-Chief on the station; and the North Star, 26, Captain Sir J. E. Home, Bart., were at anchor in Simon's Bay, on the 30th of May. The latter was from New Zealand, and to sail for England on the 3rd of June. She brought an account of some fighting in the vicinity of the Bay of Islands, in which the natives were beaten, and their pah, or stronghold, destroyed, as described in the last news from that quarter.

The Thunderbolt steam-sloop, Commander Broke, proceeded to Table Bay, from Simon's Bay, on the 28th of May, with three officers and fifty blue jackets, belonging to the President, to perform garrison duty at Cape Town, the troops and nearly the whole of the male inhabitants having been marched off to fight the Kaffirs—now that the frontier farms are burnt, the cattle carried off, and nothing left worth fighting for.

Fifteen unfortunate marines, belonging to the Mutine, were also sent off bush-fighting, at a moment's notice, destroying the efficiency of a small man-of-war, to guard for the time being some farm-house.

The military movements to the scene of action have been slow, but his Excellency the Governor has expressed the intention of coming to blows so soon as all hands are collected; it is, however, more than probable that he will be left a clear field for his tactics, and the Kaffirs be off to discuss their cattle, instead of meeting his hostile array.

The Cape Shipping List of the 29th of May gives the following intelligence respecting the progress of hostilities on the frontier:—

"The frontier mail, which arrived last night, we are sorry to say, brings intelligence of a disastrous nature: another train of waggons (not less than 41) having fallen into the hands of the Kaffirs on the 21st inst., who, after pillaging, set fire to the whole. About 30 of the number were laden with forage and other Government stores, and destined for Fort Peddie. Fortunately, the ammunition waggons had been left at Trompetter's Drift, and it is said that in the captured waggons there were not more than about 300 rounds of cartridges; our loss, four men killed and several wounded. We are sorry to add that the camp of the Field-Cornet Buchner at the Bushman's River was attacked on the same night, and the whole of his remaining cattle have been swept away by the enemy. The only cheering intelligence we can impart to our readers is that relative to the movements of Sir Andreas Stockenstrom. He has, by a series of successful operations, effectually cleared the districts of the Kaga and the Baviaans River of the Kaffirs, in the course of which he has had several engagements with them. At the last date he was moving down with the burgher force under his command, and expected shortly to form a junction with Lieutenant-Colonel Richardson and Colonel Somerset in their movements upon the Zuurberg and on Upper Bushman's River, where the Kaffirs are stated to be still in great force."

THE UNITED STATES.

We have New York papers to the 11th ult., received by the Waterloo packet. Their contents are not important, and relate chiefly to matters interesting only to Americans. One of the New York papers of the 7th, contains a copy of the new Tariff Bill. This document is divided into twelve sections, and passed the House of Representatives on the 3rd ult., by a vote of 114 to 95. We append an analysis:—

The first section contains a preamble of the measure; then follows the list of articles under the various rates of duty to be imposed—1st, those that are to pay a duty of 100 per cent. ad valorem, and on brandy and other spirits, distilled from grain or other material, &c. 2. Articles to pay a duty of 40 per cent., in which are fish preserved in oil, composition, tops for tables, or other articles of furniture, wines, &c. 3. To pay a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem, alabaster or German silver plate; also beer or porter, in casks or bottled; walking-sticks, small ware, china, earthenware, &c. 4. To pay a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem. Under this tax, among others, are included, buttons and button moulds of [illegible], several descriptions of drugs, cables, cordage, tarred or untarred, cotton laces, cotton insertings, cotton trimming laces, cotton laces and braids, manufactures of worsted, or which worsted shall form a compound material not otherwise provided for. 5. Articles to pay a duty of 20 per cent. 6. Articles to pay a duty of 15 per cent. 7. Articles to pay a duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem, in which are [illegible]led books printed, magazines, periodicals, and illustrated newspapers, bound or unbound, hempseed, linseed, and rapeseed. 8. Articles to pay a duty of 5 per cent. 9. Articles free of duty.

[illegible] enacts that, from the 3rd of December, a duty of 30 per cent., ad valorem, shall be paid on all goods not provided for under the above classification.

Section 4 provides for the weighing or measuring of goods, when such is not contained in the invoice or entry.

Section 5 allows a drawback on pickled fish, of the fisheries of the United States, equal to the amount of duty paid for salt, if said fish be cured with foreign salt.

Section 6 fixes the 2nd of December for the commencement of the Act.

Section 7 authorises goods from the American side of the Cape of Good Hope or Cape Horn to remain in the public stores (if so desired), for one year instead of ninety days, as enacted by the Act of 1842.

Section 8 enacts that, in no instance, shall the duty be assessed upon an amount less than the invoice value. Owners, consigners, or agents of imports which have been actually purchased, may, on entry of the same, make such addition in the entry to the cost or value given in the invoice as, in his opinion, may raise the same to the true market value of such imports in the principal markets of the country where the importation shall have been made, &c., and add thereto all costs and charges which, under existing laws, would form part of the true value at the port where the same may be entered, upon which the duties should be assessed.

Section 9. Value of goods may be appraised, should the Custom-House authorities deem them entered at too small an amount; and, in case the United States' appraisers shall deem them undervalued, the collector of the district to have power to sell said goods by auction, for an attempt to defraud the United States' customs.

Section 10 relates to appointment of officers under the Act, who are to take an "oath of office."

Section 11 prohibits all persons connected with the American navy, bringing in any ship of the United States, any article subject to the duties specified above.

The Tariff Bill having been passed, as already observed, by the House of Representatives on the 3rd, was received in the Senate on the following day. On the motion of Mr. Sevier, it was ordered to be printed. Mr. Evans moved its reference to the finance committee. A short discussion ensued, in which several members took part, and ultimately the motion to refer was lost by a vote of 22 to 24.

The aspect of the Mexican war had undergone no change. No further active hostilities had occurred on the Del Norte. General Taylor still remained in position near Matamoras, preparing to advance against Monterey. The true numbers, position, and condition of the Mexican troops still remained undetermined.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

ROYAL ASSENT.—The Royal Assent was given by Commission to eighty three bills, chiefly railway bills.

THE ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY AND THE SLAVE-TRADE.—Lord BROUGHAM presented a petition from Thomas Clarkson, signed on behalf of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, praying that if a measure should be presented to their Lordships for letting in the produce of foreign sugar from colonies where labour was free, and from our colonies where it was free, and the produce of slave colonies, on equal terms, their Lordships might turn an attentive ear to that proposition, from whatever quarter it might come, and let no views of expediency, nor any notions of policy, interfere with that illustrious course in which this country had so long walked—the course of putting down the African slave-trade, and striking off, all the world over, the fetters of the slave. The noble and learned Lord entered into the subject of the slave trade, enforcing many of the arguments he has been accustomed to use, and denouncing slavery in eloquent and indignant terms.—The Marquis of LANSDOWNE objected to the discussion of so large a question upon the presentation of a petition, and when the noble and learned Lord had already placed on the paper a notice of motion on the subject. After the great and general principle of Free Trade had been adopted by Parliament, and which had received the sanction of Lord Brougham himself, the noble Marquis contended that the Government were bound to bring forward their proposal for the final settlement of the sugar question without any delay. The petition was ordered to lie on the table, and after progress had been made in several bills, the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

NEWLY-ELECTED MEMBER. Mr. T. MAITLAND took the oaths and his seat on his re-election for the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright.

A discussion took place on the question for considering the report on the Lancaster and Preston Junction Railway Bill, and on a division the bill was lost by 71 to 6.

THE SUGAR DUTIES.

On the order of the day for the house resolving itself into a Committee of Ways and Means,

Lord G. BENTINCK moved, as an amendment: "That, in the present state of the sugar cultivation in the British East and West Indian possessions, the proposed reduction of duty upon foreign slave-grown sugar is alike unjust and impolitic, as tending to check the advance of production by British free labour, and to give a great additional stimulus to the slave trade." The noble Lord began his speech by regretting that the responsibility of advocating such great mercantile interests, and the much greater question of slavery, had not fallen into more able hands. He next disclaimed all intention of mixing up so grave a subject with any question of confidence in the Government, or any question of party, at the same time that he felt anxious to vindicate himself and his friends from the imputation that they were not in earnest in their opposition to the Government on this proposal. Lord George proceeded to consider the question under three distinct heads. First, the interest of the British sugar planters in the East and West Indies and the Mauritius, and the supply of sugar to be obtained from our colonies. Secondly, as a measure of revenue. Thirdly, as regarded the African race. The necessity of the proposal of the Government had been founded on the assumed insufficiency of supply from our colonies, and on an apprehended scarcity; but no fear of any deficiency of supply need be entertained if we afforded our colonists fair protection and gave them just facilities for obtaining free labour. The noble Lord said he would not deny that the effect of admitting slave-produced sugar could reduce the prices to the English consumer of two-thirds of a penny per pound; but this might be equally obtained if the Government would afford to the East and West India colonists that encouragement to which they were entitled. Lord George Bentinck read communications from Bengal and Madras, to prove that the sugar plantations in the East Indies were progressing most rapidly, and becoming a most profitable speculation, and quoted authorities to show that the quantity to be expected from the Mauritius would far exceed what had been calculated on by Lord John Russell. The Premier had calculated that our colonies would produce this year 240,000 tons—that we might expect 20,000 tons of free labour foreign sugar, and that we should require 20,000 tons of slave-grown sugar to make up his anticipated consumption of 280,000 tons. But he (Lord George Bentinck) counted on receiving from the West Indies 115,000 tons, from the Mauritius 55,000, and from the East Indies 110,000, being the whole amount of the anticipated consumption of next year, without taking into calculation the sugars to come from Manilla, from Java, Siam, and other foreign free producing countries, and the stock that would be in hand. All fear, therefore, of scarcity was perfectly groundless; and on the ground of opening markets for British manufactures, surely it would be of more benefit to the manufacturers of Yorkshire and Lancashire—those gentlemen who are henceforward to govern England—to exchange produce with colonies that take 57s. a head of British manufactures, than with foreign countries which would not take 7s. Regarding the question as one of revenue, he argued that instead of yielding £750,000, as Lord J. Russell had calculated, the proposed duties could not possibly return more to the Exchequer than £420,000; and he conjured the Government to desist from pressing forward a measure of such importance at a period of the Session when half the members were out of town, and when a full discussion could not be by possibility had. If slave sugar were to be had, and if a reduction of 6s. per cwt. were to be the consequence, £2,000,000 would be taken out of the pockets of the British merchants and transferred to those engaged in the Brazilian and Cuba slave trade. On the faith of Parliament, and on the faith of the declarations made at the beginning of the session by the late Premier, engagements had been made, and orders had been sent out to China, Java, Siam, and elsewhere, which could not now be recalled, and therefore this measure would produce the most disastrous results. Indeed, he had received communications from those who are wealthy now, stating that, should the proposal of the Government be carried, they will be in the Gazette before a month. But no man's property was at the present time safe. The noble Lord then came to the question whether the people of this country would take this sugar at two-thirds of a penny per pound cheaper on condition of countenancing and encouraging slavery. He quoted the opinion of Mr. O'Connell against cheap sugar with slavery, and argued that the people who voted twenty millions sterling, and who paid annually half a million, and who supported a large fleet to put down the nefarious traffic in slaves, would not be so inconsistent, or make themselves so supremely ridiculous in the eyes of the [illegible] the [illegible] ever; and declared [illegible] carried out in this instance, the cheapened sugar would be eaten with the remembrance of the negro blood that had been shed for the purpose of obtaining it. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord Sandon, and Sir J. Hogg spoke against the amendment; and Sir R. Inglis, Mr. G. Berkeley, and Mr. G. Hope, in its favour.

Sir R. PEEL stated that the proposal which he had intended to submit to the House, if he had remained in power [illegible] admitting fre[illegible] Fearing that the proposition of [illegible] give a stimulus to the slave-trade, it was with the greatest reluctance that he made up his mind to support it. The right hon. Baronet proceeded to point out the inexpediency, if not impracticability of displacing the Government on this question. He said: "I was putting the question—do I feel myself justified in entering into a combination for the purpose of displacing the noble Lord from the Government within six weeks from the period at which he acceded to it? Gentlemen seem to think you may safely enter into that combination, but the noble Lord will keep his seat. I do not know how the noble Lord would act; but I think the noble Lord, under the circumstances in which he accepted power, being defeated in so important a measure as the present, would not only be prepared to abdicate power, but would be fully justified in doing so. ('Hear,' from Lord John Russell.) Those who would compel him to abdicate power are bound to ask themselves whether, in the event of success, they are prepared to undertake the Government. (Cheers.) Why, there are circumstances in the history of every country when that question must be asked by those who enter into combinations to subvert a Government. (Hear, hear.) Two Governments have existed during the last six weeks. Shall we have a third? (Hear, hear.) If so, on what principle? (Cheers.) Shall it be the restoration of the late Government? ('No,' from the Protectionists.) I entirely concur in that sentiment. (Cheers and laughter.) I do think that the late Government, having withdrawn from office in consequence of the signification that they had forfeited the confidence of this House—that Government, if it were to follow a course by which at the end of six weeks it might be restored to office, would be doing that which would be altogether discreditable. (Hear.) What chance have they of increased means of governing this country? I believe none; and, therefore, all this only confirms the line I have taken, that it would not be for the benefit of the country to displace the Government of the noble Lord. (Hear, hear.) Well, then, with respect to others, the advocates of Protection, I mean to speak of them with all the respect that is due to their conscientious advocacy of their own opinions; but, at any rate, they cannot be surprised that I should not be willing to lend myself to a measure which would have the effect of placing in power those who not only are the advocates of Protection, but who are bringing forward this resolution, not only for the purpose of defeating the Ministerial measure, but of recalling and revoking that great change which has lately taken place." Sir R. Peel concluded by giving his advice to Lord J. Russell to encourage free-labour sugar: "My earnest hope is that the noble Lord will see that the great object to be aimed at is the permanent settlement of this question; that as the great principle which we all uphold is to control slave labour and abolish the slave-trade at as early a period as possible, he will adopt such measures as will give encouragement to the production of free-labour sugar in our colonies, and that being my hope and expectation, I am prepared to give my support to the proposition of the Government. (Hear, hear.) I shall not harass them by a vexatious opposition on the details of this question. The advice I give them is disinterested, and my advice is, that the noble Lord, intending to discourage slave-labour as much as possible, as his intention and aim must be, he will give the best encouragement he can to free labour, and concert with his colleagues such measures as may be calculated to enable those who have nothing but their labour to depend upon to contend with the competition that they will have to encounter, so as to give as little as possible encouragement to the abomination of slave-labour. Believing, then, that this measure, if obstructed now, must ultimately be carried, and believing that if it is to be carried, no one is better suited to carry it than the noble Lord, I have come to the resolution, certainly not without reluctance, as I said before, of supporting the principle of the measure." (Hear, hear.)

Sir T. D. ACLAND said that he would support the motion of Lord George Bentinck, for Sir Robert Peel had grounded his support of the resolutions of the Government entirely upon the state of parties in that House—the very last consideration by which he should have allowed himself to be influenced.

On the motion of Mr. BORTHWICK, the debate was adjourned, and the House broke up, soon after one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Gauge of Railways Regulation Bill was read a second time, after some discussion.

On the motion of the LORD CHANCELLOR, the Small Debts Bill, a bill in conformity with the recommendation of the law commission, was read a second time.

The Earl of CLARENDON brought up the Sugar Duties Continuance Bill, which was read a first time.

The Books and Engravings Bill was also read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

The Sugar Duties Continuance Bill was read a third time and passed.

THE DIVISION ON THE BILL FOR THE REDUCTION OF THE SUGAR DUTIES.

The adjourned debate on the motion to go into Committee of Ways and Means, to consider Lord John Russell's Sugar Resolutions, and Lord George Bentinck's amendment thereto, was resumed by

Mr. P. MILES, who spoke in favour of the amendment. He was, he said, convinced that the admission of slave-grown sugar would not only throw estates out of cultivation, but give a stimulus to the Slave-trade. True it was that we admitted slave-grown cotton, tobacco, &c., but there was no doubt that a refusal to admit slave-grown sugar had materially tended to check the Slave-trade. If this measure should be carried, our Colonies would be lost.

Mr. BORTHWICK supported the proposition of the Government, not because they had only been six weeks in office, but because he regarded the exclusion of Brazilian and Cuba sugars as indefensible in principle. The noble Lord (Lord G. Bentinck) said he was willing to barter the blood of the Negro for 40s. per cwt. on sugar. It was said, too, that the supply of sugar from the East Indies could be greatly increased; but what was this but the production of sugar by slave labour? Were not the Pariahs on the banks of the Ganges bought and sold? If not, who were bought and sold?

Sir J. GRAHAM (to whom the hon. member appeared to address this question) was understood to remark, that it was difficult to know who were bought and sold. (Laughter.)

The Marquis of GRANBY supported Lord G. Bentinck's amendment.

After several Hon. Members had spoken,

Mr. DISRAELI recapitulated the three propositions of Lord G. Bentinck's speech, and observed that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his reply to it, had offered to the first an assumption, had met the second with an hypothesis, and had combated the third with a sophism. He then proceeded to substantiate that assertion, contending, at considerable length, that Lord G. Bentinck had not over-estimated the supply of sugar from the West Indies, the Mauritius, and the East Indies, and had not underrated the consumption of the British market; that he had maintained the criticism which he had passed on the financial calculations of Lord John Russell; that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had only upset those criticisms by producing a series of figures completely different from those of the First Lord of the Treasury, and by transmuting 20,000 into 30,000 tons of sugar, by a novel species of alchymy; and that the irrefragable a[illegible] George Bentinck, respecting the [illegible] Trade, had only been met by [illegible] slave-trade; he opposed them because they were antagonistic to the fragment left of the old colonial system of England. He ventured to predict, that the House would soon retrace its steps, and reconstruct that now almost annihilated system. He said so, because the history of England was a history of reaction. Mr. Disraeli then, as usual, indulged in personal remark and satire. In allusion to Lord Sandon, he said it completed the picture of this eventful session to [illegible] the noble Lord, who moved the resolutions of 1841, sitting on a hogshead of sugar in a white sheet performing penance, and cry[illegible] standing the defalcation of Lord Sandon from the ranks of colonial protection, he still thought that its friends might have fought its battle successfully, had they been able to retain among them the late Prime Minister. No one understood the West Indian question better than Sir Robert Peel—no one could have been a more effective champion of West Indian interests. Great, therefore, was his mortification when he found Sir Robert Peel delivering a speech fatal to all [illegible] hopes. He (Mr. Disraeli) appealed to the people of England, and asked them whether they thought that great colonial interests were to be sacrificed for such minute considerations as who should sit on the Ministerial bench? If great principles were to be given up by members of Parliament against their conviction to party considerations, he should say "Farewell to the Parliament of England." He concluded by stating that in resisting these resolutions he felt no hostility against the existing Government, that he was actuated by no factious motive, and that the friends of Protection could take no other course than that which they had taken.

Lord J. RUSSELL, in reply, defended the proposition of the Government on the ground of its social urgency, and argued that the effect of the measure on the interests of the slave trade would not be such as was anticipated by its opponents. Free labour would ultimately prove itself to be economically, as it was socially, the most beneficial to all concerned.

On a division there appeared—

For Lord G. Bentinck's amendment ... [illegible]
Against it ... ... [illegible]

MAJORITY IN FAVOUR OF THE GOVERNMENT,

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House met to-day at twelve o'clock.

Mr. HUME postponed the Charitable Trusts Bill till next session.

THE ART-UNIONS BILL.

Mr. WYSE moved that the House go into Committee on the Art Unions Bill, for the purpose of further considering the report.

Mr. GOULBURN at some length stated his objections to the measure. He considered that it was calculated in a certain degree to revive the old practice of lotteries, and that it would give encouragement to gambling. The right hon. gentleman moved as an amendment that the bill be recommitted that day three months.

Mr. M. MILNES supported the motion for going into Committee. He considered the bill was calculated to encourage the works and labours of British art[illegible]. If rejected, would cause penury and misery amongst a number of most talented and deserving individuals. No real practical evil would follow, and he could not [illegible] that the plan bore any resemblance to the late State lotteries.

Sir R. PEEL did not intend, as the Government was about to support the bill, to oppose it, but he must state that his opinion in general was the same as that expressed by his right hon. friend, Mr. Goulburn. It was a measure, to a certain extent, encouraging lotteries, and, therefore, objectionable.

Mr. WYSE defended the bill. Its principle was the same in all respects as those of Building Societies and many other public associations. He could not [illegible] that any injurious results would arise, or that the bill could be considered as in any way calculated to encourage gambling. Its object was the encouragement of the fine arts, and he hoped the House would agree to it, as the bill now [illegible] lating to the subject expired at the end of the present session.

On a division, there appeared, for the re-committal of the bill:

Ayes .. .. [illegible]
[illegible] .. .. .. [illegible]
Majority .. .. [illegible]

The bill was then re-committed. On the House resuming, the report was ordered to be received forthwith.

Several bills were then advanced a stage.

Mr. FREWEN obtained leave to bring in a bill for the better regula[illegible] episcopal revenues.

The House adjourned at half-past four o'clock.

HOUSE O[illegible]

The proceedings to-day were un[illegible] deal of routine business was disposed of. The Railway G[illegible] passed through Committee.

and a Select Committee was appointed to consider the claims of certain Railway Companies to be exempted from the operation of the sessional order respecting the second reading of Railway Bill.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

Eastern Counties Railway.—Mr. Hudson moved for a return of all accidents which had occurred on the Eastern Counties Railway where death had ensued since the 31st of October last, when he first became connected with the line.—Sir G. Grey did not oppose the motion, but suggested that the wording should be altered, so as to include all accidents on the railroad since the 31st of October.—Mr. Labouchere. The motion might be for a return of all the killed and wounded (Hear, hear).—Sir J. Graham. Yes, and that from the period of the opening the road (Cheers).—Mr. Hudson withdrew his motion, and gave notice that he would bring it forward on a future day in an amended form.

The Art-Unions Bill.—The Art-Unions Bill was read a third time and passed.

Poor Removal Bill.—Sir G. Grey moved the third reading of the Poor Removal Bill, which, after a discussion, was agreed to, and the House adjourned at eleven o'clock.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER MAJESTY AND THE ROYAL FAMILY.

On Sunday last, her Majesty and Prince Albert, the Duchess of Kent, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court and the domestic household, attended divine service in the private chapel, Buckingham Palace. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert visited the exhibition of the Royal Academy on Monday. The officers of the Royal Academy received her Majesty and her Royal Consort, and conducted them through the different schools.

Their Majesties the Queen and the Queen of the Belgians, accompanied by their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal, took an airing on Tuesday in an open carriage and four. His Royal Highness Prince Albert was on horseback.

The Royal dinner party on Wednesday included their Majesties the King and Queen of the Belgians, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge, their Royal Highnesses the Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, his Royal Highness Prince George, his Excellency M. Van de Weyer, Viscount Palmerston, the Countess Vilain XIV., Lady Anna Maria Dawson, Lady Augusta Cadogan, Baroness de Spaeth, the Earl Fortescue, Viscount Morpeth, Major A. d'Hanins de Moerkerke, and Baron Knesebeck.

Arrival of the King and Queen of the Belgians.—Their Majesties the King and Queen of the Belgians, attended by Madame la Comtesse Vilain XIV., dame du Palais; and Major A. d'Hanins de Moerkerke, officier d'ordonnance, landed at Woolwich at ten minutes past two on Monday afternoon, from Ostend. The august visitors arrived at Buckingham Palace at a quarter past three o'clock, and were received by the Vice-Chamberlain, the Master of the Household, and Lieutenant-Colonel Seymour, Equerry in Waiting to Prince Albert.

The Duke of Wellington's Grand Fete at Apsley House.—The Duke of Wellington gave a magnificent banquet on Monday evening to the Royal Family, at Apsley House, when a distinguished circle had the honour of meeting the illustrious party. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, attended by Lady Caroline Murray, arrived at half past seven o'clock, and Prince George of Cambridge came shortly afterwards. Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz were received, on alighting from their carriage, by the Duke of Wellington and the Marquis of Douro. In addition to the several members of the Royal Family above mentioned, were—His Excellency the Austrian Ambassador and the Countess Dietrichstein, his Excellency Count Kielmansegge, his Excellency Chevalier Bunsen, the Duke of Devonshire, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Marquis and Marchioness of Douro, the Countess of Jersey and Lady Clementina Villiers, the Earl and Countess of Wilton, the Countess of Westmoreland, Viscount and Viscountess Mahon, Lord Brougham, Lady Peel, the Right Hon. Charles Arbuthnot, Sir George Napier, and the Hon. Julian Fane. At a subsequent period of the evening the noble and gallant Duke gave a grand concert of vocal and instrumental music.

Aristocratic Marriages.—On Tuesday, the marriage of the Hon. Otway F. Toler, second son of the late, and brother of the present, Earl of Norbury, with the Hon. Miss Scarlett, eldest daughter of Lord and Lady Abinger, was solemnized at the parish church of St. Martin's-in-the-fields.—On the same morning, Lord Alan Spencer Churchill, son of his Grace the Duke of Marlborough, was married to Miss Rosamond Dowker, the daughter of Thomas Dowker, Esq., of Huntingdon Hall, in the North Riding of Yorkshire.—On Sunday, Miss Augusta Peel was married to Lord Henley. The marriage of the Right Honourable Sidney Herbert, M.P., and Miss A'Court, daughter of General A'Court, and niece of Lord Heytesbury, will be solemnized in about three weeks.—Lady Charlotte Herbert, second daughter of the Earl and Countess of Powis, is engaged to be married, in a few weeks, to Mr. Montgomerie.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Westminster Bridge.—Mr. Walker and the Committee have had several consultations respecting the condition of Westminster-bridge, and the general opinion entertained by them is that the present unsightly and dangerous structure should be pulled down and a new one substituted. Mr. Walker has already drawn out plans and specifications for the erection of a new bridge. He proposes that a temporary wooden bridge should be erected, and the new bridge commenced eastward of Ginger's Hotel.

Grand Temperance Demonstration.—Covent Garden Theatre has been engaged for a great teetotal demonstration next Friday: and in the meantime public meetings are to be held in all the London districts, to which the friends of temperance from all parts of England and abroad are invited to attend.

The Wellington Statue.—The further erection of the scaffolding over the triumphal arch at Hyde Park-corner, intended for the raising of the colossal statue of the Duke of Wellington, has been suspended by order of Lord Morpeth, the Chief Commissioner of Woods and Forests. It is now fully believed that the site chosen by the Committee will be given up, and that the parade in St. James's Park will be the place on which this trophy to the merits of the illustrious Duke will ultimately be raised.

Reception of a Nun into the Order of the Sisters of Mercy.—On Monday the interesting ceremony of investing a young lady with the veil and the holy habit of the Sisters of Mercy, took place in the Trinity Chapel of the Convent, Dock-head, Bermondsey, in the presence of a large number of the English Roman Catholic clergy and laity. Miss Graham, the lady who took the veil, is about twenty years of age, and a member of a highly-respectable family in St. John's Wood. It is said that the young lady has provided munificently for the pecuniary wants of the Convent. Dr. Griffiths, the Roman Catholic Bishop of the London district, officiated.

Fall in the Price of Bread.—On Monday the first-rate bakers at the west end of the town lowered the 4lb. loaf from 9d. to 8½d.; the second rate bread from 7d. to 6½d. In the Blackfriars-road, Westminster, Whitechapel, and other populous parts, the cheap bakers offer very fair bread at 5½d. and 6d. the loaf.

State of the Public Health in the Metropolis.—The total number of deaths registered in the metropolitan districts during the week ending Saturday, July 25, was 1003, an amount, we regret to state, that far exceeds both the summer and annual averages, in which the numbers stand respectively as 898 and 968. The deaths from diarrhœa, which, in the return, are included under the head of zymotic disease, were 156, 130 of which were infantile cases; and 26 deaths from cholera, not Asiatic, but of the sporadic kind, usually occurring at this period of the year, are also recorded. The total number of births registered during the same period was 1243, being an excess over the mortality of 240. The highest point of the thermometer in the sun, at Greenwich, was 99 degrees 5 minutes, and the lowest, on grass, at the same place, 40 degrees 8 minutes. The Times says:—"It is an indisputable fact that, in the months of August and September, the disorder which is now generally known as English cholera invariably makes its appearance in this country; and it is equally true that, in some seasons, it assumes a very mild form, and that, in others, the severity of its symptoms is such as very closely to resemble those of Asiatic cholera. Medical records, at least, from the time of Sydenham, 1699, to the present day, exist of quite sufficient authenticity to prove that, for a century and a half, if not for a much longer period, English cholera has invariably made its appearance in this country about the end of the summer and the beginning of the autumn. We have the best grounds for believing that English cholera is at the present time fearfully prevalent in London, and we have reason also to apprehend that it is to be found in other parts of the country. The virulence of the disorder in some instances has, we understand, led to the rumour that the Asiatic cholera has made its appearance amongst us. An inquiry was most promptly set on foot by the officers of the Privy Council, to whom all questions of quarantine, &c., are in the first instance referred; and we are happy to be able to state that the medical gentleman employed has, upon a full investigation of the alleged cases, been convinced that there is no evidence whatever of their being cases of epidemic or infectious cholera; and we hope that this assurance will suffice to put a stop to the groundless apprehension which that rumour has not unnaturally occasioned."

The Great Wellington Statue.—This colossal group was on Tuesday raised out of the pit in Mr. Wyatt's foundry, wherein it was shown in one of the Engravings in our Journal of the 11th inst. The operation on Tuesday was slow, but so regular as to be almost imperceptible; and now that the group is placed on the ground level, the effect is very striking. Although above 40 workmen assisted in the raising, and several visitors were present, the silence was only occasionally broken by the superintendents giving the necessary instructions to the different engineers for adjusting the equipoise; and now and then you might hear one of the large blocks calling out that there was an almost insupportable weight upon it.

Death of Sir Archibald Campbell, Bart.—The above Baronet expired at Garscube, N.B., on Thursday (last week), at the advanced age of 77 years. The deceased was son of the first Baronet, the Lord President of the Court of Session, better known as Lord Succoth.

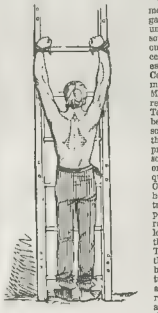
Death of Lady Baring.—Lady Baring, wife of Sir Thomas Baring, and mother of the Hon. Francis Thornhill Baring, M.P., expired on Sunday morning, at Stratton Park, the family seat, near Winchester. Her Ladyship had been in declining health for some months past. She was eldest daughter of Mr Charles Sealy, of Calcutta, and married in 1794 Sir Thomas Baring, by whom her Ladyship leaves issue four sons and three daughters.

Lieutenant Hawkey. Mr. Hawkey, late First Lieutenant of Royal Marines, who was tried at the last assizes for the county of Hants, for participation in the death of Mr. Seton, and acquitted, has been reinstated in his original rank.

FLOGGING IN THE ARMY.

A very painful interest has of late been excited in the public mind with reference to this species of corporal punishment in the Army. With a view, therefore, of showing our readers the extent of the infliction, we have engraved the respective implements, and append some details from Mr. Marshall's "Military Miscellany," the object of which is to supply the public with some information respecting the constitution, laws, and usages, of the army; and to excite attention to the means which may ameliorate the condition of soldiers, and exalt their moral and intellectual character.

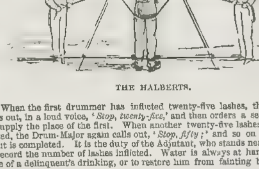
"In awarding the sentence of corporal punishment," says Mr. Marshall, "a court-martial commonly states, that the infliction shall be 'on the bare back, with a cat-o'-nine-tails, in the usual manner;' but the last four words were formerly sometimes omitted, as is alleged, for the purpose of conveying to the officer ordering the execution of the sentence, a power to inflict the punishment on the back or breech, at his discretion.



THE LADDER.

"The mode of inflicting corporal punishment is usually as follows:—The brigade, garrison, regiment, or detachment, being under arms, is formed into a square in some retired spot, often in the ditch of an outwork of fortified places or posts, to receive the prisoner, who is brought by an escort to the centre of the brigade. The Commanding Officer, the Adjutant, the medical officer, the band, and the Drum-Major, with the drummers, next take their respective stations within the square. The Town-Major, or Adjutant, as the case may be, proceeds to read aloud the charges, sometimes the proceedings; but invariably the sentence of the court, and the approval of the competent officer, the prisoner being uncovered, and advanced a pace or two in front of the escort. The delinquent is then directed by the Commanding Officer to strip, which he does to the waist: he is forthwith tied to a machine termed a triangle, which consists of three legs or poles, connected by a belt at top, and separate about 4 feet at bottom; to two of the legs a bar is fixed, at a convenient height, that the prisoner's chest may rest against it. The hands being pulled up to the top of the triangle, are there secured with cords by the drummers, who also tie him to the triangle round the upper part of the thighs and the ancles. Halberts are sometimes rigged out, to serve the purpose of triangles,—a circumstance that has originated the common saying, 'bringing a man to the halberts,' which is synonymous with bringing him to corporal punishment. At other times the prisoner is lashed to a gun-wheel, or to a tree. A cartouche belt, which is held by a drummer, is usually thrown over the man's head, and rests on the back of his neck, by which means his head is kept steady.

"A culprit having been secured, the requisite number of drummers, who have been previously told off by the Drum-Major to inflict the punishment, commence their operations, by each taking off his cap, coat, or jacket. The Commanding Officer then says, 'Go on; and, Drum-Major, see that the drummers do their duty.' The Drum-Major gives the time to the drummers, by audibly calling, 'One,' 'Two,' 'Three,' &c., in slow time.



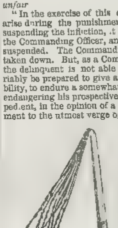
THE HALBERTS.

"When the first drummer has inflicted twenty-five lashes, the Drum-Major calls out, in a loud voice, 'Stop, twenty-five,' and then orders a second drummer to supply the place of the first. When another twenty-five lashes have been inflicted, the Drum-Major again calls out, 'Stop, fifty;' and so on till the punishment is completed. It is the duty of the Adjutant, who stands near the triangles, to record the number of lashes inflicted. Water is always at hand for the purpose of a delinquent's drinking, or to restore him from fainting by sprinkling a little on his face.

"The first stroke of the cat occasions an instantaneous discolouration of the skin from effused blood, the back appearing as if it was thickly sprinkled with strong coffee, even before the second stroke. Sometimes the blood flows copiously by the time the first fifty or 100 lashes are inflicted; at other times, little or no blood appears when 200 lashes have been inflicted. During the first 150 or 200 lashes, a man commonly appears to suffer much, considerably more, indeed, than during the subsequent part of a punishment, however large it may be. The effused blood in the skin, or, perhaps, some disorganization of the nerves of sensation, seems to occasion a blunting of its sensibility, and thereby lessen the acuteness of the pain arising from the application of the cat. Left-handed drummers, whose cats are applied to a portion of sound skin, and drummers who have not been sufficiently drilled to flogging, spread the lashes unnecessarily, and excite an unusual degree of pain. Delinquents frequently call out to the drummer to strike higher, then lower, and sometimes alternately.

"The Drum-Major is presumed to see that the ends of the cords of the cats are not entangled during the infliction, so as to produce a more serious blow than intended, but that they are disengaged from time to time; should the cords become heavy with coagulated blood, they are sometimes washed with water. The Drum-Major stands behind the inflicting drummer with a cane in his hand, and his eyes fixed on the sufferer's back, ready to lay it hard and heavy on the shoulders or thighs of the punisher, should he think he is laying on lightly or unfair.

"In the exercise of this duty, when a medical officer observes any symptoms arise during the punishment, which, in his opinion, indicate the expediency of suspending the infliction, it is, by the usage of the service, his duty to approach the Commanding Officer, and to respectfully recommend that the punishment be suspended. The Commanding Officer usually directs the man to be forthwith taken down. But, as a Commanding Officer sometimes asks the surgeon whether the delinquent is not able to bear a greater number of lashes, he should invariably be prepared to give a suitable answer. A man may be able, in all probability, to endure a somewhat greater amount of punishment, without materially endangering his prospective fitness for the service; but it may be highly inexpedient, in the opinion of a medical officer, to sanction the infliction of a punishment to the utmost verge of safe endurance.



THE CAT.

"When a soldier has received the punishment awarded to him, or when the Commanding Officer remits part of the sentence, he is released from the triangles; and, his shirt being loosely thrown over his shoulders, he is marched off to hospital. Here his back is dressed by being covered with cloths wetted with a dilute solution of the sugar of lead. The dressings are kept in their place by means of a cloth, technically known by the name of a 'saddle,' and sometimes by that of a 'wrestling jacket.' In Ceylon and the peninsula of India, punished men are usually dressed with plantain leaves."

The cat used by the Army, both Horse and Foot, consists of a handle about eighteen inches in length; the lashes are nine in number, with nine knots on each lash; each about the same length as the handle. The three halberts are formed into a triangle, on them are placed three others horizontally; and the man is fastened as in the Engraving. In some regiments a "triangle" is carried about with the Regiment, made especially for the purpose, similar in appearance to an "easel," but, generally, an ordinary ladder is used, fastened to the wall, and the man is tied as in the Illustration. In the Line, drummers flog the men; while in the Cavalry, the Farriers have the unpleasant duty to perform.

The hissing cords are clotted with man's gore!
  High in the air exultingly they waive
  Over the fearless sinews which could brave
A soldier's death—a death which rarely bore
Dishonour's aspect! How can we deplore—
  Abhor sufficiently such scenes? The grave
  A thousand-fold were preferable. Slave
And coward, traitor, might through mercy soar
  Above their sins, in time. But when the Lash
Degrades man to a dog, all hope is o'er
  Careless of crime, and in rebellion rash,
He owns no sovereign, country, creed, or corps.
  Spirit of Mercy! in thy mercy wise,
  Against the brutal code in triumph rise.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

A letter from Chamouny gives an account of an ascension of Mont Blanc, on the 13th ult., by Count de Bouilli, of Nantes. M. Bouilli, accompanied by seven guides, set out at half-past eight in the morning, and at four, after great fatigue, arrived at the Grands-Plateaux. At a little before five on the following morning they reached the summit. In the evening, after an absence of thirty-four hours, they returned to Chamouny.

It was stated during the proceedings of the Marylebone vestry, on Saturday, that upwards of 1600 Radical electors have disfranchised themselves by not paying their assessed taxes in due time.

The celebrated deaf and dumb professor, M. Massieu, the pupil, friend, and successor of the Abbé Sicard, died at Lille on the 21st ult., in the 75th year of his age.

New wheat has already been brought to the market of Verdun (France), and sold at 22f. the hectolitre. The harvest has become general throughout that part of the country, and the produce will be greater than was expected. In some places the grapes are already ripe, and the oldest men declare that they never knew a season more forward.

Intelligence has arrived of the demise of his Royal Highness Prince Heinrich of Prussia, who died at Rome, after a short illness, on the 11th ult. The deceased Prince was born on the 30th December, 1781, and had been residing for upwards of 25 years in that vicinity. His mortal remains are to be removed to Berlin for interment, in the mausoleum of the Royal Family of Prussia.

The Italian journals publish the long-expected political amnesty of the new Pope, Pius IX. It mentions several exceptions; but, according to the lists that have been printed, sets at liberty, or recalls from exile, more than 2000 persons condemned for political offences.

The cotton-spinning factory of Messrs. Orr, at Underwood, Paisley, was destroyed by fire on Wednesday (last week). The amount of destruction is estimated at £23,000. By this calamity about 300 persons are thrown out of employment.

Mr. Cobden has been in the neighbourhood of Llangollen and Machynlleth (Wales) during the last fortnight; his lady is a native of the latter place. His health is improving.

The Infante Don Henry of Spain has left Brussels for Liege. A private letter from Brussels of the 26th ult. states, that before leaving the Belgian capital the King urged the young Prince to make a formal resignation of his pretensions to the hand of Queen Isabella II., and at the same time to separate himself from the Progressista party, who have adopted him as their leader, but the Infante at once refused, and soon afterwards left the city. It is said that Don Henry is going to Holland.

On Monday Mr. Cochrane, President of the Association for the Promotion of Improved Street-paving, Cleansing, Draining, and the Employment of the Poor, accompanied by several influential gentlemen of Regent-street, had an interview with Lord Morpeth; and, from the known philanthropy of his Lordship, the deputation are sanguine the object of their interview will be achieved.

A letter from Bologna of the 14th ult. says:—"Amongst the important affairs that have engaged the attention of the Holy Father since his accession to the Pontifical throne is the construction of railroads in the Papal States, for which several projects have been presented. Pius IX. being desirous of acting with prudence in this serious affair, which is of the highest interest to his beloved subjects, has resolved to appoint a commission to examine these projects."

Mr. Adam Elmslie has arrived in town from China, and is the bearer of the late convention signed by the Emperor, for ratification by her Majesty.

The Railroad Commission of Hanover has adopted the proposal of the Government, to grant a credit of 11,000,000 thalers (about 40 333 330f.) for the construction of a railroad from Hanover to the frontier of the Electorate of Hesse, and no doubt is entertained that this will be confirmed by the States, and carried into execution.

Amongst the animals sent as a present to the King of the French by the Imaum of Muscat, and which have arrived at Marseilles on board the Caire, are two beautiful mares, which are declared to be direct descendants from the famous and favorite mare of Mahomed, named Borak. Their genealogy, with the certificates of descent, are enclosed in a leaden box, suspended from the neck.

For some time past the most active exertions have been made by the surviving followers of Johanna Southcote, and several rooms, termed chapels, been opened at various parts of the town; and numerous preachers, chiefly females, hold forth every Sabbath on Kennington common and other public places, intimating the near approach of the only true Shiloh.

The society of libres échangistes of Bordeaux held its second meeting on the 21st ult. The Mayor of Bordeaux, who is the President of the society, gave an account to the meeting of the impressions that he had received in his recent visit to England, and called upon such of the members of the society as are electors to give their votes only to the advocates of Free-Trade.

Letters from the Mauritius of the date of the 24th April, allude to a fire which occurred there a few days previous. The destruction of property is estimated at nearly £30,000. One of the buildings falling a prey to the flames was the old Custom-house. The quantity of produce damaged or destroyed was small, and only included about 4000 bags of sugar.

The Richmond Railway was opened for public passenger traffic on Monday, the trains running from eight in the morning till the same hour at night.

A vessel just arrived in the West India Docks from Patagonia, with a cargo of guano, had on board, in addition to 400 tons of that article, four tons weight of crystallised guano.

On Tuesday, in conformity with the charter of incorporation, an election for three Fellows of the Royal College of Surgeons took place at the Institution, Lincoln's Inn-fields. The election fell upon Messrs. Wellbank, Grainger, and Lake.

A letter from Austrian Gallicia, of the 15th ult., states on the authority of letters received from the Russo-Polish provinces, that the malcontents were still in correspondence with the Polish insurgents. A pigeon had been intercepted carrying a letter, which was immediately sent to Berlin.

In the north of England and in Scotland there has been much more rain than we have had in the south. The Cumberland Pacquet says:—"Though we have occasionally warm and sunny days, we are never for twenty-four hours together without being visited by heavy, drenching rains, which are generally accompanied by strong winds. We hear of no damage having yet been sustained from the rains; but if they continue much longer the wheat crops must evidently suffer."

Miss Martineau has just finished the building of a delightful residence in the lake district.

On the 17th July, says a letter from Ancona, the well-known and highly-distinguished Chevalier Abbé Stewart was basely murdered at the Case Brucciate, a little hamlet between the towns of Ancona and Sinigaglia, in the Papal States. About six o'clock in the afternoon the deceased walked down to a lonely spot on the sea beach to bathe, and while in the act of undressing was attacked by a ruffian who had only the evening before been liberated from prison. After inflicting several wounds he made his escape with the Chevalier's watch and valuables, and the Chevalier died soon afterwards.

A riot, occasioned by the high price of bread, took place at Mentz on the 18th ult. Several of the bakers' shops were broken open and pillaged. An armed force was called out and the mob was dispersed, but there was still great excitement on the 19th.

The German Journal of Frankfort has the following from Berlin, under date of the 21st ult. The project of constitution has received the final approbation of the King, and will be promulgated on the 3rd of August. Amongst other points is the following:—The Assembly of the States-General, composed of eight Diets, will meet in one chamber, but the Nobles will be present as a separate order, and have a separate vote.

We have accounts from Athens to the 12th ult. There had been some stormy discussions in the Chamber of Representatives. A bill proposed by the Government, for making all males of a certain age liable to be drawn for the army, had been rejected by a majority of one vote; and another bill, for making soldiers liable to serve for three years in the army of reserve, had also been defeated, the Opposition having succeeded in reducing the term to one year.

The Lioret of Orleans, of the 25th ult., says:—"Another fall has taken place in the works of the Vierzon line. The tunnel which fell last winter has again given way. The fall extends for a distance of thirty yards, and a considerable number of workmen have been buried under the ruins, how many is not known, but three dead bodies have been taken out, and it is feared that others have perished. About twenty have been extricated without further damage than being severely bruised."

The Scotch papers notice the destruction, by fire, of the large cotton mill at Duntocher, belonging to Mr Dunn, of Glasgow. It is said that 900 individuals will be thrown out of employment by this calamity.

Lord John Russell has sent the very liberal subscription of £100 to the Cobden Testimonial.

The St Petersburg Gazette publishes a treaty between the Emperor of Russia and the King of the Belgians, by which the duty on property, acquired by succession or otherwise, is suppressed.

On Wednesday night Mr. Hind discovered from Mr. Bishop's observatory, Regent's Park, a telescope comet in the constellation Camelopardus. Its position was—July 28, at 12h. 6m. 6sec., mean Greenwich time—Right ascension, 3h. 45m. 35 sec.; north declination, 60 deg. 37 min. 2 sec. The diurnal motion in right ascension, is about 3 min. 53 sec. decreasing; that in declination is quite insignificant. The comet is a round nebulosity, with a bright stellar nucleus, and may be seen with a telescope of moderate power.

Two fanatics have lately been preaching to the Jews in the neighbourhood of Houndsditch, announcing the certain second coming of the Messiah at the Passover in 1848.

The Brussels papers state that a frightful accident occurred on Sunday at St. Trond, during divine service. During the celebration of Mass some pieces of plaster fell from the ceiling on to the garments of an assistant, who, fancying that the church was going to fall, raised the alarm, on which, in spite of the remonstrances and exhortations of the Dean, the congregation, consisting of between 1,200 and 1,500 persons, rushed to the doors of the church, which were soon blocked up; many persons were thrown down and trampled on; a child 10 years of age was killed, one old woman was very seriously hurt, and several others more or less injured.

PRINCE ALBERT'S VISIT TO LIVERPOOL

FEAR
DEUS NOBIS HÆC OTIA FECIT

"Treu und Fest."—Prince Albert's motto

Free Commerce welcomes in her favourite mart
 Albert, most dear to Britain and her throne,
 For virtues which might make him all her own;
If "Treu und Fest," the firm and truthful heart
Shines, honour's haven on the moral chart,
 And yields an anchorage for trust well known.
 Scarcely, great Prince, two centuries have flown
Since this most noble town, where now thou art
 An honouring, honoured guest, stood on the coast,
A wretched hamlet for the fisherman
A genial refuge for the smuggler's clan:
 And now what 's Liverpool? The empire's boast—
The Crown of Commerce, at whose feet unfold
The emporia of two worlds, the New and Old.

Gaze all along the Mersey's marine shores—
 See where the masts extend on either side,
 A boundless forest, wealthier than the pride
Of the vast wolds which Germany adores.
Yet not alone the wave of Commerce pours
 Along those banks its interchanging tide,
 'Tis not the boast that myriad barks do ride
Proud on this golden stream: It is, that soars
 Here Liberty, with Commerce undefiled
Here loves to dwell the love of learned lore,
 With Roscoe. Here the Arts' enthusiast child
Hath found in Merchant's heart a Princely core.
Welcome to Albert! Long may Heaven entwine
The bond of Peace—Man's blessed soul-verein.

This long expected event took place on Thursday and Friday; and, by the activity of our Artists, seconded by the courtesy of the several parties to whom the arrangements were confided, we are enabled, this week, to illustrate some of the most striking scenes and incidents. The Royal visit, however, has so many brilliant attractions, that we may confidently promise our readers a continuation of these stirring Illustrations in our next week's Journal.

We have taken this opportunity of representing, picturesquely, in a series of panoramic views, the aspect of Liverpool, Past and Present; and we have chosen this parallel mode of illustration from a conviction that no considerable town in England has received greater improvement during the past half century than Liverpool. Before that time, the streets were narrow and inconvenient, and the buildings were wholly devoid of architectural beauty; but successive alterations have given to the town an amount of commodiousness and elegance not to be met with in any other commercial port in this country.

Liverpool stands on the right or east side of the Mersey. The etymology of the name is popularly attributed to the name of a bird called a liver or lever, which was said to frequent the site of the town, great part of which was formerly a marshy pool, which was filled and emptied with the flowing and ebbing of the tide The corporate seal of the town bears the figure of a bird, stated to be a liver, which, however, as there represented, is of a species wholly unknown at the present day, if, indeed, as is much doubted, such a bird ever existed. The name of the town has also been derived, and with equal appearance of probability, from the Welsh words Llér pwll, signifying "place on the pool.' The name does not occur in Domesday-book, though it contains the name of several places in the vicinity, and also the grants of all the parts between the Ribble and the Mersey to Roger of Poictiers, by whom, it is said, the castle of Liverpool was built. This was, probably, the origin of an English town and port which are now second in importance to London only. The castle was demolished in 1659, and its site is now occupied by St. George's Church.

The town received its first charter from Henry II., as a mark of Royal favour, occasioned by the importance of the place as a means of communication with Ireland. A second charter was received from John, in 1207; and a third, making it a free borough for ever, was obtained from Henry III. in 1277. The town flourished under the privileges thus granted During the Civil War, it held out 21 days against Prince Rupert; but was, at length, captured, and many of the garrison and inhabitants slaughtered.

It was made a separate parish from Walton at the close of the 17th century, when it had a population of 5000. We now pass on to the date of our View, which shows the town as it existed in 1728. Towards the middle of the next century, three docks were constructed for the shipping employed in the African and West Indian trades. In 1764, more than half the African slave-trade was carried on in Liverpool. That trade has happily ceased since 1806; and the town has obtained an ample compensation for the loss in the rapid extension of the cotton manufacture, which, having its principal seat in Lancashire and the adjoining county of Chester, Liverpool has become the port where the great bulk of the raw material of the manufacture is received, and whence the exports of manufactured goods are chiefly made to all parts of the world. Still more recently, and especially since the employment of steam-vessels for the conveyance of merchandise, this port has enjoyed a very large proportion of the trade between England and Ireland, for the prosecution of which it is peculiarly well situated. If to this we add that Liverpool was the first town in the empire that received the full benefit of direct railway communication, we shall have given the reader a key to its great commercial prosperity.

The first of the three Panoramic Views of Liverpool as it is, shows, leftward, the Clarence, Trafalgar, Victoria, and Waterloo Docks; in the centre is Prince's Dock; next, St. George's Pier, Dock, and Baths; and, to the extreme right, Canning Dock. The old building in the centre is St. Nicholas Church; the domed edifice to the right, the Town Hall; and the spire, to the right, St. George's Church.

The second view commences with the Custom House and Albert Warehouses and to the right are the King's and Queen's Docks, with the long line of tobacco warehouses. The churches seen are St. Luke's, St. Michael's; and St. Thomas's and St. Barnabas', to the extreme right.

In the third view are the Coburg and Union Docks; Brunswick Dock; Harrington Dock. The spire in the centre is that of the church of St. John the Baptist.

If the reader will place these three views lengthwise, in the order we have noticed them, he may form some idea of the river extent of Liverpool, as seen from Woodside, on the Cheshire coast. There are upwards of twenty Docks, with spacious basins, and their whole extent exceeds three miles. In the emblematic heading, at page 68, our Artist has portrayed the Mayor of Liverpool, David Hodgson, Esq. This gentleman is a native of Cumberland, and was for many years a member of the well-known firm of Messrs. Cropper, Benson, and Co. of Liverpool. His activity and courtesy during the whole of the Regulations and Arrangements for the Royal Visit are entitled to the highest praise.

THE ROYAL VISIT.

The excitement created in Liverpool, in anticipation of the visit of Prince Albert to the town, will be best explained by the following

Programme of the Proceedings.

Thursday, July 30.—His Royal Highness will arrive at the railway station, in Lime-street, at half-past eleven o'clock.

He will there be received by the Mayor, and conducted to the Judges' house, in St. Anne-street.

From the Judges' house, his Royal Highness will proceed by the route of St. Anne-street, Islington, Commutation-row, Lime-street, Elliott-street, Clayton-square, Parker-street, Church-street, Lord-street, and Castle-street, to the Town Hall, where he will be received by the Mayor and Council, and an address from the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses will be presented.

From the Town Hall, his Royal Highness will proceed down Water-street, and across the bridge at the south end of the Prince's Dock to the Egremont Pier, where he will embark on board the Royal yacht, and, after surveying the river and docks, will enter the Albert Dock by the north entrance. His Royal Highness will disembark on the east side of the Dock, and be conducted by the Chairman and members of the Dock Committee into one of the warehouse rooms, where he will partake of a déjeûner; after which, he will leave the warehouse by the south-east gate, and proceed to the Judges' house, in St. Anne-street.

LIVERPOOL, FROM WOODSIDE, IN 1846.

PRINCE ALBERT'S VISIT TO LIVERPOOL.

LIVERPOOL IN 1728.

In the evening his Royal Highness will honour the Mayor and the Council by dining with them at the Town-Hall. He will afterwards return to the Judges' house.

In the evening there will be a grand display of fireworks in the fields near to Berkeley-street, at the south end of the town.

FRIDAY, July 31.—At half-past nine o'clock, A.M., a Procession will be formed in the North Haymarket to accompany his Royal Highness to lay the foundation stone of the Sailors' Home. The Procession being formed, will file into St. Anne-street in the following order:—

Fire Policemen	25
Band.
Blue Coat Boys	250
Band.
Rechabites	600
Band.
Druids	1000
Band.
Odd Fellows	1000
Band.
Coopers and Blockmakers	750
Band.
Boiler Makers	500
Band.
Masons	1000
Band.
Carpenters	1500
Band.
Sailors	300
	6925

Sailors' Home Committee.
TROWEL.
Free Masons.
Corporation.
Regalia.
Mayor.
PRINCE ALBERT.
Fire Policemen.

At eleven o'clock the Procession will start from the Judges'-house, and proceed to the side of the Sailors' Home, by the following route:—

St. Anne-street,
Norton-street
Seymour-street
Russell street
Clarence-street
Mount Pleasant
Oxford-street
Abercrombie-square, West Side
Bedford street, South
Falkner-street
Catherine-street
Canning-street
Sandon-terrace
Rodney-street
Leece street
Bold-street
Church-street
Lord-street
South John-street

The persons forming the procession, and preceding the sailors, will form within the barriers round the site of the Sailors' Home. The sailors, naval officers the Committee of the Sailors' Home, and the gentlemen accompanying them, the Freemasons, members of the Council, and Magistrates of the Borough, will file into the area of the site, and respectively take the positions assigned to them.

His Royal Highness will be conducted to his place by the Mayor.

After the preliminary proceedings by the officers of the Freemasons, the Trowel will be presented to his Royal Highness by the Chairman of the Sailors' Home Committee, and his Royal Highness will then lay the first stone of the Liverpool Sailors' Home.

A prayer will be offered by the Rev. J. Brooks, A M., senior rector of Liverpool.

After the ceremony his Royal Highness will return to the Judges'-house, and at twenty minutes before four o'clock proceed to the railway station in Lyme-street, and take his departure for London.

By order,
Town Hall, July 25, 1846. WILLIAM SHUTTLEWORTH, Town Clerk.

We add a few other particulars from the Liverpool Courier of Wednesday.

At, or about, three o'clock, the Royal yacht will enter the Albert Dock, at the gates at the north-west corner, followed by a heavily laden vessel and a fleet of yachts, the latter of whom will form themselves into a line, or a square, in the interior of the dock, whilst the Prince, in the Fairy, sails twice round to receive the greetings of the assembled thousands.

After sailing twice round the dock, his Royal Highness and his suite will land at the south-east corner of the dock, from a stage provided for the purpose, which will be covered with scarlet cloth, above which will float the Prince's own flag. His Royal Highness will, in the first instance, inspect the various departments of the new warehouses. In the meantime the ladies and gentlemen invited to the Déjeûner, who have witnessed the Prince's entry and the proceedings in the dock, from a stage set apart for them upon the east quay, will proceed up the Prince's staircase, to take their seats; and after they are seated the Prince will go up the same staircase, and, passing along the south side of the room, take his seat at the raised table, at the right of the Chairman of the Dock Committee, who presides, the Mayor being on the left hand, and the Royal suite and principal guests around them.

The déjeûner will be laid in the spacious warehouse-room, at the south-east corner of the dock. The pillars are coated over stone-colour, and gilded at the capitals; the floor is carpeted with scarlet cloth; and, with the gay flutings of pink, blue, and white drapery covering the walls, does great credit to the taste of the decorator, Mr. Troutbeck. A thousand will be the number accommodated. The déjeûner will only last about a quarter of an hour, and the only toasts to be proposed are "Her Majesty" and "Royal Family." On leaving the breakfast-room, the Prince and suite will pass down the east side, and proceed down a temporary inclined plane into the yard, going out at the south-east gate, corner of Salthouse Dock, where the royal and other carriages will be stationed to receive them. The cortège will then proceed to the South Corporation and the Blue Coat Schools, both of which his Royal highness will inspect, after which his Royal Highness will return to the Judges' lodgings to prepare for the banquet, which will take place in the Town Hall at eight o'clock, his worship the Mayor presiding. The guests are expected to be 290, including a number of the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood, the members of the Town Council and the Dock Committee, and the elite of the merchants of the town His Royal Highness will afterwards pass the night at the Judges' lodgings.

During the banquet on Thursday night a splendid display of fireworks is to be given in the vacant ground at the end of Berkeley-street in, the Park, and the town will be partially illuminated. A triumphal arch is, we understand, to be erected, extending from the corners of Whitechapel and Paradise-street to the corners of Williamson-street and Church-lane. Several other similar decorations are contemplated. Amongst the platforms erecting along the line of procession, the Committee of the Lyceum News-room erected one to hold three hundred, the tickets for which will be sold to proprietors and subscribers, and the nett profit handed to the Sailors' Home.

The stables selected for the reception of her Majesty's horses and carriages during the visit of his Royal Highness are situated in Soho-street, and are known as "Boardman's Stables" They are now in the occupation of Mr Billings, veterinary surgeon, and were engaged by Gorst and Co., coach-builders, Great Charlotte-street, who were officially authorised to make the necessary arrangements for the accommodation of the royal stud.

Four of the Royal Carriages and sixteen of the Royal horses arrived by railway in Liverpool on Tuesday. One of the carriages is the Royal State carriage, in which her Majesty and the Prince usually travel to and from Buckingham Palace. It is, as may naturally be supposed, a very magnificent turn-out. Another of these equipages consists of the Prince's private carriage; and the two others are carriages belonging to the Royal household.

The State carriages belonging to the Liverpool Corporation, and built by Gorst and Co., have been thoroughly renovated by them, and will, on the present occasion, be unsurpassed by any other for beauty and high finish. The harness is entirely new.

At the laying of the foundation stone on Friday, it is intended to place copies of all the Liverpool newspapers in a glass vase, to be deposited under the stone. Over this will be placed a steel plate, engraved by Messrs. Yates and Hess, of Lord-street, containing the following inscription:—

> This Foundation Stone of the Liverpool Sailors' Home was laid on July 31st, 1846, by his Royal Highness the Prince Albert, K.G., Consort of her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, Patron of the Institution, in the Tenth Year of her Reign, and in the Mayoralty of David Hodgson, Esq.
>
> TRUSTEES. Ralph Brocklebank, Robertson Gladstone, Duncan Gibb, William Potter, Robert Rankin.
>
> COMMITTEE: Chairman, James Aikin. Vice-Chairman, Charles Cotesworth. Treasurer, James Tyrer Honorary Secretary, William John Tomlinson Auditors Thomas Darnley Anderson and John Irving Currie, John Lewis Phippe, Josias Booker, John Abraham Tinne, William Prowse. James Bold, George Kendall, John Clint, John Archer, Robert Bibby, Thomas Clinton, Joseph Pinder, Joseph Williamson, George Atkinson, John Bond, William Ferguson, Thomas Berry Horsfall, George Grant, William Shand, Andrew Low, John Palmer Younghusband, Robert Cochrane Crosbie, Christopher Bell, R.N., Thomas Sands, Robinson Duckworth, Alexander Cunningham Dunlop.
>
> CHAPLAIN: The Rev William Maynard, M.A.
>
> ARCHITECT: John Cunningham.

The site of the new building is immediately opposite the Post-Office. We have engraved the new structure from the Architect's design.

Upon our front page, we have engraved

THE TROWEL,

used by his Royal Highness Prince Albert. It is a very superb specimen of design and manufacture, of silver, richly gilt, and ornamented with gold and enamel. The shield at the top of the handle contains the arms of H R H, enamelled on Gold in proper colours; on the centre oval is represented a ship in dock, in gold on blue enamel; and on the lower shield is an anchor, in gold on blue enamel. The handle itself is of beautifully modelled scroll-work; and is surmounted by the crown of H R H, in gold and enamel, resting on a crimson enamelled cushion. The base of the Trowel is a perfect model of the stern of a ship, with quarter-deck, men at the wheels, cannons, &c.: the flags representing "White Ensigns," are appropriately and beautifully enamelled on gold. The blade, which is of a graceful form, is surrounded with a raised scroll

(Continued on page 72.)

THE SAILORS' HOME.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, August 2.—Eighth Sunday after Trinity.
Monday, 3 —Bank of England incorporated, 1732.
Tuesday, 4 —East India Docks opened, 1806.
Wednesday, 5 —Fenelon born, 1651
Thursday, 6 —Earl Howe died, 1799.
Friday, 7.—Mercury sets at 8h. 7m. p.m , in the W by N.
Saturday, 8.—Venus rises at 1h. 44m. a m.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge for the Week ending August 8.

Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
9 46	10 23	11 2	11 40	0 0	0 11	0 42	1 9	1 37	2 2	2 26	2 50

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"G. T. N." We cannot give a precise answer to the question. We should advise our Correspondent to try both places, if he has the opportunity.

"J. B.," Swaffham, is thanked; but his Sketch is too slight for engraving.

"W. E."—The period of the foundation of Edinburgh Castle is unknown. The earliest name by which it is recognised in history is Castrum Puellarum, or "The Camp of the Maidens," from the daughters of the Pictish Kings being educated and brought up within its walls.

"A Subscriber ab initio" is thanked.

"R. S. W.," Dublin.—The Impromptu is inadmissible.

"An Old Subscriber," Harrogate, should be accommodated, did we possess the information in question.

"P. M. W.," Holywell, has been misinformed.

"An Old Subscriber," Birmingham.—The Picture, if an original Vandyke, is, doubtless, of considerable value. Perhaps, the best way to test its genuineness will be to advertise the Picture, and invite the inspection of connoisseurs

"Dreck." Inadmissible.

"A Correspondent"—A cheap Elementary Euclid will be found in "Chambers's Educational Course." Dryden's "Virgil" and Dacier's "Plato" may be bought for a few shillings.

"J. A. N.," Fowey, is thanked for the account of the regatta; but it reached us much too late for insertion.

"K. M." Beckington. The Picture Exhibitions in London open in March, April, and May. The Art-Union exhibit the Pictures selected by the Prizeholders from the Exhibitions; but this does not take place until after the close of the Academy and Societies' Exhibitions

"M. G. de Paris."—We do not know, and it would be impertinence to inquire.

"J. H.," Edgware Road, by referring to our Volume, just completed, will find the dates to be from Jan. 23 to June 27, these being the days of publication.

"M. A. A.," Paris, states that "General Buonaparte, when he founded his dynasty, decreed that its name should be Napoleon, and no longer Buonaparte; so that the Prince who escaped from the fortress of Ham, ought to be called, (unless the decree be annulled, and our Correspondent is pretty sure it is not), Louis Napoleon, and not Napoleon Louis; all his relatives have ever taken the surname of Napoleon, except only the Republican Lucien." Upon reference to copies of documents, our Correspondent will, however, find the signature "Napoleon Louis." We have not room for the Memoir.

Ibrahim Pacha is the step-son of Mehemet Ali. He visited Buckingham Palace twice during his recent stay in London.

"J. M. B.," Ledbury.—Does our Correspondent refer to "Macculloch's Dictionary of Trade and Commerce," a complete, but somewhat costly work?

"A Subscriber," Brostly, cannot be legally compelled to pay both Rates.

"J. M.," Abbey Road, is thanked for the Consecration Ticket. As the Church has already appeared in our Journal we cannot re-engrave it

"R. M. B.," Chesterfield.—A Portrait of the Duke of Rutland appeared in No. 84 of our Journal; of Lord Lyndhurst, in No. 94. The Indexes to our Volumes may be purchased separately.

"Acorn."—The Ethiopian Serenaders are natives of Boston, United States—they are not Blacks.

"M. G."—Louise Taglioni is the cousin of the Taglioni

"M. M." There is no gratuitous Italian Music School in London; but a cheap and good education may be obtained at the Royal Academy of Music, Hanover-square. For terms, address a letter to the Secretary, at that locality.

"A Subscriber from the Commencement."—The first performance of the C Minor Symphony of Beethoven, by the Philharmonic Society was in 1814; but we do not doubt the authority of Mr. Sterland, of Margate, who writes:—"I was the sole possessor in England of this Symphony for some years; and I presented it, along with four other Symphonies of Beethoven, which no one had but myself, to the Philharmonic, in January, 1814. The 'first hearing' was on the 15th of February, 1810, at a Concert of which I had the management. The leader was Spagnoletti, and I was an amateur performer in the Orchestra: the second hearing was on the 4th of April, 1810." Mr. Sterland's opinions as to the non-necessity of a Conductor in an Orchestra, are now quite obsolete

"A Subscriber from the 1st Volume." We are not aware of the time of the enactment of the Law of Divorce in France. In the Church of Rome, no divorce, allowing a second marriage, is recognised.

"Pendarve." We do not believe any legal proceedings could be taken under the circumstances mentioned by our Correspondent

"A Young Stenographer."—A Privy Councillor, though out of office, retains the title of "Right Honourable."

"An Irish Subscriber."—The servants of all those who hold a military or naval commission are entitled to carry a "cockade." A ribbon in the hat succeeded, as a military emblem, the scarf which was formerly worn by the officers and soldiers belonging to the different nations of Europe. In the British army and navy, the officers wear cockades of black silk ribbons; the non-commissioned officers and privates, black hair ones. The French cockade combines light blue, pink, and white; the Spanish is red; the Prussian and Austrian, black; and the Russian, green. The use of the cockade is, no doubt, of very early origin, and probably, might be traced to some heraldic cognisance. During the wars of York and Lancaster, the cockades of the White Rose and the Red Rose distinguished the two parties; and, being carried in the caps of the retainers of either side, may, perchance, have given rise to the custom, still continued by our military and naval officers, of thus ornamenting the hats of their servants

"A Subscriber," Chatham.—Prince Albert is not nephew to Queen Adelaide, but he is to the Duchess of Kent. His Royal Highness is of the same Royal House as the Queen Dowager, being both descended from Ernest the Pious, Duke of Saxe Gotha, who died in 1675.

"A. F. B.," Southampton, had better submit his plan to some Engineer, or Railway Company: we cannot give any opinion on it, in the absence of details.

"Wm. Pearce."—Experience is the only test of such a plan; and to that we have no means of submitting it.

"K. M. W." There is a towing path by the water's edge, for some hundreds of miles, along the Rhine; but, all through Holland, nothing can be more flat and uninteresting than the scenery: the roads are generally not far from the river bank, and often upon it. The Steamer-fares vary with the distance travelled; but we believe, at the lowest rate, the whole journey from Rotterdam to Basle can be performed for about £2 10s, cost of living not included.

"X. Y. Z.," Fortufollerdy House.—"The Yachtsman's Annual," price 7s. 6d., is published by Orger and Meryon, 174, Fenchurch-street; of whom may, probably, be had the other works in question.

"A. O.," Kirriemuir. Our Journal, from the commencement, is kept in print.

"Monaghan." We are not in possession of the information required.

"F. Green," Witney, had better write to his namesake at Highgate.

"D. B.," near Cookstown. The biographies may appear from time to time; but, we cannot promise all the information suggested by our Correspondent.

"C. P."—The following Members were the Committee on the Manchester and Southampton Railway Bill. Hon. Eliott Yorke (chairman). J. Brocklehurst, Hon. Mr. Tollemache Sir Walter James, Mr. D. S. Kerr. It is one of the bills that had not been read a second time in the Lords on the 20th of July, and is stopped in its progress by the sessional order of the House, but will probably be made one of the exceptions to its operation. When a Member of Parliament accepts any office under the Crown, he must vacate his seat.

"B. B. M." may settle the dispute by reference to a Gradus and Grammar.

"A Correspondent" who has asked four (!) questions is informed that it only falls within our province to answer one—that almost any number of impressions may be worked from a wood block.

"A Subscriber," Flintshire.—Purdey, of 314½, Oxford-street, or Egg, 1, Piccadilly.

"J. B.," St Albans. We fear that the demands on our space will not allow us to promise the Illustrations suggested.

"Voluta."—A weak solution of corrosive sublimate will destroy the Acarus, so destructive to cabinets

"B. E. A." should forward the MS. to a Magazine.

"A Constant Reader."—The accident is detailed in our Journal.

"J. H. F." Ineligible.

"F. G." will be, in part, liable for the d[illegible]

⁂ Owing to the great space occupied in the present Number, by the Illustrations of Prince Albert's Visit to Liverpool, we are compelled to defer the Angling Notes, and the Fashions, for August; also, the continuation of the Tale of "Gold."

Prince Albert's Visit to Liverpool.—Next week, we shall present to our Subscribers an accurate Picture—from a Sketch made on the spot—of the very interesting Ceremony of Friday—His Royal Highness Prince Albert Laying the Foundation-stone of the Sailors' Home; together with some picturesque Scenes and Incidents from the splendid reception given by the town of Liverpool to the Royal Visitor.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 1, 184

The "seamy side" of the scarlet robe of glory has in several instances been turned outward recently, in a manner that shows so strikingly the evils it covers, that the result, unless there is considerable amendment, will be to render the military service even more unpopular among the people of this country than it is already. Following close as these instances do on the last conflicts in India, where the courage of the troops, and, in one instance, nearly that quality alone, redeemed great errors, and averted impending dangers—this neglect, carelessness, and cruelty—for all three have been committed—wears the appearance of black ingratitude towards the defenders of our Empire: our soldiers may ask, as a body, do we thus sacrifice our lives for you, and, as a body, are we thus rewarded?

The instances we refer to are the destruction of the barracks at Loodianah, the loss of life on board the transport ship off Ceylon, and, lastly, the dreadful case now undergoing enquiry at Hounslow. They severally illustrate what military life is, even in time of peace, in the ordinary discharge of the most usual and every day duties, in the course of the soldier's transport by sea, his lodging on shore, and the treatment—we do not believe it deserves to be glossed over by the name of discipline—to which he may there be subjected.

There are some things which may be calculated on as certain, and ought to be provided for, especially by a Government that has the execution of those functions which a nation cannot attend to itself.

It might be supposed that, after so many ages of possession of tropical settlements, the climate, at least, of these distant posts would be understood, and the peculiar perils arising from it guarded against. It does not seem to be so; for, in a region where hurricanes and tornadoes are as natural and as certain to occur as the rising and setting of the sun, the military authorities "run up" (that is the phrase) a set of barracks for the army in a style of building that no one man among those authorities, in his private capacity, would have sanctioned for the lodging of his horses or his hounds. The consequence is, the barracks, filled with men, women, and children, are razed to the earth by a tempest—smitten by a "mighty wind," like the house of Job—and an awful sacrifice of life ensues; the brave men who had dared and escaped the murderous fire of the Sikh artillery, fall victims to the culpable neglect, carelessness, indifference, or whatever other quality it is least disgraceful to them to attribute it, of those under whom they serve.

In a climate where architecture is remarkable for its massiveness and solidity, the English Government "run up" mud edifices for its army, that stand just long enough to induce a degree of indifference about them, and then are levelled by a hurricane, burying our defenders in their ruins! The soldier's life is one of peril at the best, but such dangers as these he has surely no right to expect: common foresight, ordinary liberality, and a little exertion, would prevent them. The excuse, so often made, of the parsimony of the House of Commons in such matters, is no excuse at all—we deny the fact altogether: the Legislature is not parsimonious; the Commons of England have voted money more generously, and for more noble objects, than any Legislature that ever assembled on the face of the earth. The excuse is only a cover for the apathy of the "authorities" themselves, who never depart a step from the old path, till the people drive them: every amelioration of the soldier's condition has been forced upon these same authorities by public opinion, pronounced through that body, which is jealous only of the abuse of the public money, not of its proper application. It is a foul libel on the people and their representatives to say that they are willing to suffer their army to lodge like swine to save themselves the expense of building dwellings fit for men. Let the Horse-Guards appeal to the House with a full statement of the wants of the army and a good practical plan for supplying them without perpetrating a job, and we have no fear of the result. The truth is, official men are so rooted and bound to old things and old systems that it is a task of the utmost difficuly to make any change for the better. When an old barrack tumbles, another must be built; so much is certain; but, in all probability, the new one will be "run up" by contract, with all the faults of the old; how the soldier lives in it, is quite a secondary question.

Again, in the conveyance of troops from place to place, the old contract and transport system is still pursued, while our splendid ships of war are rotting idly "in ordinary." To what better use could they be applied than to carry the other arm of the service to the distant colonies of the empire? The great want of the Navy is admitted to be the opportunity of forming crews and training them in actual service: to remedy it we fit out, at an enormous expense, an Experimental Squadron, to do nothing but sail about the neighbouring seas. Could not the ships be manned and sailed with some purpose and object? No, it is not the custom. Merchant-ships must be hired to carry soldiers at so much a ton; nothing that sails the sea is exempt from the casualties of that element; but, generally speaking, a ship of war is better prepared to meet them; dreadful catastrophes occurring to transport and convict ships (both come under the same system) must be familiar to every one: the last case is not the least horrible; for, safely during the storm off Ceylon, the hatches were fastened down over the crowded cargo, and, when opened, several were found dead from suffocation! Exeter Hall has often rang with indignation for similar casualties, where the sufferers were Africans. Has the white soldier no advocates who will insist upon a better system? But, in the army, custom and routine rule everything. What has not been done never can be done. At this moment we see it stated that, in the burning climate of South Africa, where the natives, born and inured to it, go nearly in a state of nature, the English soldiers are buttoned up in broad cloth, and march and fight in the same dress they would wear in England at Christmas? What outrageous absurdity is this? The dress is no part of a soldier's efficacy; some badge of distinction to prevent confusion, his weapon and ammunition, are all that is essential; the rest may change with place and circumstances; but this sacrifice of real strength to outward appearance is a part of the old system, fostered by the "authorities" for convenience; it saves trouble. They never think of adapting their force to the enemy they have to meet; they should remember how Napoleon's sans culottes of the Republic scattered the gaitered, pigtailed, and over-drilled Austrians and Prussians; but the system that builds mud-barracks in the regions of tropical tempests, and sends soldiers to sea in merchant ships, is carried consistently throughout; and then men lament that the military service is not popular! And this brings us to the last and worst feature of the whole—the system of punishment; of what may be the effects of it, a terrible instance is before us. It is useless to go into a discussion of it here; whatever necessity may be pleaded, it is certain that the public will not permit such exhibitions; they have compelled a great many ameliorations already; those changes were pronounced equally impossible, equally destructive of what is called "discipline." Yet they have been made, and the army is all the better for them. The fact is you must take from men an old and bad weapon before they will invent a better, or use it, if invented for them. When the reforms of the penal code were proposed, society it was said would be broken up and disorganised if men could not be hung for stealing a shilling. Yet the change was made, and society is all the safer; men began to think of protecting property by watching it, instead of leaving it to an Act of Parliament and Newgate; a good police has done more to prevent crime than all the most sanguinary laws that could be passed. So will it be with the army. As long as colonels and court martials have the power of flogging they will use it, though death by it is a possibility. Take away the power, and other means will be found; perhaps officers may have to be selected for character and temper, instead of rising by purchase; that will not injure the efficacy of the army; perhaps more commissions will be given to men from the ranks; that will not injure it; if a better class of men are induced to enter with a prospect before them. And perhaps the authorities, with an intelligent body of troops, and officers who sympathise with them, may begin to think it necessary to build barracks fit for human habitation; to remember that storms will blow down walls if they are not strong enough; and to hesitate before they send regiments voyages by sea, in ships, where, if a tempest rises, they have to be battened down into the hold to be smothered. None of these changes would at all injure the "efficiency" of the army, and if attended to would render the lash unnecessary.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

THE ALLEGED CASE OF DEATH FROM FLOGGING AT HOUNSLOW.

On Monday the inquest upon the body of Frederick John White, the private in the 7th Hussars, was resumed before T. Wakley, Esq., at the George the Fourth Inn, on Hounslow Heath. The first witness called was James Ellsworth, a private in the 7th Hussars, who said: I was present when the deceased was punished, on the 15th of June. I was present in the square with the other men. Deceased was tied up by his hands and legs, and the punishment seemed dangerously severe. The farrier-major (Critton) rose on his toes every time he gave the lash, to give it force. The other farrier (Evans), when flogging, was considered not to be striking hard enough, and was ordered to "Do his duty" by the Adjutant, Edward Ireland. The words "Do your duty" were said before 100 lashes had been given. The farriers then struck harder. I do not know if the Colonel gave the order. I heard the deceased cry "Lower, lower," and he asked for some water. I saw White strike the sergeant at Hampton-court barracks. I do not remember the day, but it was about four or five days before his trial by court-martial. At the trial Corporal Thomas Hollis was a witness against White, but he lay in bed with his back towards deceased when he struck the sergeant (Darley). William Harvey, and John Pearson, privates in the 7th, were present, and other soldiers were in bed. Deceased came from his bed with a poker on his shoulder. He was in his shirt. I did not see where he took the poker from. He advanced to the sergeant, and struck him on the breast slightly. I did not hear anything said by White The blow did not seem to take much effect. White struck again, but missed, and fell from the force of the blow.

By the Coroner: He was a little intoxicated. I was five yards only from him when the blow was given. The sergeant called out for Corporal Hollis, who got out of bed. Am sure he did not see the blow, although he said on the court-martial that he did. Corporal Hollis seized White by the heels as he lay on the floor, and dragged him to the guard-room. Had seen repeated floggings in the regiment. In one case, a man was to have 100 lashes, but only received 75; others were sentenced to 150, and received only 50. Only saw Colonel Whyte at one before White's. Had seen the backs of all the men, but White's was the worst he ever saw. The blood flowed profusely, and in witness's opinion the farriers struck harder in White's case than any previous one. We are not allowed to speak during the flogging, but when the Adjutant said "Do your duty," the next soldier to witness gave a nudge. The cats had dark handles.

James Lowe Warren, after being told by the Coroner that he was about to make an entirely voluntary statement, said: I am graduate of Edinburgh University. Am not a member of a College of Surgeons. Have no other medical qualification to act as a practitioner. Am surgeon to the 7th Hussars, and, as such, was present at the punishment of White. A surgeon must attend the punishments in the British army. I heard White's sentence read on parade, before the punishment, in White's presence. I examined the man on the morning of his trial minutely. I certified that he was in a fit state to undergo corporeal punishment. I must be present at all courts-martial; it is my duty. The Judge-Advocate has the certificate. It is in my power to order a man to be taken down when he can undergo no more. I did not give any orders during White's punishment. I was near enough to see how the man suffered. He did not make any appeal to me. He did not faint or suffer any convulsions. I did not ask him any question. I did not feel his pulse. I adopted exactly the same means as in other cases, when he was taken down. I ordered his back to be fomented with warm water. I saw him next morning at ten o'clock. I then saw his back. It was in a satisfactory state. I made no alteration in his diet. he was on low diet. I don't know at what date the diet was altered. It was altered when the disease appeared that took him off. It was changed to spoon diet. That was the day before his death. From the 16th of June to the 19th, he had a low diet; from the 20th of June to the 6th July, he had half diet; and from the 6th, he had spoon diet, which consists of two pints of extra tea and bread. The fomentations were continued from the 16th to the 22nd, inclusive. Then applications of goulard water to the 25th; and when the boils came out, poultices were ordered. On the 28th, he had some julap. His back healed rapidly: there was a free discharge at first. I thought he would be fit for duty on the 5th or 6th of July. On the 6th, White complained of a pain in the heart. Mathewson was taken to the hospital on the 22nd of June, and slept in the next bed to White.

Mr. John Hall, a graduate of the College of St Andrew, and a fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, was called and said he was first-class staff surgeon in the British army. Witness was ordered to attend at Hounslow barracks with all speed, and, on arriving there, met Dr. Warren, and they repaired at once to the hospital. Arrived at twenty minutes past seven. Deceased died at a quarter past eight. Was told that 150 lashes had been given, but Dr. Warren did not specify any complaint. The pulse had almost ceased and the man was dying. Took a view of the man's back, which was healed, for the purpose of making a report to Sir James Macgregor, who requested witness to be present at the post mortem examination. The liver was enlarged, and one lobe was inflamed. It was not discoloured, or diseased in its structure. Did not examine the spine. We opened the head, and the brain was congested. It looked like that of a person who was addicted to drinking. The skin was taken from the back at my request, to see the state of the tissues underneath the part where deceased had been most severely flogged. The tissues seemed healthy. (The skin was here handed in and was identified by witness.) This skin is not so large as when cut from deceased's back. I saw Dr. Warren's medical register. I wrote a report, and considered the immediate cause of death to be, primarily, inflammation of the heart; and, secondarily, the inflamation of the pleura of the lungs. I should consider the inflammation might most probably be caused by the change of temperature when deceased was recovering. I do not think it was brought on by the punishment. The most probable cause is the weather. Was not present when Mr Wilson made the final operation.

Mr. Francis Reed, staff surgeon, gave his opinion that the flogging was not the cause of death

Mr. H. G. Day said he believed the cause of death to have been pleurisy and pneumonia. Change of weather might accelerate death.

Mr. Erasmus Wilson, Charlotte-street, Fitzroy-square, examined: I was present when the body of the deceased was exhumed. The under parts of the back were so much decomposed, that it could not be minutely examined. I took notes, and made an official report, which I now produce. Mr. Wilson then read his report. It said that he (Mr. Wilson) was shown a piece of skin, in some spirits of wine, cut from the back, and which corresponded with the incision in the back. The muscles were disorganised, but that might have been caused by the pain of the punishment. I consider, most undoubtedly, that the corporeal punishment was the cause of the contraction of the muscles, and that might influence the inflammation on the lungs. There was an eruption of the muscles by their own spontaneous action. I did not see the heart. I think there can be no possible doubt but that, if the man had not been flogged, he would have now been alive.

Mr. Reed here put, through Mr. Clark, two questions to Mr. Wilson, relative to the cause of the contraction of the muscles on one side of the back only; and another as to whether that would not result from a bruise?

Mr. Wilson: Not by any possibility. I consider firmly that the muscles were ruptured during the punishment. They were ruptured by the agony endured by deceased while under the lash.

Lieutenant Ireland was then called, and examined without being sworn: Was present at the punishment between nine and ten o'clock in the morning. In all cavalry regiments, a ladder is used, instead of the triangular halberts, which were only employed in infantry regiments. Did not give any other instructions than "Go on," at each change of whippers. Did not say how heavily the blows were to be given. Had been a soldier twenty-two years, and had seen much flogging In cavalry regiments it is always done by the farriers.

By the Coroner: The farrier receives no instructions, punishments, or threats as to the weight of the blows. The farrier-major has had twelve years experience as flogger, and Evans about seven. There was no deviation from the general rule in White's case. Had seen men flogged much more severely.

John James Whyte, Colonel of the 7th Hussars: After the man was taken to the hospital, I called the regiment to attention, and said I was sorry to be under the necessity of such proceedings, which were disgraceful to the man and to the regiment. I said that he had brought it all on himself, for he had been tried four times for assaults, but had now finished his catalogue of crimes by a cowardly assault with a poker upon an unarmed man, and, in consequence, had brought himself into his then disgraceful position. That was all I said, and I consider White's punishment a light one. Evans always flogs lightly; but, if I saw a man refusing to do it, I would confine him at once. Four or five men fainted.

The Coroner said that by the next time of meeting the medical gentlemen must express some decided opinion as to the cause of death. There could be but one, and the medical gentlemen must say aye or no.

The inquiry was adjourned till Monday next.

THE ACCIDENT ON THE EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY.

An inquiry, which lasted the entire day, was commenced on Monday before Mr. W. Baker, junior, at the Duke of Richmond Tavern, Dalston, on the body of Mr. William Hind, aged sixty, of No 3, Victoria Villas, Dalston, who died from the effects of injuries he received by the late collision on the Eastern Counties Railway.

Mr. Francis Tobin, surgeon, of Hackney, was first examined, and deposed to being called to the deceased on Saturday evening, the 18th ult., at half-past six o'clock. He complained of pain in the chest and abdomen There were no external marks of injury, except a slight one on the cheek. The deceased died on Friday morning (last week), and on making a post mortem examination of the body, he found quite sufficient internal injuries to account for death. He understood the deceased was in the last carriage of the train, a portion of which fell upon his body. Such a pressure was sufficient to have produced the injuries that occasioned his death.

After some further evidence, the inquest was adjourned till Tuesday.

The chief feature of the proceedings of Tuesday was the evidence of Captain Coddrington, who, by direction of the Board of Trade, made some experiments on Monday, the 20th ult., with a view to ascertain whether the signals were properly constructed for the public safety. Captain Coddrington said that his experiments had satisfied him that Clare did not pull up in the distance which he might have done, and that it was quite possible for him to have stopped his train after seeing the signal, before arriving at the Stratford station. The Captain also said that he had traced from the books of the Board of Trade the accidents which had occurred on various lines of railway during the last five years, and he could find no record of any accident having occurred, either from the improper working of the fan signals, or from misunderstanding them.

The inquest was then adjourned till Wednesday.

The inquiry was resumed on that day, and at its close the following verdict was returned.—

"The Jury are of opinion that the death of William Hind was occasioned by the reckless driving of William Clare, the driver of the Firefly engine, on the 18th of July, against whom, therefore, they return a verdict of manslaughter. The Jury desire also to record their deliberate opinion that a degree of culpability attaches to the Managers of the Eastern Counties Railway in not taking due care that their own rules are most scrupulously observed, as regards the time of departure of one train after another from all the stations; the exhibition of the signals at all the stations, the keeping of exact time in the arrival and departure of all their trains; and the appointment of only thoroughly competent persons in all departments."

Sudden Death at a Railway Station.—On Wednesday, Mr. G. J. Mills held an inquest at the Jolly Gardeners Tavern, Euston-square, on view of the body of Mr. Alexander Campbell, aged 29. It appeared that the deceased, who was a gentleman of considerable property, had, for the last two years, been residing at Liverpool, and had not latterly enjoyed good health. At the recommendation of his medical adviser, he determined on coming to London for the benefit of his health. He departed from Liverpool on Tuesday morning, having previously communicated with his brother in town to meet him at the Euston Station, expressing a wish that he might be spared to his journey's end; and at nine o'clock the same evening he was accordingly met by his brother as the train came in at the Euston terminus, and, as soon as he had alighted, and recognised his brother, a sudden change was observed in his countenance, and he expired before he was removed off the platform. Verdict—"Natural death."

A Girl Committed for Poisoning a Child.—On Wednesday morning Mr W. Carter, the Coroner for East Surrey, and a Jury, assembled at the Feathers public-house, Wandsworth, to investigate the circumstances attending the death of Mary Anne Barker, the infant daughter of Mr Charles Barker, an omnibus proprietor, who had died from the effects of oil of vitriol, administered, as alleged, by his servant girl, named Mary North. After a very long investigation, the Jury conferred about half an hour, and then returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against the accused, Mary North, and she was committed, under the Coroner's warrant, for the capital offence.

Fire near Andover.—Last Wednesday morning, the extensive paper-mills occupied by Mr. Charles Fuller, situated at Hurstbourne Priors, two miles from Whitchurch, six from Andover, and near to the seat of the Earl of Portsmouth, were burnt to the ground. The damage is estimated to be between £2000 and £3000, to which amount Mr. Fuller is insured in the County Fire-office, London.

IRELAND.

DISSENSIONS AMONG THE REPEALERS.

At the meeting of the Repeal Association on Monday, a letter was read from Mr. O'Connell, in which he alludes in a tone of despondency to the dissensions introduced into the Association. He says:—"The advocacy of physical force doctrines renders it impossible for those who stand upon the constitution of the Association itself to co-operate with those who will not adhere to that constitution. This is a subject that does not admit of any species of compromise. The basis of the Association is declaredly peaceable exertions alone. Here we take our stand—peaceable exertions and no other, no compromise, no equivocation, peaceable exertions, and none others. Let it, however, be borne in mind that these peaceable doctrines leave untouched the right of defence against illegal attacks or unconstitutional violence. These peaceable doctrines, however, involve every other case, except resistance to, and defence against unconstitutional violence. It is, unhappily, become the more essential to assert our principles, as the Association is sought to be involved in proceedings of a most seditious nature, stated in the Nation newspaper to have been perpetrated in and by the writers for that publication."

Mr. O'Brien moved that this letter be entered on the minutes, although he said there were some points in it to which he could not accede. He was sorry to learn that his speech, at a late meeting at Kilrush, had in a few particulars given displeasure to Mr O'Connell. Now, he would not be answerable for all that the newspaper reports attributed to him; but as to the sentiments generally attributed to him he certainly adhered to them. He never intended to say anything disrespectful to any member of the O'Connell family, and he did not conceive that he had done so. He did not hesitate to say that he did not concur in all the sentiments lately expressed in this Hall by Mr O'Connell; and he must add, that if a course of conduct such as had been lately adopted in this Association was persevered in, he would withdraw until another course was taken up. (Hear, hear, hear.) Again, he protested against Repealers taking office under the Whigs, unless that Repeal was to be bonâ fide an open question. In that case he would be glad if Mr. O'Connell had a seat in the Cabinet; but if office was to silence Repealers on the great subject of Repeal, then he must deprecate the principle of their accepting of it. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. John O'Connell was sorry to entertain decidedly different views from Mr. O'Brien. He refuted altogether any insinuation that his father would be influenced by mercenary motives in his support of the Whigs, or preference for individuals to represent their cause in Parliament. For his part, neither he nor his father would support the Whigs on the sugar question, because they believed it was an encouragement to slavery.

A scene of great confusion subsequently took place, in the midst of which Mr. Smith O'Brien, accompanied by all the members of the "Young Ireland" party in the meeting, left the hall, intimating that they had ceased to be members of the Repeal Confederation.

The Irish Master in Chancery.—The mastership in Chancery, vacant by the death of Mr. Goold, has fallen to Mr Jeremiah J. Murphy, Q.C., a Roman Catholic, but, like his namesake and relative, Sergeant Murphy, an anti-repealer.

Representation of Dundalk.—Mr. Monahan, the Irish Solicitor-General, has retired from the canvass for the representation of Dundalk. Mr. D. O'Connell, jun., will consequently "walk the course."

Death of Colonel Macirone.—This distinguished but unfortunate officer expired suddenly on Saturday morning last. He was born at Manchester in 1787, and was sent by his father to Italy in 1801 for commercial objects, and was detained at Naples on the breaking out of the war. Having attracted the attention of Murat, then King of Naples, from a certain likeness he bore to Bonaparte, as well as by his success in experimental science and athletic exercises, he entered the Neapolitan service, and in a short time was appointed one of the aides-de-camp of Murat, with the rank of colonel: he was also decorated with the crosses of the Two Sicilies, and of the Legion of Honour. Of late years he dedicated himself to mechanical pursuits, principally to the establishment of steam-locomotives on the common roads, but failing in this undertaking he became much embarrassed in his circumstances. He was the contributor of many useful suggestions in the Mechanics' Magazine, and other scientific periodicals; and amongst those suggestions may be mentioned the Archimedes screw, for the impulsion of steam-ships, many years before it was adopted by Government. He died suddenly, but calmly, without a murmur, we are afraid in utter destitution, leaving a widow and two daughters, of course quite penniless.

Hospitalities at Goodwood during the Goodwood Races.—The Duke of Richmond has entertained a large party of distinguished fashionables. Among them were the Duke and Duchess of Beaufort and Lady Blanche Somerset, the Marquis of Granby, the Earl and Countess of Eglinton, the Earl and Countess of Chesterfield, the Earl of Jersey, the Earl of Glasgow, the Earl of Uxbridge, the Earl Stradbroke, the Earl of Rosslyn, his Excellency Baron Brunnow, Viscount Duncannon, Viscount Villiers, Viscount Maidstone, Lord and Lady Stanley, Lord and Lady Arthur Lennox, Lord George Bentinck, Lord George Manners, Lord Alexander Gordon Lennox, Sir John Shelley, Sir John Hawley, Sir Bulkeley Williams, Sir W. Massey Stanley, Hon. Col. and Mrs. Anson, Hon S. George Foley, Hon. Captain Rous, Mr. and Mrs. John Stanley, Mr. Greville, Mr. Moore, Mr. Hudson, Mr. Houldsworth, Mr. Payne, Mr. Bowes, Mr. Sandford Graham, Captain Pettat, Mr. Leslie, Mr. Balfour, Mr. Percy Williams, the Duke of Richelieu, the Marquis of Clanricarde, the Marquis of Kildare, Viscount Dupplin, the Earl and Countess of March, Lord William Lennox, Hon. F. Villiers, Hon. Mr. Moyston, Mr Ricardo, Captain Charles Peel, Captain Oliver, and the Lady Eleanora Paget, &c.

The Malt Tax.—On Tuesday, Lord John Russell received a deputation from the Association for the Repeal of the Malt Tax. The opening of the business was confided to the Rev. Dr. Lamb, who adverted to the injurious effects of the tax upon the labouring population, who (he stated) by its operation were deprived of the use of a wholesome and necessary beverage. Mr. Robert Baker, of Writtle; Mr Champ, of Kent; and Mr. Lattimore, of Hertfordshire, also insisted upon the injurious and oppressive nature of the tax. His Lordship paid great attention, and manifested the utmost courtesy to the deputation, assuring them that her Majesty's Government would give the fullest attention to the application; and, although he could not then see how so large an amount of tax could be remitted, still the subject should receive the utmost consideration. His Lordship was accompanied by the Chancellor of the Exchequer; and the agriculturists were supported by Mr. Curteis, the member for Rye, Sir John Tyrell, Mr. Benett, Mr. Wodehouse, Colonel Wood, and other members of Parliament.

Removal of the Greenwich Piers.—On Tuesday forenoon, Mr. Saunders, the water bailiff, accompanied by a host of dredgemen, 'long-shore men, watermen, and others, in a steam-tug, and protected by fourteen Thames-police galleys, each containing four constables, assembled off Greenwich for the purpose of removing the Watermen's floating-pier at Garden-stairs, which has been a fertile source of litigation for the last five years. There was some show of resistance on the part of the watermen owning the pier; but they found it useless to resist the force opposed to them, and the barges and dumby forming the pier were dragged away, amidst the groans and hisses of the people on the shore, and the execrations of the watermen. The chains were snapped asunder—ropes and warps were cut, and the craft were allowed to go adrift, but were afterwards recovered by the watermen, who intend to project the pier in front of a house belonging to them a short distance above Garden-stairs. It is feared that breaches of the peace will arise out of these proceedings; at all events there will be a renewal of litigation. A public meeting is about to be held at Greenwich on the subject.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

The Art-Union Bill.—The Art-Union Bill was brought up from the Commons, and read a first time.

The Sugar Duties Bill was read a third time, and passed.

The Marquis of Lansdowne, in reply to Lord Brougham, assured the House that the Small Debts Bill would certainly be brought forward this session. He also, in reply to a speech from Lord Monteagle, stated that every exertion would be made to render the Board of Public Works in Ireland sufficiently effective to meet all emergencies, particularly the expected failure in the coming potato-crop.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

Flogging in the Army.—In answer to a question by Dr. Bowring, Lord J. Russell said he had been in communication with the Commander-in-Chief upon the subject of flogging in the army—(hear), and the whole subject was under consideration.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE SUGAR DUTIES.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved that the House resolve itself into a Committee of Ways and Means, for the purpose of considering the Resolutions relating to the Duties on Sugar.

Mr. Spooner said he should give his decided support to the resolutions proposed by her Majesty's Government.

After some discussion, Mr. Moffatt moved as an amendment, the repeal of the present differential duties on white-clayed sugar and Muscovado or other sugars, not being equal to white or clayed. The amendment, however, was subsequently withdrawn.

Mr. James proposed another amendment, which was opposed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and eventually withdrawn.

The debate was continued by Mr. Barclay, Sir J. R. Reid, and Mr. Moffatt, who opposed the Government measure; and Mr. Borthwick, Mr. Goulburn, Dr. Bowring, Mr. Bernal, and Mr. Hume, who spoke in favour of it.

Lord J. Russell defended the measure, and said there ought to be no apprehension of its being detrimental to the colonies.

After a few words from Mr. P. H. Howard, the resolutions were agreed to, and the House resumed.

Naval Courts-Martial.—Mr W. Williams called the attention of the House to the constitution of courts-martial in the navy, which, under the present system, were often sources of great cruelty.—Mr H. G. Ward and Capt. M. Berkeley defended the present system.—Sir G. Cockburn spoke in favour of the general proceedings of Courts-Martial.—After a few words from Capt. Pechell and Sir C. Napier, the House went into Committee of Supply.

The Militia Estimates were then voted, and the House resumed.

The other orders of the day were then disposed of, and the House adjourned.

GOODWOOD RACES.—Friday.

Match for 300 sovs.—Wee Bit beat the Emilia filly by a length.

The Maidstone Stakes.

Pic Nic .. .. Walked over.

The Nassau Stakes.

Lord G. Bentinck's Princess Alice	1
Mr A. Johnstone's Fair Helen	2

Produce Match for £300.—Lord Glasgow's Emilia filly beat Mr. Gully's Buckskin.

The Chesterfield Cup.

Mongrel	1
Kadger	2
Connaught Ranger	3

Thirteen ran.

The Eton and Westminster Boat Race.—The Eton and Westminster Boat Race came off on Thursday evening, and added one laurel more to the Westminster scholars. The following were the competitors:—Westminster—1, H. R. Barker; 2, W. M. Parratt; 3, H. V. Williams; 4, R. W. H. Smart; 5, C. F. L. West; 6, P. M. Robertson; 7, C. S. Upperton; 8, W. G. Rich (stroke); R. Burton (coxswain). Eton—1, Marshall; 2, Barnes; 3, Thomson; 4, Miller; 5, Luttrell; 6, Buller; 7, Bagshawe; 8, Bunney (stroke); Markham (coxswain). It was an exceedingly even and beautiful start, and the Westminster party won by about two lengths and a half.

County of Kilkenny Election.—Mr. Richard Smithwick, Repealer, was on Wednesday elected M.P. for the county of Kilkenny, in the room of the late Colonel Butler.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS

THE ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE LOUIS PHILIPPE.

In our last page, we have given an account of another atrocious attempt upon the life of Louis Philippe. The subjoined is the official statement of the Moniteur.

No! the country will not believe that another crime has been committed, yet such is the truth—the King has been fired upon.

The visible protection of Providence, which defies the malice of assassins, has for the seventh time saved this life, so dear and precious to France. This news will cause profound consternation in the country. We can hardly master our own emotion and grief.

The King, who preserved, under the circumstances, his usual composure, gave orders to continue the concert, and appeared before the public, to show that he had received no hurt.

The assassin was immediately seized by the by-standers, and interrogated. He stated that his name was Joseph Henri. He was aged 51, and was an ironmonger. His lodgings have been searched. He has confessed his guilt, and acknowledged the pistols belonged to him. He had long projected his crime. His intention was to commit the crime on the 1st of July, when he was on duty, as National Guard, at the Tuileries. He is small, and of slender form. He was decently dressed. One hundred and forty francs in gold were found upon him. At ten o'clock a Council of the Cabinet was held at the Tuileries. Immediately afterwards the King returned to Neuilly, and will depart to-morrow for the Chateau D'Eu.

The prisoner, Joseph Henri, declared that he was not actuated by any political motive. He said he was driven to the act by private misfortune; that he owed a sum of 15,000 francs, which, if he did not pay at the end of the month, he should go to prison; and that an account of his life would be found at his residence.

(ANOTHER ACCOUNT.)

The anniversary of the last day of the Revolution of 1830 was, according to custom, celebrated on Wednesday, in the beautiful public gardens behind the Palace of the Tuileries. At half-past seven in the afternoon, during the performance of a concert, his Majesty and the Royal Family appeared in a capacious balcony, situated near the centre of the long range of the Palace buildings and immediately overlooking the gardens; two pistol shots were fired at his Majesty from the promiscuous crowd promenading beneath; the concert was instantly interrupted, but the King, with the calm courage which has always characterised him, and which seems the inheritance of the sons of Henry of Navarre, directed the concert to proceed, and continued to walk in the balcony, as if to satisfy the agitated and indignant people that he had sustained no injury.

Meanwhile the assassin, for both shots had been fired by one individual, was seized by a hundred hands; his arms (two pistols) were found upon him; and being interrogated by his captors, he made it no secret that his purpose had been to murder the King, before his people, and in the midst of his family. He said that he had long meditated the assassination, and had intended to execute it on the 1st of July, when on duty as a National Guard at the Tuileries, but had not found an opportunity.

The Duke of Devonshire.—The Duke of Devonshire will proceed, in a few days, to Constantinople, on a mission from the Government to the Sultan. On leaving the Turkish capital, the Duke goes to St. Petersburg to visit the Emperor of Russia, and will remain some weeks in that country. The noble Duke will be attended by a numerous retinue. It will be recollected that his Grace went to Russia as Ambassador Extraordinary on the occasion of the Coronation of the Emperor. It is stated that the noble Duke will be absent from England at least six months.

Information for Thames Anglers.—The river between Richmond and Staines, by the exertions of the bailiffs of the Lord Mayor, and especially of those appointed by the Thames Angling Preservation Society, at present swarms with nearly all sorts of fresh water fish, particularly the coarser species, such as barbel, chub, dace, roach, &c. More trout have been taken this year in the vicinity of Kingston, Hampton, Thames Ditton, and Sunbury, with the artificial fly, than during the previous season.

Sale of the League Articles.—The great end of the League having been achieved, the goods and chattels in the office of the executive were, on Tuesday, disposed of by public auction, on the premises in Fleet-street. Many of the valuable pieces of furniture went under the hammer of the auctioneer at almost less than half of their original value; the auction-room, nevertheless, was crowded by a large body of salesmen. Among the articles which called forth the warmest bidding, was the model of a printing-press, presented to the League Bazaar, held at Covent Garden Theatre; after a somewhat sharp contest, the model was sold to the highest bidder for 46s. A set of Spanish mahogany dining-tables, which had been used as a council table by the Board, were sold for thirteen guineas. An ancient carved oak chair, and several office stools, for 23s. The chair is beautifully carved, and is upwards of a century old, and was sent from Scotland as a present to the League; it bears upon its richly carved panel the initials "J. R.," and the date "1743." The handsome wherry, "Leander," made at Newcastle for the Bazaar, was put up for competition, and, after having reached the price of ten guineas, was knocked down, when the bidder was non est inventus. The sale commenced at twelve o'clock, and terminated shortly after four.

Two Persons Drowned near Vauxhall.—On Saturday evening, at six o'clock, a boat belonging to Tivoli Gardens, Battersea, with several persons in it, was by mismanagement brought in contact with the new pier at Vauxhall Bridge, and afterwards came in contact with the Lightning steamer, and was swamped. By great exertions all on board were picked up, except Miss Rathbone, aged three years, daughter of Mr. Rathbone, in the service of Mr. Wyld, the [illegible] publisher, Charing cross, and a young woman, the aunt of the child. At the inquest on the child, held on Tuesday, a witness attributed the unfortunate occurrence solely to the circumstance that the steamboat was not stopped. He denied that the steamboat (the Lightning) was stopped, even after the skiff was overturned. Several other witnesses gave the same account of the accident, after which a verdict of "Accidental death" was returned.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Q. E. D."—The Black Bishop is undoubtedly deprived of the right to move, in the situation you describe; but, nevertheless, the White King must not be played within his range.

"C. O."—1st. If you persist in repeatedly checking your opponent on the same squares, and he is incapable of avoiding the checks, or prefers receiving them to risking the game by playing otherwise, the game must be drawn. 2nd. If you have touched one of your opponent's men, he can oblige you to take it if you have the power, and if not, can compel you to move your King. 3rd. There is no limit, but courtesy, to the time a person may take in making a move. 4th. In the position given, "Queen's Pawn two" is a good move, and one well known among players as "Lewis's Counter-Gambit."

"G. Y. H."—The author's solution to No. 127 is—1. Q to K B sq; P Queens. 2. Q takes Q; R takes B, best. 3. Q to K R 2nd (ch), and then mates at Q Kt 8th.

"Philos."—You may obtain M. Kieseritzki's collection of fifty games either at the office of "The Chess-Player's Chronicle," or at Witcomb's, 121, Leadenhall-street, and no Chess player should be without it.

"H. L.," Delhi. Received safely. A private acknowledgment shall be despatched by the next Overland Mail.

"Chess Amateur."—Try again: at present, you have only found a "mare's nest."

"J. T. L."—The positions shall be duly examined.

"Marazion."—Have the goodness to write out the situation—we have no means at hand of referring to it.

"Q. E. D." Much too easy.

"Civis."—The whole of the Games in the Match now pending between Messrs. Kieseritzki and Horwitz will be given exclusively in the Illustrated London News. The terms of the Match, which is for 1000 francs, are, that the first winner of seven games shall be declared the conqueror. We shall give the opening games, with notes, next week.

"G. S.," Lambeth.—When you have given "a moment's consideration" to Problem 131, you will perhaps discover that the position is extremely clever, and your hasty criticism, to say the least of it, very childish.

"W. N. C.," "A Constant Reader," "P. Errard," and "J. J. M."—The solution of No. 127 is given above. It was postponed simply to afford us an opportunity of pointing out to the inventor a move which we think he has omitted to consider sufficiently. Mr. Kuiper makes Black, for his first move, play "K Kt P one, Queens;" now, it appears to us that, if instead of "Queening" his Pawn at this moment, he plays Kt to K B 6th, the mate may be delayed. We suggest the variation with diffidence, because we know the care and attention usually bestowed upon these stratagems before they are submitted to the public eye, and shall be pleased to find we are in error.

Solutions by "Phiz," "Miranda," "Q. E. D.," Valley-field; "G. S.," "Alpha," "C. O.," "R. S.," "G. Y. H.," "H. S.," "W. P.," "D. C. M.," "M. P.," "H. L. G.," "Amateur," "J. T. L.," "Styk," "R. C. M.," "Marazion," "Alpha," Cambridge; "Captain ——," and "Tar-Tar," are correct.

⁂ Solution to Problem No. 131 in our next.

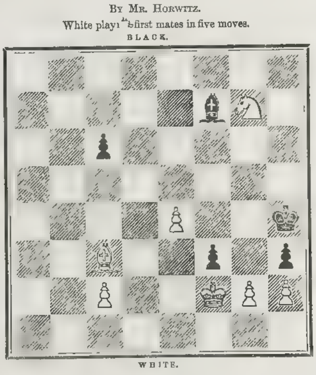
☞ Chess Works Received.—"Schach-Almanach." Leipsic: Von J. Weber. 1846.——"Schachzeitung," edited by L. Bledow; No. 1, for July, 1846. Veit and Co., Berlin; and Williams and Norgate, London.——"Deutsch Schachzeitung," edited by H. Herschbach. Brauns, Leipsic 1846. Nos. 1 and 2.——"Cinquante Parties Jouées au Cercle des Echecs et au Café de La Régence, Recuillies, par L. Kieseritzki." Paris: 1846.——"Las Principales Ouvertures du Jeu des Echecs, dans les deux Manières Italienne et Français, par S. Dubois de Rome." Monaldi, Rome: 1845. "Check's Guide to the Game of Chess." Simpkin and Marshall, London: 1846.

Problem No. 132.

By Mr. Horwitz.

White playing first mates in five moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

This is an interesting partie, commenced last week at the Old London Chess Club, between Messrs. Horwitz and Perigal, in consultation, on the one side, and Messrs. Kieseritzki and Harrwitz, on the other.

WHITE. (Messrs. H. and P.)	BLACK. (Messrs. K. and H.)	WHITE. (Messrs. H. and P.)	BLACK. (Messrs. K. and H.)
1. K P two	K P two	14. Kt takes Kt	B takes P (ch)
2. K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	15. K to R sq	B takes Kt
3. K B to Q B 4th	K B to Q B 4th	16. K B P one (f)	B takes Kt
4. Q B P one	K Kt to B 3rd	17. Q to K R 5th	B takes K B P
5. Q P one	Q P one	18. R takes B	Q to K 4th
6. K Kt to his 5th (a)	Castles	19. R takes R P, ch (g)	P takes R
7. K B P two	K R P one (b)	20. Q takes P (ch)	K to Kt sq
8. K Kt to B 3rd (c)	K Kt to his 5th	21. Q B to K Kt 5th	Q to K Kt 2nd
9. Q P one	P takes P	22. Q to K R 4th	Kt to K 4th
10. P takes P	B to Q Kt 3rd	23. B to K B 6th	Q to K R 2nd
11. Q Kt to B 3rd	K to R sq	24. Q to K Kt 5th (ch)	Kt to K Kt 3rd
12. K B P one	Q to K sq	25. R to K B sq	B to K 3rd
13. Castles (d)	K Kt to K 4th (e)	26. R to K B 3rd	Q R to K sq

At this point, the Game having lasted several hours, it was mutually agreed to postpone the conclusion to another sitting. We shall give the termination in our next.

(a) By this move, White appears to us not only to lose the advantage of his first move, but to compromise his game into the bargain.

(b) We much prefer "Q P one," the move played at this point in the late games between Messrs. Staunton and Horwitz.

(c) Black's Q P having been played prevents his adversary taking the K B P with effect, instead of retreating the Kt. When the Q P is unmoved, in similar situations, White may always take the B P with his Kt, secure of coming off a gainer in the end.

(d) This was imprudent; they should have first dislodged the adverse K Kt. The present move loses a Pawn at least.

(e) Correctly played.

(f) This is quite characteristic of Mr Horwitz's dashing, forward style.

(g) They might have avoided this terrible sacrifice by taking the K B P with the Rook, leaving the Queen en prise; and, in that case, if Black took the Queen he would have lost the game.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 31.—By the Rev. H. Bolton.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q 4th	K at his 3rd
Q at K B's 3rd	Q at K's sq
Kt at K R's 6th and K's 4th	B's at K's 2nd and Q Kt 4th
P at K R 3rd	Kt at K B's 3rd
	P's at K B's 5th and Q's 2nd

White mates in four moves.

No. 32.—By the Same Author.

WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q B's 8th	K at K sq
B's at K Kt 7th and Q Kt 5th	R at K R sq
Kts at Q's 7th and Q B's 6th	B at Q R's 7th
P at Q's 3rd	Kt at K B's 2nd
	P's at K R's 2nd
	K 2nd and Q's 3rd

White mates in four moves.

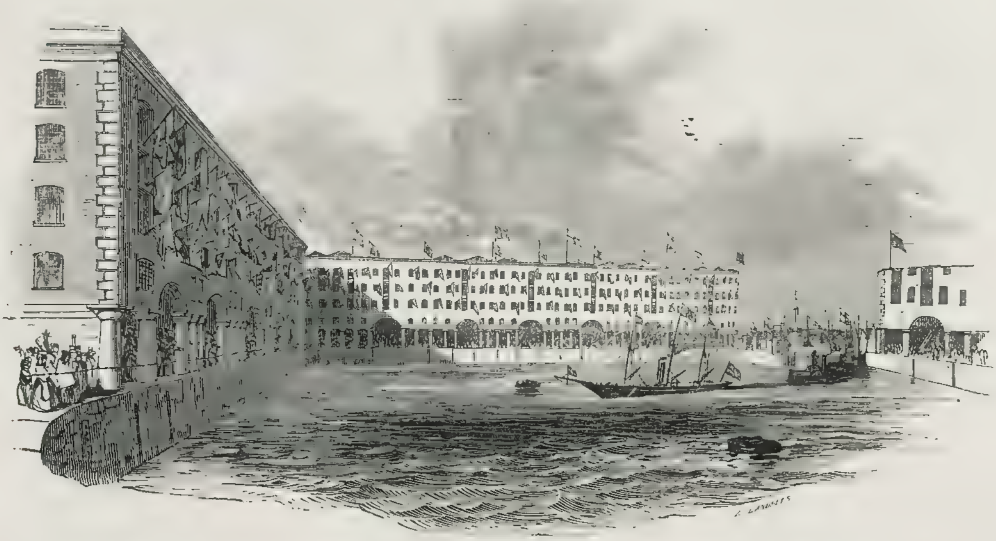
No. 33.—From Greco.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his B's 2nd	K at K R's 7th	Kt at K Kt 8th	P's at K R's 6th and K Kt 3rd

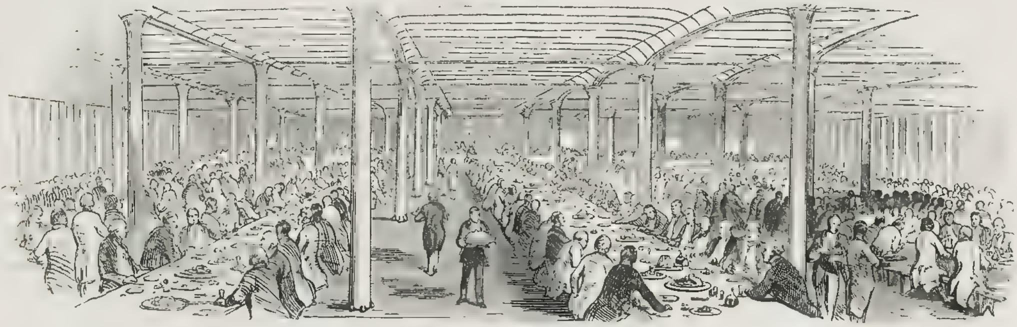
White mates in four moves.

The Old London Chess Club is again in the ascendant; and, for some time to come, bids fair to be the great point of attraction to the amateurs of England. We had the gratification of being present there on Monday evening last, during one of those surprising exhibitions of blindfold chess-playing by MM. Harrwitz and Kieseritzki, for which these distinguished players have become remarkable. On this occasion, they played simultaneously two games, both without sight of chess-board or men; and, although the sitting occupied several hours, and each game gave rise to positions of the most complex and difficult nature, they executed their almost incredible task with an ease and accuracy as pleasing as they were marvellous. At the same meeting, through the skilful management of the president, arrangements were concluded for a short match between Messrs. Horwitz and Kieseritzki; and a grand public field day was announced for Monday next, at which it is expected all the leading players of London will assemble.

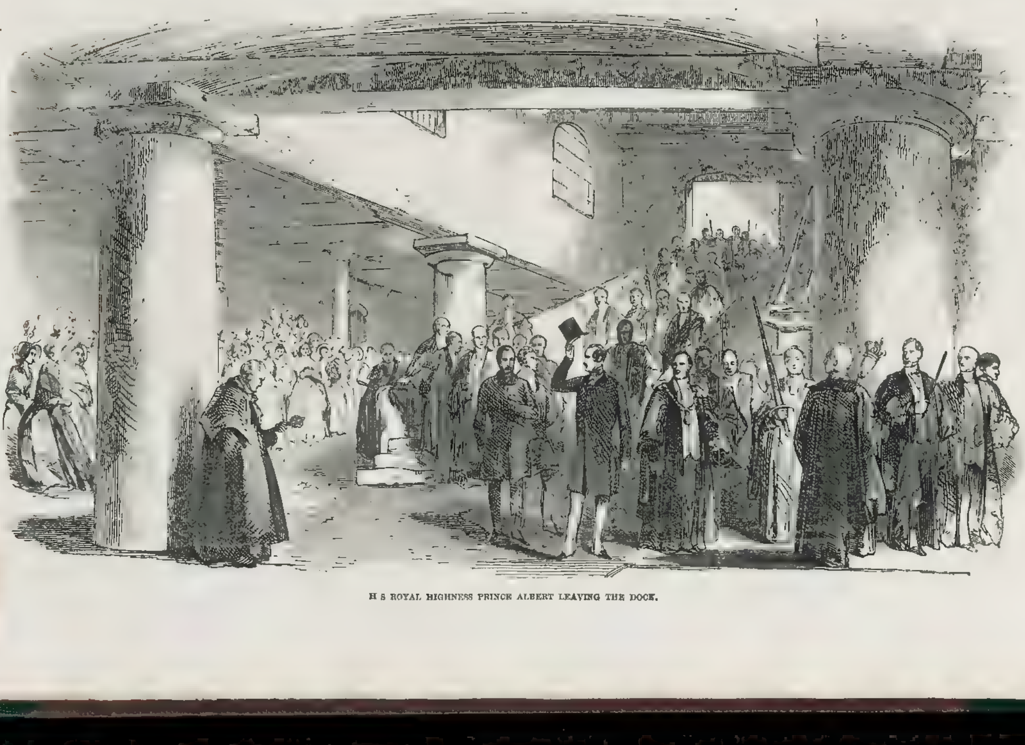
PRINCE ALBERT'S VISIT TO LIVERPOOL.



THE ROYAL YACHT ENTERING THE ALBERT DOCK.

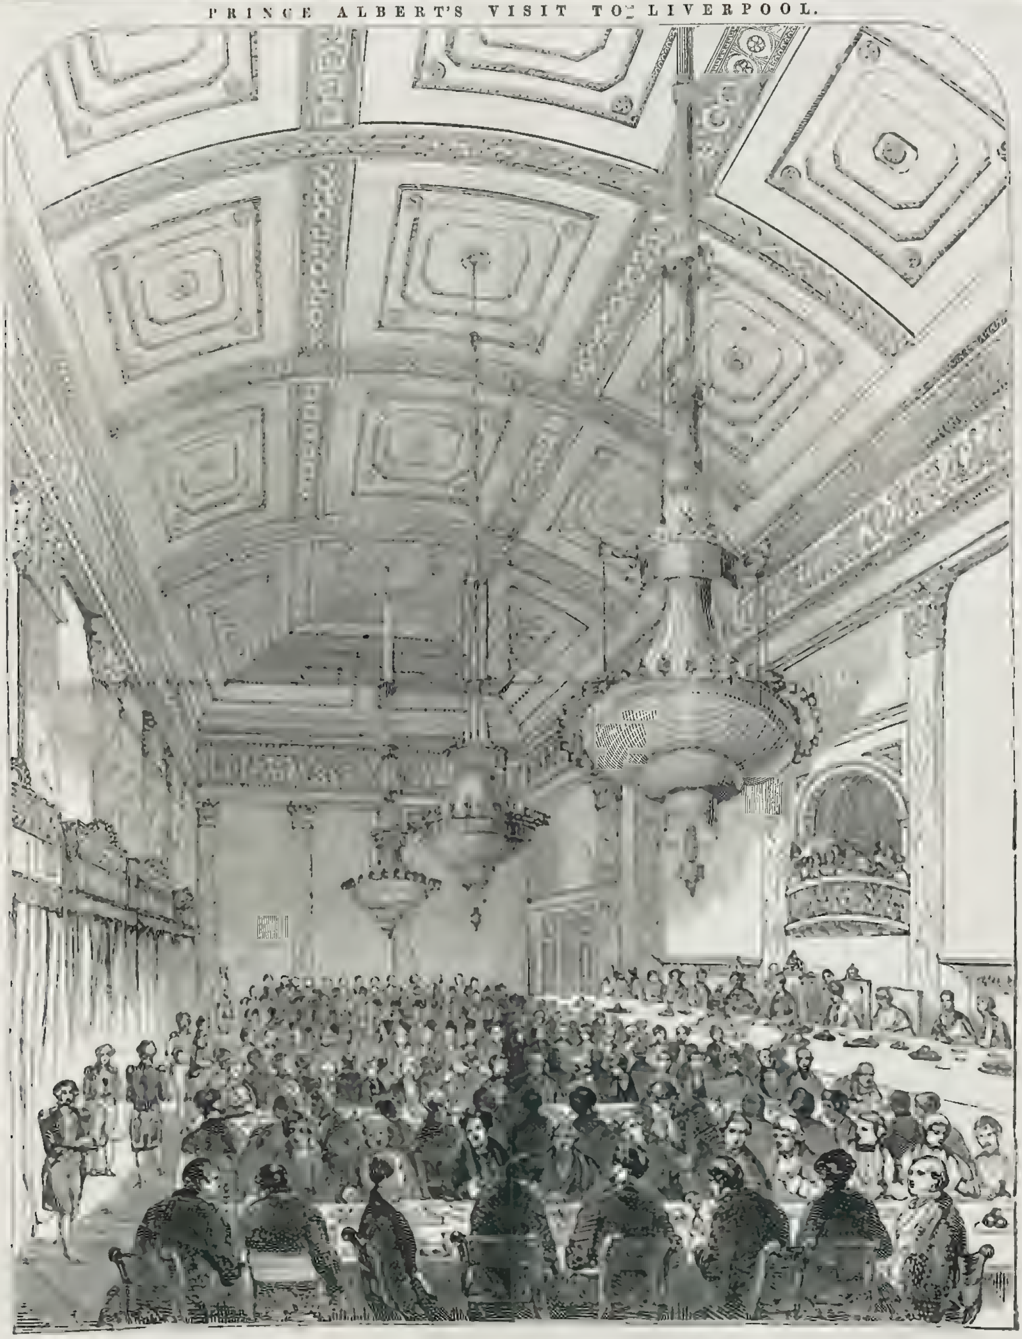


THE DEJEUNER, AT THE ALBERT DOCK.



HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT LEAVING THE DOCK.

PRINCE ALBERT'S VISIT TO LIVERPOOL.



THE [illegible]

(Continued from page [illegible].)

border, and contains, in the upper part, an engraving of the proposed building, and under it the following inscription

[illegible]

On the back of the blade, and occupying the whole space of the bottom, is a view of Liverpool, elaborately engraved, showing the town, docks, shipping, &c., [illegible] of his Royal Highness.

This beautiful work of art has been executed by Mr. Dismore, of Bold-street, Liverpool, at whose premises it was exhibited, some days previously, to the public. The length of the Trowel is between 15 and 16 inches; and the cost about £80.

[illegible] also made by Mr. Dismore, and is an elegant piece of workmanship. It is covered [illegible] the papier maché barrel, have been got up by Messrs. [illegible] of London.

[illegible] of the Locks for the New Albert Dock and Warehouses, Liverpool, were supplied by Messrs. Chubb and Son, of St. Paul's Church-yard; and as they form, probably, the most complete set of Locks ever made for [illegible] houses, 450 of Chubb's Patent Locks, of the best quality; the whole of the cases and works being of copper and brass, to prevent rust. Each Lock has a separate and distinct key, which will only open its own Lock; so that an under-warehouse-keeper can go to his own warehouse, and no other: but, the Superintendent [illegible] Locks. The Superintendent can, also, at any time, by giving the Locks an extra turn with the master-key, shut out any or all of the under-keys. And, if any attempt be [illegible] at robbery being given to the Superintendent, he will, by his master-[illegible] be able to put th[illegible]

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPON[illegible])

[illegible] minutes to six, on Thursday morning; and, all things being in readiness, and the engine brought before-hand into the station-yard, no delay was experienced; for in five minutes the train was speeding [illegible] towards Liverpool. The engine was under the especial direction of R. [illegible] occasions the driver could have attained greatly increased speed, but Mr. Berry very wisely objected to it.

In the royal carriage, with the Prince, were the Marquis of Abercorn and the right hon. Lord Morpeth; in another carriage, G. Carr Glyn, Esq., the Chairman, Mr. Creed, the Secretary; and a party of the Directors of the London and Birmingham Railway.

The train, as before stated, started from Euston-square at six o'clock; and reached Watford at 25 min. past 6; Wolverton, 10 min. past 7; Birmingham, 10 min. to 9; Crewe, half-past 10; Liverpool, 20 min. to 12. The passage of the Liverpool Tunnel occupied a quarter of an hour, making the Prince's arrival exactly 5 min. to 12.

The various stations on the route were all occupied by crowds anxious to obtain a sight of the Royal carriage and party; and, as the train drew nearer to the scene of the day's festival, the crowds became more dense and enthusiastic. We noticed but few triumphal arches on the line; the one which most pleased us was at the Whitmore Station, constructed of beautiful flowers and evergreens; the centre of the arch bearing the inscription—

"Welcome to Prince Albert!"

On passing the Vulcan Foundry, the scene was intensely interesting, exhibiting hundreds of swarthy artisans, having hurriedly left their work, and who, with voices more than Stentorian, cheered the passing train.

At the Station, a guard of honour of the 36th was drawn up on the platform; the fine band played the National Anthem. The authorities of the Railway, we were glad to observe, had the good taste to keep the arena free from the intrusion of the enormous crowd. The Prince was received by the authorities of the town, to whom he bowed kindly, addressing a few words to each. A brilliant staff was in attendance, among whom we observed Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, in naval uniform, as commander of the Royal yacht.

In front of the fine façade of the Railway Station, and in the great space left open by the unfinished state of St. George's Hall, an immense crowd of well-dressed people saluted the Prince with such a thunder of acclamation, that he must have been impressed at once with the vast importance and loyalty of this great commercial town. From the station, the Prince rode to the Judges' lodgings in a barouche, drawn by four horses, and preceded by outriders of the Royal Household, in their scarlet liveries.

After stopping a short time at the apartments prepared for him, the Prince, in his carriage, with an escort of light cavalry, proceeded through Church-street and North John-street, to the Town Hall, at one o'clock, where he received the Address, which will be found below. His Royal Highness then embarked on board the Fairy steamer (the Royal Yacht being too large to enter the dock), and proceeded to inspect the river and shipping, passing up the Liverpool side and returning on the Birkenhead side of the river. If the town presented an appearance of joyous loyalty, scarcely describable, how shall we speak of the glorious appearance of this glorious river. The flags and colours of all nations floated in the breeze: the cheering, the discharges of mortars and artillery, were all aided by the transcendantly beautiful weather; and, altogether, produced a scene which we can scarcely hope to see again realised.

The Pensioners of Liverpool, a distinguished body of defensibles, were arrayed on the New Wall Pier; at the back, a barricade had been erected, to keep off the enormous pressure of the crowd; but, through not being able to bear up against it, the barricade gave way. We believe, however, that no serious calamity is the result; in spite of our endeavours, we could not ascertain the particulars, owing to the excessive confusion.

The beautiful Fairy entered the Royal Albert Dock at a quarter to three o'clock, amidst a thunder of Artillery and the cheers of the surrounding spectators. Perhaps, a more exciting scene we may never see again. In the eager endeavours of various yachts and boats to follow the Fairy into the dock, a crash took place, but, we hope, unattended with personal injury to anybody. After the ceremony of opening the docks, the Prince partakes of a déjeûner at the docks, and dines at six o'clock with the Municipal Authorities at the Town Hall.

The following is the Address to Prince Albert. It was presented by the Recorder:

"TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESSS THE PRINCE ALBERT.

"The humble Address of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of Liverpool:—

"May it please your Royal Highness,—We, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of Liverpool, desire to greet your Royal Highness with a cordial welcome, and to express the satisfaction and joy which the arrival of a Prince so exalted in station and so justly entitled to every tribute of respect and esteem has diffused through their loyal borough.

"This visit to a seat of mercantile industry—your consent to sanction and grace by your presence the opening of new accommodations to trade and shipping—and your purpose to take part in founding an institution for the advantage and welfare of sailors at this port, are manifestations, to us most gratifying, of your princely regard for the commerce of that wide-empire, with the destiny and history of which your Royal Highness, in sacred union with our Most Gracious Sovereign, is so auspiciously, and, as we fervently hope, so lastingly connected.

"Our town boasts not of monuments of ancient art and magnificence, but the flags which, from every part of the globe, countless in number, now wave in silent welcome on the waters and along the shores of the Mersey, attest the successful energy by which, under the blessing of Providence, the port of Liverpool has been rendered conducive and subservient to the progress of manufactures, the intercourse of nations, and the happiness of mankind; and we trust that a view of various public works now advancing to completion here will satisfy your Royal Highness that the spirit of useful enterprise still lives amongst us to derive fresh vigour and encouragement from the proceedings of this day.

"Filled with sentiments of the most respectful attachment and regard, we pray that your Royal Highness may long share the happiness of a Queen who reigns in the hearts of her subjects; and, with her, continue to adorn the loftiest sphere with a brilliant example of public and of private virtue.

"Given under the common seal of the said borough this 30th day of July, 1846."

The Recorder then handed the Address to the Prince, who bowed very courteously on receiving it. It was then handed, as usual, to Mr. Anson, the Prince's Secretary.

His Royal Highness read the following answer:

"I experience the greatest satisfaction from the cordial welcome which the Address you have just presented to me gives me upon my arrival in this town.

"I am glad to perceive that my coming amongst you in order to take part in two ceremonies connected with your mercantile industry and enterprise should have been gratifying to you, and on my part I have only followed the bent of my own inclination in at once responding to your kind invitation

"Your expressions of loyalty and attachment to the Queen cannot fail to be most satisfactory to me, and I am sure will be felt as such by her Majesty."

After the presentation of the Address, his Royal Highness inspected several of the state apartments, and conversed with his suite and others; and, after a short interval, left the Town Hall, accompanied by the Mayor and his suite, to embark in the yacht on the river. On descending the staircase, his Royal Highness stopped for a minute to contemplate the beautiful statue of the late Mr. Canning, by Gibson, and as well to remark on the beauty of the embellishments of the elegant dome of the building; and then, amid the smiles of lovely faces, and bowing in the most affable manner to the company, departed; and afterwards, accompanied by a number of the Aldermen and Council, visited the Egremont Slip, where he embarked on board the Royal steam tender Fairy. After cruising on the river for upwards of an hour, and admiring the extended line of docks, the display of flags of every nation which crowded the port, the vessel entered the Albert Dock, abreast of which were at anchor hundreds of the river craft decorated with ensigns, the steamers of every size, from the City of Dublin Company's powerful vessels to the humbler ferry-boats, which were crowded to excess with parties anxious to obtain, at least, a glimpse of the consort of our beloved Queen. From the Rock Fort, also from the mail steamers and other vessels at anchor in the Sloyne, throughout the river, numerous salutes were fired. Indeed, owing to cheap trains or cheap steamers having been run from every surrounding town from which there is an easy communication, as well as from many ports in Ireland and Scotland, the river presented an appearance more animated than had ever been witnessed. At the Albert Dock, which is one of the largest in Liverpool, accommodation was provided for about 14,000 persons, of which 900 partook of a déjeûner. The Royal steam-tender entered the dock at half-past two, followed by the Royal Mersey Yacht Squadron, towed in by the Redwing steamer, and followed by the William Fisher, which latter vessel manned her yards, and presented a beautiful appearance. The Fairy steamed round the dock, and the Prince was, as before, most enthusiastically cheered.

The Prince and his retinue, and the members of the Common Council who attended him, debarked on a platform at the south-east corner of the Dock. From this, which was covered with crimson cloth, his Royal Highness was conducted up a broad flight of stairs, lined with the same material, and otherwise decorated, and passed into the déjeûner room through a fine apartment which might be called the vestibule. The band of a regiment of the line was stationed and played in front of the stage. Over the entrance door to the refection room was the Royal coat of arms, beautifully gilded. The room is about 100 ft. square, and though but one of several stories in the same warehouse is magnificent in effect. At the south end is erected a platform, two steps in height. On this the Royal table was fixed. At the back of the chair in which sat the Mayor were Prince Albert's arms, in the centre of an oblong square panel of Royal purple velvet, radiated, with a rich border of vine foliage, and an outward frame of gold The arms are beautifully emblazoned; and, on each side, as supporters, are banners of rich silk—on one side, St. George's cross; and on the other, the union flag of England.

There were eight tables from north to south, nearly one hundred feet each in length, besides the top or Court table. As on all similar "state" occasions, the viands were cold, but choice and excellent

The ornaments in confectionary, &c., on the tables, were most splendid, including gilded stands, or pieces montées, supported by quaint or classical figures, picturesque representations of rural scenery, castles, windmills on rocks, one hundred stands for pine-apples alone, all of different and beautiful designs, and other ornaments.

On each side of the Chairman's seat were two large splendid solid silver ornaments.

On leaving the déjeûner, his Royal Highness proceeded, in an open carriage, accompanied by the shouts of the immense multitude with which the streets were crowded, to the Prince's Dock, the gates of which were closed to the public. After going round the dock and inspecting it, he proceeded to the South Corporation School, from thence to the Blue Coat Hospital. After a short conversation with the Treasurer and Trustees of the Institution, the Prince took his departure, amidst the deafening cheers of the scholars and the assembled multitude, to St. George's Hall and the Assize Courts, over which he was conducted by the Mayor. His Royal Highness then returned to his lodgings, in St. Anne-street.

THE BANQUET.

At a quarter to eight, his Royal Highness, attended by the gentlemen of his suite, entered the carriage. The appearance of his Royal Highness was the signal for repeated rounds of most vociferous cheering. On his arrival at the Town Hall, his Royal Highness was received by his worship the Mayor, and conducted into one of the drawing-rooms, where he remained for some time in conversation with those of the guests who were afterwards seated at the principal table

The scene in the Banqueting Room was gorgeous in the extreme. The plate on the Prince's table was exceedingly magnificent, and the effect was greatly increased by a long, narrow-looking glass, in a neat gilt frame, laid flat upon the table. On this the ornamental vases and candelabra were placed, and their glittering beauties were thus doubled. On the centre oblong table was an exceedingly elaborate and massive piece of workmanship, in frosted silver. The profusion of silver plate was brought specially from London. The Prince ate from a service of solid gold.

The Prince, accompanied by the Mayor and the principal guests, entered the hall precisely at twenty-five minutes to nine o'clock His worship the Mayor presided, with the Prince on his right hand, and W. Standish Standish, Esq., High Sheriff, on his left. The other guests at the principal table were—Lord Morpeth, Lord Sandon, Earl Talbot, Marquis of Abercorn, Lord George Lennox, Viscount Ingestre, Viscount Brackley, Lord William Poulett, Admiral Lord James O'Bryen, Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, Right Hon. W. Ewart Gladstone, Sir Howard Douglas, M.P., Lieut.-Gen. Sir Thomas Arbuthnot, K.C.B., Major-General Sir William Warre, the Dean of Chester, the Recorder, Rev. Rector Brooks, Edward Cardwell, Esq., M.P., W. Brown, Esq., M.P., T. Thorneley, Esq., G. E. Anson, Esq.

The Vice-Chairmen were Sir Thomas Brancker, James Aspinall, Esq., James Aikin, Esq., G. H. Lawrence, Esq., John Shaw Leigh, Esq., J. H. Turner, Esq., Hugh Hornby, Esq., J. B. Moore, Esq., William Nicol, Esq., Thomas Sands, Esq., J. A. Tinne, Esq., R. S. Crook, Esq., James Lawrence, Esq.

The Dinner lasted exactly two hours, and after grace had been said by the Rev Rector Brooks, the desert was laid on the table. At eleven o'clock

The Mayor rose to propose "The Health of her Majesty the Queen." (Applause.)

The toast was drunk with three times three enthusiastic cheers

"God save the Queen" was then sung in excellent style by the glee party, Miss Holden and Mr. Ryalls taking the solos, and the whole company joining in chorus.

The Mayor shortly afterwards rose and said,—Your Royal Highness, my Lords, and Gentlemen, let us drink the health of her Majesty the Queen Dowager.

The toast was drunk without cheers; and a beautiful glee was sung.

The Mayor then said—I have now the honour to propose the health of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, our illustrious guest. (Tremendous cheering.) This will be a memorable day in the annals of Liverpool; and the sense in which the town has received so high a distinction, I trust his Royal Highness will have learnt to estimate, from the unequivocal language in which thousands and tens of thousands of the loyal subjects of her Majesty have hailed his presence this day. (Great applause.) Interests are mutual: and the interest shown by his Royal Highness in the welfare of our country—in what he has done to promote science, and to encourage the fine arts by the influence of his cultivated taste and exquisite judgment—the promptitude he has ever shown to come forward to promote and patronise projects for the good of all classes, and more particularly when benefit is to be conferred on the humbler classes. (Loud applause.) After alluding to the noble object of the Prince's visit, the Mayor continued With heartfelt acknowledgments to his Royal Highness for giving his countenance and assistance in forwarding so great a purpose, let us drink prosperity to his Royal Highness Prince Albert. (Great cheering.)

The toast was drunk most enthusiastically, with three times, and three hearty cheers, and one cheer more.

Prince Albert rose immediately, and when the cheering with which he was greeted had subsided, he said I thank you for the very kind way in which you have received the toast. I am glad to have this opportunity of expressing how sincerely gratified I feel at the very kind reception you have given me in this town. It was always a cherished wish of mine to visit this great seat of commerce; and all I have seen to-day has far surpassed my expectations. (Applause.) If my visit will assist a work of charity, which reflects the greatest credit on your liberality, I shall be glad, for I feel very anxious to promote the comfort of those who, by their toil and labour, and by exposing themselves to many dangers, contribute to that prosperity which I have this day seen. (Great applause.) I now beg to propose to you "Continued prosperity to the town of Liverpool." (Renewed applause.)

The toast was drunk with three times three hearty cheers.

As the Prince was resuming his seat, a letter was handed to him, supposed to be from her Majesty. After perusing it attentively, he placed it in the breast pocket of his coat. Shortly afterwards, it being then twenty-five minutes to twelve o'clock, his Royal Highness arose from the table, and took his departure amidst loud cheers.

The company at the Town Hall broke up immediately after the departure of the Prince.

THE FIREWORKS

In the evening, there was a display of fireworks in the fields extending from Parliament-road to the entrance to Prince's-park, and including the open space fronting Berkeley-street, Windsor-street, and Warwick-street.

Liverpool, Friday.—This morning, like yesterday, was one of glorious sunshine, and made happy the thousands who felt interested in the business of the day, giving a beautiful appearance to the vast display of flags, streamers, balconies, flowers, &c., which crowded the whole line marked out for the procession. At an early hour music was heard in various parts, and every preparation was being made for the great business of the day.

Every available space on the route of the procession was occupied by company in their gayest attire; the influx of visitors from the neighbouring towns has been estimated at 130,000.

The event of the day was commenced by the Procession forming, according to the Programme, in various parts of the town.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert joined the line in a barouche, with outriders, about twelve o'clock. The time occupied in passing the whole route was about two hours. The commencement of the procession, composed of the Fire Brigade, reached the intended site of the Sailors' Home about two o'clock, followed by the children of the various schools—the Druids, Freemasons, Odd Fellows—each company with their bands, banners, and their mysterious symbols. These were succeeded by the Coopers, Ship Carpenters, Boiler Makers, bearing a very pretty model of her Majesty's yacht Fairy; these were again followed by the iron boat builders, carrying a model of the cradling of the Ajax, the first iron war steamer.

Then came the operative masons, a vast body, wearing blue sashes. Next were 1500 shipwrights, bearing models of ships and steamers; and then, were the Corporation of Liverpool in their official robes. Prince Albert came immediately after the Corporation, and was received with most tremendous cheering from the vast concourse who had assembled to witness the ceremony. The Prince looked remarkably well, and most graciously acknowledged the bursts of enthusiasm which greeted him.

The preparations for the laying of the stone were on a vast scale. In the centre of the site, a structure of strong frame-work, painted royal blue, was erected, from which the stone was suspended. The whole site was surrounded by sloping platforms that afforded room for thousands. The roof of the Post Office, and of every building in the neighbourhood whence a view of the ceremony could be obtained, was crowded with spectators; and we observed several of the surrounding houses partially unroofed for the same purpose.

The ceremony of laying the stone was then commenced; the Chairman of the Committee of the Seamen's Home then read an Address to his Royal Highness, to which the Prince replied; the usual formalities were then gone through, a benediction was pronounced, and the Prince joined in the Lord's Prayer; and the solemnity was thus concluded at half-past three o'clock.

During the ceremony, "Rule Britannia" was sung by the Liverpool professionals, accompanied by the band; and the chorus was taken up by the vast assembly, with more enthusiasm than precision

His Royal Highness then returned to his carriage; and after some delay by the pressure of the crowd, the Prince reached the railway station at four o'clock. The special train being in readiness, started forthwith; and his Royal Highness reached the Euston Station at ten minutes to ten o'clock, and left for Buckingham Palace.

Next week, as we have stated elsewhere, we shall complete our Illustrated Report of this splendid festival, both by further descriptive detail, and several elaborate Engravings.

We cannot, however, for the present, conclude without expressing our acknowledgements to the Railway Company for many civilities.

THE ALBERT DOCK

Lies between the Salthouse Dock and the River, immediately behind the large vessel in the first portion of our view of Liverpool, Present.

"The Albert Dock is constructed differently from the other Docks, inasmuch that, instead of being surrounded by the low sheds elsewhere found, lofty warehouses bound it on every side. These, it is expected, will afford great facilit[illegible] for loading and discharging, and thus render the dock one of muc[illegible] spatch, in proportion to its size, than a[illegible] The dock and passages cover an area of seven acres 3423 yards, with abundance of quay room, and it is of sufficient depth to accommodate vessels of the largest tonnage. There are two entrances to the dock basin from the river, separated by an island of huge granite between the locks, and on which is erected a handsome lodge for the gatemen. The Warehouses are built in [illegible]tached piles, vaulted throughout, from top to bottom, with rows of massive ir[illegible] pillars and iron beams to support the arches. Each is of four spacious stories, with vaults below of immense size. The entire area of warehouse room, including the vaults, is 138,805 yards. The four stories above ground are capable of containing 234,950 bales of cotton, whilst the vaults will be available for the stowage of wines, spirits, &c. The buildings are entirely fire-proof; no timber is employed; the floorings are of a fire-resisting composition, and the doors, joists, window-frames, roofs, and staircases, all of iron. The entire cost of this dock, with the warehouses and purchase of the land, was estimated at £782,[illegible]. A spacious promenade runs along the whole river-side of these erections." From the Picturesque Handbook of Liverpool, with above 100 Illustrations, of which a handsome new edition has just appeared.

THE THEATRES.

There has not been a very great deal stirring during the past week in the dramatic world, nor do we anticipate any production of remarkable importance for some little time.

Of the proceedings at Drury Lane an account will be found in the musical portion of our criticisms.

The Haymarket announces the termination of its prolonged season; and Mr. W. Farren puts forward "Antigone," for his benefit, on Monday next; on which occasion Miss Helen Faucit will appear as the heroine. Accounts from Edinburgh speak in the highest terms of the lady's performance in this character: and it is said that the heads of the Dublin University presented her with a Greek Febula shoulder-piece, in token of their high admiration of her talents. Mrs. Williams, "The Lady," as the bill somewhat affectedly continued to call her, played Lady Townley, on Saturday.

At the Lyceum, a laughable affair, only a quarter of an hour long, has been brought out under the title of "Hot Weather." Criticizing such a production would be like breaking a butterfly on the wheel. Mr. and Mrs. Keeley are represented as themselves, and the actors all appear in propriâ personâ, but in different parts of the house, boxes, stalls, &c., where they are discovered to be after having sent excuses that they could not play, on account of the "hot weather." We remember seeing Mrs. Keeley, in a piece of the same class, called "The New Actress," at the Adelphi, some years back. The audience laugh, and the end of the "Occasional Prologue"—as it is called—is obtained Unfortunately, from its nature, it must be played first in the programme; and the audience has scarcely assembled when the curtain falls. Mr. and Mrs. Keeley will take their benefit of the act—or acts provided by their authors for that purpose, on the 6th instant, when a new farce will be played, called "The End of June," which name might be altered with effect to "The Beginning of August." There does not appear to be any talk of closing the theatre at present Indeed, with its very fair average business, it would be injudicious to think of doing so.

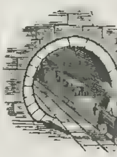
Sadler's Wells was re-opened under the sole management of Mr. Phelps, on Saturday evening, having been altered, both externally and in the auditory part, to great advantage, during the recess The first part of Shakspeare' "Henry the Fourth" was selected for representation; and the same care marked its performance that distinguished all the plays brought out here during the former managements; and we may observe that the same level excellence in the acting, which we have so often had occasion to commend, was never seen to great[illegible]ntage than on this occasion. Nothing was slurred over; if only a few lines had to [illegible] spoken, they were delivered sensibly, and with proper emphasis; [illegible]d the result was a perfect ensemble not always attained in theatres of far [illegible]ons than this well-deserving establishment. The chief novelty of [illegible] the Sir John Falstaff of Mr. Phelps. It was precisely what might have been expected [illegible] careful, judicious performance, but lacking that oily humour [illegible]t, which Falstaff made his own. His impersonation of the jol[illegible] certainly successful: we, however, prefer Mr. Phelps in his own [illegible] was the Hotspur. This gentleman is new to a London audience, but bids fair to become a popular actor. He has undoubted ability, and when his propensity to rant has been a little tempered down, will be a useful acquisition to these boards. Mr. George Bennett played the King, and Mr H. Marston Prince Hal. These gentlemen are old favourites with the habitues of Sadler's Wells and their merits are well known. They were, from time to time, warmly and deservedly applauded. The mise en scene is unexceptionable, and great pains have evidently been taken in every department.

TRACTS FOR THE TRAINS.

BY ALBERT SMITH.

No. X.

ANTI-ACCIDENT HINTS.



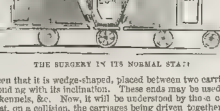
UITE convinced that it is high time something should be done to put a stop to the frightful accidents on all the lines generally, and the Eastern one in particular, we proceed to give our opinions upon the subject, and suggest the best means for their prevention or alleviation

We do not altogether hold with hanging a director every time an accident occurs; inasmuch as there is a great deal to be said on both sides, in this case, although it seems to be the most popular remedy. But we would have one accompany every train, not as an ordinary passenger, but on a light iron seat, prepared thus:—

THE PATENT SAFETY DIRECTOR BUFFER.

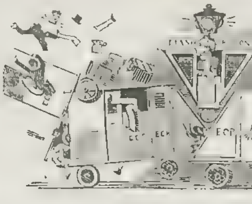
The Directors will take this post by turns, each becoming "an old buffer" in rotation; and the precarious nature of the position will tend to infuse a spirit of vigilance into the different persons employed on the line.

It will also be right to announce at each departure, that "The train carries an experienced surgeon;" and, as the safety of that individual will be always of the first consequence, the following plan is submitted for preserving him if there is a collision A surgery will be fitted up for him, well supplied with splints, rollers, tourniquets, lint, and strips of adhesive plaster: and he may be indulged with the conventional red lamp, which may also be used as a signal. His surgery in the train will be shaped thus:—



THE SURGERY IN ITS NORMAL STATE

It will be seen that it is wedge-shaped, placed between two carriages of similar form, corresponding with its inclination. These ends may be used as lockers for luggage, dog-kennels, &c. Now, it will be understood by those conversant with mechanics, that, on a collision, the carriages being driven together, as the outer ones approach, the surgery, by its wedge-like construction, will rise up between them, the higher in proportion to their approximation, and will be lifted out of the way of all harm, as shown in this diagram of



THE SURGERY DURING A COLLISION.

By which arrangement, the Member of the College of Surgeons will be able to look after those of the victims.

The Council of the College will arrange a Railway Board, on the plan of the Army and Navy ones, and the examinations will be conducted by questions similar to these:

1 State what height in the air a man can be blown to, with the chance of merely a simple dislocation on his coming down

2 What is the diagnosis between the highlow of the luggage train, and the short glazed Albert of the second-class double-journey, supposing that [illegible] legs are found in a field, after the accident?

3. In the event of a victim being crushed flat, what is the best method of rolling him up and carrying him away, with least inconvenience to himself?

4 Are there instances of "union by the first intention" where wrong limbs have been inadvertently attached to strange joints?

And so on. We may return to this subject at a future opportunity.

CHARADE THE SIXTH.

The silent bell—deserted fane—
The stricken sinner's cry of pain,
Who vainly asks, with parting breath,
For hope to smooth his bed of death—
The frightened gaze in hall and bower,
Too plainly showed the fatal power
With which, in bigot times accurst,
Fell on a nation's hopes My First.

The maid beneath the glistening moon,
With plaided form and snooded hair,
Steals to the "banks o' bonnie Doune,"
In hopes to find My Second there.

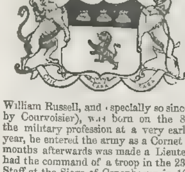
Now turn your eyes to distant lands,
Where rivers run on golden sands;
And there, beneath the date tree's shade,
While dances many a dusky maid,
To soothe the passions of his soul,
The love-sick Negro tunes My Whole.

ANSWER TO THE LAST CHARADE

1. Co. 2. Nun. 3. Drum. Conundrum.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

LORD WILLIAM RUSSELL.



Major-General Lord George William Russell, G.C.B., Knight of Leopold of Belgium, was the second son of John, sixth and late Duke of Bedford, by his first wife, Georgiana, second daughter of George, fourth Viscount Torrington; he was consequently brother of the whole blood to the present Duke of Bedford, and to the Premier, Lord John Russell.

Lord George William Russell, more commonly known as Lord William Russell, and especially so since the death of his uncle (murdered by Courvoisier), was born on the 8th of May, 1790. He adopted the military profession at a very early age. When in his sixteenth year, he entered the army as a Cornet in the 1st Dragoons, and in a few months afterwards was made a Lieutenant. At the age of eighteen, he had the command of a troop in the 23rd Dragoons. He served on the Staff at the Siege of Copenhagen in 1807; and, in 1809, was wounded at the Battle of Talavera. At Cadiz, he was aide-de-camp to Lord Lynedoch, and, subsequently, he was aide-de-camp to the Duke of Wellington, on several occasions, amongst others, at the Battle of Vittoria. In addition to this, he was present at the storming of St. Sebastian, and he accompanied the British army on its entrance into France, assisting at the Battles of Orthes and Toulouse. He received a medal, as a reward for his valour at the latter. The brevet of November, 1841, raised him to the rank of Major-General.

After the peace, Lord William Russell remained in command of the 102nd Regiment of Infantry, but was not again engaged in active military service.

On the 21st June, 1817, his Lordship married Elizabeth Anne, only child of the late Hon. John Theophilus Rawdon, and cousin of the Marquis of Hastings, by whom he leaves, with other issue, an eldest son, Francis, who is an officer in the British service.

In 1830, on the accession of the Whigs to power, Lord William Russell commenced his diplomatic career, by being attached to the Embassy of Sir Robert Adair, who represented England in the Netherlands, during the struggle between Holland and Belgium, which ended in placing King Leopold upon the throne of the latter country. Here, Lord William Russell displayed more than ordinary skill and ability in his new profession; and, the following year, he went to Lisbon, on a special mission, to assist in the endeavour to restore tranquillity to Portugal. After attaining that object, in 1834, he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary at Wurtemberg; and, in 1835, succeeded Lord Minto, as British Envoy at Berlin, where he remained until the accession to office of Sir Robert Peel, in 1841.

Since that period he ceased to participate in public affairs. Latterly he had fallen into a very delicate state of health; and his death occurred, a few weeks ago, at Genoa, whither he had gone for the benefit of the climate.

Thus, at the rather premature age of 56, and just previously to his younger brother effectually becoming First Minister of this Empire, another scion of the illustrious house of Russell has passed away. Lord William's life as soldier and diplomatist, would throw lustre on many a descent; the lineage of the Duke of Bedford, with even its multiplicity of renown, may derive satisfaction and honour from his name.

SIR GEORGE MURRAY.

This gallant officer and distinguished public personage sprung from an ancient family—the Murrays of Ochtertyre. He was the younger son of Sir William, fifth Baronet of Ochtertyre, by his wife, Augusta, daughter of the celebrated Earl of Cromarty. Sir George Murray was born in 1772, and entered the army as an Ensign in the 71st Regiment, in 1779. He served in Flanders, Holland, Germany, the East and West Indies, Egypt, the North of Europe, Spain, Portugal, France, and America; and received a cross and five clasps for Corunna, Talavera, Busaco, Fuentes d'Onore, Vittoria, Pyrenees, Nivelle, Orthes, and Toulouse. In 1809, he got the brevet of Colonel, and the appointment of Quartermaster-General in Portugal and Spain, under Lord Wellington, with whom he acted until the year 1814, when he was sent as Quartermaster-General to America.

He has since been Governor of Sandhurst College, Lieutenant-General of the Ordnance, Commander of the Forces in Ireland, Colonial Secretary, and, lastly, Master General of the Ordnance during the Peel Administrations. Sir George Murray was, at the time of his decease, a General in the Army, G.C.H., C.T.S., &c., and Colonel of the 42nd Foot. Sir George married, in 1826, Louisa, daughter of Henry, first Earl of Uxbridge, sister of the present Marquis of Anglesey, and widow of Lieut-General Sir James Erskine, Bart. Her ladyship died the 23rd Jan., 1842. Sir George Murray's death occurred on the 28th ultimo, at his residence in Belgrave-square.

THIRD ANNUAL MEETING OF THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL INSTITUTE OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

(Concluded.)

In our number of last week we recorded the proceedings at this important Meeting, down to the close of Wednesday. We now give the conclusion of our Report, which must necessarily be brief, in consequence of the pressure of other important and interesting matter

On Thursday morning, the various sectional meetings were renewed. At eleven o'clock, the "Historical Section" met at the Hospitium, in the Museum Gardens; the Hon. T. Stapleton, President of the Section, in the chair. E. Ha[illegible] read a very curious paper, entitled "A Memorial of Lady Anne Clifford" [illegible] close of which, a vote of thanks to the hon gentleman was carried by acclamation. Papers were also read by the Rev J Hunter, and by R. Davies, Esq., Town Clerk; the latter being a highly-interesting selection of "Documents from the York Municipal Archives."

In seconding a vote of thanks to Mr. Davies, the Rev. J. Hunter expressed a hope that that gentleman would continue to prosecute his labours, which could not but assist in throwing great light upon the history of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries—a period, he might remark, when there had been a lack of historians, as compared with the two previous centuries.

The "Architectural Section" assembled in the Theatre of the Yorkshire Museum, and, as on the previous day, was numerously attended. Among the several papers read to the Section, we may mention, as most interesting, a paper on Beverley Minster, by Mr. Petit (whose views and deductions were ably supported by Professor Willis), and another on Clifford's Tower, by the Rev. C. H. Hartshorne.

The members of the "Section of Early and Mediæval Antiquities" re-assembled in the room over the Savings Bank, Sir John P. Boileau, Bart., F R S, being in the chair The first paper read was one by James Talbot, Esq, being a notice of some supposed Egyptian remains, hitherto undescribed, in Upper Nubia. The Chairman proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Talbot; and, in doing so, observed that increased attention was now being daily given to the past and present state of [illegible], and that, if other travellers would act as Mr. Talbot had acted, we might soon hope for very valuable additional information respecting that country.

Sir Richard Westmacott, R.A., next read an elaborate paper "On the Arts and Artists of England during the Middle Ages" A vote of thanks having been passed to Sir R Westmacott for his interesting paper, Edward Hawkins, Esq., Keeper of the Antiquities of the British Museum, read an account of certain curious silver ornaments which had been discovered in 1840, at Cuerdale, near Preston, on the banks of the river Ribble. A discussion ensued upon the reading of this paper, in which Sir Roderick J. Murchison and other distinguished members took part; Sir Roderick confirming the assertion of Mr. Hawkins, that the chains and elaborately-worked silver ornaments were of an Oriental character. Mr. Hawkins also read a second paper, contributed by the Rev. E. J. Shepherd, on the early coins minted at York, which elicited some instructive remarks from Mr Hudson Turner, on the antiquity of the Mint at York. The concluding paper, communicated by the Hon. W. O. Stanley, M P., was read by Mr. Hal[illegible]d was a notice of the ancient chapel of St. Bride, on the shore of the bay [illegible] Capel, and the curious interments there discovered.

The sectional meetings having closed, a large party of members, headed by Mr. Parker, and accompanied by the Marquis of Northampton, proceeded to inspect Skelton Church—a celebrated and very beautiful specimen, on a small scale, of English church architecture in the early ages. The party also inspected the two churches of Overton and Nun Monkton, both in the highest degree interesting to "antiquarians and historical inquirers." These inspections having terminated, the party returned to York; and, in the evening, about 120 gentlemen, members of the Institute and others, sat down to an excellent dinner at the [illegible]. The Earl Fitzwilliam presided, and was supported by the Marquis of Northampton, the Dean of Hereford, Sir R. J. Murchison, the Lord Mayor of York, &c., Professor Phillips acting as Vice-Chairman. A variety of toasts, loyal and complimentary, were proposed and responded to, and; soon after eleven o'clock, the company separated, all highly delighted with the day's business and its social termination

On Friday, there was but one meeting, that of the "Section of Early and M[illegible] but the business was of short duration, a majority of the members having devoted the day to a tour of inspection in the neighbourhood of York. The morning was ushered in by a desperate effort on the part of St. Swithin to maintain his charter, in the midst of which, a party of about sixty members started on an expedition to Aldbrough, for the purpose of inspecting the remains of the Roman city of Isurium. On approaching the town, the members of the Institute were met by A. Lawson, Esq., M.P., who conducted them to some very interesting excavations which have been recently made under his directions. After inspecting these remains, the party proceeded to Mr. Lawson's beautiful mansion, and there partook of a substantial luncheon, provided for them by their kind and liberal host.

Having done full justice to Mr Lawson's hospitality, the party turned their steps towards Fountain's Abbey. This Abbey was founded in 1132. The ruins are said to be the most extensive and valuable of any in England remarkable on many accounts, but more especially for the unusual number of the domestic buildings, in a more or less perfect state

Our limits will not allow us to give a detailed description of these interesting ruins; we must, therefore, quit them, and turn towards Ripon, whither the party next proceeded.

Through the kindness of the Dean, the members were enabled to inspect every portion of the Minster, which is a fine cruciform Church, of mixed styles, but chiefly Early English, having a central tower, and two square towers at the western end. The inspection of Ripon Minster having been concluded, the party paid their respects to the Dean, and returned to York

In the evening, at nine o'clock, the Cathedral was opened and lighted up, by permission of the Very Rev. the Dean, and there was a grand performance of sacred music, in which Miss M. Hawes took a leading part. Public notice of this performance having been given by Mr Turner, the resident Secretary of the Archæological Institute, the Cathedral was densely crowded.

On Saturday, the "Section of Early and Mediæval Antiquities" re-assembled at the usual hour; and several highly interesting papers were read. The main business of the day, however, was a projected excursion to the ruins of Helmsley Castle and Rievaulx Abbey, whither a large party, including Earl Fitzwilliam, the Dean of Hereford, and other distinguished members, started as early as eight o'clock in the morning. At Duncombe Park, previously to an inspection of the ruins, the members were hospitably entertained by Lord Feversham

Quitting Rievaulx Abbey, the party returned by Byland Abbey, to York. The ruins of Byland Abbey, although by no means equal to those of Rievaulx, are still greatly interesting, inasmuch as they present the remains of a very fine Early English Church.—At eight o'clock in the evening, there was a general meeting in the theatre of the museum, for the reading and consideration of two papers, the first by Albert Way, Esq., being a "Notice of an alleged discovery of the tomb of Constantius Chlorus, near the church of St. Helen, on the Walls in York;" and the second by Charles Newton, Esq, "On the British and Roman Antiquities in Yorkshire." We much regret that we have not space to enter into a detailed notice of these papers.

On Monday, the business of the Meeting was brought to a conclusion. At ten o'clock, the "Architectural Section" met in the Theatre of the Museum, when able and interesting papers were read by J. R. Walbran, Esq., A. Milward, Esq., and by Mr Browne, of York. This Sectional Meeting was followed, at twelve o'clock, by the concluding General Meeting of the Institute. The Marquis of Northampton presided; and Albert Way, Esq, one of the General Secretaries, read the financial statement, and the Report of the Committee of Management, both of which appeared to afford unmixed satisfaction to the members present After the transaction of the necessary routine business, the Noble Chairman announced that the next Annual Meeting of the Archæological Institute would take place at Norwich, and that the Lord Bishop of the diocese had consented to preside upon that occasion. This announcement was received with loud cheers; and, thanks having then been voted to the Marquis of Northampton, the Earl Fitzwilliam, the Lord Mayor of York, and others, the Meeting finally separated.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Supposed Murder at Newcastle-upon-Tyne.—Last Saturday morning, the body of Robert Lowthin, the Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, for the Gateshead district, was discovered in the river Tyne, near the high crane at Newcastle; and circumstances have since transpired which excite strong suspicion of his having been murdered. The police were dragging for a boy named Dickinson, who had been observed, on the preceding day, playing near the high crane, but had been since missed, when they found the body of Mr. Lowthin. It appears, from inquiries that have been instituted, that Lowthin had, on Friday, received his quarterly salary as Registrar, and, at eight o'clock, the same night, he was in the Charles the Twelfth public-house, at the north end of Tyne-bridge, when it was observed by the landlord that he had a watch, and a considerable sum of [illegible]. He was then in liquor. He was seen again about two o'clock on the morning of Saturday, by the superintendent of police in Gateshead, in company with a notoriously bad character, going towards Newcastle. When his body was found, his watch and purse were missing. An inquest was commenced on Saturday, and, evidence of identity having been received, it was adjourned till Monday. On Monday the inquest was resumed, but nothing satisfactory was elicited. A man, who was apprehended on suspicion of his having been the person who was with the deceased at two o'clock on the Saturday morning, has been discharged, as the superintendent of police could not positively identify him, and the man denies having been with the deceased at all, but subsequently accounts for himself elsewhere. The inquest was further adjourned til Monday next.

Murder at Manchester.—A murder was committed in Manchester on Saturday by a husband upon his wife. The husband immediately afterwards absconded. It appears that his name is James Hunt, that he is about thirty-five years of age, of shabby-genteel appearance, a tassel-maker by trade, and a native of Macclesfield. The dreadful act seems to have been committed about seven o'clock on Saturday evening, by his giving his wife a dreadful blow with his fist, which produced instantaneous death. Whether any or what previous quarrel took place between the parties has not transpired.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

CHELSEA REGATTA.

Twelve free watermen at Chelsea made a very spirited race on Monday for a purse of sovereigns, given by the inhabitants of St. Luke's. The contest, which was exceedingly well conducted throughout, was in three heats, with six pair of oars.

First Heat. C. Cole, jun., and T. Southam (Green), 1; J. Thomas and C. Woodford, (Yellow), 2; J. White and J. Woodford (Pink), 3.

The distance was from a boat moored opposite the Swan, round a boat moored opposite Cremorne House, down the Middlesex shore, round a boat opposite the British Flag, and back to the Cricketers.

Second Heat —W. Cole and J. Prime (Blue), 1; G. Brown and H. Gaybard (Red), 2: J. Thomas and W. Woodford (Scarlet), 3.

Grand Heat.—Blue, 1; Green, 2

GREENWICH REGATTA.

The second regatta of the present season at Greenwich, on Monday, boasted the patronage of the Dowager Countess of Buckinghamshire, Earl Fitzhardinge, Lord Ha[illegible], Lord Alfred Paget, Admiral Sir R. Stopford, and others of the nobility and [illegible] of the neighbourhood. The race, which was in five heats, with six scullers [illegible] attractive. The sport was, however, but mediocre

First Heat.—J. Roe (Yellow), 1; T. Doust (Red), 2; J. Stanley (Pink), 3. The distance extended the whole river front, and was twice rowed round in each heat.

Second Heat.—S. Wogan (Dark Blue), 1; S. Weeks (Green), 2; S. Avent (Light Blue), 3.

Third Heat.—Red, 1; Green, 2,

Fourth Heat.—Dark Blue, 1; Green, 2—Won easily.

Grand Heat.—Dark Blue, 1; Red, 2

The prizes were a new skiff and about £12

Temple Regatta—A double sculler's race amongst the watermen plying at the Temple, [illegible] street stairs, for a purse of sovereigns, given by the residents of the vicinity came off on Tuesday, and was won in three heats by John Bush, Essex-stairs, and Joseph [illegible], Arundel-street (light blue)

The Gu[illegible] Oars Match.—The Gentlemen of the Guy's Club on Tuesday contended in a pair-oared race for a pair of gold challenge oars and presentation medals. It was throughout a very dashing spirited race, arranged in three heats. It was won by Messrs. Lloyd and Hicks (yellow).

Whitehall Regatta.—The watermen at Whitehall contended on Wednesday for a purse of sovereigns, very liberally subscribed by the nobility and gentry of that vicinity. It was in three heats, with six scullers, and was won by T. Jones, who took the lead and kept it.

FULHAM REGATTA.

This highly-respectable aquatic contest, got up under the management of two gentlemen, named Walford and Chasemore, for a purse of sovereigns, liberally subscribed by the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood, including the very efficient managers, came off on Monday. It was a double-scull contest, in three heats, with ten competitors.

First Heat.—J. Phelps and S Knight (Red), 1. J. Kelly and W. Hill (Pink), 2; J. Powell and J. Hawkins (Plaid), 3

The distance was from Putney Bridge up to the Crab Tree, down round a boat moored off Broom House, and up through the centre arch of Putney Bridge.

Second Heat.—J. Kelly, jun., and J. Freeman (Yellow), 1; J. Hawkins and J. Powell (Blue), 2.

Grand Heat.—This was started downwards from the Bridge to Broom House, up to the Crab Tree, and back to the Bridge.—Yellow, 1; Red, 2.

Cricket.—The return match between Surrey and Kent, was commenced in the beautiful park of C. Milner, Esq., at Aylesford, near Maidstone, on Thursday (last week), and was continued during that day, Friday, and Saturday, and, on the evening of the last-mentioned day, as the play had not been finally concluded, so far as the ultimate victory was concerned, a "draw" was the result. The final state of the match stood as follows, when the stumps were drawn on Saturday evening. Surrey went in first:—Surrey, 221; Kent, 203

The Marylebone Club and Ground v. the County of Norfolk This match terminated in favour of the club by a majority of 88 runs. The final score stood thus:—Marylebone, 239; Norfolk, 151.

GOODWOOD RACES.

The fool of quality has fallen upon evil days; his motley is no longer divinity, wherewithal to hedge him from the vulgar human herd. The rail has given him coup de grace. On Monday last his counterfeit presentment appeared at the London-bridge Station of the Brighton line, in shape of an exclusive couple, bound for Goodwood. Their courier had not secured them a coupée; there was a heathen caitiff for you! They looked with eager eyes for an empty compartment; none was to be had. "Oh!" cried the lady of the two—at least the one who wore a bonnet and cashmere—"oh! I must have a carriage to myself; I'm Mrs." Vain, or Fain, or the like "and I've a quantity of things to take with me; my maid, and Mr. Vain, and"——at this stage of the remonstrance the signal to start was given, and Mrs. Vain, her femme de chambre, and caro sposo, rushed into dreadful proximity, with three specimens of their own species, that had never in their lives been inside Willis's Rooms! . . . . .

Like all things per se, railroads have been considerably abused in application. On many lines the policy seems to be to afford the least amount of service to the greatest number of people. The ingenuity too with which this is brought about is often quite astonishing. You could, for instance, hardly imagine how a line running from Worthing to Chichester along the narrow valley of the sea-board, could completely avoid all approach to the various towns in that district, yet such is the case. The guards assure you that Arundel is quite a mile and a half from the station bearing its name, and that Bognor is a good three miles from any point the Chichester railroad touches; and they tell the truth. Sometimes, moreover, this road consists of a single line of rails, and sometimes of a double—whereof it comes to pass that you travel sometimes at the rate of fifty miles an hour, and sometimes wait an hour at a station before it is possible for you to start again. All this, the company bound for Goodwood, by way of Brighton, had experience of in the course of this instant week; that they bore it patiently is more than we are disposed to assert. The meeting in the princely domain of the Duke of Richmond was the sporting cynosure of the last four days; and, inasmuch as its blaze of gallant revelry cast into eclipse all lesser lights, the Olympics at that right noble tryst will form the staple of these our National Sports.

Goodwood Races commenced on Tuesday, and terminated yesterday, giving to the turf an array of valuable stakes, and other prizes, such as no meeting in the world ever put forth in its programme; the whole amounting to a sum of money little short of £25,000. The splendid harvest weather had an affect on the rural attendance, as every farmer, of course, took advantage of it to house his ripe crops. All the fashion of the kingdom, however, gathered together; some, as guests of his Grace's hospitality—others putting up with such accommodation as the Bedford at Brighton, and other hostels of its class along the Sussex coast, furnish. Good things, no doubt, of all sorts awaited them. Of the racing we [illegible] know how to speak, in the merest epitome. Each day's material would require more than one of our columns to catalogue alone—how is an idea of the whole to be attempted? On Tuesday there were eight races run for, under the most distressing temperature that can be conceived. Mr. Bowes won the Ham with Epirote, then made second favourite for the Derby; and Weatherbit the great 300 sovs sweepstakes—the four that started literally "done" when they finished. Van Tromp won the Lavant Stakes, by a head: it was hardly a performance worthy his quotation at Tattersall's. The Gratwicke Joinville won. He belongs to a stable the success of which is a great popular victory. Humdrum was good enough to beat the field for the Drawing Room Stakes, and won a rattling "pot." These nags of good report will be served one day or other. he was tried to be a racer in the spring—he has proved that he is one in the autumn.

Wednesday was the momentous occasion with the speculative. The Goodwood Stakes—handicap—was the great betting affair of the Meeting; and, bad as business is, commanded a considerable outlay of capital. After a few minor races, the Orange Prize was run for, and created much interest. It brought you together Alarm and Jericho, that ran so close to each other at Ascot—both with lots of friends. As fine a contest as ever was seen again terminated in favour of the former; and passing the Cordray without comment, we come to the important Handicap. A vast field went for it; and a splendid set to with three, ended in making Jonathan Wild winner by a head. Here must we take leave of the second day crammed as full of sport as an egg of sustenance.

Thursday, the Cup Day, was of course the festival of the whole. It set in broiling hot; and with cavalcades of coaches, and crowds on foot and horseback, such as make the Derby and St. Leger pageants. It was a gorgeous company that occupied the places of privilege; a happy one that filled every nook and corner of shade to be found within reasonable distance of the race course. The list was an awful one as at first prepared, but casualty had done its office, and not only were there a couple of walks over to begin with, but the fields were greatly shorn of their proportions. In short, the sport was not a monster exhibition, as people expected, but a right gallant one; such as, when next it occurs, may we be there to see

The first issue was a dead heat, between the rival stables of Goodwood and Danebury—"feeding fat" their present feud. But we will come to the Cup—for to see it all came—and to hear of it, peradventure, is all that our readers care to read. As the day wore on, the promise of the field improved for Hemp, omitted in the lists, was declared to start, and when the numbers were put up there appeared as starters nine of various merit. They got off, full of slow running, and the picturesque the Rose of Cashmere, making play for Lothario, and leading at a good speed before she resigned. From the top of the hill they came in earnest Grimston winning from the distance very easily. The speed was much below that for the Stakes; nevertheless, Grimston and Iago must be fine feeders for those who have laid the odds against the cracks for the St. Leger.

We annex the details of the sport of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

TUESDAY.

The Craven Stakes of 10 sovs each.

Lord G. Bentinck's Dawdle, 3 yrs	(Abdale)	walked over

The Gratwicke Stakes of 100 sovs each, h ft.

Sir R. W. Bulkeley's Joinville	(Templeman)	1
Duke of Richmond's Cuckoo	(Bartholomew)	2
Mr. Wreford's Wit's End	(A. Day)	3

Run in two minutes fifty-four seconds.

The Ham Stakes of 100 sovs each, h ft.

Mr. Bowes's Epirote	(Butler)	1
Mr. S Herbert's Tantivy	(A. Day)	2
Duke of Richmond's Halo	(Bell)	3

Sweepstakes of 300 sovs each.

Mr. Gully's Weatherbit	(Butler)	1
Mr. Johnstone's Annandale	(Marson)	2
Duke of Richmond's Pic-nic	(Nat)	3

The Welter Stakes of 20 sovs each.

Lord Lonsdale's b c by Bay Middleton, out of Miss Milner	(Mr. Berkeley)	1
Mr. Osbaldeston nd The Conjuror	(Mr. Osbaldeston)	2
Lord George Bentinck's Blackbird	(Capt. Pettat)	3

The Lavant Stakes of 50 sovs. each.

Lord Eglinton's Van Tromp	(Marson)	1
Mr. Payne's f by Venison, out of Cobweb	(Cartwright)	2

The Goodwood Cup Stakes of 10 sovs each.

Lord George Bentinck's Best Bower	(Capt Pettat)	1
Lord George Bentinck's Naworth	(Mr. P. Williams)	2
Mr. Meiklam's Alliance	(Mr. Berkeley)	3

Drawing Room Stakes of 25 sovs each.

Mr. Maher's Humdrum	(F. Butler)	1
Duke of Richmond's Cuckoo	(H. Bell)	2
Mr. Maher's f by Birdcatcher, out of Perdita	(Holmes)	3

Run in five minutes three seconds.

The Innkeepers' Plate of £50, added to a sweepstakes of 5 sovs each.

Mr. Gully's Winchester	(A. Day)	1
Lord G Bentinck's African	(W. A[illegible])	2
Mr Meiklam's Duncan	(J Prince)	3

WEDNESDAY.

Selling Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 50 added.

Mr Herbert's c by Hetman Platoff out of Miss Letty	(W. Marson)	1
Duke of Richmond's Tugnet		2

Stand Plate of 50 sovs, added to a Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each.

Lord Lonsdale's c by Bay Middleton out of Miss Milner	(Abraham)	1
Lord G. Bentinck's Blackbird		2
Mr. Green's The Conjuror		3

Orange Prize, given by his Majesty the King of the Netherlands, added to a Sweepstakes of 10 sovs. each.

Mr. Greville's Alarm	(Nat)	1
Lord Lonsdale's Jericho		2
Mr. Moore's Wolf Dog		3

GOODWOOD RACES.—1846.

THE ROAD FROM THE RAILWAY STATION.

GOING TO THE RACES.—HIGH-STREET, CHICHESTER.

Cowdray Stakes of 25 sovs each.

Mr. Payne's Collingwood	(Nat)	1
Lord G. Bentinck's Jollity		2
Duke of Richmond's Vampyre		3

Goodwood Stakes of 25 sovs each, 15 ft and only 5 if declared, &c.

Mr. O'Brien's Jonathan Wild	(R. Rider)	1
Mr. J Day's The Hero		2
Mr. Parr's Dulcet		3

It is supposed that the amount lost on the race exceeds £40,000.

The Member's Plate of £50 with £50 added.

Mr. Osbaldeston's Sorella	(Butler)	1
Mr. W. H. Johnstone's Blind Hookey		2
Lord G. Bentinck's Naworth		3

Steward's Cup of £300, added to a Handicnp of 5 sovs. each.

Lord Chesterfield's Lady Wildair	(Nat)	1
Lord George Bentinck's Dawdle		2

Queen's Plate of 100 guineas.

Mr. W. S. Stanley's Leaconfield	(A lad)	1
Mr. Meiklam's Alliance		2

THURSDAY.

Sweeps of 50 sovs each. One mile and a half.

Lord G. Bentinck's Blackbird	walked over

The Sussex Stakes of 25 sovs each, &c.

Lord G. Bentinck's Gabbler	walked over

Sweeps of 200 sovs each. T.Y.C.

Mr. Gully's Mathematician	0
Lord G. Bentinck's King of Morven	0

A dead heat.

Sweeps of 200 sovs each, for fillies. T.Y.C.

Lord G. Bentinck's Devil-me-Care	1
Mr. Gully's Wee Bit	2
Mr. A. Johnstone's Little Nell	3

The Racing Stakes of 50 sovs each, &c.

Iago	1
Ukraine	2

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs each, &c.

Duke of Richmond's Cuckoo	1

Mr. Wreford's Wilderness disqualified. Wilderness came in first.

THE GOODWOOD CUP.

Mr O'Brien's Grimston	1
Lord Waterford's Wolfdog	2
Mr. Irwin's Connaught Ranger	3

THE PRIZE PLATE.

Three of the four Prize Cups, or Groups of Plate, have been manufactured by Messrs Hunt and Roskell, of Bond-street.

The prize called the "Orange Cup," valued at £300, and so named in honour of his Majesty the King of the Netherlands, consists of a group, representing Prince Maurice of Nassau directing the final charge at the Battle of Nieuport, fought against the Archduke Albert (son of Maximilian II.), Viceroy of the Netherlands, under Philip of Spain, in which, according to the memoirs of Sir Francis Vere, after a severely-contested encounter, the Archduke Albert was wounded in the face by a lance, unhorsed, and forced to quit the field Maurice, seeing the horse of the Archduke galloping without his rider, ordered a prompt and general advance, and gained a great victory, taking 5000 prisoners, including nearly all the commanders of the Archduke's army. The battle was fought on the 2nd of July, 1600. The artist has represented the moment when the Archduke has fallen from his horse, and the Prince is ordering the advance of his troops.

The Second Prize group represents the crisis of the battle of Bosworth-field - Sir W. Stanley saving the life of the Earl of Richmond; when, according to the chronicles of the time, Richard III., finding the battle going against him, made a desperate attempt to change the fortune of the day, by destroying Richmond, and, charging furiously, overthrew Sir John Cheney, killed Sir William Brandon, standard-bearer to the Earl, and got near enough to his opponent to aim a blow at him, which was parried by Sir William Stanley. Richard was unhorsed and slain. This group is exquisitely modelled—the general outline and the minor parts are all in the best taste. The horses and their riders are all in motion, and full of vitality. The details are very elaborate, the armour of the two principal figures being enriched with gold, and the armorial bearings and devices being also of that metal. The apparel is gorgeous, and very appropriate to the subject.

These two groups have been modelled by Mr. Alfred Howard, under the superintendence of Mr. Baily, R.A.

The Third Prize is a Candelabra, modelled after a design for a candelabrum for the Emperor of Russia; and consisting of an oak, at the foot of which hounds are pulling down a stag.

The Fourth Prize, a vase of very elegant form, has been manufactured by the Messrs. Garrard of the Haymarket. The lower portion consists of a nobly-shaped cup; and the upper of a flagon, around which is represented in bold relief, the picturesque tale of Perseus rescuing Andromeda from the sea monster. This is executed in Mr. Cotterill's best manner. The graceful form of Andromeda, the beauty and spirit of Pegasus, and the terrible figure of the sea monster are finely contrasted; and the artist has displayed great judgment in so balancing the different masses of the composition, that whatever view is taken of the vase it presents a symmetrical, though diversified figure. The whole is richly and tastefully ornamented.

GOODWOOD RACES, 1846.

"'Tis merrie, 'tis merrie in good green wood!"
And Goodwood is the merrie place
For sportsman true and steed of blood,
That love the chase,
And the glorious race,
Which with the lightning's shaft keeps pace.
Let th' Arab garb with gems his barb;
Let Andalusia vaunt her pride;
Let Rome (poor torso!) boast her Corso;
Let all the world, both far and wide,
Compete with England's turf—'tis vain!
O'er plain and main
Extends her reign.
Long may it last without a stain!

Away!—although the summer's breath
Scorches the forest, mead, and heath;
Away! -though dust, in heavy clouds,
The Turf's bold votaries enshrouds;
Away to Goodwood's brilliant sheen,
Hasting, the rural groups are seen.
From far around the Sussex downs—
From Brighton, Worthing, Reigate—towns,
Hamlets, and homesteads, pour along,
A dusty, thirsty, motley throng.
London is there! both mart and court;
England is there! to join the sport;
Ireland is there! with thorough breed;
And Scotland! with the best owre Tweed.

E'en France — the gay and gallant aye—
Leaves her elections for the play;
Grim Politics, despite the weather,
And Sugar Bill, mount in the leather.
In vain Rachel enacts a part
To bid the tears of Pluto start;
In vain may Grisi's graces flow,
Th' habitués are resolved to go—
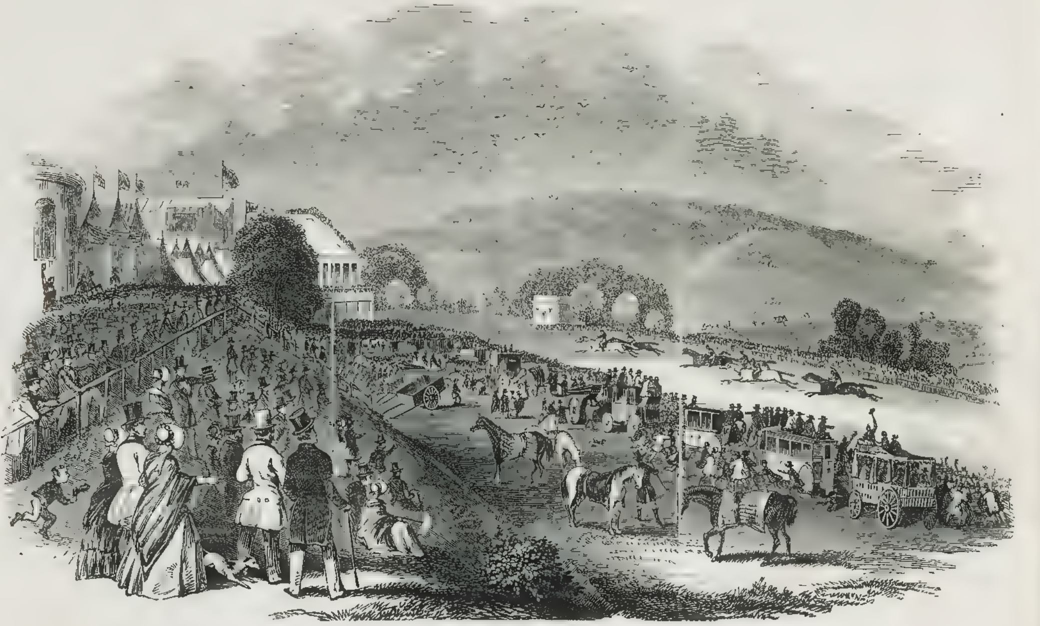
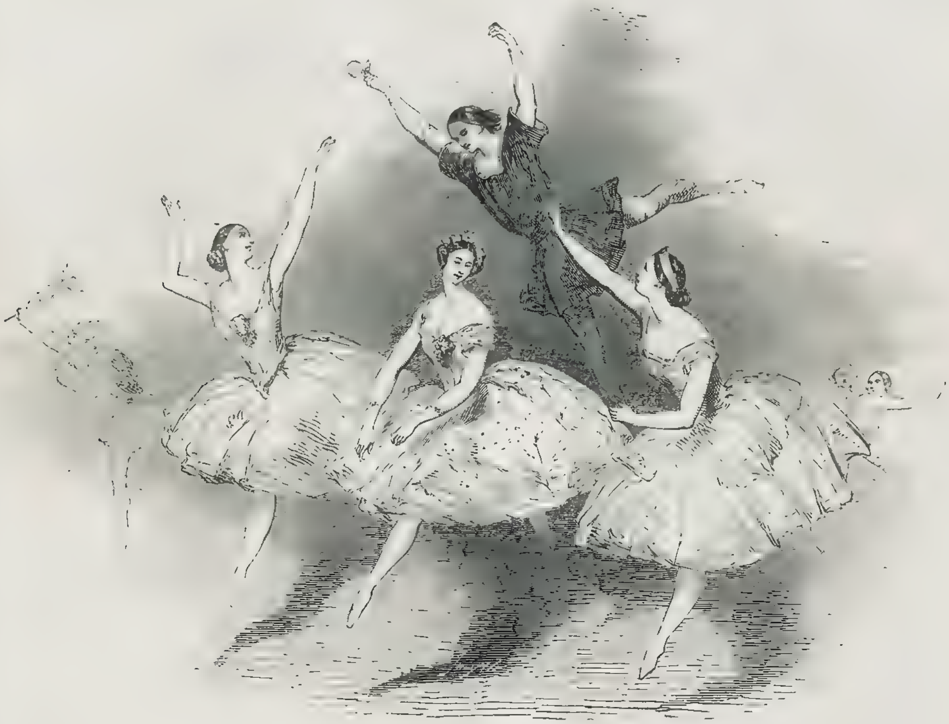
Though Thillon spreads her warbling thrall—
Though Cremorne House and gay Vauxhall
Exert their brightest: all in vain—
The town rolls out to Goodwood plain.

Oh! thrilling scene! That heart is cold
Indeed which glows not with delight,
When high and low, the young, the old,
The matron staid, and maiden bright,
Assemble 'neath the cloudless sky,
To hail the gallant rivalry,
Where steed with steed for fame contends,
While the glad shout the welkin rends.



GOODWOOD RACES.—THE COURSE.



THE PAS DES DEESSES, AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

We have to record this week the production of a new Opera Buffa, and the reiterated performance of a Divertissement which is a perfect triumph of choregraphy, the latter a production belonging to the highest order of art; the former with far less lofty pretensions, but no less possessing its own peculiar merits.

' Don Gregorio, or the Ajo nell' Imbarazzo," the new opera, is one of the earlier productions of Donizetti. It was brought out at Milan, and performed with great success in Paris in 1830; Lablache then, as now, enacting the principal part. This opera bears marks of an earlier origin than many of Donizetti's works. There is something of the old school to be traced throughout. Though of a decidedly inferior order of composition than Cimarosa's "Matrimonio," a resemblance in the treatment of the libretto, and in the construction of the score, may be detected—especially, for example, in the duet between the master and his pupil, where the music describes the sobbing of the latter and his tutor's mimicry.

In the preponderance of recitative, also, we again can trace the old-fashioned style of composition; and, in fact, there is but little Donizetti-ism, if we may be allowed to coin a word, in this opera—at least, to ears accustomed to the more recent productions of the fertile maestro. Much of the effect of an opera of this class depends upon the libretto; that of "Don Gregorio" is highly comic and spirited; and, before proceeding further with our criticism, we will give our readers a short resumé of the plot.

Don Gregorio is the tutor of two young men, placed by their father, an austere old nobleman, under his charge. This father, Count Giulio (Fornasari), adopting an exaggerated idea of the dangers and perils of the world, has kept his two sons closely immured at home, and persists in treating and considering them as children, though the eldest has attained his 25th year. The consequence is, that the latter, Enrico (Mario), has been married secretly for a year past, while the other, who is half an idiot, makes love to the old housekeeper, Leonarda, at home. The contrast of these two affaires de coleur is one of the amusing points of the libretto. Enrico hopes to gain the old tutor over to his cause; he, for that purpose, introduces his wife, Gilda (Mdme. Castellan), secretly into the house—Don Gregorio is moved by her tears, and promises to assist her; and then follow difficulties and embarrassments without end for the poor tutor, who is finally suspected by the Count of the most terrible misdoings. To crown all, the young wife of Enrico, who has remained immured all day, induces Gregorio to go and fetch her baby, who has been left at home: the unfortunate man returns with the child under his cloak, just in time to meet his indignant master. This is a most laughable scene. At length all is discovered, and finally the young couple are pardoned, and the piece ends happily; not before, however, the astonished Count is requested by his second "boy" to unite him in his turn to the shrewish old cameriera—a request, of course, not granted. There are scenes in this libretto of the most laughable description. The very tournure of Frederic Lablache, in his infantile costume, elicits peals of laughter each time he moves; while that most admirable of comedians, his father, portrayed the character of the unfortunate scape-goat, with a drollery perfectly irresistible. The duet we have already mentioned between these two artists, was comic in the extreme. Fornasari had effected a complete transformation of himself in the part of the Count: he looked the thin, sallow-faced, hollow-eyed old Nobleman, gloomy in mind, and feeble in body. Mario was admirably adapted to the sentimental young husband. He introduces Alari's pretty "Canzone Toscana" in the beginning of the opera, and sings it with his usual taste and sweetness. Castellan's feminine archness, her grace of look and manner, always give great fascination to her performance of comic parts. Nothing could be more delicious than her execution of Benedict's well-known rondo, written for Malibran, and so often sung by herself, introduced here in the last act. It is always a fresh treat to listen to this delightful singer.

Besides the morceaux we have mentioned, two trios, in different styles, the one in the first, and the other in the second, act, attracted our attention. The latter, especially, which is somewhat of a fugue, is a charming composition, and will, probably become a favourite in amateur circles—its only fault for the stage is that it is too short. The finale of the first act, also, is very effective. On the whole, however, "Don Gregorio's" chief attraction lies in the drollery of the libretto, and, above all, the admirable acting of the performers; Lablache's impersonation, especially, is a masterpiece.

We must now proceed to one of the most remarkable achievements of the season, the "Pas des Déesses," of which we this day furnish our readers with a sketch. Those who have seen the "Pas de Quatre," may form some idea of the extraordinary excitement and enthusiasm this pas creates; but, as we already said last week, for poetry of idea and of execution the "Pas des Déeses" has decidedly the advantage. Besides this, though the attention is principally directed to the three great danseuses, yet the grouping is rendered far more effective by the addition of other actors.

The "Pas des Déesses" has another recommendation; it is longer; and the intervals while the three "stars" are resting themselves, are filled up by the charming butterfly steps of Louise Taglioni and the most incredible feats on the part of St. Leon and Perrot. In fact, all here surpass themselves—of Taglioni, Grahn, and Cerito, each in turn seems to obtain the advantage—though of course the palm is finally adjudged by each spectator accordingly as his taste is originally inclined. For ourselves, as critics, obliged to put away all previous predilections, we are compelled to confess that each in her peculiar style, in this Pas, reaches the ne plus ultra of her art, and each is different.

Though the styles of Taglioni and Lucile Grahn, at first sight would seem to be identical, yet they have both their own peculiar characteristics. The buoyant energy of Grahn contrasts with that peculiar quietness that marks Taglioni's most daring feats, while Cerito, who by her very smallness of stature, seems fitted by nature for another style of dancing, bounds to and fro, as though in the plentitude of enjoyment. We have never seen either of these great danseuses achieve such wonders as in this Pas. The improvement of Lucile Grahn is above all marvellous; she introduces a step entirely new and exquisitely graceful; and, though it must be of most difficult achievement, she executes it with an ease and lightness which gives her the appearance of flying. It is a species of valse renversée on a grand scale. One of the most effective moments with Cerito is that in which she comes on with St. Leon, executing a jetés batters in the air, and, at the same moment, turning her head suddenly, to catch a sight of the much-desired apple. This never fails to elicit thunders of applause, and an encore.

As for Taglioni, after taking the most daring leaps in her own easy and exquisitely graceful manner, she flits across the stage with a succession of steps, which, though perfectly simple, are executed with such inconceivable lightness, and such enchanting grace, as invariably to call forth one of the most enthusiastic encores we ever remember to have witnessed; in fact, from beginning to end of the divertissement, all the spectators are kept in a state of excitement, which finds vent in clappings, in shoutings, and bravas, occasionally quite deafening.

MUSIC.

THE BRUSSELS OPERA COMPANY.

Rossini's "Guillaume Tell" was performed on Saturday and Monday last, and Halevy's "Juive" on Wednesday, and was repeated last night. The execution o these two operas has fully sustained the fame of the Belgian troupe. In the "William Tell," changes have been made in the Arnold, on account of the continued illnesses of the artists. Laborde sustained this celebrated part of Duprez on Saturday, and M. Boulo on Monday. The latter, however, was compelled to omit the great air, "Asile hereditaire," and the "Suivez moi." He sang at times sweetly and artistically, but, at present, Arnold is beyond his physical powers. Laborde's energy in this inspiring scena created a great sensation. He sang well in tune, and executed it without a hitch, a result that rarely happens. He also was very successful in the trio, "Quand l'Helvétie est un champ de supplice"—that heart-rending composition in which Arnold is informed of his father's death by the hand of the Austrian oppressors. Massol acquitted himself with considerable ability in William Tell, although the music at times was transposed to suit his high baritone; and, in some instances, Zelger—who was the Walter on Monday had to sing his part. In the beautiful romance, "Sois immobile et vers la terre," which Tell addresses to his son just before the ordeal of the apple shooting, Massol sang with much fervour. M. Barielle, on Saturday, doubled the parts of Walter and Gesler—the former owing to Zelger's illness. On Monday, Barielle was the Austrian Governor alone. He bids fair to be a great basso; his voice is splendid, but he lacks style and refinement.

On Saturday, the Barcarolle of the Pêcheur, "Accours dans ma nacelle," was sung by one of the horn-players of the band, owing to Boulo's "illness." On Monday Boulo not only sang it, but doubled Arnold, for M. Laborde's "illness." Drury Lane Theatre, with the Brussels artists, appears to have been a complete hospital since their arrival. Mdme. Laborde's Mathilde, on both occasions, was charmingly sung, and her "Sombre forêt," and her share of the duo, "Ma presence," were rapturously applauded. The overture was nightly encored. The accompaniments were finely played, although the weakness of the stringed instruments was too apparent. The choruses deserve every praise. The introduction, in the first act, was magnificently done, and the three separate pieces of the Cantons particularly effective. The allegro vivace, "Guillaume, tu le vois," was hit off with infinite precision, and the oath, "Jurons," rendered with majestic fidelity.

SCENE FROM " ROBERT LE DIABLE," BY THE BRUSSELS OPERA COMPANY, AT DRURY LANE THEATRE.

"La Juive" was rendered remarkable by the fact that the announced cast underwent no alteration. The principal parts were thus distributed: Rachel, the Jewess, Madame Julien; the Princess Eudoxie (niece of the Emperor, betrothed to Leopold, Prince of the Empire), Mdlle. Charton; the Jew, Eléazar, M. Laborde; the Cardinal de Brogni (President of the Conclave), M Zelger; Léopold, M. Boulo; Ruggiero (the Grand Provost of Constance), M Barielle. This work was first produced at the Parisian Académie Royale de Musique, in February, 1835, Nourrit, Lafont, Levasseur, Dabadie, Mdlle. Falcon, and Madame Dorus Gras, being included in the cast. It is curious that two Jewesses, Mdlle. Falcon and Mdlle. Nathan, have in turn sustained Rachel la Juive. It was one of the lamented Falcon's greatest triumphs. Duprez's acting and singing of Eléazar have insured for this opera lasting popularity. As a grand histrionic display the Jew of Duprez is quite equal to the Shylock of Kean. It may be recollected that a two-act melo-dramatic spectacle was concocted out of this five-act opera, in Mr. Bunn's lesseeship, in 1835, leaving out all Halévy's music, save two choruses. We mention this fact, because a contemporary has fallen into the singular mistake of supposing that the English public was familiar with Halévy's composition, when, in point of fact, it was only heard for the first time in this country on Wednesday night. It was received with the greatest enthusiasm. The story is of appalling incident, and the dénouement is tragical, Rachel being thrown into the boiling cauldron, instead of being saved as in the Drury-lane version; and Eléazar then exultingly tells the Cardinal that it is his child who has fallen a victim to the religious persecutions of the 15th century. Halévy's overture was much curtailed.

In the first act, the music describes the exultation of the populace at the proposed religious conclave to put down heresy; their rage at finding the holiday in honour of the Emperor's arrival desecrated by the working of the Jew; their intended immolation of Eléazar and Rachel, only prevented by the Cardinal's clemency to the former, and Léopold's intervention for the latter—the Prince having secretly courted the Jewess under the name of Samuel. A drinking chorus, "Du Vin;" a charming serenade, "Lorn de sou amie," sung by M. Boulo; and the finale of this act, are the most remarkable pieces. The voices of Mdme. Julien and Laborde, towering above the chorus, as the Emperor's cortége defiles across the stage, told with immense effect.

The second act, which comprises the purchase of the chain from the Jew by the Princess, to present to her affianced Léopold, he being in the warehouse at the time, and the discovery that he is a Christian by the Jew and his daughter, contains some excellent music. There is the Passover Feast, with Eléazar's air, "Dieu! que ma voix tremblante;" a trio between Mdlle. Charton, Laborde, and Boulo; a duo between Boulo and Mdme. Julien, of no great merit; and a splendid finale, in which Léopold is driven from the Jew's house, with a touching intercession on the part of Rachel for her lover.

The third act is principally taken up with the concerted piece, in which the union of Léopold and Eudoxie is interrupted, just as she is about to present him with the chain, by the terrible accusation of the incensed Jewess, that the Christian Prince has courted a Jewess The excommunication pronounced by the Cardinal is a terribly grand musical picture.

The fourth act is one of extreme excitement. It opens with the duo between Eudoxie and Rachel—the former essaying to save Léopold's life by inducing the Jewess to withdraw her accusation. There is an affecting duettino between the Cardinal and Rachel, just as she is about to face the Council; a mysterious sympathy seems to animate both in this short interview. A duo that follows between the Jew and the Prelate is of awful import. Eléazar is at first told by the Cardinal that his life may be spared by becoming a Christian; this offer the Jew tauntingly refuses, and tells Brogni that he will be revenged on him before his last moments. The Cardinal smiles at the threat; but Eléazar reminds him that, before he had entered the Church, he had a wife and child; that the latter was saved from a fire in his Palace by the Jews, whom he had banished from the Eternal City. The humbled Cardinal on his knees urges the Jew to disclose the fate of the lost child, but in vain. Eléazar exults at his oppressor's agony Zelger and Laborde rendered this duo superbly. The act winds up with a grand scena by Laborde. The air, "Rachel! quand du Seigneur la grace tutélaire," is most affecting; the accompaniments display a rare skill in elegant and effective instrumentation; and the cabaletta is replete with truth and vigour. Laborde, who had been called before the curtain at the end of the second act, was similarly honoured in the fourth. He made up excellently for the Jew.

The fifth act is brief but appalling in the incidents. The Death March of Halévy is a lofty conception; and, as Rachel and Eléazar are led to their execution, these strains assume almost a painful interest. The pen becomes powerless to describe the solemnity of this last scene. The excitement is thrilling at every bar. Here is variety and invention of a high order: nothing can be more descriptive and characteristic than the music. The savage fury of the bigoted populace—the resignation of Rachel—the feverish inquietude of the Cardinal the malignant aspect of the Jew at the gratification of his revenge the chants of the Church—the automaton attitudes of the disciplined military, with that officer who gives his dreadful orders for the ceremonial as if he were only on a parade of pleasure all these points, and many more, did not escape the attention of the intelligent auditory which had applauded so vigorously Halévy's "Juive" throughout the evening.

That the pomp and parade of the "Juive" have contributed to its popularity, is an undeniable fact, but unless the music had been of a very superior class, never could it have enjoyed such a lasting fame, as it has now in every part of Europe. The instrumentation is often picturesque and generally appropriate Overscored, as regards the brass, it is undoubtedly, and the voices of the singers have been too severely taxed. Halévy has not the originality and completeness of Meyerbeer and Rossini; there is not the perpetual freshness of melody as in the French tragic operas of the two last mentioned writers, there is not similar strength nor invention, but as Fétis has justly observed, the universal success of the "Juive" is of itself sufficient evidence that it is not a work of mediocrity. Halévy is also known as the composer of some charming comic operas, such as "The Eclair," "The Freize," "The Mousquétaires de la Reine," &c. The last mentioned opera is announced for Monday next, having been postponed repeatedly, owing to the indisposition of the celebrated comedian, Coudere

We have given this day, an Illustration of the last scene from Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable." Bertram (Zelger) is urging Robert (M Laborde), to accept the fatal contract, which would bind him to the Spirit of Evil, but Alice, who is the bearer of a message from the mother of Robert, successfully interposes and saves him from the snares of Bertram. This dramatic situation is embodied in one of the finest trios penned by the gifted composer.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

The Philharmonic Society.—At the first meeting of the Directors for the season 1847 (Messrs. Anderson, James Calkin, J. B Chatterton, T. Cooke, Elliott, Howell, and Lucas), it was unanimously resolved to offer to Mr. Costa the post of Conductor for the eight Concerts. We have great pleasure in announcing that this distinguished musician has accepted the office. The musical circles will not lose, therefore, the advantage of his unrivalled capabilities as an orchestral director. Costa can claim the honour of having created, by his genius, two bands of European celebrity: the first was that of Her Majesty's Theatre, and the second that of the Philharmonic Society. We hope to hear of a third—that of the Sacred Harmonic Society. He is the only professor capable of controlling the choral and instrumental masses at Exeter Hall; and, when once he assumes the bâton therein, the amateurs will make rapid strides in improvement.

The Birmingham Musical Festival.—It is intended to execute the whole of Beethoven's Grand Mass in D, and not a portion, as was at first proposed. This is quite politic; such a stupendous work ought not to be mutilated. It is a pity however, that Costa, who achieved so much when it was performed by the Philharmonic Society, had not been engaged to conduct it; as, with the space and strength of the orchestra at the Town Hall, great effects would have been realised. Dr Gauntlett, one of our greatest organ players, has been engaged for the Mass; and he will also perform a solo on the magnificent instrument in the Town Hall. Mendelssohn's music for his new oratorio of "Elijah" has not come to hand as rapidly as could have been desired; but the faculty of playing and singing at sight, possessed in such an eminent degree by our artists, will, no doubt, insure its effective execution, especially as the composer himself will conduct the work Moscheles is to perform a Pianoforte Concerto at one of the Concerts, being his farewell performance prior to his departure for Leipzig; and the 93rd Psalm has been composed by him for Bass and Alto Solo, with Chorus and Band. The instrumentalists are as follows:—Violins, 48; Violas, 20; Violoncelli, 16; Contrabassi, 10; Flutes, 4; Oboes, 4; Clarionets, 4; Horns, 4; Bassoons, 4; Trumpets, 4; Trombones, 3; Ophicleides, 3; Drums, 2—Total, 126. The Chorus will comprise 80 Sopranos, 60 Altos, 60 Tenors, and 72 Basses—in all, 272 voices. The sum total of the strength for the Festival is upwards of 400 performers, thus divided:—

Principal Singers	14
Chorus	272
Band	126
Organists, Conductors, and Chorus Master	6
Total	418

The Conductors are Mendelssohn and Moscheles, and Mr. Munden is Sub-Conductor, and Mr. Stempson is Organist and Assistant Organist. The Festival opens on Tuesday morning, August 25th, with Haydn's "Creation." On Wednesday morning, Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be given. On Thursday morning, Handel's "Messiah;" and on Friday morning, Beethoven's Mass in D. The Concerts will be on Wednesday and Thursday evenings; and on Friday evening the Festival terminates with a ball at the theatre. All the musical performances will be this year in the Town Hall.

The Hereford Musical Festival.—The 123rd Meeting of the Choirs of Hereford, Gloucester, and Worcester, will be held on the 9th, 10th, and 11th of September. The morning performances will be in the Cathedral, the organ built by Gray and Davison for Yazor Church, having been lent for the Festival Mr Townshend Smith is the Conductor, Mr. Arnott the organist, and Mr. W. Done will preside at the piano. The principal vocalists are the Misses Birch, Williams (2), Dolby, Messrs. Hobbs, Lockey, Hatton, Machin, and Phillips. An effective band of fifty players has been engaged, with T. Cooke, Willy, and Blagrove, as principals. The sacred music will comprise Handel's Dettingen "Te Deum"; Purcell's "Jubilate" in D; Dr Croft's anthem, "God is gone up"; Dr. Boyce anthem, "O where shall Wisdom be found"; and Dr. Hayes's anthem, "O worship the Lord"; Spohr's oratorio of the "Fall of Babylon"; Professor Taylor's version of Mozart's "Requiem," and Handel's "Messiah." The schemes of the Evening Concerts are excellent; comprising selections from Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," Weber's "Oberon," Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream," Beethoven's Symphony in C Minor, &c., and gleanings from operas of all schools.

[illegible] Monster Festival in Paris.—The Association des Artistes-Musiciens lately gave a fête at the Hippodrome, in Paris, at which 15,000 persons were present. The orchestra comprised nearly 2000 players of the Military Bands of the Army.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange (Friday).—This week's arrivals of English wheat having been [illegible] what on the increase, and the weather proving fine for harvest operations, the trade for this description of produce was heavy, and prices ruled almost nominal. The demand for foreign wheat was unusually inactive, indeed, scarcely a single transaction was reported. Although the show of barley was small the trade was in a very dep[illegible] te, at previous quotations The best malt was quite as dear, but other qualities were much n[illegible]ected. The [illegible] foreign oats was good, but of English and Irish small. All kinds [illegible] rates. In beans, peas, and flour next to nothing was doing

Arrivals.—English: wheat, 3820; barley, 1010; oats, 1670. Irish. Wheat, — [illegible] oats, 1220. Foreign: wheat, 4920, barley, 4580; oats, 11,630 [illegible] 8580 quarters

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 40s to 50s; ditto white, 46s to 58s, [illegible] folk, red, 39s to 47s; ditto white, 43s to [illegible]; rye, 32s to 34s; grinding barl[illegible] tilling 26s to 28s; malting ditto, 30s to 32s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 56s to 62s, brown ditto, 51s to 53s, Kingston and Ware, 62s to 63s; Chevalier, 63s to 64s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire [illegible], 22s to 24s; potato ditto, 27s to 28s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s, ditto, [illegible] 's to 26s, tick beans, new, 36s to 37s; ditto old, 37s to 39s; grey peas, 35s to 37s; maple, 34s to 36s; white, 38s to 40s; boilers, 40s to 43s, per quarter Town-made flour, 42s to 46s; Suffolk, 36s to 38s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 35s to 37s, per 280 lbs. Foreign.—Free wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, —s to —s; white, —s to —s

The Seed Market.—Samples of various kinds of new seeds are now coming to hand, but, as yet, very few transactions can be reported in them. The best English linseed cakes are quite as dear. In all other articles, next to nothing is doing

Linseed, English, sowing, 39s to 45s; Baltic, crushing, 38s to 43s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 43s. Hempseed, 35s to 37s per quarter. Coriander, 11s to 14s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 9s to 11s; white ditto, 7s to 9s. Tares, 3s 0d to 5s 0d per bushel. English [illegible]0 to £23 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £10 14s to £11 0s; [illegible] 10s to £8 0s per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £5 0s to £5 5s per ton. Canary, 48s to [illegible] Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s; extra, 52s to 55s, white, 60s to 62s; [illegible] red, 40s to 48s, extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s, extra, 75s per cwt.

[illegible] lbs, are from 8d to 8½d; of household [illegible]

[illegible] Wheat [illegible] barley, 27s 2d; oats, 23s 5d; rye, 29s 9d; beans, 38s 9d; peas, [illegible]

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 51s 7d; barley, 27s [illegible]; oats, 23s 6d; rye, 33s 2d; beans, 37s 11d; peas, 35s 3d.

Duties on Foreign Corn Wheat, 6s 0d; barley, 4s; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 4s; beans, 4s 0d; peas, 4s 0d

Tea.—This article still continues in a very inactive state—buyers only purchasing to meet their immediate wants yet prices rule about sta[illegible]

Sugar.—West India sugar has met a very [illegible] demand, at a further decline in value of 1s. per cwt. In other kinds of raw sugar, very [illegible] purchases have been effected. Refined goods are very dull, at 65s for brown, and 66s f[illegible]

Provisions.—The sale for Irish butter is very heavy, at a further reduction in value of from 1s to 2s per cwt. On board, several parcels of Limerick are offering at 78s, and for the next month at 76s per cwt, without finding buyers. The best foreign butter is quite as dear; but other kinds are ne[illegible]ted Fine Friesland, 86s to 88s; good, 80s to 84s; and other kinds, 66s to 80s per cwt [illegible] purchased at a furt[illegible] decline in price The best Dorset is quoted at [illegible] per cwt; and fresh [illegible] per dozen l[illegible] Fine parcels of bacon move off steadily, at full prices, viz., from 58s to 60s per cwt., wh[illegible] Bale and tierce middles, as well in other qualities, rather more business has been transacted. Irish hams, are a dull inquiry. Irish lard firm, at 60s to 64s for Waterford bladdered. All other kinds of provisions rule about stationary

Tallow.—This market is steady, at 41s 6d for P.Y.C [illegible] the spot, and 41s for delivery in the last three months. Home make abundant, at 40s, net cash.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £2 5s to £3 15s, old ditto, £3 to £4; new clover, [illegible] £4 16s, old ditto, £4 0s to £5 18s, oat straw, £1 12s to £1 14s; wheat straw, £1 14s to £1 16s per load.

Potatoes. New potatoes, though in abundant supply, command a steady sale, at from £7 10s to £9 per ton.

Hops (Friday) —The accounts from the plantations being tolerably favourable, our market continues to rule heavy at barely late rates. The duty is called £145,000 to £150,000 Sussex pockets, £5 0s to £6 0s; Kent ditto, £5 5s to £6 10s; Mid and East Kent ditto, [illegible]

[illegible] Hartley, 15s, Killingworth, 14s 3d; Holywell Main, 15[illegible]

Smithfield (Friday)—Although the supp[illegible] was, comparatively speaking small, the beef trade was exceedingly dull, at, in some instances a decline in the quotations of 2d per 8lbs. There were in the market 140 oxen and cows, 310 sheep and lambs, and 16 calves from abroad. The numbers of sheep were less than th[illegible] exhibited for some time past nevertheless, the sale for them was very inactive, at Monday's reduced currencies. Lambs—the supply of which was good—moved off heavily, at late rates. The veal trade was dull, yet we can notice no alteration in value. The sale for pigs was heavy, at previous quotations. Milch cows sold at from £16 to £19 each, including their small calf

Per 8lb. to sink the offal.—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; second quality ditto 2s 8d to 3s 2d; prime large oxen, 3s 4d to 3s 6d, prime Scots, &c., 3s 8d to 3s 10d; coarse and inferior sheep, 2s 10d to 3s 4d; second quality ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; large coarse calves, 3s 6d to 4s 0d; prime small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 6d; large hogs, 3s 8d to 4s 6d, neat small porkers, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; lambs, 4s 8d to 5s 8d. Sucking calves, 18s to 29s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 19s each. Beasts, 672; cows, 131, sheep and lambs, 8950, calves, 461, pigs, 365

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a very dull trade to-day at barely stationary [illegible]

[illegible] 8lb. by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime small ditto, 3s [illegible] to 3s 4d; large pork, 3s 4d to 4s 0d; inferior mutton, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; middling ditto, 3s 4d [illegible] 3s 6d, prime ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d veal, 3s 6d to 4s 4d; small pork, 4s 2d to 4s 10d; lamb, [illegible] 8d to 5s 8d. Robt. Her[illegible]

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The gradual repayment of the sums lodged in the hands of the Accountant-General as Railway Deposits, begins to affect the value of money. This, added to the triumph of the Whig Ministry upon the Sugar question, and the generally pacific state of the whole of the Continent, has had the effect of giving a firmer tone to prices. Extensive bargains were done in Consols at the commencement of the week, and prices have been since maintained with much firmness, although the dealings have been of a more limited character. The absence of business towards the close of the week afforded no opportunity for any upward movement, but Consols closed firmly at 95⅞ to 96 for Money, and 96⅛ to ¼ for Account.

The Exchequer Market has not partaken of the improvement. It may be attributed in a great measure to the fact that a large amount of Exchequer Bills must be sold sooner or later, which have been hitherto lodged as securities for advances on Railway Accounts. This, added to the low rate of interest, deters the jobbers from offering better prices than from 9s. to 13s., at which quotation they close. Bank Stock is good at 208½ to 209. New Three-and-a-Quarters, 97⅞ to 98 India Bonds, 24s. pm. Annuities, 10 7-16ths.

The occurrences of most interest in the Foreign Mardet have been confined to Brazilian, Mexican, Spanish, and Portuguese Stock. Brazilian New Bonds on Monday quoted the advanced price of 87¾ for Money, but this price receded about 1 per cent the following day. A belief that the recent decision on the Sugar question will add largely to the Brazilian revenue, has since improved the price to 89 [illegible]57 Mexican continues very flat, at 25⅞ to 26⅛; the probability of another revolution daily strengthening. The last quotation is 26⅛. Portuguese Stock has not receded to any great extent, but the tenor of the Lisbon advices, both private and public, are extremely unsatisfactory. The Portuguese, to pay the dividends, must continue borrowing, as the people reject direct taxation, and the absurd prohibitory duties throw a larger proportion of the revenue into the hands of the smuggler. The stock, however, is tolerably well held; hence, the firmness in prices At the close of the Market, it marked 44½ 45 for the Four per Cents. There has been a decided improvement in Spanish Five per Cents., but a division in the Committee of Bondholders is very apparent. Six years have elapsed since any efforts have been made to even capitalise the coupons on the Five per Cent Stock, much less to pay the overdue dividends. The trifling amount requisite to meet the dividends on the Three per Cents, is so unequal to the dividends overdue on the Five per Cents, as to leave no justification for the course of delay pursued. Let the bondholders meet and be unanimous, and the Committee, whose duty it is to represent their claims, may possibly become more active. These remarks are offered in no unkindly spirit, but rather to forward an interest which from circumstances has not been urged with the promptitude that its magnitude merits. The closing prices are, Five per Cents, 26⅝ to ⅞; Passives, 5¾ to 6; Three per Cents, 36⅛; Dutch Two and a-Half per Cents are 59⅛; Four per Cents, 94½, Chilian, 100; and Russian, 113.

There is a decidedly improved tone in the Railway Market, and the better class of Scrips have been quietly dealt in. Newcastle and Berwick have advanced, upon the intention of an amalgamation with the Newcastle and Darlington, and London and York, for a decision on the part of the Direction to allow 5 per Cent. upon the deposits from June last. The registered list of proprietors gives 1200, which is favourable to the payment of calls from the number of holders. Hopes of its being finished by 1850 were confidently expressed. The Richmond proprietors have, for the present, declined selling the line to the South Western, anticipating that the traffic will enable them to demand better terms. South Western shareholders should see to this, existing arrangements being highly beneficial to their interests. At the close of the week, the market, although not animated, was firm, with a great and gradually extending business. Aberdeen, 9½; Birmingham and Gloucester, 129½; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 6½, [illegible] and Exeter, New, 9½; Caledonian, 13⅜; Ditto Extension, 1⅜, Cambridge and Oxford, ¼; Chester and Holyhead, 26⅛; Cornwall and Central Devon, 1⅝. Derby and Crewe, 6⅞; Direct Manchester (Remington's), [illegible] Direct Northern, 1⅛, East Counties, £14 16s., 24½; Ditto, New, £10 16s., 7⅞ p; Ditto, York Exten, 1⅛. Edinburgh and Glasgow 74; Ely and Huntingdon 4½; Exeter, Yeovil, and Dorchester, 3¼; Goole, Doncast., and Sheffield, &c., ⅝ dis; Great South. & West. (Ireland), 29½, Great North of England, New, 60; Gt. Western, 152½; Ditto ½ Shares, 86; Ditto Quarter Shares, 23½; Ditto Fifths, 34½; Guildford, Fareham, and Portsmouth, 5½; Hull and Selby, 105; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 20: Lancaster and Carlisle, 63, Leeds and Bradford, 72, Leicester and Bedford, ½ dis.; Leicester, Tamworth, &c ⅝ dis.; London and Birmingham, 232; Ditto, Thirds, 74½; London and Blackwall, 9; Ditto, New, 4⅞; London and Brighton, 66½: London and Croydon, 23⅞; London and South Western, 76⅞; London and York, 1⅝; Ditto Half Shares, 1⅝; London, Salisbury, and Yeovil, ⅝; Londonderry and Coleraine, 3; Lynn and Ely, 16; Manchester and Leeds, 115; Ditto, Half Shares, 53½; Ditto, Fifths, 11¼; Ditto, Extension, 2⅝ p.; Manchester and Birmingham, —; Ditto, Quarter Shares (B), 15; Ditto, Quarter Shares (C), 11¼; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, ⅛ p; Manchester and Southampton, 1½; Midland, 1[illegible] Ditto, New, 39½; Do., Birmingham and Derby, 122; Newcastle and Darlington Junction, New, 10⅞; Newcastle and Berwick, [illegible]; Norfolk, 27½; North British, 37½; Ditto, Half Shares, 13⅛; Ditto, Carlisle Extension, 3⅛; North Staffordshire, 3⅛ pm; Oxford, Worcestershire, and Wolverhampton, 8½; Portsmouth Direct, 4¾; Preston and Wyre, Half Shares, 8; Richmond, 17⅝, Scottish Central, New, 8; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 3; Shropshire Union, 1¼ dis; South Midland, ¾ pm; South Eastern and Dover, 45¾; Ditto, New (issued at £32), No. 1, 27⅝; Do. New (iss. at £33 6s. 8d), No. 2, 17; Do New (iss. at £15), No. 4, 3⅛; South Wales, 2⅛, West Riding Union, 2⅜ pm; Wisbeach and St. Ives, 3⅛, York and Selby, 77; York and Selby, Extension, 40½ -York, E. and W. Riding Extension, 13; Boulogne and Amiens, 12⅝: Direct Bombay and Madras, ⅛; Dutch Rhenish, 6½, East India, ⅝; Luxembourg, 1¾; Northern of France Constituted, 12¾; Orleans and Bordeaux, 7⅞; Over Yssel, 2¾ dis; Paris and Lyons Constituted, 5¼; Paris and Rouen, 38¼; Sambre and Meuse, 3⅞, West Flanders, 3⅛. Real del Monte Mine, Unregistered, 32

Saturday Morning.—Consols were firm yesterday, at the previous day's prices. Mexican receded to 25⅝. The Share Market was firm, and the account, which was the heaviest that has been for a considerable period, passed off satisfactorily. Prices were generally looking up.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

Tuesday, July [illegible]

Bankrupts.—F. B KETTLL, Brighton, horse deale[illegible] DOWALL and R. BROWN, 3 4 and 5, Pemberton-row, Gough-square, printers. F. MACQUEEN, Leadenhall street, City merchant. O. BURROWS and J GLIDDON Plymouth, brewers. J EVANS, Bristol, ar[illegible] Weston-super-Mare, Somersetshire, silk mercer. J. CARLISLE, West Derby [illegible] builder J S CHADWICK, Manchester, calico printer. E J INCHLEY, late of Drayton, Leicestershire. W. INCHLEY, late of Drayton, Leicestershire, corn dealer J. COATES, Leominster, tailor A W. J MASON, Edgbaston, Warwickshire, builder T S. SMITH, Wednesbury, Staffordshire, carpenter T. C FLETCHER, Nottingham, glass dealer. W. G. W TAYLER, Tywardreath, Cornwall, surgeon.

Scotch Sequestrations.—D. MORRISON and CO., Inverness, booksellers. J. B MAXTON and J DIXON, Leith, engineers. J. F. DIXON, Edinburgh, banker

Friday, July 31

OFFICE OF ORDNANCE[illegible]

Ordnance Medical Department. M Combe to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Savag

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY LORDS LIEUTENANT

[illegible] nt of Militia. Lieut. H. Pole to be Captain, vice J. B [illegible] R. M Williams to be Ensign

Bankruptcy Annulled.—C. M. WILLIAMS, Bristol, ironmonger.

Bankrupts.—I BIRL, Harrow-on-the-Hill, grocer. J. J SUCH, Bolingbroke-row Walworth-road, auctioneer J WRAGG Melina-place, Westminster-bridge road, Surrey, iron-merchant. J. PALMER, Worthing, Sussex painter. W. ELLIOTT, Petworth [illegible] corn merchant. B. CLARK, Kingston-upon-Thames, Surrey, export ale and porter merchant E. B. KILPIN, Isle of Wight, jeweller. A. WIKLIN, Camberwell, merchant. J CARNE, jun., Falmouth, grocer. D. WHITE, Bristol, potter. S. SAMUEL and W. SAMUEL, Birmingham, woollen-drapers and tailors. T. WILSON, Sheffield, grocer. J. JAMIESON, Leeds share-broker J HEATON, Park, Almondbury, Yorkshire, clothier. R. GILL, Richmond, Yorkshire grocer T I. RAYNER Bristol, Yorkshire, apothecary

Scotch Sequestrations.—H. HUTCHINSON, Edinburgh, wine-merchant W COLBAN Tain, baker. J. CAIRNS, Glasgow, stock and share-broker. D. MICKEL, Glasgow, tanner. T GIBSON, Falkirk, tanner

BIRTHS

On Sunday, in the Lower Close, Norwich, the lady of the Rev A Bath Power, of a daughter —At 8, Whitehall-place, Mrs John Clutton, of a daughter —At Hamilton-place, New-road the lady of Thomas Wakefield, Esq, of twins, sons.—At Whitgift-hall, Goole, the lady of [illegible] ptain Sir James Clark Ross, of a daugh[illegible] At Bedford, the lady of the Rev. Charles [illegible], of a son. At Cambridge-terrace, Hyde-park, the lady of Georg [illegible] Bankes, [illegible]—At Beetley, Norfolk, Mrs. Edward Bradbury, of a [illegible]

MARRIAGES.

At Anchlecks House, Bai[illegible] axwell Hyslop, to Mary, third daug[illegible] hart Robertson, [illegible] mund Strangford, Esq, to Char[illegible] relicter of the [illegible] John Fimbrace, [illegible] —At Upper Clapton, Charles [illegible] to Emma Sarah [illegible] daughter of the late [illegible] hn Symonds, Esq [illegible] bridge, the Rev [illegible] B.A., to Anna, young[illegible] daughter of the late Swann Harrel, Esq.—At Rochester, the Rev. William Barlow, to Anne, eldest daughter of the Hon and Rev Frederick Hotham.—At Marylebone, Frederick Lewes Austen, Esq, to [illegible] daughter of the late John Penton, Esq.—At Reigate, George Giborne, Esq, [illegible] f the Hon. Company's Supreme Court of Judicature, Bombay, to Maria, second daughter of [illegible] Smith, Esq.—At Upper Clapton, George Weekes, Esq, to Lucy Ann, only daughter of W Boxall, Esq, Brighton.—At St. George's, Hanover-square, Captain Sir Richard Grant, R.N, to Lydia, widow of James Lambert, Esq.

DEATHS

At Lucerne, the Hon. Caroline Esther, wife of Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. John S[illegible] Saumarez.—On the 22d ult., Mary, widow of the late Rev. Walter Bagot. —At N[illegible] Elizabeth, relict of the late Rev. Robert Fennell.—At Rotherfield Rectory, [illegible] the wife of the Rev Robert Gream, aged 63.—At the Rectory, Criccieth, [illegible] Jno Russell, Esq.—At Ripley, Surrey, Elizabeth, the relict of the late Rev. Geo Wal[illegible] On Tuesday the 28th inst., after a protracted illness, Susannah Harriet, the [illegible] composer, of Thavies Inn, Holborn, in her [illegible]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—MDLLE. TAGLIONI Most respectfully informs the Nobility, Patrons to the Opera, her Friends, and the Public, that HER FAREWELL BENEFIT will take [illegible] 6th, 1846, when will be performed, for the Last Time this Season [illegible] PASQUALE Norina, Mdme. Grisi; Ernesto, Sig. Mario, Dr. Malatesta, Sig. Forn[illegible] Don Pasquale, Sig Lablache.

After which, the highly successful new and original Ballet Divertissement, entitled LE JUGEMENT DE PARIS; comprising a new and original Grand Pas, composed expressly for this occasion, by M Perrot, the music by Sig. Pugni, entitled LE PAS DES DEESSES, by Mdlle Taglioni, Mdlle L. Grahn, and Mdlle. Cerito, representing the parts of Les Déesses, Mdlle. Louise Taglioni, Mdlle. James, Mdlle. Honore, representing the parts of Les Graces M. St. Leon, Paris, Mdlle. Lamoreux, L'Amour; Mdlle, Julien, L'Hymen; Mdlles. Cassan and Demelisse, Nymphes and M. Perrot, Mercu[illegible]

A Selection from a Favourite Opera, in which Mdme. Castellan will appear

After which will be presented the Second Act of the admired Ballet LA SYLPHIDE: La Sylphide, Mdlle Taglioni; La Sorcière, Madame Copere, James, M Perrot With various novelties in the BALLET DEPARTMENT, comprising the talent of Mdlle. Taglioni, Mdlle Lucile Grahn, and Mdlle. Cerito, Mdlle. Louise Taglioni, Mdme. Petit Stephan, Mdlles Honore, Demelisse, Cassan, James, Julien, Lamoreux, M. St. Leon, M Gosselin M Venefra, [illegible] The particulars of which will be duly announced [illegible] to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade.

THEATRE ROYAL LYCEUM, [illegible] Waterloo-bridge, Strand, under the Management of Mrs. KEELEY.—On THURSDAY [illegible] the Evening's Entertainment will consist of the Drama of ABOVE AND B[illegible] INTEREST, a NEW FARCE and (by particular desire, the [illegible] [illegible]OD AND RICHARD CŒUR DE LION, being for the BENEFIT of Mr and Mrs. KEELEY Tickets Places and Private Boxes, to be had of Mr. and Mrs. KEELEY, 19, Brompton-square, and of Mr GROGAN, at the Box-office

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W BATTY.—Patronized by her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Royal. Great and glorious success of our Military Achievements in India. Fifty-seventh night of representation. On MONDAY NEXT and during the week, the popular Spectacle of THE SIKH INVASION, or our Victories of 1846, written by — Stocqueler Esq., introducing the whole resources of the Establishment; Double Stud, Splendid Brass Band, &c. &c. Novel and popular Scenes of the Circle by the Foreign [illegible] Professors, Male and Female. The whole concluding with the Equestrian Drama of the PHANTOM KNIGHT, or the Fatal Kiss. Box-Office open from 11 to 5 Equestrian Tuition daily. Commencing each evening at 7.—Stage-Director, Mr T Thompson

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONVENTION, convened by the National Temperance Society. This important Assembly of the Friends of Temperance from various parts of the world will hold its First Sitting in the City of London Literary Institution, Aldersgate-street, on TUESDAY, August 4, 1846, to commence at Ten o'Clock, A.M.—TUESDAY EVENING, August 4, A PUBLIC MEETING will be held in Finsbury Chapel, Finsbury-circus. Chair to b[illegible]

A GRAND SOIREE will be held at the FREEMASONS' TAVERN, Great Queen-street, on THURSDAY, August 6, at Half-past Six P[illegible] Admission, 2s. 6d each, may be had at the Office of the Society, 11, Tokenhouse[illegible] Bank of England, Hong Kong Tea Company 12 and 13, King William-street, and at the Tavern

A GREAT DEMONSTRATION.—On FRIDAY EVENING, AUGUST 7th, a GREAT DEMONSTRATION will take place in the THEATRE ROYAL COVENT GARDEN, the Chair to be taken at Half-past Six o'Clock. The most distinguished Home and Foreign Advocates will take part in the proceedings The following Delegates are already arrived.—The Ven. Archdeacon Jeffreys Bombay, Re[illegible] Stockholm, Rev Drs. Cox, De Witt, Patton, Skinner, Smucher, and Brinsmad[illegible] O[illegible], of the Wesleyan and Professor Elton, of the Brown Univer[illegible] Marsh, Secretary of the American Temperance Union; Pohlman, Brainard, [illegible] Massey, Elihu Burritt, the learned blacksmith; Ward, Stafford, Henry Clap, and J Ashmead Esqrs. President Emory, Professor Caldwell, Revs. Dr. Beecher, Lyng, and Justin Edwards General Riley; E. C Delevan and Neal Dow Esqs., are hourly expected. Cards of Admission may be had at the following places —Temperance Provident Institution, 39, Moorgate-street Houlston and Stoneman, 65, Paternoster-row; Charles Gilpin, 5, Bishopsgate-Without Hong-Kong Tea Company, 12 and 13, King William-street; Hart's Temperance Hotel, 159 Aldersgate-street, and at the office of the National Temperance Society, 11 Tokenhouse-yard; where, also, Private Boxes for F[illegible] Circle, 2s.; Upper Boxes, 1s. 6d.; [illegible] 11, Tokenhouse-yard.

VAUXHALL OPEN EVERY NIGHT EXCEPT SATURDAY Tourniaire's Troupe—New Scenes in the Circle—Brilliant Fireworks—Splendid Illuminations—Diavolo's Descent—Firing of the Dragon Tower—Grand Concert Band of 70 Performers. Vocalists—Messrs. Sinclair, Binge, Hodges, Darcie, and J W. Sharp (the acknowledged best comic singer of the day); Mrs. John Roe, and Mrs. Aveling Smith.—Pa[illegible] of the Golden Bells. Doors open at Eight. Admission 2s [illegible], AUGUST 5, the FETE OF ST GEORGE. Mr. Green's Night Ascent [illegible]

VAUXHALL.—On WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 5, the FETE of ST GEORGE, on which occasion Mr. GREEN will make a NIGHT ASCENT in his Coronation Balloon. Many new lights and new designs will be introduced on the Waterloo Ground previous to his ascending, which will be at Ten o'Clock. An extraordinary and novel discharge of Fireworks will take place from the Car. An immense Fiery Meteor will [illegible] exhibited, which, at a given altitude, will explode, and pour forth a volume of Golden Fi[illegible] and myriads of Coloured Stars. The Illuminations will surpass in brilliancy and design all that have [illegible] been done this season. The Arms of England will be beautifully displayed in variegated lamps The music, appropriate for the occasion, selected by Alexander Lee. Tourniaire's Troupe will introduce some new Feats of Horsemanship; and the fireworks will be considerably increased. Doors open at Eight. Admission 2s.

MONDAY, the 10th a GRAND MASQUERADE, on a scale of splendour that must place all others in the shade. Extra Military Bands have been engaged. Gentleman's ticket, 10s. [illegible], will be ready for delivery on Monday, the 3rd Mr. Nathan, of Castle-street, Lei[illegible]-square, has been appointed Costumier to the Royal Property

CREMORNE GARDENS.—ANOTHER BALLOON—THE GREAT NASSAU On MONDAY, AUGUST the 3rd, 1846, Mr GREEN will ascend with a large party of Ladies and Gentlemen, at Seven o'clock.—On this occasion, there will be a magnificent entertainment, including a GRAND MORNING CONCERT, and PUBLIC BREAKFAST, the admission to the whole only One Shilling. Children, half-price On this day will also be celebrated the annual festivity of the Ancient Order of Foresters "Court held at Treasurer Walford's, The Duchess of Clarence, Vauxhall-road, Pimlico."—The Brothers of the Order will appear in Full Costume [illegible] Magnificent Grounds, Park, Maze, Shrubberies—the Banqueting Hall, its superb [illegible] Galleries the newly erected Lavender Bowers and the Million-and-one natural attractions of this truly Noble Demesne, are thrown open to the Public, for Promenade and Inspection, every Sunday, at Half-past Four o'clock. No charge is made for ad[illegible] but every visitor is expected to take a Refreshment Card to the amount of Si[illegible] Cremorne can be reached from all parts of town by Omnibus for Sixpence, and b[illegible] boat for Fourpence.

THE SPEAKING AUTOMATON, or EUPHONIA (invented by PROFESSOR FABER, of Vienna).—Every Day and Evening, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly This greatest mechanical wonder ever accomplished or conceived, has been critically examined, and highly eulogised by the Emperor and Court of Austria, the King and Court of Prussia, the Duke of Wellington; the Lord Chamberlain, Earl Spencer; Lords Eldon, Hawarden, &c.; and the prominent members of the principal scientific institutions in London It speaks anything and everything suggested by the audience in all languages, whispers, de[illegible] [illegible] including the air and words of "God save the Queen [illegible] has held conversations sufficient to fill a volume. Hours—From [illegible] past three to five, half-past seven to [illegible] Doors open half-an-hour previous. Admission, One Shilling. Children under ten, Half-price.

BRITISH and FOREIGN CLUB.—This new CLUB, under the Patronage of the Earl of Devon, Earl of Fortescue, Lord Metcalfe, Sir George Larpent and Benjamin Bond Cabbell, Esq., its first-entered Members, will give its OPENING DINNER on MONDAY NEXT, AUGUST 3, up to which time Candidates proposed will be [illegible] admitted without entrance fee. Annual Subscri[illegible] Town Members, eight guineas, and Country Members, living [illegible] London, six guineas Lists of Members, Tariff, &c., may be had on application to the Secretary, 13, George-street, Hanover-square.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A CHEMICAL [illegible] Evenings of Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. Professor BACHHOFFNER'S LECTURES on NATURAL PHILOSOPHY, with brilliant experiments, Daily. MACINTOSH'S REVOLVING ENGINE, COLEMAN'S PATENT LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE for ascending and descending Inclined Planes, FARRELL'S ARCHIMEDEAN RAILWAY, the ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, all in action. HALLETTE'S ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY VALVE. The OPAQUE MICROSCOPE. The OXY-HYDROGEN MICROSCOPE, exhibiting a fine Collection of Living Objects. A beautiful [illegible] of the CHAPEL in the CONVENT of St. CATHERINE, near Jerusalem, by Mr. Charles Smith, is one of the New Series of DISSOLVING VIEWS. Admission, 1s; Schools Half-price.

GOODWOOD RACES.

THE COMING HOME. A COMIC PANORAMA, DRAWN BY LEECH. PRICE EIGHTEEN-PENCE. London: ACKERMANN and Co., Strand; RENSHAW and KIRKMAN, 12, Budge row; DORLING, Epsom, and all Booksellers.

TO THE BERLIN WOOL and FANCY TRADE. Published this day, price 6d., ornamentally printed, with four Illustrations, THE KNITTED LACE COLLAR RECEIPT BOOK; arranged by Mrs. G. J. BAYNES. London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co.; and HUTTON and Co., 6, Newgate-street.

SHARPE'S LONDON MAGAZINE, a Journal of Entertainment and Instruction, for general reading; containing original Essays, Tales, Articles descriptive of objects of Antiquarian or Historical Interest, Translations, Interesting Extracts, Poetry original and selected, with valuable Miscellanies; printed in a new and elegant type, with superior Wood Engravings, from original designs by the best artists, is published in the [illegible]

Weekly Numbers, 1½d.; Monthly Parts, 7d; Half Yearly Volumes, cloth, lettered, 4s. 6d. May be had of any Bookseller or Newsman throughout the country.

The Weekly Number (40) of SHARPE'S LONDON MAGAZINE, a Journal of Entertainment and Instruction for [illegible] Part of Little Jane— [illegible] May be ordered [illegible]

PART [illegible] AUGUST. SHARPE'S LONDON MAGAZINE, a Journal of Entertainment and Instruction, for General Reading, is now Ready, [illegible] pages of Letterpress, large 8vo., double columns, and several Wood Engravings by eminent artists.—Price Eightpence-halfpenny!!

* * * May be ordered of any Bookseller.

Now Ready, SHARPE'S LONDON MAGAZINE.—VOL. I. (complete in [illegible]

NEW MUSIC.—The PIANISTA, No. 71, for AUGUST (now ready), contains Verdi's beautiful Opera, I LOMBARDI, price [illegible] Also New Editions of [illegible] Crown Jewels, Don Giovanni, Nino, Sonnambula, and [illegible] a large folio paper front engraved plates, only 2s. each Opera, or, [illegible] The 'Pianista' [illegible] at Love, music by Marian J. James, price 2s., or, post-free, twenty-four stamps.

WHITTAKER'S POPULAR LIBRARY. Medium 8vo.
COPYRIGHT WORKS.
MODERN AND STANDARD AUTHORS, ENGLISH AND FOREIGN.
Arago's Lectures on Astronomy, 2s.
Bell's Life of Mary Queen of Scots, 3s. 6d.
British Biography, by G. L. Smith. Cloth, 10s. 6d.
Browning's History of the Huguenots, 6s.
Carrick's Life of Wallace, 3s.
D'Aubigné's History of the Reformation. Three Parts, each, 3s. 6d.
[illegible] Cloth, 10s. 6d.
[illegible] of the Swedes. First Portion. Cloth, 8s. 6d.
[illegible] Switzerland, &c., 3s.
Inglis's Solitary Walks, 2s. 6d.
Inglis's Tales of Ardennes, 1s.
Koch's History of Europe, 6s.
Leigh Hunt's 100 Romances of Real Life, 3s. 6d.
Michelet's History of France. Parts, each, 3s. 6d.
Ditto, Vol. I. Cloth, 10s. 6d.
Michelet's Life of Luther, 2s. 6d.
Michelet's "The People," 1s. 4d.
Michelet's Priests, Women, and Families, 1s. 6d.
* * * The above four in one volumes, as Michelet's Miscellaneous Works. Cloth, 7s.
Monastic and Social Life in the Twelfth Century, 2s.
Procter's History of Italy, 6s.
Ranke's History of the Popes, 12s.
[illegible]
The Favourite of Nature. Fourth Edition, 3s. 6d.
Thierry's History of the Norman Conquest, 7s.
Thierry's Merovingian Era, Essays, &c., 4s. 6d.
Ditto bound together, cloth, as "Thierry's Historical Works," 12s. 6d.
Tytler's Elements of Universal History, greatly enlarged, 4s. 6d.
Thiers's History of the French Revolution. Cloth, 25s.
[illegible] Consulate and Empire. In Parts, each, 2s. 6d.
[illegible] Exploring Expedition. Cloth, 10s. 6d.
In the Press,
[illegible] Henry's Life and Times of Calvin. Translated by Dr. Stebbing.
[illegible] and Philip the Second. From the French of M. Mignet.
[illegible] are printed in a very clear type, on the best paper, and a half-crown part contains as much as an ordinary 8vo. volume of 400 pages, usually charged 10s. and 12s. A more detailed prospectus can be had, gratis, of any retail bookseller. Any of the parts can be had, price 1s. extra each, in cloth. WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

THE JOURNALS of the FINE ARTS on PHOTOGRAPHY. "A daguerreotype portrait, that could truly be pronounced a flattering likeness, we [illegible] never expected to see, that phenomenon, however, was presented to us on recently visiting the establishment of Mr. Claudet."—Athenæum, July 4. "We confess we had no idea of the possibility of producing anything so artistic and [illegible]"—Art Union, July 1. "Mr. Claudet's [illegible] miniature than anything we have yet seen."—[illegible] Gazette, July 4.

CLAUDET'S DAGUERREOTYPE PORTRAITS, lately [illegible] eulogised by the leading papers, and particularly by the journals of the fine arts [illegible] most exquisite miniatures. Mr. Claudet operates himself, and never allows an inferior portrait to leave his establishment. Ladies have the attendance of a respectable female. Open from [illegible]

"PHOTOGRAPHY.—The recent improvements made by Mr. BEARD in this magical department of science, certainly place it beyond comparison [illegible] methods of taking portraits. [illegible] clearing, [illegible] with an expression and effect which art can never hope to attain."—Illustrated London News, May 30.

Mr. Beard's Establishments are at 85, King William-street, City (where application for Licenses should be made); 34, Parliament-street, Westminster; and the Royal Polytechnic Institution, Regent-street.

LIVERPOOL. BY THE ROYAL LETTERS PATENT. DAGUERREOTYPE or PHOTOGRAPHIC PORTRAITS, at the Establishment, MOUNT GARDENS, within a few minutes' walk of the Custom House, Liverpool. [illegible] Portraits are now taken in all states of the weather, including the most signal [illegible] that have been recently made in the art, some of which are peculiar to this [illegible] The most accurate colouring is now added to the process. Open daily, from Nine till dusk.

COINS of ANCIENT EGYPT, GREECE, and ROME.—PETER WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins and Medals, 46, Strand, London, has just published a short catalogue of his coins and medals, which can be had post free, by sending six (6) stamps. Assignats of the French Revolution, 1s. N.B. Coins sent by post.

HEAL and SON'S LIST OF BEDDING, containing a full [illegible] sent free by post. HEAL and SON, Feather Dressers and Bedding Manufacturers, 196, Tottenham-court-road.

FURNISHING IRONMONGERY. Purchasers of Fenders, Fire-irons, Tea-trays, Table Cutlery, and Kitchen Furniture, &c., may effect a saving of [illegible] per cent. by purchasing of R. and J. SLACK, 336, Strand, opposite Somerset House, [illegible] may be inspected the largest Stock in London. Books of prices, with 200 drawings [illegible] Established 1818.

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS AND GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM [illegible] iron bedsteads, [illegible] general furnishing ironmongery, tinned copper, iron and best tin cooking vessels, best [illegible] plate, and table cutlery, japanned trays, tea urns, ornamental iron and wire works, for [illegible] baths, awns, &c., and flower-stands. [illegible] prices, in plain figures, for cash [illegible]

A RARE OCCURRENCE, even in times of Great Sacrifices.—[illegible]DISON has purchased of a retiring Manufacturer [illegible] whole Web Flouncing, amounting to several hundreds [illegible] the cost of making, [illegible] tion, in order to obtain a [illegible] sale. The price is only [illegible] Flounce. It resembles [illegible] This opportunity [illegible]

REGISTERED PALETOT OF LLAMA CLOTH.—This Garment, mostly used as an Overcoat, [illegible] during the hot weather, both in this country and abroad, worn without another coat; the same one will happily suit both purposes. To its gentlemanly appearance and moderate price [illegible] far elasticity add lightness of the material, may be ascribed the cause of [illegible] favourite. It can be bought only of the Patentees in London [illegible] observe that, whether supplied by Agents in the country or abroad, each are stamped on the inside, H., J., and D. NICOLL, 114, Regent-street, and 22, Cornhill.

THE PROVIDENT CLERKS' MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION and BENEVOLENT FUND, 42, Moorgate-street.
TRUSTEES.
Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P. | W. G. Prescott, Esq.
Thomson Hankey, jun., Esq. | Baron L. de Rothschild.
Treasurer of the Benevolent Fund—John Abel Smith, Esq., M.P.
[illegible] proposal for Mutual Life Assurance, to meet every contingency, annuities, endowments, loans, &c., and the fifth annual report, with every information, may be had at the offices, where donations and subscriptions to the Benevolent Fund are received.
Table of Premiums [illegible] yearly or quarterly, by a person of the age of 25, to secure the sum of £100 to be paid at death, or on his attaining the respective ages of 50, 55, and 60, whichever event shall first occur:—

Age next Birth-day	Age Fifty [illegible] Year.	Half-Year.	Quarterly.	[illegible] Year.	Half-Year.	Quarterly.	[illegible] Year.	Half-Year.	Quarterly.
25	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

[illegible]
July 30th, 1846.
By order of the Board,
THOS. MULLINDER, Secretary.

TONIC ALE.—This splendid new description of Bottled Beer is now in high perfection. It is strongly recommended by the Faculty as possessing peculiar stomachic qualities, promoting appetite, &c. Sold in quart and pint bottles, secured by Betts's Patent Capsule. JOSEPH STOCKTON, Sole Agent, 51, Lamb's Conduit-street.

AIR-GUNS and AIR-CANES.—An entirely New and further Improved Assortment of these portable and silently-destructive weapons now on sale, adapted by REILLY, Jun., for killing Rabbits, Rooks, Sea-fowl, &c., with ball, small birds, with shot, fish with harpoons, &c. &c., from 55s. each.—REILLY, Gun-Maker, 316, Holborn.

DRESSING-CASES.—FISHER, 188, Strand.—A large stock of CASES, with the new and improved Morticed Partitions, which cannot possibly break loose, warranted to stand the Tropical Climate. A good Dressing-case, either Ladies' or Gentlemen's, may be purchased from £3 to £50. Also, Writing-desks, Work-boxes, Leather Travelling-desks, &c.—188, Strand.

FOREIGN SILKS and LACES. (Late Tinkler's.)—RIGG, WAKEFIELD, and RIGG, respectfully invite the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public to inspect their recherche Stock of FANCY SILKS, Laces, and Embroideries, Poil de Chevre, Batiste de Laine, Barege and Muslin Dresses, Barege and Cachmere Shawls, Gloves, &c.—Rigg, Wakefield, and Rigg, 22, Old Bond-street.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at [illegible] a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house. Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a Twopenny Stamp.

DRAWING-ROOM, LIBRARY, and DINING-ROOM ORNAMENTS, in Italian Alabaster, Marble, Bronze, &c., consisting of a new and elegant assortment of Vases, Figures, Groups, Candlesticks, Inkstands, Watchstands, Beautiful Inlaid Tables, Paper-weights, &c. Imported and Manufactured by J. TENNANT, 149, Strand, London.

CHILDREN'S and INVALIDS' CARRIAGES.—Invalids' Wheel Chairs, from £3 to £35 [illegible] at INGRAM'S Manufactory [illegible]

CHIMNEY, PIER, and PICTURE. At the expense of less [illegible] of UPTON and Co., 21, Pentonville-hill, opposite Penton-street; and of Shopkeepers in general.

GAS.—30 PER CENT SAVED by the new PATENT UNIVERSAL GAS-BURNER, giving the most brilliant, pure, and powerful light, with perfect combustion, at the smallest consumption. May be had, tested, and seen burning, from eleven till four, at the patentee's, 60, St. Martin's-lane. Also to be had of most gasfitters [illegible]

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at [illegible] JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linen Drapers to the Queen, at their Family Linen Wareroom, 26, Regent-street, two doors below Piccadilly Circus. Parcels above £5 sent throughout England carriage paid.

John Capper and Son's General Linen-Drapery Business, established for nearly Seventy Years, is continued in Gracechurch-street, without change.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted.—Millinery Rooms.

A SCOTCH TWEED GOTHA JACKET FOR 30s.—This Jacket, which is well suited to be worn by Gentlemen when shooting, angling, in the library, or country ramble, is made to measure, in a first-rate style of fit and workmanship, for 30s.; best ditto, ditto, 38s.—At GRAVES'S Fashionable Tailor and Trowsers' Maker, 313, High Holborn.

TROWSERS! TROWSERS!! TROWSERS!!!—A good fit in this garment can seldom be obtained.—R. GRAVES, Fashionable Trowsers' Maker and Tailor, 313, High Holborn, after many years' experience and study, is enabled to assert, without fear of contradiction, that he can fit gentlemen with this garment better than any other person in London. The characteristic of his fitting is a gentlemanly style, with perfect ease for stooping, sitting, walking, or riding. A well-assorted stock of the newest designs to select from.—R. GRAVES, 313, High Holborn.

FOR WARM WEATHER.—BERDOE'S LIGHT SUMMER COATS will prove real, economical, and gentlemanly luxuries for the present weather, worn in lieu of ordinary cloth, and in appearance perfectly free from vulgarity or singularity, well adapted for Travelling, the Country, Sea-side, &c. W. BERDOE, Tailor and Over-coat Maker, 69, Cornhill (North side), and shortly at 96, New Bond-street. A large stock of really waterproof Over-coats, also Shooting Jackets, kept to select from.

BEAUTIFUL WOMEN.—The Thorn that veils the Primrose [illegible] ROWLAND'S [illegible] POWDER [illegible] H. HOGARD for the last forty years. Sold for the Proprietor by HOOPER, Chemist, 24, Russell-street, Covent Garden; and by most Perfumers. Price 4s., or two in one parcel, 7s.

S. MORDAN and CO.'S PRESENTATION GOLD PENCIL CASES.—The increasing demand for these elegant articles has induced S. MORDAN and CO., to prepare a variety of designs, embracing a high degree of taste and novelty. To these Pencil Cases may be attached the unique EVERLASTING GOLD PEN, forming a handsome and very useful present.—To be obtained at all the respectable Jewellers and Stationers in the Kingdom.—Manufactory, 22, City-road.

S. MORDAN and CO.'S PATENT EVER-POINTED PENCILS.—The Public are cautioned against the numerous imitations of the LEAD POINTS required for the above pencils. Unless bearing the Stamp of "S. MORDAN and CO.," they will be found perfectly useless. The spurious Lead Points so frequently offered to the Public will not fit the points of S. Mordan and Co.'s pencil-cases, and, from their possessing so large a proportion of impure matter, they prove a source of continual annoyance to the purchaser.—Manufactory, 22, City-road.

HATS.—REDUCTION OF PRICES.—NEW TARIFF.—Wholesale, Retail, and Export Beaver, Gossamer, and French Velvet Hat Manufactory, 50, Old 'Change, Cheapside, London. Purchasers of hats are respectfully informed that at this establishment they may be supplied with every description of Hats, Caps, &c., manufactured on the most approved principles, strengths adapted to all sorts of wear and shapes varied and most modern. The choice from a large stock of newly-manufactured goods is offered, and the price will be found very low for the various qualities. French hats, 7s. 6d., 8s. 6d., 9s. 6d., 10s. 6d., French satin, best, 13s., extra rich velvet, the best which can be produced, 15s.; superfine beaver, 12s. 6d., 15s. best, 18s.; extra rich short nap, best beaver, 20s. Terms cash.—50, Old 'Change, one door from Cheapside, near St. Paul's.

GIBBINS' CREAM of ROSES and ROSEMARY.—This [illegible] respectfully offered to the Public, by GIBBINS, Court Hairdresser and Perfumer (from Paris), 7, King-street, St. James's-square, as the most delicate and effectual Preservative of the Hair. Being a pomade, it will be [illegible] in promoting its growth and luxuriance.

GIBBINS' EXTRACT of ROSES and ROSEMARY is a Liquid made from the above-named plants, and when applied in Washing the Hair, renders it soft and glossy; or, after illness, its astringent properties prevent the Hair from falling off.

No. 7, King-street, St. James's-square, London.

TURNING LATHES of best London manufacture.—G. and J. DEANE invite attention to their Stock of LATHES, and Machinery therewith connected, together with the very best description of Lancashire TOOLS of every kind. G. and J. Deane, having established a factory, under the superintendence of artists who have devoted much time and capital to the improvement of Lathes, beg to announce their determination to supply only such articles as may be confidently relied upon for accuracy of construction and finish. Chucks of every description, Slide-rests, Rose-engines, and other apparatus constructed on the most approved principles. Alterations and repairs promptly attended to. All kinds of machines built to order.—DEANE'S, Gun Manufactory, 30, King William-street, London-bridge.

METCALFE and CO.'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES.—Useful Inquiry.—For proof of the extreme durability, power of cleaning, and true economy, ask all who have used Metcalfe's Brushes. The Tooth-brush [illegible] Clothes-brush, that cleans [illegible] Brush, and immense Stock of genuine unbleached Smyrna [illegible] at METCALFE and Co.'s only Establishment, 130 B, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street! [illegible] adopted by some houses.

THE NEWLY-OPENED HOUSES. ALDGATE [illegible]

The extensive New Establishment of E. MOSES and SON is now open for the transaction of the various features of its business, and the Proprietors are anxious to state the principles upon which it is conducted, and the improvements under which it has opened. Bespoke customers have now devoted to them a spacious range of Show-Rooms, entered by a Private Waiting Hall, 84, Aldgate. There are also apartments for cutting and measuring, and a select Waistcoat Room. Ladies are informed that a private Habit Room is likewise set apart; and E. MOSES and SON have made other additions [illegible] Aldgate. The Hat Depôt is at 83, Aldgate, and is furnished with every description of Hats and Caps, of the best quality and fashion. The Hosiery Mart, 155, Minories, is equally distinguished for the worth and variety of its articles, from which the most satisfactory purchases are made. The Outfitting and General Clothing Department, 154, and 155, Minories, has equal recommendations, and is an important feature in the New Houses of E. MOSES and SON. Let it be remembered that "Economy! Economy! Economy!" is the maxim at the new Establishment [illegible] Self-Measurement, and other essential information, obtain the [illegible] book, entitled [illegible] Present, and Future," which may be had gratis, and post free, of the Proprietors, E. MOSES and SON, 154, 155, 156, 157, Minories, and 83, 84, 85, and 86, Aldgate, City, London.

E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Woollen-drapers, Clothiers, Hatters, Hosiers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen, regret to be obliged to guard the public against imposition, but, having learned that the untradesmanlike falsehood "of being connected with them," or it's the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, [illegible] for obvious reasons, they have no connection with any other house in or out of London, [illegible] those who desire genuine cheap clothing should, to avoid disappointment, call at or send to the Minories or Aldgate [illegible]

NOTICE.—The entrance to the Bespoke Department is at 84, Aldgate.—No business transacted at this Establishment from sunset Friday evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is resumed till twelve o'clock.

IMPOSTORS!—Rheumatic Pains, Weakness, Contractions of the Limbs, Deformity, and Spinal Affections.—CABBURN'S OIL and PILLS having been so generally successful in the Kingdom and various parts of the world, particularly in Ireland, from whence reports have recently been made by persons of high distinction, as to the restoration of children and adults, even when given over by the faculty, has induced unprincipled persons not only to attempt depreciating [illegible] Cabburn's Oil, for Rheumatism, &c.," being on the top of the capsule over the cork. Cases of importance to the afflicted, as to cures, may be seen in the Dispatch, Bell's Life, Lloyd's, and the Sunday Times, August 2nd, 1846 [illegible] Street, London.—N.B. Ask for Cabburn's Oil, for the cure of Rheumatism, to be had of medicine vendors, in bottles, 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., and 22s., and the Pills in Boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.

CHRISTENING OF THE PRINCESS HELENA.

Another Bud of England's royal Rose
Smiles on the Tree of Life,
Unconscious of the splendours which enclose
Its nascent destinies with honour's rife,
The infant pure presents its little brow
To the baptismal dews which come from Heaven,
While its high Sponsors undertake the vow
To guard the child from sin's insidious leaven.
Smooth be thy path, sweet Helena, on earth,
Worthy thy Sponsors' name and Parents' love—
Worthy the land that joys to claim thy birth,
Worthy that better, blessed land, above!

Last Saturday evening, the christening of her Royal Highness the infant Princess, third daughter of her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, took place in the Chapel, Buckingham Palace.

The Royal Family arrived at half-past six o'clock, and were received by the Vice-Chamberlain, the Maids of Honour, and the Grooms and Equerries in Waiting.

The visitors took their seats in the Chapel. In the front row, on the south side, were the following Foreign Ministers:—M. Van de Weyer, Baron de Moncorvo, Count de Kielmansegge, Baron de Beust, and Count de Jarnac. Their Excellencies wore their full diplomatic costumes, and the ensigns of their respective orders of knighthood.

In the second row were the following members of the Administration:—The Earl of Clarendon, the Earl of Besborough, Earl Grey, Earl of Auckland, Viscount Palmerston, and Viscount Morpeth.

On the north side of the Chapel, the following occupied the front row:—The Lord Chancellor, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Duke of Wellington, and the Marquis of Clanricarde. Behind them sat Lord Campbell, Sir John Hobhouse, Sir George Grey, the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay, the Right Hon. H. Labouchere, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The Duke of Wellington was attired in a Field Marshal's uniform, and the Ministers generally in the full dress official costume. The illustrious Duke and Lord Lansdowne wore the Collar of the Most Noble Order of the Garter; the Earl of Besborough and the Marquis of Clanricarde the Collar of the Most Illustrious Order of St. Patrick; Lords Clarendon, Auckland, and Palmerston, the Collars of the Most Honourable Military Order of the Bath.

The Chapel was brilliantly lighted by gas, which has been lately fitted up on Professor Faraday's principle of ventilation.

The altar was covered with crimson velvet, richly trimmed with gold; and in its front stood the font, of silver gilt, placed on a fluted pedestal of white and gold.

Chairs of crimson and gold were placed on each side of the font, for the accommodation of the Royal Family and sponsors. There were purple velvet cushions at the foot of those appropriated to the use of her Majesty and Prince Albert.

At ten minutes to seven o'clock, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, the Bishop of Norwich, the Rev. Mr. Courtenay, and the Rev. Mr. Howarth took their stations at the altar.

The sponsors for her Royal Highness the infant Princess then entered the Chapel in the following order:—

Robert Laurie, Esq., Windsor Herald. | Albert William Woods, Esq., Lancaster Herald.
Lord Marcus Hill, Comptroller of the Household. | Earl Jermyn, Treasurer of the Household.
The Sponsors, viz.,
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, Proxy for Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Orleans.
His Royal Highness the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz.
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge
Followed by the Ladies and Gentlemen of their Suite.
Her Majesty's Procession followed.
Two Heralds,
James Pulman, Esq., Norroy. | Walter Aston Blount, Esq., Chester.
Equerry in Waiting to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, Lieut.-Col. F. H. Seymour. | Clerk Marshal, Lord Alfred Paget. | Equerry in Waiting to the Queen, Colonel Arbuthnot.
Gentleman Usher, Col. Diggle. | Garter, Sir Charles J. Young. | Gentleman Usher, Sir William Martins.
Groom of the Bedchamber to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, Captain Francis Seymour. | The Vice Chamberlain, Lord Edward Howard. | Groom in Waiting to the Queen, Colonel Berkeley Drummond.
Lord of the Bedchamber to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, Lord George Lennox. | Groom of the Stole to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, Marquis of Abercorn. | Lord in Waiting to the Queen, Lord Byron.
The Lord Steward, Earl Fortescue. | The Lord Chamberlain, Earl Spencer.
His Royal Highness Prince Albert, leading [illegible] of Wales. | The Queen [illegible] Highness [illegible]
Her [illegible] Duchess of Gloucester. | His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, leading her Royal Highness Princess Alice.
His Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge. | Her Royal Highness the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz.
His Serene Highness the Prince of Leiningen, leading her Royal Highness Princess Mary.
Master of the Horse to the Queen, The Duke of Norfolk. | Mistress of the Robes to the Queen, The Duchess of Sutherland.
Lady of the Bedchamber in Waiting, Countess of Dysart.
Maids of Honour,
Lady Caroline Somers Cocks, | Hon. Frances Devereux.
Bedchamber Woman, Lady Caroline Barrington.
Ladies in attendance upon the Royal Family.
Gold Stick, Marquis of Anglesey. | Captain of the Gentlemen-at-Arms, Lord Foley.
Master of the Household, Colonel Bowles. | Master of the Buckhounds, Earl Granville.
Silver Stick, Colonel M'Dowall. | Field Officer in Brigade Waiting, [illegible]
Gentlemen in attendance upon the Royal Family.

The Royal Sponsors sat near the altar on the north side of the chapel, and behind them were the Treasurer of the Household (Earl Jermyn) and the Comptroller (Lord Marcus Hill). The Queen, Prince Albert, the Duchess of Gloucester, the Duke of Cambridge, the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg Strelitz, Prince George, the Princess Mary, and the Prince of Leiningen sat opposite the Royal Sponsors. The Mistress of the Robes (the Duchess of Sutherland), and the Lady in Waiting (the Countess of Dysart) were behind the Queen. The Lord Steward, the Master of the Horse, the Vice-Chamberlain, the Lord and Groom in Waiting to the Queen, and the Lord and Groom in Waiting to Prince Albert, stood near her Majesty and his Royal Highness.

The whole of the costumes of the ladies and gentlemen were very elegant and magnificent. [illegible] white, of valuable lace and the richest satins or silks. The gentlemen were either in uniform or full court dress.

The Queen's dress was of rich white satin, of Spitalfields manufacture, striped with silver tissue, and richly trimmed with Honiton point lace. Her Majesty wore a wreath of white roses [illegible] Her Majesty also wore the Ribbon of the Order of the Garter, and a splendid diamond George.

The Princess Royal and the Princess Alice had white net dresses, trimmed with Nottingham lace, over white satin.

The Prince of Wales wore a white Cashmere pelouse, bordered with silver.

Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal Family standing on one side, the Royal Sponsors opposite, and the Archbishop having advanced from the altar to the font.

The infant Princess, in the arms of the head nurse, attended by the Dowager Lady Lyttelton, and conducted by the Lord Chamberlain and the Groom of the Stole to Prince Albert, was stationed in the Chapel close to the font, above the Sponsors, and opposite the Queen.

The Primate immediately commenced the service; the Bishop of London, the Bishop of Norwich, and the two attendant clergymen, remained at the altar.

On demanding the name of the Princess from the Sponsors, the Duchess of Cambridge named her "Helena Augusta Victoria," and the Venerable Prelate performed the ceremony in a most impressive manner. The first name is pronounced "Helena," with the accent on the first syllable.

After the baptism, the Princess Helena was returned to the arms of her nurse.

At the conclusion of the baptism, and at the commencement of the Lord's Prayer, her Majesty knelt down, the Prince of Wales looked doubtfully in the Queen's face; but, at a sign from his august parent, he knelt reverently down, he and his sister, the Princess Royal, on either side of the [illegible], in front of which her Majesty was kneeling, and joined [illegible] prayer. (Our Artist has illustrated this most impressive scene.)

At the conclusion of the service the Princess was conducted out of the Chapel by the Lord Chamberlain and the Groom of the Stole to Prince Albert, attended by the Dowager Lady Lyttelton.

The infant Princess was dressed in a rich robe of Honiton lace over white satin.

Their Royal Highnesses the Princess Royal and the Prince of Wales stood on either hand of her Majesty, and joined with the Queen in the prayers of the service. The princess Alice remained with the Duke of Cambridge.

The Royal Sponsors left the chapel in the same order as they entered.

Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Royal Family then left the chapel, after most graciously acknowledging the obeisances of the Archbishop.

Her Majesty's [illegible] additional performers [illegible]

[illegible] a state banquet was served in the picture-gallery, on one long table, extending nearly its whole length, and covered with centrepieces, vases, epergnes, and ice pails, all of silver gilt, the vases being filled with the choicest exotics and plants in flower, the whole brilliantly illuminated with wax lights in gold candelabra. The Queen was conducted to a seat in the middle of the table, on the east side, the Royal guests occupying opposite and adjoining seats. At the south end of the gallery was a splendid buffet of plate, including shields, salvers, tankards, and cups, many of the smaller articles wrought with precious stones; the Armada urn, the shield of Achilles, the Cellini cup, and the St. George tankard forming the centre compartment.

At the conclusion of the repast, the Earl Fortescue, Lord Steward of her Majesty's Household, gave the following toasts:—"The [illegible]," "The Queen," "Prince Albert," "The Duchess of Cambridge."

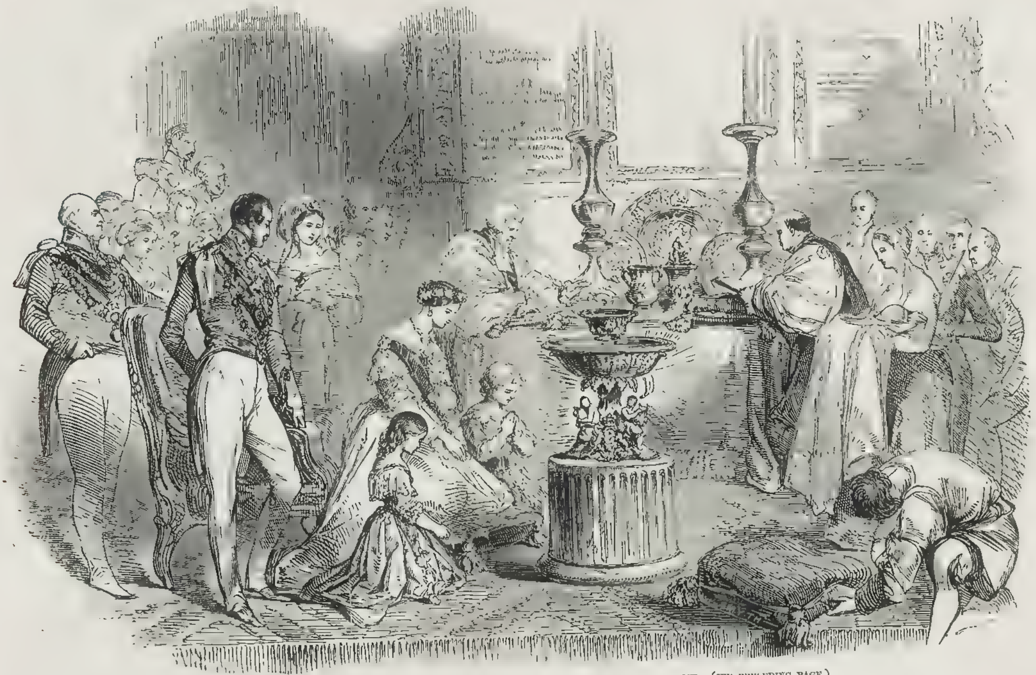
The last toast was given in honour of the Royal Duchess' birth-day, Saturday being the anniversary of her Royal Highness' natal day.

Her Majesty [illegible] full Court dress.

Refreshments were served [illegible] during the evening in the green drawing-room, and supper was served at eleven o'clock in the State dining-room.

The principal ornament of the supper table was the "Christening cake," made by Mr. Mawditt, her Majesty's [illegible] front of each pier having a column entwined with [illegible] miniature bouquets were inserted in vases placed [illegible]

The company took their departure shortly [illegible]



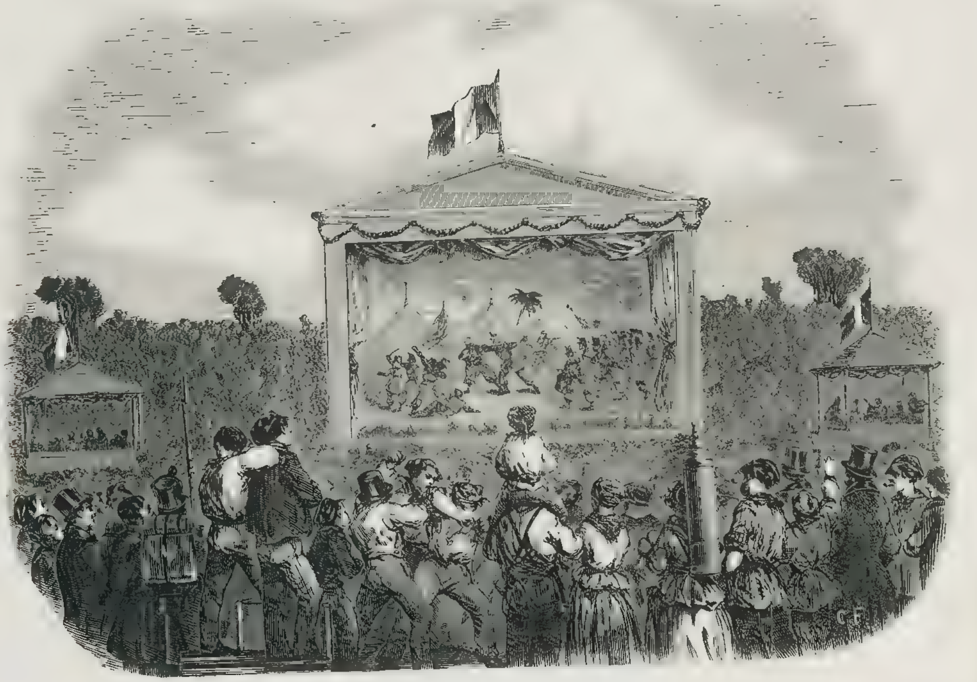
CHRISTENING OF HER ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCESS HELENA AUGUSTA VICTORIA.—THE CLOSE.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

ANOTHER ATTEMPT TO SHOOT LOUIS PHILIPPE.

It is with deep indignation we have to state that another attempt has been made to assassinate Louis Philippe. The following particulars of this atrocious occurrence are contained in a letter, dated Paris, Wednesday night, and published in a late edition of the Standard of Thursday:—

"I am sorry again to be compelled to communicate to you the information that another of those diabolical attempts which have but too frequently disgraced the history of France, has just been made upon the life of our good King, Louis Philippe. A large crowd was this evening assembled in the Tuileries, enjoying the concert of military music which was being performed in the gardens, in commemoration of the sixteenth anniversary of the glorious 29th day of July, at which time his Majesty was tranquilly walking in the balcony, showing himself to the assembled multitude. This was the moment eagerly seized upon by the diabolical regicide to attempt the murder of our beloved Monarch. The villain, mixing in the crowd, suddenly drew from his breast a long pistol, and immediately fired at the King, but, providentially, without effect. The man had no time to effect his escape; for, no sooner was the report heard, than he was immediately seized by the by-standers, and conveyed away in safe custody. From the lateness of the hour at which the occurrence took place, I have no time left to ascertain the name or whereabouts of the regicide, or any other than the brief particulars which I have above communicated. Of course, the most intense interest was excited among all the inhabitants of Paris, in order to ascertain whether his Majesty's life had been preserved, or whether he had sustained any personal injury; and when they had been assured that the King was unharmed, the most lively satisfaction was expressed that Providence had once more interposed on behalf of our beloved Monarch, and that the King still lives to promote the true interests, and secure the welfare and happiness of his country."

The period at which this flagitious attempt has been made—the anniversary of the 29th of July, when the French people struggled for their liberties—has naturally created additional excitement. As the fêtes commenced so late in the week, we have received but few particulars of them. The great scene of attraction is the Champs Elysées, where, as will be seen in our Illustration, a temporary theatre is erected, the performance generally representing some achievement of the French army. It is here also that the Mat de Cocagne is erected.



JULY FETE IN THE CHAMPS ELYSEES

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, AUGUST 1, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 223.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, AUGUST 8, 1846. [Sixpence.

THE KAFFIR WAR.

IT is the fortune, or rather the misfortune, of all border districts to become the seats of violence and war, and to continue so, long after the interior parts of a colony or country are settled. This is the case even where nations akin to each other, and equally advanced in civilization, join their boundaries; still more likely is there to be strife where the white man approaches the territory of the savage; there "knowledge is power" in every sense of the term, and the superiority of the civilised man is at once felt, feared, and hated. He is submitted to as an inevitable evil; but the submission of the aboriginal inhabitant is only regulated by his weakness. Any cause that gives him a chance of recovering his lost position, revenging his wrongs, or gratifying the love of gain by plunder, which large sections of mankind have often preferred to labour, is sure to be seized. And, in an unsettled country with a wide frontier, and a boundless continent beyond it almost unexplored and unknown, such opportunities are not unfrequent. The population is thinly scattered; all parts are not equally defended: and though a savage race may be quiescent for longer or shorter periods of time, they have a quick instinct in detecting the weak points of a frontier or settlement; and, if capable of any organisation among themselves, are sure to fall upon it. If their numbers increase greatly in proportion to those of the Europeans, similar results ensue. Then the Colony is not always in the same state as to its defence; the Empire of England is wide, and her army comparatively small; if troops are wanted on the Banks of the Indus or the Sutlej, they cannot be at the same time at the Cape of Good Hope. Where the exigency is greatest, there strength is concentrated: other points must shift as they can. The best trust of the British Colonist is mostly his own right hand; the Jupiter of the Colonial Office is too far off to be invoked readily; and when he can be made to hear at all, moves but slowly; or sends a long and incomprehensible despatch, or letter of instructions, when the aid actually wanted is a couple of regiments.

Such a Border War we are at present engaged in with the Kaffirs; it is the old conflict between the invading white man and the savage, which is for-ever being renewed. When we remember to how late a period these predatory wars lasted, even in Europe, no one can be surprised at their existing now at the outposts of civilization. The "forays" of the Scotch and English borders are being re-enacted in the British settlements of South Africa, with a painful and curious identity of incidents. And it behoves the authorities to act promptly now, and on a better system hereafter; the enemy we have to meet is evidently not to be despised. We do not now come in collision with them for the first time; the race that inhabits the "steppes" of the interior of South Africa is strong and hardy, cunning, exceedingly numerous, and for skill in cattle-stealing and bush-fighting, unrivalled. The names of some of their chiefs have become known in Europe; formerly we were able to gain and keep—Hinza, one of the ablest of their chiefs, in alliance with us; but, possibly, there may be a "Young Kaffir" party, who, like "Young Ireland," renounces all Saxon connection, and not only talks of physical force, but uses it with considerable effect, as the losses of our colonists prove. The leader of the present movement against us is said to be a young man of a Chief's family, who had always been looked on by the settlers as an idiot, or something not far removed from it; have we here another "historical parallel?" Has Kaffirland produced an African Brutus, concealing his faculties under an assumed fatuity, till the hour of action arrived? At all events, the crisis must be met boldly and at once, or the dangers of 1826 will be revived.

Next to knowing ourselves, it is, perhaps, of the most importance that we should know our enemies; we add, therefore, a brief sketch of the general characteristics of the Kaffir race. We might have compressed them into as short a space as the old voyager whose chapter on the "manners and customs" of a savage tribe consisted only of one pithy sentence, "manners they have none, and their customs are very beastly." Neverthelesss, we owe something to our neighbours, and, therefore, indulge more extensively in detail. The Kaffirs, then, are a race with some affinity to the Negro; they are brown-coloured, the darkest among them coming from the north east. They have their own language, which our missionaries have been able to acquire, and use in spreading a knowledge of Christianity among them. That they do not practice its rules, cannot be made a peculiar reproach to them; few Christian nations, in their dealings with savages, have ever set the example. At present, the use they are making of their Bibles and Testaments is for loading their muskets against us: if they knew the history of the last European war, they might reply that men far better taught desecrated holy things quite as unscrupulously. They cultivate a few sorts of grain, but diet chiefly on flesh, milk, roots, and fruits—very good things all, when well cooked, and enough of them: the manufacturing districts, in 1842, saw many a worse bill of fare. Pigs, geese, hares, and fish, it is said, they refuse to eat—whether by some strange diffusion of the Mosaic prohibitions is not known, but there seems a trace of them.

UMKEI. COBUS CONGO. NEGRIMMO.

KAFFIR CHIEFS.—(FROM ORIGINAL SKETCHES.)—SEE NEXT PAGE.

Their great and favourite occupation is breeding cattle; they "glory in their goad and their talk is of bullocks." The employment is held in a sort of honour among them; and in one of the tribes—the Tambukis, we believe—the place in the village where the Herds are collected is at once their Parliament, Court of Law, Public Dining-place, Slaughter-house, Parade and Burial-ground of the Royal Family! Things, we may imagine, are rather primitive with such a combination of appliances. They hunt extensively, and are not particular as to what the game is; the gazelle and antelope serve when lions, buffaloes, elephants, and such minor prey are scarce; and sometimes, the lions in return hunt them. Of their religion but little is known; the differences of error and ignorance are countless; they have Priests, Magicians and Sorceresses; the Magicians are sometimes murdered if they fail; the Sorceresses are always believed—a deference to the fair sex that does the race infinite credit. The know the use of money, build kraals and villages of mud, and wood huts, and are expert in the use of the assagai or dart, which in their hands is a very formidable weapon; but the extent to which they have obtained fire-arms and ammunition by the suicidal avarice of the white-traders, makes them still more dangerous. Their chiefs are hereditary, and exercise despotic power.

Collect such a people in large numbers on a badly-defended frontier, armed, with farms and cattle all around them, and the havoc and destruction they can commit can readily be fancied. Their skill in cattle stealing and love of the pursuit is unsurpassable: the "reivers" of Scotland, the Donald Bean Leans and Rob Roys of our annals, are scarcely worthy to be named in the same breath with them. The ease with which they convey large herds of cattle from place to place, and the way they manage them, are said to partake of the marvellous. They have repeatedly spread consternation through the colony by their inroads; boundary treaties made with them have been always broken: it may be questioned if they understand such obligations. They must be met by force, or the colonists will be ruined. In the interview the deputation of merchants connected with the Cape had with Earl Grey, a short time since, Mr. George Greig said—

> From some knowledge of the frontier, and after a long residence at the Cape he could assure his Lordship that no description could convey an adequate idea of the misery and desolation which had been spread over the fine district of Albany in three short weeks. There was not even the allegation of a fault on the colonists' part; the aggression was wholly unprovoked. The case alluded to was far, very far, from being a solitary one. Many persons, previously wealthy, had lost the earnings of twenty years' labour, and were driven from their homes, and dependent for bread upon private bounty and Government rations. The thousands of wool-bearing sheep, horses, oxen, &c., which covered the settlers' farms prior to the incursion, were now nearly all stolen, lost, or killed, and the houses a heap of ruins.

To check the progress of these disasters, the whole colony is under arms, and the force that can be brought together numbers 18,000 men. The main difficulty will be, not to check the advance of the Kaffirs, but to prevent their harassing and perpetual attacks. We fear we shall have an Algiers of our own at the Cape, if the Kaffirs ever produce an Abd-el-Kader.

KAFFIR CHIEFS.

The originals of the annexed Portraits are three drawings by Mr. Pons, a clever artist, of Graham's Town. We annex a few biographical memoranda.

Umkei, or Umkye, is a chief of the Gaika tribe; the drawing of him was made by Mr Pons, at the request, and in the presence, of the writer of this brief notice.

Umkye is about 50 years of age; but, as the Kaffirs are unable to keep records, their ages are mere matters of uncertain recollection; and, from their appearance, very difficult even to guess at. He is stated to be one of the chiefs friendly to the British; but his alliance is not to be depended upon. When the insurrection of the Cape Corps broke out, a few years since, Umkye was supposed to be deeply implicated in it. An idea of the manners of Umkye may best be conveyed in a few anecdotes:—One day he called at the house of the writer, and asked for a soopie, i. e., a glass of brandy, which was given him, as well as one to his interpreter; he then requested sixpence, which he received; and afterwards expressed a wish for "smoke," meaning tobacco, which was also granted him. He was accompanied by five of his wives (a Kaffir possesses as many as he chooses to maintain), and was so struck by the appearance of the lady of the house, that he termed her a charming "vrouw," and offered to buy her for a few cows, hinting that two or three of his vrouws might be thrown into the bargain, if an exchange would be desirable. This chief's wealth, he asserted, consisted of 50,000 head of cattle; which, at the South African value, of about £3 per head, formed, for that place, a large sum; yet he would ask for a few pence, or a bit of tobacco, with all the earnestness of a St. Giles's beggar. The Engraving represents him in his war costume, in the act of throwing the assagai; his skill in which is truly surprising. The leopard skin caross, and the plumes of the Kaffir crane, as worn round the head, are the distinguishing marks of a chief, none of less rank being permitted to wear them.

The diet of the Kaffirs consists of sour milk, pumpkins, and meat occasionally; and perhaps no part of the world exhibits a finer race of men. The women, as in all savage countries, are in appearance comparatively inferior to the men, and the labour is almost entirely performed by them.

Cobus Congo is a chief of some importance, and has always been friendly to the settlers. Twenty-five years' intercourse with them has much influenced his habits, which are civilised in comparison with his colleagues; though his original character, in which cunning predominates, occasionally displays itself; indeed this is a prevailing feature in all the Kaffir tribes.

One evening, at about sunset, he called with two followers upon a friend, at whose farm the writer was staying, to beg a cow and two or three sheep. This begging (so highly characteristic of the race) reminds one of the old Highland custom in Scotland of levying "Black mail:" in Kaffirland it is, from prudential motives, always complied with. The Chief was attired in an old soldier's jacket, a pair of leather trousers, and shoes of untanned sheepskin. He supped, and passed the night with us; rose early in the morning, and, after a hearty breakfast, departed with his presents, to enact the same scene at the next settler's abode. He shaved himself, and behaved at table with the utmost propriety.

Observing the writer, who had newly arrived in the colony, to be a stranger, he asked his name; and, slowly repeating it many times, detaching the syllables, declared he should always remember it. The next question was, had he any cattle? and being answered that he had not, but equivalents, the chief offered to sell some wives, at the rate of ten cows each, or two for fifteen. This offer being declined, a warm invitation was given to visit him in Kaffirland; and, among other inducements, was the promise of an ox being killed for the occasion.

Negrimmo is a plebeian chief, famed for skill in throwing the assegai; though, after some practice, the Europeans, from their superior strength of arm, become almost as expert as the natives.

The Kaffirs, by theft and illicit trading with the settlers, have acquired large quantities of muskets and ammunition; and, as recent intelligence shows, are using them in the present war with great effect.

PIUS IX.

The new Roman Pontiff, Mastai Feretti, is one of those characters that irresistibly attract the sympathy and respect of every man who can feel for the vicissitudes of humanity, and honour the virtues which triumph over them. What Louis Philippe is in the Tuileries, the present Pope is in the Vatican—a graduate in the school of adversity, and, therefore, well fitted to bear his honours meekly—a man of many sorrows, and the patient of strong passions, and, therefore, not likely to be callous to the misery, or implacable to the failings of others. There beams, moreover—no slight recommendation to a people of fervid soul like the Italians—a halo of romance round Mastai Feretti such as Abelard himself could have scarcely eclipsed. His Holiness, it is well known, commenced his career as a soldier in the Guarda Nobile of Pius VII.; and, while serving in that corps, composed exclusively of the Roman nobility, the young Guardsman fell desper[illegible] in love; and, as a matter of course, had a rival, and fought a duel—happily without fatal results. The lady of his ardent affection—which was by her fondly [illegible] reciprocated—fell ill, and died, leaving her lover a prey to the most poignant sorrow, which nothing could mitigate but the healing consolations of relig[illegible]

Abandoning, therefore, a military life, Feretti devoted himself to the Church, in which he was most powerfully patronised by "the Protestant Pope," Pius VII., whom he accompanied on the forced visit to Paris, to crown Napoleon; and also on his return to the Eternal City, after the Modern Alaric had been sent by the Allies to Elba. Next we find him as a missionary in Chili; and, during the sanguinary War of Independence in South America, the influence of the Roman monk was often and successfully exercised in mitigating the horrors of that fratricidal strife. Thence returned to his fatherland, his kind patron created him Bishop of Sologno, his native diocese; and thus, step by step, advancing, not only in the learning and piety of his profession, not only in its dignities and the high esteem of its dignitaries, but also in a knowledge of the people, their wants and wishes, the whilom guardsman succeeds to the Pontifical Chair amidst the rapturous plaudits of his own subjects and the good wishes of all Europe, with [illegible] one bigot exception—Austria. Viva Pio Nono! who [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] the prisoner, flings down the chains of despotism, and [illegible] in the [illegible] of our age—Peace and Progr[illegible]

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

Paris is in a state of excitement about the elections, which took place on Sunday throughout France. The result has been very favourable for the Government. We have not space to give a minute account, but as a general result it may be stated that the Ministry have a majority of about 120.

The Government party has only sustained three defeats. In two instances the Opposition candidates have defeated the old Ministerial members, and in one (Rouen) an Opposition candidate has been elected in the room of M. Barbet, the mayor, who has been promoted to the peerage. In the provinces, the loss to the Opposition has been much larger than was anticipated. In Paris, Ministers have gained one college from the Opposition. Among those of the Opposition excluded are two most conspicuous members of the Legitimist party, M. Gras de Neville, the oldest member of the house, and M. Bechard. The Minister of Public Instruction defeated the well-known Dupont de l'[illegible]ure; and M. Joly, one of the foremost of the Republic party, has been ousted at Toulouse. M. Casimir Perier has beaten General de Lamoriciere, the intended brother-in-law of M. Thiers, in the first college of Paris, although backed by all the foremost men of the opposition, aided by the éclat of military renown. M. de Cormenin, the author of a vast number of pamphlets on the civil list, and whose opposition to the dotation of the Duke de Nemours was in a great measure the cause of the failure of that measure, has been beaten by a large majority. M. de Larey, one of the most violent of the Legitimists, and one of those who made the celebrated pilgrimage to Belgrave-square, to pay his devotions to the old monarchy, in the person of the Duke de Bordeaux, has been beaten by a majority of upwards of 300 at Montpellier. The Duke de Mouchy (who, in consequence of the death of his father-in-law, now takes the title of Duke de Noailles), has also lost his election. M. de Genoude, a Legitimist, and the editor of the Gazette de France, has been elected in place of the Duke de Valmy.

All the Ministers have been re-elected. The Count de Salvandy has been elected for two places. M. Gustave de Beaumont has also been elected for two places. Several of the King's aides-de-camp, such as General Berthort, General d'Hondetot, Col. Jamin, &c., &c., have been re-elected. Among the Radical party, M. Arago and M. Ledru Rollin have also been re-elected.

In the second arrondissement of Paris M. Lefebvre has been rejected, and the Opposition candidate, M. Berger, has carried the day. This result has excited great surprise. The only other check of any consequence sustained by the Government is in the case of M. de St. Aulaire, the son of the French Ambassador in London, who lost his election in consequence of his supposed connection with the affair of the Pritchard indemnity.

Among the members the news of whose re-election has been ascertained are M. d'Eichthal, the banker, Marquis de Montalembert, Marshal Bugeaud, M. Dupin, &c., and among the new members, the Marquis de la Valette and M. Descloiseaux, the Under Secretary in the department of Justice.

No fewer than 40 Opposition deputies of the former Chamber have been replaced by Ministerialists, thus creating a majority of 80, independently of the very large majority possessed by the Government in the Chamber.

The Moniteur Algerien of the 30th ult. announces that Abd-el-Kader had positively retired into Morocco. On the 4th, whilst the Emir was at Teniat-Gassi, to the east of Ras-el-Ain, the Hamian Garabas induced him to execute a razzia upon the territory of the Beni-Guils, which was attended with no success. The most complete tranquillity prevailed throughout Algeria.

MEXICO.

We have accounts from the city of Mexico to the 29th of June.

The Mexican Congress was installed on the 6th, and addressed by General Paredes, in explanation of his policy and the situation of the country.

The insurgents of Guadalaxara, Mazatlan, and San Blas continued in arms, notwithstanding the efforts of Government.

The state of Durango was devastated by the Indian tribes.

The Californias had declared their independence of Mexico, it was supposed through American intrigues.

General Taylor, with the American army greatly augmented by volunteers, remained in possession of Matamoras, and had occupied the villages of R[illegible], Camargo, and Mier, on the right bank of the Bravo (or Rio Grande del Norte). He was expected to advance on Monterey and Santillo, where no resistance could be offered.

Vera Cruz was declared in a state of siege, and martial law proclaimed on the [illegible]th of June, as it was reported that the American squadron would attack the Castle of San Juan de Ulloa on the 10th of July. The greater portion of the British, foreign, and Mexican residents had consequently left the city for the interior.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Opening of the Baths and Wash-houses for the Labouring Classes. The baths and wash-houses, recently erected for the use of the labouring classes, in the north-western district of the metropolis, were, on Monday, for the first time, opened to the public, the result fully justifying the opinion that such establishments will not only prove of the greatest benefit, but be eagerly sought after by the industrious and poorer classes of the community. The doors of the establishment in George-street, Euston-square, were opened on Monday morning at eight o'clock, and closed at seven in the evening, and the following is a return of the number of persons who availed themselves of the advantages afforded. Cold baths, 274, of which number 261 were males and 13 females; warm baths, 140, of which number 130 were males and 10 females—making in the whole 391 males and 23 females, and a total of 414 persons. On Tuesday, the baths were opened as early as five o'clock, and before eight they were used by upwards of 100 persons. The receipts for Monday from the penny and twopenny baths amounted to £5 11s. 9d.

The Health of the Metropolis.—A preliminary meeting of the members of the National Philanthropic Association, for the promotion of improved paving, cleansing, and drainage of the streets, was held on Tuesday at the London Tavern. It was stated that this meeting was called in consequence of a letter which appeared a few days since, addressed by the Lord Mayor to the Directors of the New River Company, in which it noticed that the metropolis was threatened with cholera, and therefore it was thought advisable to call a preliminary meeting, for the purpose of devising measures, if possible, to prevent the City from incurring the fatal consequences of the present menacing pestilence, and at the same time to urge the necessity of adopting good sanatory regulations. The Rev. James Harris was called to the chair, when several suggestions were made, and it was proposed that a general public meeting should be called, at which it would be advisable to invite the Lord Mayor to preside. The meeting was very thinly attended; many of those present were medical gentlemen, who stated that no Asiatic cholera was known to exist at present in London. A deputation to wait on the Lord Mayor was appointed.

The World's Temperance Convention. On Tuesday, the delegates appointed by the Temperance Associations throughout the world to attend the Convention arranged by the National Temperance Society of England, assembled in the theatre of the City of London Literary Institution, Aldersgate-street. There were about 250 delegates present, including, in addition to those from English, Irish, and Scotch towns, representatives from the United States of America, the East Indies, and France. The object of the Convention is, to ascertain the state of the Temperance cause in all parts of the globe, to receive suggestions as to the most effectual method of extending the Temperance reformation, and to effect the formation of a Temperance Union throughout the world. Samuel Bowly, Esq., of Gloucester, having been appointed chairman, rules for conducting the business were agreed upon. The speakers, from whom reports of the state of the Temperance movement were received, were the Rev. Dr. Marsh, of Massachusetts; Dr. Benher (described as the father of the movement in America), from Connecticut; the Rev. Thomas Skinner, of Bath; Mr. Thomas Swindlehurst, of Preston; Dr. Grindrod, Mr. Clapp, Mr. George Johnson, of Edinburgh; and Mr. E Smith, of Sheffield. The Rev. Dr. Marsh said, as an instance of the esteem in which the Temperance cause was held in Massachusetts, that, at an entertainment given in honour of the inauguration of the President of the University, at which 600 of the chief citizens attended, not a single drop of strong liquor was drunk. In the Haslington Union there were no fewer than 150,000 reformed drunkards, and it was not at all uncommon to see 4000 children collected in one vast building, singing Temperance hymns. In the course of the proceedings, a man, called "Dickey Turner," and described as the author of the word "teetotal," was introduced to the meeting, and loudly cheered. After discussing the best method for extending the Temperance reformation, the Convention adjourned until Wednesday. The delegates resumed their sittings on Wednesday morning. Samuel Bamby, Esq., was called to the chair, after which, the Secretary, Mr. Biggs, read a paper giving a statistical account of the state, progress, and prospects of the Temperance cause throughout the country. The paper gave, as near as could be ascertained, a statement of the amount spent in spirituous liquors. In the town of Bury alone, no less a sum than £2 3s. 4d. was expended by every man, woman, and child. The quantity of spirits annually consumed in the United Kingdom was—in England, 7 [illegible] pints; in Ireland, 13 pints; and in Scotland, 23 pints per soul. A resolution was submitted, to the effect that total abstinence was the only true principle of the Temperance reformation, that the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors is ruinous to the body and soul, and should not be permitted. A very long and animated discussion followed this motion, which passed with but one dissentient.

Births and Deaths in the Metropolis.—The births registered in the metropolis in the week ending Saturday, Aug. 1, were 1229, 635 being males, 594 females. The number of deaths registered in the same period was 1086, being 83 more than last week, 188 more than the average of five summers, and 119 more than the average of five years. The principal increase of deaths is from diarrhœa, the number having been 186; 30 more than in the preceding week, and 153 above the average of corresponding weeks during five summers.

Metropolitan Improvements. The Commissioners of Metropolitan Improvements have decided upon opening a line of communication between the points of junction of St. Martin's lane, Cranbourn-street, Newport-street, Upper St. Martin's-lane, and Long-acre, in a line through King-street, Covent-garden, to the Strand, demolishing all those wretched and filthy hovels in Angel-court and Rose-street, Long-acre. The street will terminate directly opposite Bedford-street.

The Weather.—The storm of Saturday has not at all reduced the temperature. It appears from a register taken from the Royal Humane Society's Receiving-house, Hyde Park, that on Monday, at noon, the thermometer was at [illegible] deg. On Tuesday, at that hour, it was 76 deg. On Wednesday morning, during and after the storm, the temperature was much higher than on Tuesday. On Thursday, in the shade, the thermometer was at 77

The Topic of the Da[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] lights?"

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The business this evening was brief, and not important. The Royal Assent was given by Commission to various bills. Lord Campbell laid on the table a bill to amend the Irish Marriage Act, which was read a first time. The Baths and Washhouses Bill was read a second time; and the Small Debts Bill committed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

New Writs.—A new writ was ordered for Chester, in the room of Lord Robert Grosvenor, who has accepted the office of Treasurer of her Majesty's Household. Also for St. Albans, in the room of the Earl of Listowel, who has accepted the office of a Lord in Waiting to her Majesty.

The Marine Condemned to Death at Cork.—Admiral Dundas, in answer to a question from Mr. Curteis, said that in the case of the marine recently condemned to death by sentence of Court-martial, on board H.M.S. Queen, at Cork, the Board of Admiralty were prepared to consider the case mercifully.

The Business of the Session.—Lord J. Russell, in reply to Mr. S. Crawford, said that the Government had come to the opinion that it would not be advisable to bring forward, this Session, a bill either for the permanent or temporary compensation to tenants in Ireland, on account of the difficulty of the subject. But at the very commencement of the next Session, the Government would be prepared to introduce a bill framed after mature consideration. Mr. Labouchere announced that the Government intended to proceed with and pass the Exclusive Privilege Trading Bill, the Rating of Property Bill, the Ejectment Bill, the Fisheries Bill, the District Lunatic Asylum Bill; and the Baths and Washhouses Bill. There was one measure, the Leases Bill, on which he was not yet able to announce a positive determination whether it should or should not proceed in the present Session.

Enlistment in the Army.—Captain Layard moved an address to the Queen, praying her Majesty to direct inquiry to be made, how far the reduction of the period of service in the army from the present unlimited term would tend to procure a better class of recruits, diminish desertion, and thus add to the efficiency of the service? The hon. member recommended ten years as the period of service.—A discussion arose, but Mr. Fox Maule having intimated that the attention of the Government would be directed to the subject, Captain Layard withdrew the motion.

Various votes for the army were agreed to in Committee of Supply.

The Sugar Duties.—The Sugar Duties Bill was brought in and read a first time.—The House adjourned at a quarter past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS. Tuesday.

The House sat only about an hour and a half, and the business transacted was not sufficiently important to require minute analysis.

The Ecclesiastical Patronage Bill, the Burial Service Bill, the Art-Unions Bill, and the Irish Marriage Act Amendment Bill, were read a second time.

The Baths and Washhouses Bill passed through Committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

The sitting to-day was short and unimportant.

Sir R. Peel presented a petition from the Corporation of the City of Dublin, complaining that they did not enjoy corporate rights and privileges equal to those enjoyed in England.

On the motion of the Attorney-General, a Bill to authorise Writs for the Election of Members to serve for Chester to be directed in future to the Sheriff of the County of Chester, instead of to the Chamberlain of the County Palatine of C[illegible], was passed through all its stages, in order to become law before Saturday (this day), when the writ for the new election is made returnable.

Lord J. Russell gave notice that, in the course of the week, he should propose that the House should sit at noon daily, Saturdays included.

The Tobacco Duties.—Dr. Bowring moved a resolution, pledging the House to a revision of the Tobacco Duties, with the view to their reduction.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer objected to the motion, on the ground of the [illegible] amount of revenue which would be sacrificed by the proposed reduction. Mr. Hume was proceeding with a speech in support of the motion, when the House was counted out, shortly before six o'clock, there being only thirty-five members present.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. Wednesday.

The House sat to-day from twelve to six; but the business was chiefly of a negative character; that is to say, time was occupied in discussing bills which were withdrawn.

Mr. Mackinnon withdrew the Cemeteries Bill, on the pledge of Sir George Grey that it was the intention of the Government to bring in a bill on the subject next session.

Mr. Bouverie withdrew the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill, upon a similar understanding with the right hon. Baronet.

The Ejected Tenants (Ireland) Bill, the Waste Lands (Ireland) Bill, and the Episcopal Revenues and Dioceses Bill, were severally withdrawn.

The Wreck and Salvage Bill, and the Baths and Washhouses Bill, were read a third time and passed.

On the motion of Sir G. Grey, the Sugar Duties (Permanent) Bill was read a second time.

Lord Morpeth obtained leave to bring in a Bill to empower the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods to sell, on certain conditions, sites for dwellings for the poor, out of the hereditary estates of the Crown; also, a Bill to empower the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods to sell, on certain conditions, sites for dwellings for the poor, out of lands vested in them under Acts for the improvement of the metropolis.

Lord Morpeth likewise obtained leave to bring in a Bill to enable the Privy Council to make regulations for the prevention of contagious disorders, and for the more speedy removal of nuisances.

Mr. Labouchere obtained leave to bring in several Irish Continuance Bills.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

Joint Stock Banks (Scotland and Ireland) Bill.—The Earl of Clarendon moved the second reading of this bill.—The Earl of Eglinton said that he had considered the subject since he last addressed the House, and he should not continue his opposition to the bill. After some discussion, the second reading was agreed to.

The Small Debts Bill was read a third time and passed.

Poor Removal Bill.—Earl Grey moved the second reading of this bill.—The Duke of Richmond objected to the bill, and gave his opinion that it ought to be postponed to another session. After some discussion, the second reading was agreed to, and the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

Religious Opinions Bill.—On the order of the day being moved for the second reading of the Religious Opinions Bill, Lord J. Russell said the object of the bill was to remove some liabilities to which parties were subjected in consequence of entertaining certain religious opinions. Colonel Sibthorp strongly protested against any measure of this nature, which went to upset the acts of their forefathers—acts founded in truth and justice. At a future stage, as he saw a favourable opportunity, he would move that the bill be rejected.—A division took place. The numbers were

For the second reading	79
Against it	10
Majority	[illegible]

The bill was then read a second time, and ordered to be committed.

Sugar Duties Bill. This bill went through Committee.

Several other bills were disposed of and the House adjourned at ten o'clock.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"W. R.," Glasgow.—We concur with you in thinking the Problem by Mr. Bolton in six moves, which appeared in the Notices to Correspondents in our last number to be one immeasurably superior to the far-famed Indian position on the wrapper of "The Chess-Player's Chronicle." Your solution of this beautiful piece of strategy is [illegible]

"A Chess Φιλός."—Is it possible you are unaware that the position you have forwarded as "originally from China" is none other than the Indian Problem, which was first published here nearly two years since?

"Κατω."—In Castling on the King's side, the King is played to Knight's square and the Rook to Bishop's square. In Castling on the Queen's side, the King is played to Queen's Bishop's square and the Rook to Queen's square. You can Castle after your K[illegible] been in check.

"Sopracitta."—Your variation both on No 127 and No. 131 are erroneous [illegible] in the latter cannot be delayed beyond the stipulated moves. See our solution to-day.

"C. O." We have already suggested the same variation in [illegible]

"C. L. G."—See the Notices to Correspondents in the last Number.

"Chesso-Mania."—We have not space to give the solutions you require.

"R. F. H.," Calcutta.—The promised communications will be highly acceptable [illegible] are those you have politely forwarded. The Problems from your collection shall appear immediately.

"T. N. W."—It occasionally happens that the pressure of more important matters compels us to omit a portion of the Chess article. The Games promised have [illegible] in type three weeks, but want of room has driven us to omit them.

"Citizen D."—The admirable games played by Messrs. Harrwitz and Kieseritzky blindfold, on the occasion of the Tournament at the London Chess Club last Monday, with those in the match now pending between Messrs. Harrwitz and Kieseritzky, have been received, and shall be given whenever we have room for them.

"C. L. G." must be a very young hand at the science not to see how mate would [illegible] forced in No. 127, if Black, for his first move, took the Queen with Bishop. 1. [illegible] have not space to publish the solutions to the Enigmas. 2. You will find [illegible] address of an Amateur wanting to play a game by correspondence in our pres[illegible] Answers. 3. Apply at Messrs Caslon's, the type founders.

"Etonensis."—Try your skill upon the difficult position by Mr. Kling, in this m[illegible] Number of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle": if you find the key to it in an hour, we shall think you a very promising aspirant for Caissa's [illegible] ber, no moving of the pieces, as in the former instance.

"A. B. C."—The position No. 280, in the current Numb[illegible] Chronicle," is one of the most remarkable ever published. It is in four m[illegible] only; and we have found no amateur yet, who has succeeded in solving it from diagram alone.

[illegible] the whole of the "Rousseau and Stanley" [illegible] "Chess-Player's Chr[illegible] [illegible] make a delightful [illegible]

Solutions by "Valley-field," "Sempronius," "Ver-non," "Sopracitta," "J. W. N.," "W. F.," "G. P.," "Chess [illegible]ania," "C. O.," "H. T. M.," "J. F.," "Civis," "Alderman," "Major ——" "Marazion," "J. W.," Wells; "J. W. D.," "H. A. G.," "F. N.," and "Alpha," are correct. Those by "P. S.," Plymouth; "True Blue," "J[illegible]," "Tertius," "Philax," and "B. B.," are wrong.

 An Amateur desirous of playing a friendly Game by Correspondence, may hear of a competitor [illegible] addressing "[illegible] G., Post-Office, Alford, Lincolnshire."

Solution to Problem No. 131.

White.	Black.	White.	Black.
1. Q to K R 8th (ch)	Q to her Kt sq	4. Q to her R's sq (ch)	Q to R's 2nd
2. B to K R 5th	R takes B (best)	5. R mates
3. Kt to Q Kt 6th (ch)	P takes Kt

Solution to Problem, No. 132.

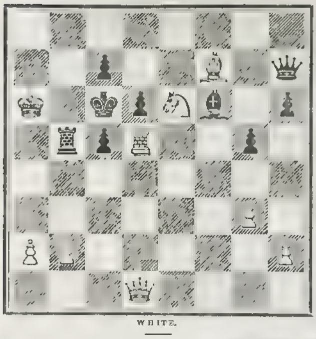
White.	Black.	White.	Black.
1. B to K B's 6th (ch)	K to Kt 5th	3. Q B P one	Q B P one (best)
2. P takes K B P (ch)	K to B 5th	4. Q B P one	Anywhere
		5. Kt mates

Problem, No. 133.

By Mr. J. A. Christie.

White playing first gives mate in four moves.

BLACK



WHITE.

CONTINUATION OF THE GAME PLAYED BY MESSRS. HORWITZ AND PERIGAL, AGAINST MM. KIESERITZKIJ AND HARRWITZ.

(For the opening moves see our last number.)

White, (Messrs. H. and P.)	Black, (Messrs. K. and H.)	White, (Messrs. H. and P.)	Black, (Messrs. K. and H.)
27. K to Kt sq	Q to R 5th	47. Q to B 3rd (ch)	Q R to K 4th
28. Q to K 3rd	Q to R 4th	48. Q Kt P two	Q B P two
29. B to K 2nd	Q to R 2nd	49. P takes P	Q P takes P
30. R to K Kt 3rd	B to K B 4th	50 Q R P two	K to B 2nd
31. Q to K Kt 5th	B to Q 2nd	51. Q to Q Kt 3rd (ch)	K R to K 3rd
32. K R to K Kt 4th	B takes B	52. Q to K B 3rd (ch)	K to Kt 2nd
33. Q takes B	Q R to K 3rd	53. Q to Q B 3rd	K Kt P one
34. R to K R 3rd	R takes B	54. K to R 2nd	K to Kt 3rd
35. R takes Q	K takes R	55. Q to Q 3rd (ch)	Q R to K 5th
36. Q to Q 7th	Kt to K B 5th	56. Q to her 8th	K Kt P one
37. Q to K Kt 4th	K R to Kt sq	57. Q R P one	P takes P
38. Q to R 4th (ch)	K to Kt 2nd	58. Q to K Kt 8th (ch)	K to R 4th
39. Q to Kt 5th (ch)	Kt to Kt 3rd	59. Q to B 7th (ch)	K to Kt 4th
40. K R P two	K R to K sq	60. Q to Kt 8th (ch)	K to B 4th
41 K R P one	Q R to K 3rd	61. Q to K B 8th (ch)	K R to B 3rd
42. P takes Kt	P takes P	62. Q takes P (ch)	Q R to K 4th
43. Q to her 2nd	K R to K 2nd	63. Q to Q B 8th (ch)	K R to K 3rd
44. Q to Q 4th (ch)	Q R to K 4th	64. Q to K B 8th (ch)	K to K 5th
45. Q takes Q R P	Q Kt P one	65. K to Kt 3rd
46. Q to R 3rd	Q R takes K P

Drawn game.

THE TWO FOLLOWING GAMES WERE PLAYED AT THE LONDON CHESS CLUB, BETWEEN MR. HORWITZ AND M. ST AMANT, DURING THE LATTER'S RECENT VISIT TO LONDON.

Black. (M. St. A.)	White. (Mr. H.)	Black (M. St A.)	White (Mr. H.)
1. Q P two	K B P two	16. Q P one (c)	Kt to Q sq
2. Q B P two	K Kt to K B 3rd	17. Q R to Q sq	K Kt P two
3. Q Kt to B 3rd	K P one	18. K Kt P one	K Kt P takes P
4. K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt P one	19. K P takes P	Q R to Q Kt sq
5. K P one	Q B to Kt 2nd	20. Q R to Q 2nd	Kt to K B 2nd
6. K B to K 2nd	K Kt to K 5th	21. K R to Q sq (d)	R to Q sq
7. Castles	K B to K 2nd	22. Q B to Q R 3rd	Kt to Q 3rd
8. K Kt to Q 2nd	Kt takes Q Kt	23. Q to her 3rd (e)	Q B to R 3rd
9. P takes Kt	Castles	24. Q to her Kt sq	Kt takes P
10. K B P two	Q B P two	25. Q R to his 2nd	Kt takes B
11. K B to his 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	26. R takes Kt	Q B P one
12. Kt to Q Kt 3rd (a)	Q to her B 2nd	27. Kt to Q 4th	B takes R
13. Q B to Kt 2nd (b)	Q R P two	28. P takes P	P takes P
14. Q R P two	K R to B 3rd	29. Kt to Q B 6th	R takes R (ch)
15. Q to her B 2nd	K R to his 3rd	30. Q takes R	B to Q Kt 2nd

And Black resigns.

(a) Q P one, and when the Kt moved, K P one would have been much stronger play

(b) This and the preceding move are miserably weak.

(c) The advance of this Pawn is not so potent now, since the Q sq is open for the Kt

(d) With the view to take P with P, and then play R to Q's 7th.

(e) After this, the game is irredeemabl[illegible]

BETWEEN THE SAME PLAYERS.

White. (Mr H.)	Black. (M. St. A.)	White (Mr. H.)	Black (M. St. A.)
1. K P two	Q B P two	21. Q to her 5th, (ch) (d)	Q takes Q
2. K B to Q B 4th	K P one	22. P takes Q	Kt to Q 5th
3. K B P two	Q P two	23. Kt takes Kt	B takes Kt
4. P takes P	P takes P	24. Kt to K 2nd	B to Q R 2nd
5. B checks	Q B to Q 2d	25. P to Q 6th (e)	K R to Q 2nd
6. B takes B (ch)	Q takes B	26. K R to Q B sq	Q Kt P two
7. K Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	27. K R to Q B 6th	Q R to K 3rd
8. Castles	K B P one (a)	28. R takes Q R P	Q R takes P
9. Q B P two	Q P one	29. R takes R	R takes R
10. Q Kt to R 3d	Q R P one	30. R to Q Kt 3rd	K to Q [illegible]
11. Q Kt to B 2d	B to Q 3d	31. R to Q B 3rd	[illegible]
12. Q P one	K Kt to K [illegible]	32. Q R P one	Q Kt P one (f)
13. Q Kt P two (b)	Castles (c)	33. P takes P	R to Q R 7th
14. P takes P	B takes Q B P	34. K Kt P one (g)	R takes Kt
15. Q R to Kt sq	K R to K sq	35. R to B 8th (ch)	K to B 2nd
16. Q B to Q [illegible]	K Kt to K B 4th	36. R to B 7th (ch)	K to his 3rd
17. [illegible] to R sq	K R to K 2d	37. R takes B	R to Q 7th
18. K Kt to [illegible]	Q R to K sq	38. K to Kt sq	R to Q 8th (ch)
19. Q to K B 3[illegible]	K Kt to K 6th	39. K to Kt 2nd	K P one, and wins.
20. [illegible]	P takes B

(a) [illegible] bend the purport of this strange development.

(b) [illegible] to have been played without reflection[illegible] Black might have taken the P [illegible] offered, without any apprehension

(c) [illegible] takes P, or Q Kt P two, would have been far more effective.

(d) Surely the doubling and isolating the Pawn here was not called for [illegible] perhaps to have given an outlet to the King [illegible] good move

(g) It was impossible to save the Kt. Had he played it to Kt sq, Black would have replied with R to R 8th, and afterwards P to [illegible]th.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 34.—By M. Riboulet.

White.	Black.	White.	Black.
K at his 2nd [illegible]	K at K R 7th	[illegible]	Ps at K R 2nd, K R 6th, and Q 2nd

White playing first, mates in four moves.

[illegible] By the Rev. H. Bolton

White.	Black.
K at Q Kt sq	K at his B 3rd
Q at K R 3rd	Q at K B sq
Kt at K 5th	R at Q R sq
Kt at Q B 5th	R at Q R 2nd
Ps at K R 4th, K Kt 3rd, K 3rd, Q 5th, Q Kt 2nd, and Q [illegible]	Kt at Q Kt 2nd Ps at K Kt 2nd, K 5th, and Q 2nd

[illegible] plays, and mates in three moves

[illegible] Termination of a Game between M. St. Amant and Mr. Schulten of New York.

White (M. St. A.)	Black (Mr. S.)
K at Q B sq	[illegible]
R at K Kt 5th	[illegible]
R at Q [illegible]	[illegible]
Kt at K 3rd	[illegible]
Ps at K R 4th, Q Kt 2nd, and Q R 2nd	B [illegible] Ps at K Kt 5th, K B [illegible]d, Q B 3rd, Q Kt 2nd, and Q R 2nd

White, having to play, mated in four moves.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

We find by our advices from the Continent that the storm which raged so violently around the metropolis has visited the north of Germany and parts of Belgium in a varied but also destructive manner. At Munich it commenced as far back as the 22nd ult., the lightning being of the most intense character, killing three of the men employed at the terminus of the railway from Munich to Augsburg, and running along the wires of the electric telegraph, injured at least ten or twelve persons, besides other damage and loss of life yet to be ascertained. At Cologne, about nine on the evening of the 29th ult., there was a smart shock of earthquake; and in Liege the same was also experienced.

Letters from Lisbon of the 23rd ult. state that on that day her Majesty was delivered of a Prince.

A letter from Copenhagen, of July 23, says:—"Intelligence has been received from Iceland, of the date of June 24, that the measles were raging there so violently, particularly on the coast, that in the single parish of Alptanes 40 persons had died. The eruption of Mount Hecla had ceased. The potato malady was general in the neighbourhood of Odensee, and its effects were more pernicious than last year."

At a Court of Common Council held on Monday, the sum of 100 guineas was voted to Mr Waghorn for his exertions in accomplishing a rapid communication between India and this country. The sum of 200 guineas was originally proposed, but an amendment was pressed and carried by which it was reduced to half that amount.

A few days ago, says a letter from Vienna of the 24th ult., a young man, having a very melancholy air, who was standing at the door of one of the churches at Tokay, drew a pistol from his pocket as a newly-married couple were leaving the church, and fired at them. As there was a heavy charge of slugs in the pistol, he wounded them both mortally. Immediately afterwards he drew forth a second pistol, and, putting the barrel into his mouth, drew the trigger, and destroyed himself.

A letter from Hanover, of July 26, announces that King Ernest was entirely restored to health, and able to take carriage exercise. It would appear, from the opinion of medical men in Hanover, that his Majesty's illness had presented alarming symptoms.

A letter from Ems of the 29th ult., describes the shock of the earthquake experienced there as of a very decided and alarming character. It took place about half-past nine o'clock in the evening, when many families, from the early hours usually observed there, were retiring to rest. Under the great terror it caused, there was a general rush into the street; and at a concert which was then going on at the principal hotel of the place the confusion was extreme, owing to the efforts of the audience to escape from the building. Fortunately no serious injury or loss of life occurred.

Some mischievous persons have destroyed the list of voters placed on the different parish church-doors, and have obliged the overseers of most of the metropolitan parishes to employ watchmen.

On the evening of the 29th ult. three shocks of earthquake were felt in different parts of the town of Cologne. At five and twenty minutes to ten a house in the Peter's-strasse shook visibly. At Siegeberg, a town about twelve miles east of Cologne, similar shocks were felt at about twenty minutes past nine.

Letters from Rome of the 23rd ult., state that the greatest order prevailed, and all classes vied in evincing their gratitude to the new Pontiff. Deputations had arrived from Bologna to thank the Pope for the amnesty, and similar missions were expected from every part of the Romagna. The Pope had announced his intention of receiving all persons and all petitions twice in every week. The first reception, which took place on the 23rd, was numerously attended. All the political prisoners, with the exception of the reserved classes, had been liberated throughout the provinces.

A letter from Ancona of the 22nd states that a collision had taken place at Cezene, in the Romagna, between the Swiss soldiers of the garrison and the inhabitants of the place, in which a good deal of blood was spilt. The reason which led to it was not known. Three soldiers and about a dozen of the citizens were killed, besides the wounded. At the time the letter was written peace had been restored.

The Minister of Public Works in France, has, in consequence of the numerous accidents on the French railroads, and which have in a great measure arisen from the want of skill and the inexperience of the drivers of the locomotives, resolved to establish a school of instruction in Paris for this class of persons.

At two minutes past ten, on the evening of the 29th ult., three successive shocks of earthquake were felt at Frankfort; the direction being from west to east, according to one, and from north to south according to another version.

The oyster season commenced on Tuesday morning at six o'clock, at Billingsgate and Hungerford markets, with the promise of a more abundant supply, and of a superior quality to that of several years past. The custom of opening the hatches of the oyster boats for sale as the clock struck twelve on the night of the 4th of August, is now discontinued, in consequence of the loss of life that invariably occurred by the dealers crowding into the boats during the darkness of the night.

It is understood that Lord Clarendon is now occupied in preparing a bill having for its object the checking of railway absorption of capital.

A document signed by three thousand women of Philadelphia, and addressed in terms of congratulation to their sisters of England, on the termination of the Oregon feud, is now on its way to this country

Mehemet Ali arrived at Constantinople on the 19th ult., when he met with a distinguished reception. The Sultan received him standing, and conducted him to a chair close to his own, and then conversed with the Viceroy for about an hour. Simultaneously with the arrival of Mehemet Ali, a modification was announced in the Turkish Ministry. The famous Riza Pacha has been named Minister of Commerce, and the appointment of this enlightened man to such a post, and at such a moment, was thought to indicate some serious commercial negociations for which old Mehemet has a peculiar taste.

The communication between Portsmouth and London by electric telegraph is stopped for the present, the lightning having taken such effect upon the wires as to preclude the possibility of working the telegraph. At Farnham the shock communicated was so great as to throw down one of the posts which supports the wires, and the dial in the Gosport terminus is rendered useless by the electric fluid having passed into it and deranged all the machinery.

A return has been laid before Parliament relative to the sums received from the Chinese Government, under the treaty of Nankin, for the payment of debts due by Chinese merchants to British subjects. It appears, therefrom, that the total amount of sums received from the Ch[illegible] 3,000,000 dollars. Debts paid therefr[illegible] dollars, leaving a balance remaining [illegible] dollars. There are further [illegible] British subjects [illegible] not yet paid.

The remaining portion of the Oatlands estate, once the property of the late Duke of York, was sold by auction on Tuesday. There were fifteen lots, which fetched about £20,100; the grotto, with its rare shells, conchs, and valuable specimens of coral, minerals, and petrifactions, was knocked down for £1900. There was an active competition for the property.

From a return just issued it appears that the total cost of producing postage stamped envelopes since 1841, has been as follows:—In 1841, £4268; 1842, £5530; 1843, £5290; 1844, £6190; 1845, £6948; and in the first quarter of 184[illegible], £1846. Total, £30,075 1s. 5d. Repaid by the consumers, in addition to the retailers' profit, £31 068, leaving a profit to Government during the above years of £992, 18s. 7d. The number of stamps issued during the above period is 83,6[illegible]4,240.

The Antwerp papers state that the advices direct from Circassia differ in a material degree from the news published in the official journals of St. Petersburgh. Instead of the Russian troops proving eminently victorious in the recent affair which occurred between them and the Circassians, the latter are said to have harassed their opponents considerably, and given stronger proofs of their courage than any yet experienced.

The recent shock of earthquake appears to have been felt in many parts of Germany. At Marburg, it was so strong that several persons fell from their seats, and the bell of the Town Hall rang several times. In one house, where a party had assembled, the tea table was overturned

The inhabitants of Berne, in a meeting on the 1st instant, adopted the new constitution by a large majority.

The military commission of inquiry into the late events at Cracow has terminated its labours, and communicated the results of its examination, which are as follows. Out of 1250 prisoners, 200 have been sent into Austria and Russia, the rest remain at Cracow; 220 are in prison, and 830 have been set at liberty The civil commission, composed of two Prussian, two Austrian and Russian judges, with a President, will have to try the 220 above-mentioned prisoners, a labour which will occupy at least a year.

Mr. Cobden and his lady are gone to France. They sailed from Brighton for Dieppe on Wednesday.

The monument of Christopher Columbus, which the Sardinian Government has caused to be executed in marble, for the city of Genoa, is complete, and will be immediately erected on the Quay di Darsena. The inauguration will take place in September next, during the time that the meeting of naturalists is being held in that city. The King and the Royal Family will be present on the occasion.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert is expected in the course of this month to present new colours to the 13th Regiment, now stationed at Portsmouth. It is said that the Queen will most likely grace the ceremony by her presence

It is said in a letter dated Marseilles, Aug. 1:—"The mail steamer Leonidas entered this port last night. She reports that the squadron under the orders of the Prince de Joinville was cruising on the 26th about 20 miles from Malta. The small-pox raged with great fury on board the Sovereign, the Prince's ship, and the Neptune; and, in consequence, the sanatory office of Malta had increased the quarantine of the Prince's squadron five days."

The telegraph between Birmingham and Derby has just been completed. The distance is 41 miles. This completes the telegraph on the entire of the Midland line from Leeds to Birmingham, and from Derby to Nottingham and Rugby with the exception of the want of a few instruments on the road stations between Birmingham and Derby.

Ibrahim Pacha arrived at Cadiz on the morning of the 26th ult., and was received with military honours After witnessing a bull fight at Puerto-Santa-Maria, he was to have continued his voyage on the 27:

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR AUGUST.

THE SECTARIAN SPIRIT OF THE AGE.

It is not this religious community, or that—it is not this political doct[illegible] or that, which we deprecate; but it is that vehemence and rancour, ecclesiastical and political, which are turning men aside, everywhere, from the cons[illegible] those truths which take a firm hold of the conscience, which, instead of [illegible] the temper, tranquillize it; which make man far more sensitive toward his own delinquencies, than toward the ecclesiastical or theological faultiness of others; which sicken men of the habit of dealing in denunciations; which make them tremble for themselves at the thought of God's thunderbolt, rather than grasp it to hurl at others. The diluted Christianism, the advances of which we dread, may well consist with sectarian fervour: but it will not consist with a deepened belief of the Gospel. The world has, in past times, seen Church zeal, and Pantheism, and Polytheism, enthroned together; and may see them again a[illegible] but not if Christianity entire, lodges itself in the hearts of men.—North British Review.

HIGH AIM OF THE FRENCH SOLDIERS.

The following friendly hint is recommended to the very serious attention of Marshal Bugeaud: "That it would be the means of diminishing the annoyance experienced by the French soldiers, if they were allowed to practise firing at a statue on horseback: a prize to be given to the man who hits the figure. By attending strictly to this system, it is possible that in the course of a few years Abd-el-Kader may be shot instead of his horse."—Almanack of the Month.

OPENING OF HAMPTON COURT PALACE TO THE PUBLIC.

With the untimely death of Frederic Prince of Wales ended all the dignity of Hampton Court, which was soon, with more good nature than good taste, lent out—I know no other phrase—to the impoverished branches of noble families, to titled widows or honourable spinsters, or half-pay naval or military officers. The Palace was soon engrossed, not only by themselves, but by their furniture and papers. Possession made them presumptuous: one after another the apartments were closed to the public, and occupied by Lady Marys and their paroquets. Wolsey's Hall, alas! resounded no longer with the pipe and tabor sounding for the corantoe, nor with the dulcimer wailing out the notes to the pavone. Cobwebs were aloft in the noble roof, beneath were my Lady Sarah's boxes. In process of time it seemed to be forgotten that there was a hall, or had ever been a hall. When all the boxes were at last unkennelled, the existence of one was treated as a discovery—a national surprise. It required, indeed, almost a fortune to see Hampton Court in those days of iniquity. The few rooms that were shown were thronged by a hot crew, who had each to pay some toll to a virago of a housemaiden at each several door. "Pay a shilling here, sir!" sounded like a knell in one's ears. At length, after various obstacles, public and private—after bringing Mr. Hume himself from town to order Lady Mary or Lady Sarah's boxes moved out of this room (for, after the Legislature had interfered, the denizens of the Palace proved contumacious), the Palace was opened gratis in a Royal way to an anxious, palace-loving public. I remember, when young, considering that to see Hampton Court was an event only to happen once in one's life; now fancy walking in any day, and going there, too, if you liked, with no money in your pocket—only, perhaps, if you chose to be liberal, giving a poor, civil policeman a sixpence for an excellent little guide-book! It is like a vision; and Mr Hume, the chief promoter, deserves anything but a monument (for I hate monuments) for it. After the main part of the work was accomplished, there was still Wolsey's Hall to open and to clear. Now the hall is an excellent receptacle for old china, worm-eaten books, or title-papers, table linen, family pictures—it would even accommodate guinea-pigs and silkworms. I will not venture to declare what was in it, nor have we any right to inquire; but this I know, that it took many visits from Mr. Hume to excavate—for I fancy that might be an appropriate word—box from beneath box, and to insist upon some high born denizen of the great almshouse carrying it elsewhere. It is opened, and now, even with all its grave defects, it is a regal sight. One only feature disfigured it till lately. The interior was, until about eighteen months ago, guarded by policemen, who played with great propriety the same rôle as the housemaidens of old. They were efficient, but certainly did not look very like the servants of a palace. The Queen, on visiting Hampton Court, was shocked beyond measure at their blue and-white, Privy-Council-like costume; and commanded that, without delay, they should wear the undress Royal livery, and so they now do. It is vexatious to reflect that, by the injudicious though well-meant opening of the Palace on Sundays, this body of fine, and, as it seems to me, well conducted men, are kept away from divine service by this arrangement.—Fraser's Magazine.

THE FAMILY AGE.

The present age, with reference to England, at least, may best be described as the family age. The idea of family is the ruling idea of the day. We have family newspapers and journals in quantities; and any object, intellectual, comestible, or otherwise, which would go to the heart of Englishmen, must convey the idea of family. If tea or breakfast bacon wishes to recommend itself, it appeals to families; and it was a prodigious hit which the upholsterer made, whose advertising carts some time since perambulated the streets of the metropolis, with addresses to "people about to marry." This was an appeal to families in all their stages; in their chrysaline and their butterfly existence; to mammas and papas, on behalf of their sons and daughters; and to the latter, on behalf of themselves and their posterity. The laudable predilection for family which has peculiarly distinguished the Saxon races, and which we are not induced to treat lightly, even whilst laughing at the impositions which are put upon it, is, no [illegible] of the causes of the stability of our political system, and of the [illegible]tension of our colonies, and was understood in its tenderest susceptibilities by the upholsterer, whose homage to the influence of family would have satisfied even the family mania of M. Michelet himself.—Dolman's Magazine.

SUNDAY IN PARIS.

What a bright scene is unrolled along the streets, like one of Stanfield's [illegible]ramas in a pantomime, when the sun condescends to shine upon a Sunday in Paris! What picturesque groups throng the Boulevards, wander along the alleys of the Tuileries, crowd round the tumblers, and the mountebanks, booths and shows, and games of every sort in the Champs Elysées? What a noise of organs and hurdy-gurdies fills the air! What colours flaunt abroad in gowns, bonnets, waistcoats, and cravats! Grotesque, ridiculous, piebald, confused and confusing, may the picture often be, but it is always a bright one. Take the reverse. What a vision of horrors is presented to the mind by a wet Parisian Sunday! Dirty crowded pavements, from which you are pushed by the emancipated Bourgeois, swelled with importance in his holiday dress, and rendered irritable by having that precious holiday dress spoiled by the wet—crashing cabriolets, in which the drivers, rendered more than usually insolent by their extra Sunday glass or two, use their best endeavours to drive over the slipping passengers, and miss them only by their awkwardness in driving—innumerable conflicting umbrellas, each asserting its right to drive the other down, on a day when every man deems himself a gentleman, and every woman a lady, tearing opposing silk bonnets, poking out unwary eyes, dashing, like wet dogs, thick sprays upon passing faces, and exciting angry oaths very unfitting such a day—the few church-goers losing the patience for which they have just prayed—the many pleasure-seekers grumbling at not finding what they seek—would-be elegants looking like drowned rats—boots rung to pieces—ringlets drenched—dresses ruined—hopes disappointed—rendezvous missed—companions not found—temper lost—ennui and spleen—above all the reeking mist, below all the dark mud, rendering the ennui and spleen mistier and darker still!—(From a very smart paper, "The Flâneur in Paris," in Bentley's Miscellany.)

CANUTE REPROVING HIS COURTIERS.

Six nations were now reduced into one general subordi—nation to the English king, who of course became the object of the grossest flattery, and upon one memorable occasion was nearly sacrificed to the puffing system of his injudicious friends. One day, when in the plenitude of his power, he caused the throne to be removed from the throne-room, and erected, during low tide, on the sea-shore. Having taken his seat, surrounded by his courtiers, he issued a proclamation to the ocean, forbidding it to rise, and commanding it not, on any account, to leave its bed until his permission for it to get up was graciously awarded. The court[illegible] backed the Royal edict, and encouraged with the grossest adulation this first great practical attempt to prove that Britannia rules the waves. Such a rule, however, was soon proved to be nothing better than a rule nisi, which it [illegible] possible to make absolute when opposed by Neptune's irresistible motion of course. Every wave of Canute's sceptre was answered by a wave from the sea; and the courtiers, who were already up to their ankles in salt water, began to fear that they should soon be pickled in the foaming brine. At length, the Monarch himself found his footstool disposed to go on swimmingly of its own accord, and there was every prospe[illegible] that the whole party would undergo the ceremony of an immediate investiture of the bath. The Sovereign, who was very light [illegible]shod, soon found that his pumps were not capable of getting rid of the water, which was now rising very rapidly. Having sat with his feet in the sea for a few minutes, and not relishing the slight specimen of hydropathic treatment he had endured, he jumped suddenly up, and began to abuse his courtiers for the mess into which he had been betrayed by their outrageous flattery. One of the attendants who had remained at the back of the others during this ridiculous scene, observed drily, that the whole party would have been inevitably washed and done for, if Canute had not made a timely retreat. The Sovereign was so humbled by this incident, that he took off his crown upon the spot, made a parcel of it at once, forwarded it to Winchester Cathedral, and never wore it a[illegible] Comic History of England.

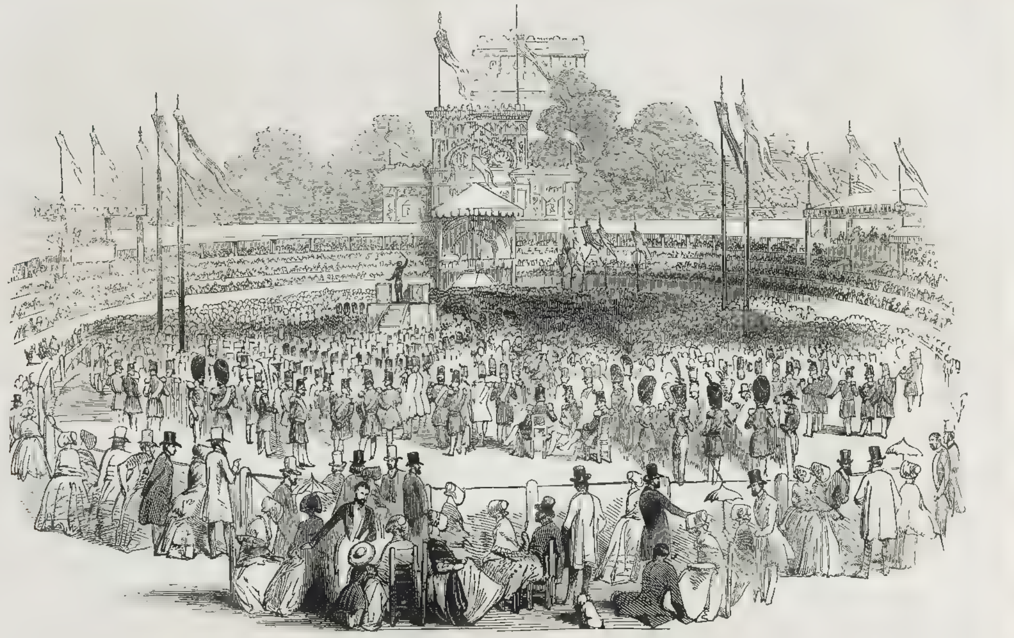
THE SCIENCE OF ASSOCIATIO[illegible]

The period in which we live is emphatically an era of association. Th[illegible]merce, the arts, the knowledge, the enterprise, the improvements, the chari[illegible] and the religion of the world, are moved by association. It has become a new science—the science of effecting the greatest possible good with the smallest means; and this by aggregating the wisdom and experience of the many, and making them bear upon a single object. By means of it, social prosperity [illegible] ceived a new impulse—the tears of the widow been dried up—the orph[illegible] oppressed—and hope, and joy, and gladness diffused over the civilis[illegible] It has laid hold of the purest elements of ethics and humanity [illegible] benefits convey the sweetest boon to the heart, its beneficence [illegible].

Charity twice blessed,
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes

By its enlarged and extended operations, it is destined to break down national asperity, and bring remote countries into the holy bonds of fraternal [illegible] already the English rose, the Scotch thistle, the green shamrock, [illegible] fleur-de-lis sweetly blend together; and, on this wreathed festoon, hangs the Irish harp; while the Western eagle, drawn from the land of boundless forest[illegible] over this entwined emblem of fraternity, and alights by its side, to partic[illegible] the banquet of nations—the banquet of universal knowledge, prosp[illegible]

[illegible]



GRAND CONCERT OF THE ARTISTES MUSICIENS, AT THE HIPPODROME, IN PARIS.

CARRIAGES FOR THE PRINCESS ROYAL OF WURTEMBERG.

A very elegant suite of carriages has just been built by Messrs. Marner and Company, of Oxford-street, by command of his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia, for his daughter, the Grand Duchess Olga, on her marriage with the heir apparent of Wurtemberg.

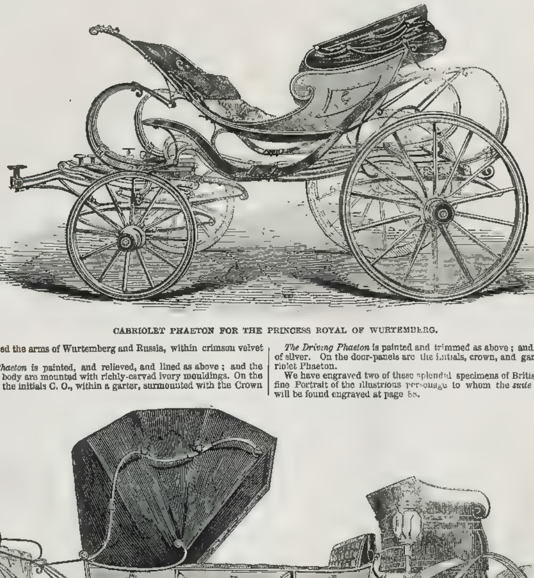
The suite consists of a Barouche, a Cabriolet Phaeton, and a Driving Phaeton. They are all open carriages, of very novel and tasteful design; and are highly creditable to the ingenuity of the artificers by whom they have been constructed.

The Barouche is painted celestial blue, relieved with lines of white and gold. The body is richly mounted with silver mouldings, and chased ornaments; the lamps have octagonal frames, and are surmounted with crowns, all of silver; as are also the axletree-caps and nave-hoops. The body is lined with rich blue figured silk, trimmed with blue and white silk lace. On the door-panels are superbly emblazoned the arms of Wurtemberg and Russia, within crimson velvet mantles.

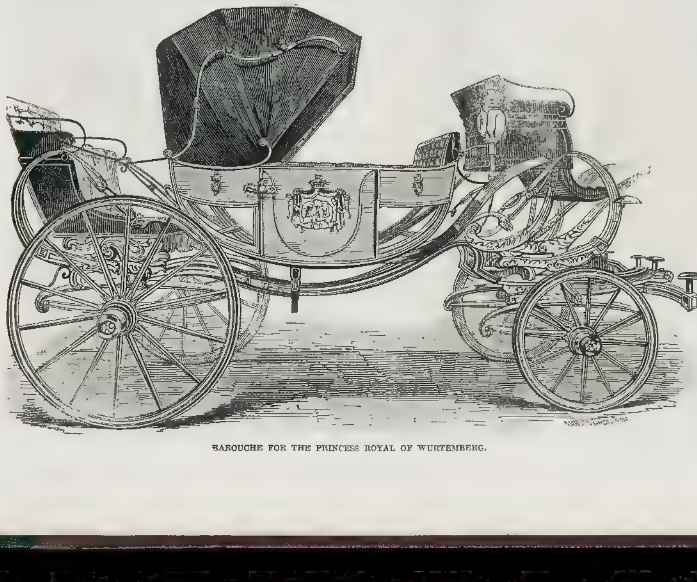
The Cabriolet Phaeton is painted, and relieved, and lined as above; and the splashing-iron and body are mounted with richly-carved ivory mouldings. On the panels are painted the initials C. O., within a garter, surmounted with the Crown of Wurtemberg.

The Driving Phaeton is painted and trimmed as above; and the mouldings are of silver. On the door-panels are the initials, crown, and garter, as on the Cabriolet Phaeton.

We have engraved two of these splendid specimens of British manufacture. A fine Portrait of the illustrious personage to whom the suite has been presented will be found engraved at page 85.



CABRIOLET PHAETON FOR THE PRINCESS ROYAL OF WURTEMBERG.



BAROUCHE FOR THE PRINCESS ROYAL OF WURTEMBERG.

MONSTER CONCERT IN PARIS, AT THE HIPPODROME.

We noticed in our last publication the Monster Concert given at this edifice by the Association des Artistes Musiciens. Our Artist in Paris has supplied us with an Illustration of this interesting meeting, at which nearly 2000 players were included in the orchestra and 15,000 auditors, besides the thousands who filled the Champs Elysées. The conductor was M. Tilmant, of the Italian Opera; and the concert was under the patronage of the Duc de Montpensier and the Minister of War. The effect produced by the Prayer from "Moise," by Rossini, in the transition from the minor to the major, is described to have been electrical. Auber's "Fra Diavolo" overture, the finale of Berlioz's Funeral Symphony, a Military Fantasia by Mohr, a Chorus from Handel's "Judas Maccabeus," some military pieces, and a Mosaïque on themes from Spontini's "Fernand Cortez," were included in the scheme. We regret to learn that, since the concert, a fire took place at the Hippodrome, by which the proprietors, MM. Laloue and Victor Franconi, are severe sufferers; but the rebuilding has commenced with great activity. The Committee of the Musical Association addressed a letter of condolence to the proprietors, as they generously had given them the use of the Hippodrome gratuitously. The funds of the Musicians have been increased by nearly £1200 by the concert. The band was selected from the regiments of Paris, Versailles, St. Germain, and Vincennes artillery, cavalry, infantry of the line, as well as National Guards. The Hippodrome is just outside the Barrière de l'Etoile, and has been celebrated for its Roman games, &c. Our Engraving represents M. Tilmant in the middle of the Estrade, with the Arc de Triomphe in the distance, and the great entrance of the Hippodrome.

LITERATURE.

A Chart Illustrating the Architecture of Westminster Abbey. By F. Bedford, jun. Robinson.

The Abbey Church of St. Peter at Westminster illustrates the several varieties of Pointed Architecture with almost unmatched perfection. Hence, it is peculiarly adapted for the graphic exemplification in which the Artist of this work excels; as we have already pointed out to our readers, in noticing his clever "Chart of Anglican Church Architecture." In the present specimen, his correct drawing, and nice appreciation of picturesque effect, have produced a set of beautiful illustrations of the glorious old pile at Westminster; and, at the same time that his Chart is locally interesting, it teaches architecture in the most lucid and pleasing form.

Thus, Mr. Bedford has drawn the North Transept, the South Aisle of the Nave, and a compartment of the interior of the Nave, as specimens of Early English; not forgetting "the narrow lancet-shaped Arch; the elegant Windows, with their beautiful and simple tracery; the Piers, with slender shafts surrounding them, connected by moulded bands; the diaper-work covering the walls; the bold and deeply-cut mouldings, and light chaste groining of the ceiling; all indicative of the best and purest epoch of the style The Triforium all round the Church may be instanced as one of the finest in existence, for simplicity, beauty, and elegance."

Next, the Decorated Style is shown in the Western portion of the sides of the Nave, and Edward Crouchbeck's Tomb. Of the Perpendicular, Henry the Seventh's Chapel is, of course, the exemplar selected: a view is given of the interior, and of one compartment of the exterior: in both, the elaborate richness of the style is exquisitely delineated; and the Tomb of Edward III. is added, as a specimen of earlier date. We have, likewise, a general view from the North-east, and of the North Transept; thus showing the finest portions of the exterior.

These nine views are inclosed in a border of monumental details from the Abbey, principally from the Tombs, sculptural as well as architectural.

This is, to our thinking, the best companion to the Abbey yet produced: it contains the marrow of the technical descriptions, and it altogether supersedes the garrulous guide-books, whose injudicious prattling is but a shade in advance of the automatic pomp of the showman. A walk through the Abbey, with Mr. Bedford's Chart in your hand, will be a fine architectural lesson, not easily to be effaced from the minds of those who love to ponder amidst the temples which the zeal, piety, and taste of man have raised to the glory of God.

The European Library. Bogue.

This cheap and already popular Series progresses well, as regards the editorial choice of works. Roscoe's "Life of Lorenzo de' Medici" has been succeeded by an edition of his "Life and Pontificate of Leo X.," in which the Editor, Mr. Hazlitt, has translated Mr. Roscoe's notes, and added some valuable illustrations from Count Luigi Bossi's translation of the "Life" into Italian: this evinces diligence and discrimination. The next volume is a translation of Dumas's "Marguerite de Valois," a romance of horrors and bloodshed, plots and intrigues, with a vast array of characters, mostly historical, all spiritedly drawn and well sustained. A translation of Michelet's "Life of Luther," by Mr Hazlitt, is well timed in this, the tricentenary year of the death of the Great Reformer: it avoids the uncompromisingly Roman-Catholic spirit in which Audin's work is written. Michelet's Memoirs are composed of letters and papers written by Luther himself, and are reputed to give a picture of the man as he was in life: to this the translator has adhered, and supplied certain connecting links in the narrative. The next volume is a reprint of the Rev. Joseph Berington's "Literary History of the Middle Ages," a work of good character, but, of late years, thrown into the shade by Mr. Hallam's admirable histories of the same period. Of Guizot's "History of the English Revolution," translated in "the European" Series; we have already spoken. To this the Editor has added the Great Statesman's "History of Civilisation," one of the soundest and most comprehensive works of our times. The last published volume is Galt's Life of Wolsey; with additions from Cavendish, and other sources. We are bound to add, that in all the editorial details, such as annotation and illustration, the "European Library" maintains the reputation gained by the industry displayed in its first volume.

THE GREAT STORM OF SATURDAY LAST.

THE SEWER AT BLACKFRIARS-BRIDGE.

Cerannus, the King of the Thunder, looked down
From his cloud in the West upon London's big town;
And he swore by his bolts, as he rattled a few,
That he'd bother our sky-lights from Epping to Kew.
"Odds! donner und blitzen!" he cried, "I have been
In the North, on the Lakes, and in Gloucestershire green
The pranks which I played there it grieves me to think on,
I'll now look o'er London, as Nick over Lincoln."

Then laughed aloud the Thunder King,
And the lightnings flashed from his swarthy wing;
And he shied at the steeples, beginning with Bow;
But, as one Teddy Burke said, he found it "no go."
Though many and mighty the sins be of London,
While reigns there Religion it cannot be undone;
The spires, as conductors, give point to the foe,
And "Sic evitabile fulmen," we know
Then cried Dan Cerannus to brother Mac Hail,
"Shake Wenham Lake's sugar-box, go it pêle mêle
Fling open, old boy, all your grandinous sluices,
Cry 'Saturnalitias mittimus nuces,'
(And he placed his forefinger to th' orifice nasal)—
Let every hail-stone be large as a hazel,
Nay walnut. Now show 'em how cooling your spice is,
And pepper Old Thames, from the Nore to the Isis."

Last Saturday afternoon between three and four, the metropolis and its neighbourhood within several miles distance, were visited by a storm of thunder, lightning, rain, hail, and wind, of very great severity. The lightning was remarkably vivid, and the flashes followed each other rapidly. The rain was particularly heavy, and was accompanied by hailstones of a very large size, stated variously to be of the size of hazel and walnuts. The storm was at its height at a quarter to five and did not cease till half-past six. The damage done to property in London has been very great, not merely from the destruction of glass, but also from the floods, by which several houses have been destroyed, and many cellars inundated. The total loss must amount to many thousand pounds; estimated by some to amount to £100,000, but this appears to be an over-estimate. The violence of the storm will be best understood from the amount of damage ascertained to have been committed. There have been several very narrow escapes. Amongst them, perhaps, the most remarkable occurred on board the iron steamer Citizen B, which was proceeding down the river, at twenty minutes past five; when off the Red House, Battersea, she was struck by a flash of lightning, which passed round the vessel, and destroyed part of the starboard paddle-box, some of the woodwork being carried away. There were on board at the time eight passengers, beside the captain, engineer, &c. The captain had only just descended from the injured paddle-box, when it was torn away. A stack of chimneys at the house No. 21, Lower Phillimore-place, Kensington, was knocked down, and the house much damaged. It was empty. The Chinese temple, in Vauxhall Gardens, was also struck and injured. A large beech-tree at the bottom of the Italian walk was snapped off about four feet from the ground. (There is a belief among naturalists that the beech-tree is singularly defensative against lightning.)

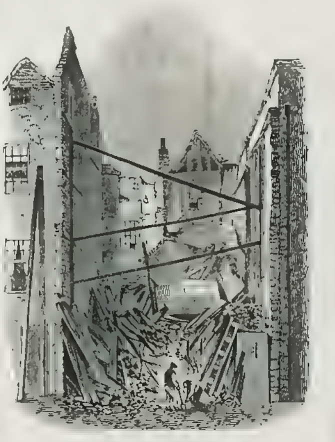
BROOK-HILL.

At Buckingham Palace, great damage was done. The Picture Gallery, in which are some of the most splendid productions of the old masters, was at one time in imminent danger; for, when the large hailstones, or, rather, irregularly shaped pieces of ice, had removed all opposition to the ingress of the rain, the Gallery was flooded to the depth of several inches, and the water assumed all the appearance of a natural current. No time was lost in removing all those pictures that were liable to be injured; and we believe that, in no single instance, has damage been done to any one. The more valuable pictures were ranged under the engraved plate glass, which successfully withstood the violence of the storm. Many thousand squares of glass are demolished; and, at a rough calculation, the loss in that article alone will be little short of £1,800 or £2,000.

LONDON, FROM BLACKHEATH, DURING THE STORM.

The Surrey Theatre had the skylights and windows demolished, and the quantity of rain which entered in consequence was so great, that the performance could not take place. The Nine Elms terminus of the Southampton Railway was extensively injured, as also was Astley's Theatre. Messrs. Fell, distillers, Waterloo-road, had eighty large panes broken. The Hero of Waterloo Tavern, Waterloo-road, had sixty squares broken. Messrs. Johnes, oil factory, Robert-street, had sixty panes broken. At the Surrey Zoological Gardens, the glass of the conservatory, in which the carnivora are kept, was completely destroyed, the cost of repairing which will amount to £200. The Euston-square station of the Birmingham Railway has suffered severely, much glass being broken. In Belgrave-square, almost every house has been damaged, some to the extent of £50. The New Houses of Parliament did not escape from the effect of this extraordinary visitation: the damage done to the glass-work has been very extensive. The tarpauling roof of the clock tower was forced off, and fell into the river The Botanic Gardens, Chelsea, have suffered to the extent of some thousands of squares; and the market-gardeners in the neighbourhood have been severe sufferers. The whole of the skylights of the Carleton-Ride (formerly the Riding-School) were destroyed, admitting the rain to the public records which were deposited beneath: by the exertions of firemen, policemen, and the persons on the establishment, the records were removed, but, necessarily, at the expense of the arrangement which has taken so long to accomplish. Somerset House, also, has suffered. It would, indeed, be impossible to detail the buildings wherein the glass has been demolished or damaged. The following may, however, be added to the foregoing:—The Gazette office, Cannon-row, Westminster; the Quadrant, Regent-street, the pathway under the colonnade being strewed with glass fragments; the Penitentiary, Milbank; the Shot-Towers on the Thames; the conservatory at the Pantheon, the Western Bazaar (the skylight which extends over the whole building being broken in); the Burlington Arcade, 2,736 panes broken; the Lowther Arcade (many of the goods destroyed, in addition to the skylights being broken); the Chiswick Gardens; the Botanic Gardens, Kew; and those in the Regent's Park. In Greenwich, Penn's factory, the Observatory, and the Hospital, have suffered. The houses in Clapham, Vauxhall, and Wandsworth roads, had all the windows damaged which were exposed to the storm. The damage is estimated at £1,000. Lark-hall Tavern has one side a complete wreck. Battersea, Clapham, Brixton, Stockwell, Kennington and Newington, Norwood, Camberwell, Walworth, and other places, present a scene of partial ruin. At the Metropolitan Police-office, Scotland-yard, 300 squares of glass were broken. The stables at the Admiralty, and every house in Whitehall-place, suffered severely—Lord Liverpool's and Sir W James's more than others. In Carlton-terrace, Pall Mall, Piccadilly, and Oxford-street, damaged windows may be seen in every house.

At the Houses of Parliament fourteen men were engaged the whole of Sunday, merely cutting out the pieces of old glass left in the windows that were broken by the violence of the storm. The total number of squares demolished in the two houses of Parliament and Westminster-hall is upwards of 7000. The Law Courts at Westminster were completely deluged with water, and the windows broken. At Westminster Abbey very little, if any, glass was broken; but the roof being under repair, the rain fell through in such bodies that several men were employed on Saturday night to bale it out. At Lady Rose's mansion, in Old Palace-yard, a chimney-pot was struck down by the lightning, and nearly fell upon a man's head who was seeking shelter in one of the doorways. At Messrs. Cubitt's factory, Milbank, the damage done is considerable. It is stated that from 12,000 to 14,000 squares of glass are demolished, independent of the damage that must of necessity have been caused by the rain falling into the premises.



HOUSES IN MIDDLE-ROW, HOLBORN.

Messrs. Broadwood's pianoforte manufactory, in the Horseferry-road, Westminster, is likewise extensively damaged. One of the workmen stated that he believed nearly 8000 squares of glass were broken.

On the north side of the river the damage by water has been unusually extensive. In the Green-park, one of the sewers burst, which had the effect of flooding the parade in front of the Horse Guards. The flower beds in the St. James's-park inclosure were destroyed, and some sheep which were grazing there were only rescued by men wading up to their middle in order to reach them. Birdcage-walk was impassable for pedestrians. The Fleet ditch, which is carried to the second arch of Blackfriars-bridge, through a drain formed of strong iron plates, blew up with a tremendous explosion at the same instant Waterman No. 3 was passing, and the force with which the water was expelled was such that the vessel was driven with violence against one of the piers of the bridge, and was so much damaged that she was obliged to put back and land the passengers by one of the Citizen boats. The Fleet ditch being surcharged flowed into most of the cellars and underground apartments on the west side of Farringdon-street. The lower parts of the Angel Inn were so completely flooded that it was with considerable difficulty some sheep were got out. In some of the houses the water was five feet deep. In the lower parts of Clerkenwell and in the neighbourhood of the open parts of the Fleet ditch, the effects of the flood have been of a most serious character. In the district lying between Brook-hill (formerly Mutton-hill), Saffron-hill, and the upper end of the New-street, great damage occurred. In Bull's-head Court, Peter-street, the water rose five feet, completely filling the underground rooms, and sweeping cattle and furniture away. Three houses in Round-court, inhabited by many poor families, were partly carried away, and it was with the greatest difficulty the inmates escaped; and a warehouse belonging to Mr. Fox, drysalter, had one front washed away. A broker, residing at No. 1, Vine street, lost a quantity of furniture, which was washed into the Thames. Mr. Simpson, linendraper, has been a severe sufferer, having upwards of £15,000 worth of goods destroyed or damaged. Mr. Verge, the pastrycook, lost a load of flour, which he had received a short time previously. He and two men were nearly lost in attempting to save it. The flour floated against the door, which prevented them from getting out; and they were only saved by breaking up the iron gratings. At Mr. Lamplough's, chemist, the water rose to five feet, destroying large quantities of arrowroot, naphtha, spirit of wine, and other articles. Mr. Lamplough's loss is estimated at £1000. In Fleet-street the principal sufferer was Mr. T. P. Austin, Peele's Coffee-house; Shoe-lane, Mr. G. Walters, Blue Posts, and Messrs. Cooper and Phillips. The damage done to vessels on the Thames at Milbank and Chelsea has been very considerable, several boats and some barges being driven from their moorings. The St. James's Theatre, where there were eight extensive skylights, had between 700 and 800 squares of glass broken, which, giving admission to torrents of rain, much damage ensued to the recently-embellished ceiling. The House of Correction for Middlesex was flooded to a depth of several feet.

On the southern side of the river, the damage was still more extensive. Messrs. Harvey, of Lambeth-house, have had an immense quantity of goods damaged, the floors of the shops being covered with water. The Baptist Chapel, Waterloo-road, had three feet water. In the cellars of the Hero of Waterloo, there were between fifty and sixty tuns of water. In the Pear Tree Tavern, New-cut, the water was four feet deep. In the kitchen of Mr. Brookes, surgeon, Waterloo-road, the water was five feet deep. Much damage was also done in the neighbourhood of Fore-street and Princess-street. In Lower Stamford-street, the York-road, Princess-street, Canterbury-street, Lower Hatfield-street, and all the intervening avenues, the basement apartments were flooded. The cellar at the Elephant and Castle, Newington, was inundated to a depth of several feet; that of the Lamb and Hare, in Kennington-lane, was flooded to a depth of several feet.

In Bishop's-walk, Lambeth, it is stated that the lightning struck the wall of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Palace, and tore up a tree in the garden.

The inhabitants of Blackfriars-road, too, have suffered very severely, their premises being flooded and inundated to the depth of several feet. The premises of Mr. Jones, linendraper, in the Blackfriars-road, were seriously damaged, and the pavement in front of the house sunk about two feet from the effects of the rain, rendering the footway exceedingly dangerous.

A very serious accident occurred during the storm, by the electric fluid striking a servant in the employ of Mr Staff, residing in the Westminster-bridge-road. She was standing at the window, when a sudden flash of lightning shattered the window, breaking the framework and scorching her hands and arms in a most shocking manner. A surgeon was called in. She was subsequently placed in bed, and lies in a very precarious condition. Considerable damage was done to the glass on the roof of the new Roman Catholic Church, in St. George's fields.

Another serious calamity took place at the residence of Mr. James Howard, fancy box-maker, residing in Herbert's-buildings, Waterloo-road, Lambeth, by which a woman named Smith, it is feared, will lose her life. It seems that Mr. Howard had a large platform fixed on the roof of his house for pigeons; and during the storm, the whole of the woodwork was carried by a sudden gust of wind into a neighbour's garden, at the rear of the adjoining house, falling on the head of the woman above named, whereby she received a severe laceration of the skull, and, it is feared, a concussion of the brain.

It would fill several pages of our paper were we to give details of all the damage that has been done. We, therefore, state generally that no part of London or its neighbourhood appears to have escaped. At the Western Exchange, Old Bond-street, the damage this Bazaar sustained was so extensive, that all business has been suspended, and the Bazaar closed till the repairs are effected. In the Opera Arcade, the whole of the circular skylights were destroyed, containing eight thousand squares of glass. Hungerford Market and arcade had all the skylights throughout the building destroyed. A gentleman residing at Grove-end, St. John's Wood, states that his gardener was at work at a forcing pump, in a room near the door, which was open, when a powerful current of electricity glittered in a stream of fire down the handle, paralyzing one side of his body. A female servant, standing at a table in the same room, was at the same moment driven a considerable distance, without the least injury; she describes the sensation produced by it as a most delightful one, and that it entirely removed a severe headache, which had caused her great pain the whole of the former part of the day, and, as she described it, "Made her as light as a feather." The man is now pretty well recovered. Some damage was done at the London and St. Katherine's Dock Hotel by the sudden irruption of the waters.

During the storm, a lad, named Muskett, a lighterman's apprentice, was employed on a barge in the Commercial Dock, Rotherhithe. He was walking along the gunwale with a quantity of steel bars on his shoulders, when the electric fluid first struck the warehouse opposite and then the lad, who was forced into the hold of the barge, while the steel bars fell into the dock. Immediate assistance was rendered, but the lad was quite dead. The warehouse sustained considerable damage by the lightning.

A correspondent of the Herald states that one hailstone, which broke his window in Carpenter-street, Westminster, measured three inches and five-eighths.

A depth of rain equal to four and a half inches fell, and on Sunday morning there was an additional half inch of rain, making the total depth of five inches. As the average depth of rain in a year in the neighbourhood of London does not much exceed twenty inches, we have had nearly the quantity of three months' fall of rain within twenty-four hours.

Judging by the damage done, this storm has been more severe than any which has visited the metropolis since the celebrated one of the year 1809.

In the vicinity of the metropolis, great damage appears to have been done.

DAMAGE IN THE VICINITY OF LONDON

During the violence of the storm, the electric fluid struck the house of Mr. Corvan, No. 17, Mornington-road, Camden-town. This took place about four o'clock, the shock causing the utmost alarm to the neighbourhood. The fluid [illegible] the chimney, which it shattered to pieces, and then passed down the chimney flue into the kitchen, in which was the female servant, who was at the [illegible] occupied in cleaning some plate. She became senseless, and was immediately attended to by Mrs. Corvan, who had her removed, as it was not possible, in consequence of the strong smell of sulphur, to remain there.

In the Mornington-road, the damage to new buildings was very great, no fewer than sixteen stacks of chimneys being destroyed. A quantity of lead was also melted. The houses on each side were also slightly damaged.

In the Regent's Park, above the Zoological Gardens, a portion of the bank of the Regent's Canal was washed away, some trees being forced down.

In the New-road, between King's-cross and Judd-street, in consequence of the sewer being overflooded, it gave way, causing a considerable extent of damage. The thoroughfare was, of course, instantly stopped.

In the neighbourhood of Holloway, the storm was very severe; and, just at its commencement, a gentleman, named Pritchard, residing at Colney Hatch, was riding in his gig, accompanied by his son, along the Holloway-road, when he suddenly fell forward, and was supposed to have been struck by the electric fluid. He was carried in an insensible state into the Cock public-house at Holloway, and received every attention from Mr. Wheeler, the landlord. Mr. Mann, a surgeon, was speedily in attendance, who pronounced the unfortunate gentleman to be in a strong apoplectic fit, brought on by the excessive heat.

In Bromley and the immediate neighbourhood, very much damage has been done to the several nurseries by the hail, several thousands of panes of glass being demolished. One of the hail-stones, or rather pieces of ice, which fell at the latter place, when measured, was found to be of an angular shape, and upwards of three inches in circumference, the greatest width at the top being one inch and a half. So far as can be ascertained, no lives have been lost in the range [illegible] ality previously described.

The various licensed victuallers round Bermondsey and Rotherhithe have had their beer-cellars flooded to an alarming extent, rendering their goods quite unfit for sale, and destroying property to an immense amount. The houses in the Brixton-road presented a most singular appearance, and they seem to have suffered more in this part of London than any other. Windows were entirely demolished, and the occupants, in many places, placed large pieces of carpeting up, to guard against the weather, until the glass was replaced, giving the houses a very singular aspect.

Bankside, all the low-lying dwellings and warehouses were placed under water the whole of Saturday night; and one poor family narrowly escaped being drowned, owing to the bursting of a sewer in Bose-court. Kennington Church, also, received very serious damage, and a large quantity of glass was broken. The Church of St. Mary, Newington, sustained considerable injury, as well as the [illegible]s in the immediate vicinity.

About an hour after the storm commenced, the lower parts of Greenwich and Deptford were inundated. The flood, which poured from Shooter's-hill and Blackheath, down Groom's-hill and Royal-hill, completely choked up the drainage, and caused London-street and Church-street to be completely under water. The kitchens and cellars in this line, down to the Royal Hospital, and alongshore to the creek which divides Greenwich from Deptford, were in a most deplorable state from the same cause. The lower part of Blackheath-road, Deptford-bridge, and [illegible] The devast[illegible] [illegible] very great. Numerous sky-[illegible] and Victualling-yards. At the [illegible] court, the Police-station, and premises attached, much glass [illegible] damage done by the water getting into the apartments. The [illegible] windows in the factory of Messrs. Penn and Son, engineers, B[illegible]heath, suffered severely, upwards of 200 squares being smashed in, to[illegible] [illegible]rtions of the frame-work. More than 100 squares of glass were destroyed at Messrs. Weelhouse's distillery, Deptford-bridge; and nearly the whole of the glass frames and greenhouses in the market-garden and nursery of Mr. Loft, near the Kent Waterworks. Much damage was done, also, to the glass work and choice productions of Mr. Cormack's nursery, at New Cross.

In some parts of Kensington and Brompton, the basements were inundated by the water which descended from the higher parts of the neighbourhood, Notting-hill, &c. At King's-cross the damage was very extensive; the entire space from King's-cross to Acton-place, Bagnigge-wells-road, was flooded to a depth that prevented the inhabitants from either leaving or entering their dwellings, the road being impassable, and most of the kitchens being under water. The houses opposite the police station in Bagnigge-wells-road were nearly entirely under water. In this locality, Mr. Ker, baker, lost 36 sacks of flour; Mr. Greenwood's house, [illegible] Arms, was quite inundated, and much damage done. In Belgrave-square, the kitchens of many houses were two feet deep in water.

The village of Lewisham was under water, and presented a most melancholy appearance. Complaints of devastation from the floods have been received from Southend, Bromley, Woolwich, and neighbouring parts.

Mr Chandler, the grower of the Camellia Japonica, in the Wandsworth-road, lost upwards of £2000, by damage to his greenhouses and plants. Mr. Chandler [illegible] happy to add, are in good health; although, in more than one [illegible] her is stated to have died on Sunday, and the son to have, in con[illegible]e, lost his reason.

[illegible] Andrews, of South Lambeth, the pine-grower, suffered consid[illegible] [illegible] houses, and upwards of 2000 pines were destroyed.

A Correspondent of the Times says: "The small garden of the house in Cam[illegible]ell New-road, in which I was when the storm commenced, has an easterly aspect. There was no wind at the moment, and there was no perceptible drift in the shower; the hail seemed to fall in a direction nearly vertical, and, from the nature of the surface of the garden, it rested where it fell. From a spot [illegible] ing three superficial feet, and which was selected as a fair average of the ge[illegible] surface of the garden, I gathered 947 hailstones, the smallest of which weig[illegible] [illegible] grains, and the largest 84 grains."

On Wednesda[illegible] storm bu[illegible] the me[illegible], accompanied by [illegible] torrents of [illegible] peals of thunder. T[illegible]er continued [illegible]rly eight o'clock, when [illegible] dark and heavy, highl[illegible] [illegible]lled. About ten o'clock, another but less violent storm broke forth; the [illegible] less violent, and the thunder and lightning evidently more distant. [illegible], the day became bright and clear, and the heat oppressive, [illegible] S.S.E. The temperature at noon was 83 degrees [illegible], at eight o'clock, had not descended lower than [illegible]. The night was very dry and hot.

[illegible]posed, the descent of such immense quantities of rain had the [illegible]arging the sewers. In Round-court, Clerkenwell-green, two houses, in addition to those which fell on Saturday evening, were undermined and thrown down, and others have been placed in circumstances of danger. We have [illegible] heard of any casualty by the lightning. In fact the fluid did not strike downwards with the same force that characterised it on Saturday, the state of the atm[illegible] there accounting for the difference.

At about a quarter-past nine in the morning, during the thunder-storm, Mr Drake, the station-clerk at the Lea-bridge station on the Eastern Counties Railway, whilst standing on the platform, was suddenly struck by the electric fluid, which played about him for several seconds, and rendered him perfectly insensible for a short period; but after a lapse of time he recovered, and was able to attend to his ordinary duties.

FALL OF TWO HOUSES IN HOLBORN.

At a quarter past eleven on Sunday night, an alarming occurrence happened in Middle-row, Holborn-bars. Two houses, 22 and 23, suddenly fell in with a loud crash. Happily, just before, a police constable was passing, and, hearing the noise of the breaking of window panes, looked towards the houses, and saw them tottering and bulging. He warned the passers-by of the impending danger; and, whilst so doing, the inmates, to the number of ten or twelve, rushed out and escaped.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Aug. 9.—Ninth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 10.—St. Lawrence.
TUESDAY, 11.—Dog Days end.
WEDNESDAY, 12.—Grouse Shooting begins.
THURSDAY, 13.—Dowager Queen Adelaide born, 1792.
FRIDAY, 14.—Jupiter rises near E. N. E. at 11h. 12m. p.m.
SATURDAY, 15.—Assumption—Mars sets at 7h. 46m. p.m.

HIGH WATER at London-bridge, for the Week ending August 15.

Monday.		Tuesday.		Wednesday.		Thursday.		Friday.		Saturday.
M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"H. E.," Birmingham, should apply to the Secretary of the Royal Academy of Arts.

"Evelyn" and "W. M. F."—"We guess" that we have not room for the Charades.

"J. L." will find the Electric Telegraph illustrated and described in Nos. 104 and 154 of our Journal.

"[illegible] F. S.," Dublin.—Declined.

"A Lover of Science" is trifling.

"J. R. J. S.," Liverpool.—To discuss the question as to "Duties" proposed by our Correspondent would not be doing our duty to Subscribers generally.

"*Synopsis," Stockton-on-Tees.—*1. Payment for one parcel of goods does not invalidate a claim for another previously supplied. 2. Real Estate, in all cases where it is not disposed of by will, descends to the heir. Personal Estate which is not disposed of by will goes to the administrator, to be by him applied in payment of the debts of the deceased, and to be distributed among his next of kin.

"J., an Old Subscriber."—The lines on "Flogging in the Army" are creditable to the heart of the Writer.

"G. W. K."—The work referred to by our Correspondent is "The Life of Francis the First," by James Bacon, 2 vols., 8vo., published by Bull, Holles-st., Cavendish-square.

"Ignoramus."—The bernicle, or barnacle, is a marine testaceous animal,—the duck barnacle of collectors, a common shell, fixed to a long, fleshy peduncle, and frequently found attached to floating timbers. It was long asserted to be the parent of the barnacle goose—an absurd error, now generally exploded.

"†," Exeter.—We are not aware whether Mr. Waterton is in England.

"H. S.," Plymouth. Write to the Under Secretary of State for the Home Department.

"R. C. P."—No. 195 of our Journal contains Portraits of the Ethiopian Serenaders.

"Inquisitor."—Tobacco water is destructive to earwigs.

"One Anxious to be Informed."—The name Helena has the accent on the first syllable, in every instance except in the name of the island in the Atlantic Ocean, in which the second syllable is long; but we cannot account for the exception, unless the island has been named by the original discoverers—the Portuguese, in whose language the accent is on the penultimate syllable.

"J. W. A.," Golden-square.—A Town, in its popular sense, is a large assemblage of adjoining or nearly adjoining houses, to which a market is incident. (See the art. "Town" and "City," Penny Cyclopædia.)

"A. A. C.," Taunton. See Mrs. Jameson's "Memoirs of the Early Italian Painters," vol. 2, one of the best of Knight's Weekly Volumes.

"A Subscriber from the Commencement" may obtain, at Windsor, Tickets to view the Castle.

"Φ," Leighlin Bridge.—Mr. Jeffrey, the patentee of the Marine Glue, resides at East India Road, Poplar: he has published a sensible pamphlet on the applications of his invention.

IBRAHIM PACHA. *We have been misinformed as to the paternity of his Highness, who is not the step-son of Mehemet Ali, but his eldest and only surviving son. The Viceroy Mehemet Ali had three sons, viz., Ibrahim, Toussoun, and Ismael. Ismael fell a victim to revenge, by being smothered by fire, about 1822; Toussoun died of the plague; and Ibrahim Pacha is the survivor.—*Vide a little pamphlet, entitled "The Life of Mohammed Ali; with the Quadruple Treaty, and the Official Memoranda of the English and French Ministers." Churton: 1841. "C. A. W." is thanked for this correction.

"M. W.," Bath. The set of china is valuable, though not worth £30 a-piece. Did Watteau paint china? we rather think his designs have been copied on china.

"W. D.," Norfolk. We do not decide wagers.

"E. H. S.," Paddington. We have not room, at present.

"L. D.," and "N. B."—Rigor is a shivering or slight convulsive tremor, attended by the sensation of cold: we have not yet heard it attributed to electricity.

"S. P.," Glasgow. The Archery sketch has not reached us.

"A Novice" should write to the General Post Office: what has a Newspaper Editor to do with Postal overcharges?

"Lat."—The Latin Bible, being imperfect, is almost valueless.

"J. T. W."—We believe not.

"A Subscriber." The literal translation of the Liverpool motto, Deus nobis hæc [illegible] is, "God made for us these goods."

"Alice" is too inquisitive: the case is not as she surmises.

"[illegible] H.," Exeter. The particulars of the award may be obtained of the Association.

"A Constant Reader."—Mr. Bain is the inventor of the Electric Clock: address "Committee Rooms, House of Commons."

"*Kestrel," Exon.—*Ness is from the Saxon, for a nose of land, headland, or promontory, as Sheer-ness, Loch-ness, &c.

"A Constant Reader."—Address "Cork——to be forwarded."

"Viator Cantab" inquires: "What is the pillar intended to commemorate, which is placed on the London and Cambridge Railway, between Broxbourne and Roydon?"

"S. W.," Sleaford, should address his complaint to the General Post Office.

"[illegible]."—See a detailed notice of the Electric Telegraph in the "Companion to the Almanac for 1843." There is, also, a pamphlet of notices, from various periodicals. There are several pamphlets and short treatises on the Atmospheric Railway.

"Poeticus's" letter of six sides.—Our only reply is, that the present Somerset House was commenced by Sir W. Chambers, in 1775, upon the site of the ancient Palace, which had been the occasional abode of Queen Elizabeth and other Royal personages.

"L. R. H., Bridgewater.—The signet is worth but a trifle.

"A. X."—We have not heard of the publication of Mrs. Crawford's Poems.

"A Ford."—The arms in question appertain to the Fords of Devon, Derbyshire, Surrey, Sussex, and Wilts. They are also borne by Abraham Rawlinson Ford, Esq., of Ellel Hall, in the county of Lancaster. The motto is "Excitat."

"A Subscriber." Interest is a very important help in obtaining a commission; but still we think that, his name having been some time on the list, and a promise having been made, he has every chance of ultimately succeeding, unless by the delay he passes the age limited by the regulations.

"Paddy from Cork."—Borrani is an Englishman, and son of a physician of Cheltenham—Dr. Bosragon. Mr. Harrison is a Londoner, and was a pupil of the Royal Academy of Music, and also of Mr. Rooke.

"Mercandotti." We believe that this once celebrated danseuse is in Paris.

"Philologue." Prestige is now an accepted English word, and signifies sympathy, fascination, or illusion. The "prestige in his favour" means a preconceived favourable impression, or the effect of vogue or popularity. It will be found in modern dictionaries. In French, prestige signifies also "deceit" and "imposture."

"A. V.," Chatham.—Our intelligent Correspondent mentions that "the cause of cockades being worn by servants was the duty levied by Mr. Pitt about the year 1785: as soldiers, who acted as servants to their officers, were exempted from the [illegible]ade, when in plain clothes, was carried by them as a mark of their exception. In point of fact, however, any person in this country may stick a cockade in his servant's hat, there being no law which prohibits individuals decorating their [illegible] with cockades, or dressing them in any manner they may think proper." "A. V." will oblige us by quoting some legal authority against the usage of "Right Honourable" by the daughters of Dukes, Marquises, and Earls.

"[illegible]bscriber." A Captain in the Army, after he has sold out, generally bears the title of "Captain" by courtesy. There are, however, many instances of the abandonment of the appellation, on the retirement from the service.

"[illegible]mirer of Paris" is recommended to buy the "Hand-book to Paris."

"[illegible] The engraved Views of the Thames Tunnel, if not to be obtained there, may be heard of at Silcester's, 27, Strand. The price is 2s. 6d.

"[illegible]ser" is thanked for his very humane letter.

"[illegible] The Wenham Lake lies a few miles from Boston, 41° 21′ N. lat., and [illegible] long.

"O.," Liverpool. We have been politely [illegible] with the terms of the French Military S[illegible], as they would occupy more space than we can spare, [illegible] forwarded by post to "O.," as soon as we receive his full address.

"John of Procida." No.

"M. S." is thanked; but we have not room for the Original Melodies.

INELIGIBLE.—"Impromptu on Flogging."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 8, 1846.

THE dinner at King's Lynn to Lord George Bentinck may be termed the political event of the week. It was the first great meeting of the Protectionists since their Parliamentary defeat, and, though only complimentary in its object, some declaration as to the policy of the future could hardly be avoided. The proceedings, therefore, acquired an importance beyond that generally attached to political and party festivals. As an acknowledgment of gratitude for services rendered, the compliment to Lord George Bentinck was well deserved. Honour to whom honour is due is a precept Englishmen never forget; nor do they withhold admiration of courage and perseverance when they have failed to secure success in the struggle. Many a gallant deed has been performed in a retreat, and the qualities that form the warrior do not always require the "blaze of triumph" to display themselves. Disadvantageous as was the position of the country party in the House of Commons in the late contest, it would have been much worse but for the noble Lord, who led and organised the opposition to the late Ministry with much ability and unquestioned zeal—one so strong and sincere, indeed, that he could not always confine it within the bounds of discretion. His party owe him much for his exertions, and the gathering at Lynn was a natural and creditable expression of feeling. Though the poet says

> Fame never crowns
> The champion of a falling creed,

Lord George Bentinck is likely to prove an exception to the rule. All the political reputation he enjoys has been gained during the decline and fall of a great system, which he boldly attempted to avert. It is not his fault that the system has perished; higher talents than the noble Lord possesses, and still greater zeal, if greater be possible, could not long have delayed the change. But he fought what he considered the good fight gallantly; he kept the faith to the last; and he has his reward in the admiration of his followers, not unmingled with the respect of those who were opposed to him.

To any expression of that gratitude and admiration there is nothing to object; but what is offered as an exposition of the future hopes and prospects of the Protectionists, is more open to criticism. Their hopes consist in an unconverted constituency, and their prospects in the theory of what Mr. Disraeli calls "reaction." As the first is but a contingency, and the last only a speculation, we fear the Protectionists will only deceive themselves if they put much trust in either. If all calculation is falsified by the results, if the change proves really as disastrous to the nation as the country party declare it will be, and if the measure regulating the trade in grain should deserve the epithet of "the infernal Corn Bill," which Lord George Bentinck applies to it, then certainly there will be a disposition to return to the abrogated system. What has been destroyed by the results of observation and experience, farther observation and more experience may warrant us in returning to, if they discover a mischievous effect. But without that, reversion to the past is impossible. Both parties must leave this to the great arbitrator—time.

As to the theory of "reaction" in which the Protectionists are told to put their trust, we have no confidence in it; it is more ingenious than sound; it may be cleverly argued, but cannot be borne out by proof. "Revolutions," said a great authority, "never turn back." England, says Mr. Disraeli, destroyed the Monarchy, and we are still ruled by a Sovereign of hereditary right; England overthrew the Church, and yet the Church is now the established religion of the State. Quite true; the forms revived, but how changed in substance! The Queen of England wields the sceptre, but cannot exercise the "prerogative" of the Stuarts. The Church is restored, but it is not now the persecuting Church of Laud; and in a third of the kingdom Episcopacy was not restored at all. In the case of each of these great changes, what was revived was not the identical institution that was overthrown: the people advanced, and rendered the exercise of the extreme power of the past impossible. If an institution or a system is shaken, it never recovers its pristine strength. Monarchy was abolished in France, as in England; and there, too, it has been restored; but Louis Philippe is not a Louis the Fourteenth.

In the progress of the world, we can perceive no steps backward, or the phrase would be a contradiction. And a system of law or legislation, once destroyed, has much less chance of revival than such an institution as Monarchy. If, then, the Protectionists trust to this theory of "reaction," they will deceive themselves. They will never be able to "call back yesterday, bid time return," more than the many who have wished to do it, and found it impossible. For the matter of the noble Lord's speech on this occasion, it strikes the reader as out of time and place. Why recapitulate the figures of arithmetic that failed of their work in the only place where they could be useful? It was like a physician giving a chemical analysis of the prescription that did not save his patient; it may be elaborately shown that they ought to have done so; but the world judges all things by results. And the injunction to the country party to "wait" till the current of public opinion turns or changes, forcibly recalls the illustration of the Roman satirist, rusticus expectat; but the river rolls on, and he who tarries on the bank, hoping it may flow past and shrink in its bed, to admit of his passing, may wait in his expectancy for ever.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER MAJESTY AND THE ROYAL FAMILY.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court and the domestic household, attended divine service on Sunday in the chapel in Buckingham Palace. The Hon and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated.

The Queen, accompanied by the Queen of the Belgians and the Princess Royal, took an airing on Wednesday in an open carriage and four. His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback, attended by the Hon. Captain Gordon. The Royal dinner party on Wednesday at Buckingham Palace included their Majesties the King and Queen of the Belgians, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, their Excellencies the Count and Countess Dietrichstein, his Excellency M. Van de Weyer, the Countess Vilain XIV., Lady Anna Maria Dawson, Baroness de Speth, the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, the Earl and Countess Grey, the Earl of Charlemont, Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston, Lord and Lady Lyndhurst, Major A. d'Hanins de Moerkerke.

WINDSOR, FRIDAY EVENING.—(From our own Correspondent.)—This being the second anniversary of the birth of his Royal Highness Prince Alfred, her Majesty's youngest son, the bells of St. George's Chapel and the Parish Church commenced ringing merry peals at an early hour in the morning, which were continued at intervals throughout the day. At twelve o'clock a Royal salute was fired from the Corporation ordnance, under the superintendence of Mr. Pond, the Town Gunner, in honour of the event. A Royal salute was also fired from the Belvidere battery, at Virginia Water. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent is expected to arrive at Frogmore Lodge to-morrow, from Clarence House, St. Ja[illegible]

ARISTOCRATIC MARRIAGES.—On Monday, Viscount Seaham, son of the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry, was married to Miss Mary Cornelia Edwards, only daughter and heiress of Sir John Edwards, Bart., of Machynlleth, Montgomeryshire, at St. George's Church, Hanover-square.—On Tuesday the marriage of Major-General Lord Downes and Mrs. Fleming, relict of the late Mr. Fleming, of Stoneham, Hants, and daughter of the late Captain Grant, was solemnised at St. George's Church, Hanover-square.—The marriage of George James, Viscount Maidstone, eldest son of the Earl of Winchilsea, with the Lady Constance Henrietta, second daughter of the Earl of Uxbridge, and granddaughter of the Marquis of Anglesey, was solemnised on Thursday, at St. George's Church, Hanover-square.

GRAND ENTERTAINMENT AT NORFOLK HOUSE.—The Duke and Duchess of Norfolk gave a superb banquet on Wednesday evening, at Norfolk House, to a distinguished circle of the aristocracy. After the banquet the Duchess of Norfolk had an assembly.

SIR ROBERT PEEL.—Sir Robert Peel has left town for his seat, Drayton Manor, Staffordshire.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

[illegible] about half an hour, but several measures were [illegible] Unions Bill, were read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

Sugar Duties—The Report on the Sugar Duties Bill (No. 3) was received, after a short discussion.

Duty on Rum.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer gave notice that on Monday he should move that the House should go into Committee on the Customs Acts with a view to propose a reduction of the duty on rum.

FLOGGING IN THE ARMY

Lord J. Russell then rose and said, that, in moving the order of the day, he wished to make a general statement as to what the Government had done in regard to the punishment of flogging in the army. He would state the plan at present to be adopted. It was the plan of the Duke of Wellington, and he would say that he thought the noble Duke was quite right in believing that corporal punishment ought not to be abolished. (Hear, hear.) It was, however, now to be provided that the maximum punishment should be fifty lashes. (Hear, hear.) Care would also be taken that the state of the weather should be such, and that the circumstances respecting the offender's health should be considered, so that the medical officer should be of opinion that the punishment might be inflicted without danger to the offender. The Government hoped to see the day when corporal punishment in the army might be altogether abolished; but it was a paramount object to ensure discipline in the army. He repeated that at present the Government did not think that the requisite discipline of the army could be maintained without the punishment. The noble Lord proceeded to state that the Government intended to ameliorate the condition of the soldier, and said that corporal punishment had been much diminished of late years. The Government entirely concurred with the recommendation of the Commander-in-Chief. (Cheers.)

Dr. Bowring said that he had never before risen with such a deep feeling of responsibility, but he had hoped that the influence of public opinion would have induced the Government to abandon this abominable punishment. He hoped that the House would emphatically declare that whatever substitute might be provided, the abominable punishment of military flogging should no longer be endured. Under these circumstances, he should feel justified in persisting in the resolution of which he had given notice, "That, in the opinion of this House, the punishment of flogging in the army ought to be immediately abolished." The hon. member proceeded to read some affecting details of military punishment.

BRIGHTON RACES.—Thursday.

Her Majesty's Plate of 100 guineas. Heats, two miles.

Lord Stradbroke's Lynceus	(Clay)	1
Mr. Ramsbottom's Q[illegible]rus		2

Sweepstakes of 3 sov. each, and 3 added. Heats, one mile.

Mr. Lee's Correct Card	1
Mr Jackson's Syntaxina	2

The Peers and the Sugar Duties Bill.—A meeting of Conservative Peers took place on Thursday, at the residence of Lord Stanley, in St. James's-square, for the purpose of considering the course which ought to be pursued in the House of Lords with respect to the Sugar Duties' Bill. The result was a resolution, agreed to unanimously, that at this late period of the session the question ought not to be carried to a division, however strongly Lord Stanley and other noble Lords may think it necessary on the introduction of the measure to the House of Lords to place their own sentiments on the subject, and those of the party generally, before the country.

Reported Death of Van Amburgh.—A letter from Voonsucket, United States, dated June 16, in a French paper, says:—"The celebrated Van Amburgh perished here on Monday, in a most frightful manner. He had been exhibiting his feats with his animals in a meadow, near Scituate; and a young lady having asked him whether he dared to enter the tiger's cage at feeding-time, he assured her there was no danger, and immediately ordered an enormous piece of beef to be thrown in. After a long contest, the meat was taken possession of by a fine tigress, who retired with it to a corner. Three times Van Amburgh vainly endeavoured to take it from her. The tigress roared furiously, and lashed her sides with her tail. The audience began to be alarmed; but Van Amburgh reiterated his assurance that there was nothing to fear, and continued his struggle with the tigress; who, at last, feeling herself wounded, threw herself on her rash antagonist, knocked him down, and buried her claws in his throat. In an instant the theatre was deserted, leaving Van Amburgh at the mercy of the maddened animal, who continued to vent upon him her rage until he became a corpse. After much difficulty the tigress was shot, and the mutilated remains of the beast-tamer recovered."

Expedition to South America.—An expedition which promises the most important results, both to science and commerce, is at this moment fitting out for the purpose of navigating some of the most unexplored rivers in South America. It is to be under the command of Lord Ranelagh. Several noblemen and gentlemen have already volunteered to accompany his Lordship, and the enterprising and scientific band, it is said, will sail as soon as the necessary arrangements shall be completed.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

France. The Attempt to Assassinate Louis Philippe. Joseph Henri continues in close confinement at the Conciergerie. He has confessed that he purchased the pistols for twenty-five francs of a dealer on the Quai de la Mégis[illegible] and that an entry would be found in his books as far back as six weeks since for that sum. He has refused to give any positive answer as to the nature of the charge put into the pistols. In his first declaration, he said that they were loaded with slugs, which he had made himself, but he refused to say of what metal they were made, adding, that, in all probability, they would be found, when, if shown to him, he could readily recognise them; but, until then, it would be useless to enter into any further details. The prisoner continues perfectly calm and composed. The Paris Moniteur announces that the King has received a letter from Queen Victoria, congratulating him on his late escape from assassination.

New Zealand.—Papers of as late a date as March 7, from Wellington, New Zealand, have reached us. Their contents are of some interest. A most disastrous event had occurred in the settlement; one of the worst, in fact, that had ever taken place. More than thirty families settled in the valley of the Hutt had been driven from their houses by natives, who had seriously injured their crops, plundered their property, and in some cases committed acts of violence. From the Hutt district alone more than one hundred men, women, and children, had [illegible]en, robbed of every thing they possessed. Seeing the impunity with [illegible] outrages had been committed in the midst of a large military force, the settlers had nearly all left the Wainui-o-mate, while those residing on the Parirua road, after sending in their wives and children, had armed themselves for the purpose of resisting the anticipated attack of these native marauders. At first, the natives retreated from their clearings to the bush, but the troops unfortunately halted, and the natives attributing this to fear, refused to retire until they received compensation for their crops, a claim to which the Governor declined to accede until the natives quitted the district. The troops were then ordered to advance; but, as Captain Grey was officially informed that the natives had agreed to depart for Parirua immediately, and they actually did retire out of sight, the declaration was believed. The Captain, instead of ordering the troops to act, remained stationary. The offer of the [illegible] to enrol themselves as militia men was unwisely rejected; and Captain [illegible] it is said, misled by the advice of the legal gentlemen who assisted his predecessors, and assured him that the natives were justified in their pretensions, delayed further proceedings until the troops and the natives came into actual collision.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

THE SOLDIER FLOGGED TO DEATH AT HOUNSLOW.

On Monday morning, the inquest on the body of Frederick John White, a private in the 7th Hussars, was resumed by Mr. Wakley, assisted by Mr. Mills, at the George the Fourth, public-house, Hounslow.

The inquiry lasted till nearly one o'clock the next morning. We subjoin the most important evidence, and also the result.

Sergeant John Darley said, I am a lance-sergeant in the 7th Huss[illegible] Did not make any complaint against Frederick John White before he was confined. I complained of him, on the 1st of June, to the orderly officer, William Russell, for having struck me across the breast with a [illegible] He (White) struck me on the evening of the 1st of June, about a quarter past nine, in the barrack [illegible] at Hampton Court. I was orderly [illegible] at the time he struck me. I went into the room at nine o'clock. On going round the room calling the roll the first time, White answered to his name, and I saw him. On going round a [illegible] absent, I observed White [illegible] a poker in his hand. His hand was [illegible]hich held the poker. I ordered him to put down the [illegible], but he did not do so. I ordered him a second and a third time, but he did not obey. I ordered the orderly corporal of the troop to take a file of men and confine him. As soon as I had given the order he knocked me down with the poker. The blow was struck across the chest I recovered myself, and ran out of the room, and I saw no more of the deceased until he was in charge of the guard. When I saw him in charge of the [illegible] drunk. I was hurt by the blow, and was in bed three days under medical treatment in consequence. He did not speak to me before he struck me. I had no previous quarrel with him. I was on friendly terms with him. There had been no previous dissension I never spoke six words to him except on duty. I had not been long in the troop with him. He was often the worse for liquor. I did not raise my hand to touch him before he struck [illegible] I gave evidence before the Court-martial. White pleaded guilty to the whole charge preferred against him.

[illegible] 15th, and he was [illegible] he got up, the flogging being on the Monday. After he could wear his shirt he was allowed to get up, and walk about the ward, and assisted in cleaning it out. He assisted to clean the ward and appeared perfectly well except his back. White assisted in cleaning the ward on the Saturday, the 4th of July. White went out every day after the 20th.

[illegible] asked how it was that the witness had said in his former evidence [illegible]e was in bed for fourteen days. Witness: No one has complained of [illegible], nor have I been reminded on the subject; but I have [illegible]r on the matter, and I am now more positive. White had made no complaint up to the 5th of July. I did not see any change in the weather to induce me to think that it was dangerous for White to go out. (The witness was here shown the medical case book.) I know when I saw the entries in the book. I am always present when the doctor makes them, and they are entered at the time they occur. There is an entry, dated the 4th, and, on my oath, I believe it was made on that day.

The whole of the medical and other evidence was then read over by Mr. Mills, the Deputy-Coroner.

It appeared that the following letter had been addressed by the deceased to the officers of the Court-martial:—

> Gentlemen, Having pleaded guilty to the charge preferred against me, it only remains for me to urge some extenuating point, by which I may become entitled to some clemency at your hands.
>
> I am sure that it cannot be said that the unfortunate affair was premeditated. I never had a word of any kind but such as should pass between a private and his superior officer, having [illegible] geant Darley with that respect which was due to his rank; [illegible] deprived me of all constraint over myself, and obliterated from my memory those feelings of respect which had up to that time always influenced my conduct.
>
> I am well aware that an action committed under the influence of drink obtains but little consideration on that head, yet, from the absence of all vindictive feeling on my part, a[illegible] to the unconscious state I was in at the time of the committal of the crime. I have to [illegible] u will deal leniently with my case, and allow what I have urged to have some weight with you in coming to your decision
>
> I am, Gentlemen, your obedient servant, Fred. Wh[illegible]

Matthewson (the man who was flogged) and other privates were then called. They corroborated the testimony given on former occasions.

The Jury then retired. They deliberated for about half an hour, and returning at the end of that time, the Foreman read the following, as the unanimous verdict of the Jury:

"That the deceased soldier, Frederick John White, died on the 11th of July, 1846, from the mortal effects of a severe and cruel flogging of 150 lashes, which he received on the 15th of June, 1846, at the Cavalry Barracks, on Hounslow Heath, at Heston; that the said flogging was inflicted upon his back and neck, under the sentence of a district Court-martial, composed of officers of the 7th Regiment of Hussars, held on the 10th of June previous, duly constituted for his trial. That the said Court-martial was authorised by law to pass the said severe and cruel sentence; that the flogging was inflicted upon him by two farriers in the presence of John James Whyte, the Lieutenant-Colonel, and James Low Warren, the Surgeon of the said Regiment; and that so and by means of the said flogging the [illegible]k John White was caused. In returning this verdict the Jury cannot refrain from expressing their horror and disgust at the existence of any law among the statutes or regulations of this realm which permits the revolting punishment of flogging to be inflicted upon British soldiers; and at the same time the Jury implore every man in this kingdom to join hand and heart in forwarding petitions to the Legislature, praying, in the most urgent terms, for the abolition of every law, order, and regulation, which permits the disgraceful practice of flogging to remain one moment longer a slur upon the humanity and fair name of the people of this country."

The Coroner said he cordially concurred in the verdict which had been returned. His own impression was, that the unfortunate deceased was a man of unsound mind, and the reflections which must arise from a conviction of that fact could only be most painful.

Committal of Mr. R. Dunn, the Barrister, to Newgate. On Wednesday, Mr. Richard Dunn, the barrister, was brought before the Lord Chief Baron, at Chambers, on a warrant which had been issued by Mr. Justice Patteson. At the sessions held at the Central Criminal Court in June last, Miss Burdett Coutts and some of the other partners of the banking-house of Coutts and Co. went and preferred a true bill before the Grand Jury against Mr. Richard Dunn, for wilful and corrupt perjury, the defendant having attempted to sue out a fiat of bankruptcy, before Mr. Commissioner Holroyd, against Miss Burdett Coutts, allegi[illegible] that she had given him the authority to draw on the banking-house for £100,000, and that she had committed an act of bankruptcy. After a true bill had been found, an application was made to Mr. Justice Patteson for a warrant for the apprehension of the defendant, which was granted five days after the defendant applied for a writ of certiorari to remove the indictment from the Central Criminal Court to the Queen's Bench, which was ultimately granted, the defendant being directed to enter into his own recognizances of £200, and two housekeepers in £60 each. Some weeks, however, elapsing, and Mr. R. Dunn not complying with the terms, the warrant was given to Inspector Shackell to execute, and on Tuesday evening, Shackell, with the aid of Langley and Shaw, succeeded in taking the defendant into custody, at his residence, in New-street, Covent-garden. When brought before the Lord Chief Baron, Mr. Dunn argued with much ingenuity against the legality of the proceedings against him. His objections, however, were overruled, and, as he was unable to procure the requisite bail, he was committed to prison.

COUNTRY NEWS.

THUNDER STORMS IN THE COUNTRY.

We find, from private letters and the provincial papers, that the storm of Saturday was felt with great violence in most parts of the country. There was also a storm on the previous Thursday, which did great damage. A dreadful flood occurred at Talsarn, near Aberayron, Cardiganshire. The Tivry burst its banks, and flooded the highway leading from Lampeter to Aberystwith for many miles, doing immense damage to the roads, in some parts of which, gaps ten feet in width were caused by the exciting current. But the heaviest visitation of the deluge took place at Talsarn: the river here, which had previously been comparatively tranquil, and is at no time of any great width or depth, rose, at about twelve o'clock, like a vast wall, and, dashing onward in its headlong fury, swept away twenty-five houses in the village, with all their contents. Not only property was injured, but even life did not escape. Dr. Rogers, of Abermeirig, a gentleman of property, and highly respected in the neighbourhood, was proceeding along the highway leading from Talsarn to Aberystwith, accompanied by his servant, both being on horseback. Suddenly, the vast flood swept across the road, and, in an instant, both men and quadrupeds were drowned, the sudden [illegible]sing all efforts at escape, suffocating and destroying its victims. The inhabitants of Talsarn, already horror-stricken at the calamity that had befallen themselves, found their sympathies aroused anew, when the dead bodies of Dr. Rogers and his unfortunate servant were whirled through their village by the infuriated stream. The lifeless carcases of their horses following their masters' remains, completed the dismal realities of this awful scene. After the violence of the storm had in some measure abated, the devastation that was perceivable was truly lamentable. Numbers of families had been rendered houseless, and, in consequence of the loss of their furniture, utterly ruined. Within the memory of man, no such flood has ever occurred in the Vale of Ayron. The loss at Talsarn is estimated at about £1,000, which, for the most part, is irremediable, since the inhabitants are principally of the poorer class.

The storm of Saturday last did much mischief in Kent. It extended itself to the neighbouring counties. In the neighbourhood of Reading, Oxford, Newbury, Farringdon, Cirencester, Wantage, &c., the storm was of a most awful description, and the damage sustained to vegetation generally is incalculable. At Cirencester, two sheep and an ox were killed by the electric fluid; and at Wantage, two sheep and a valuable horse were struck dead by the same powerful agency. At Oxford, the electric fluid did great damage to building property, hothouses, and gardens. The roof of the house of Mr. Dudley, situate near the river, was struck by the lightning. At Letcomb, near Wantage, the lightning entered the roof of a cottage, shattered a bedstead, and threw a child that the mother had just laid in bed on the floor, but unhurt. At Highworth, the servant of a Mr. Boyne got under a tree, with his horse, for shelter; the horse was killed, but the man miraculously escaped with a slight scorching of the forehead. At Henley-on-Thames, the flashes were awfully vivid and forked. The house of Mr. Musgrove was struck by lightning. Mr. Musgrove and a portion of his family were standing in a passage, through which the bell-wires passed, and were all struck to the ground, but happily without injury; the damage to his out-houses, plants, &c., contiguous to the dwelling-house, is very considerable. Some parts of Hampshire, &c., were also visited by the above storm, and serious damage was sustained by the electric fluid. At the Swan Inn, Inkpen, a small village about three miles from Hungerford, the paper on the walls was in many places completely stripped off: the lightning then followed the bell-wire to the kitchen, where the maid-servant was at work; her clothes caught fire, but her screams speedily brought assistance, and the flames were happily extinguished without her receiving much injury; and a boy, who was standing in a barn near the house, was knocked down by the lightning, but escaped with a few slight scars on the cheek; a great portion of the barn, however, was destroyed by the electric fluid.

The hailstones did considerable damage in the vicinity of Datchet and Horton. At Ditton-park, the residence of the Duke of Buccleuch, upwards of 2000 panes have been broken; nearly the whole of the extensive hot and green-houses having been totally demolished. At Slough, also, and the neighbourhood of [illegible]rnham, the hail which accompanied the thunder and lightning, has done very considerable damage. A great portion of the standing corn has been beaten down, and much injury has been sustained by the market gardeners in every direction.

A Correspondent at Leicester says:—"At six o'clock, P.M., Saturday, Aug[illegible] 1st, we were visited with an awful thunder-storm; at ten minutes past e[illegible] o'clock the electric fluid struck the octagon spire of the beautiful new church of St. George's, in Leicester, hurling the top part of the spire upon the roof, crushing the organ below; and the west side of the stump of the spire left standin[illegible] rent in twain.

"The sexton had been ringing the eight o'clock bell, and had got about fifty yards from the church, when this awful catastrophe took place. The bell which he had been ringing is down; the clock face appears scorched, the hands standing at eleven minutes past eight; a large body of masonry was driven from the spire 250 yards in a zig-zag direction, letting fall large stones, and breaking the slates of some houses it passed over, exploding and shattering the glass and frame of a window in the second story of a house in Church-street, occupied by Mrs. May: one piece of stone rebounded to a window on the opposite side of the street, breaking the sash and two squares of glass.

"The quantity of stones and dust, like pulverised old mortar, deposited in the room, was not less than a bushel, and about the same quantity was found in the passage below, the door of which was forced open.

"P. S. This event has caused an immense sensation in this town and neighbourhood."

On Saturday night last, the town and neighbourhood of Nottingham were visited by one of the most awful thunder storms. From half-past eight until midnight, the horizon on all sides was one continued glare, and during the greater part of that time the storm raged with unusual violence. Nottingham, however, escaped any serious damage; but at Nuttall, four miles distant, the electric fluid struck a large straw stack, in the farm-yard belonging to Mr. Joseph Falconbridge, and although the villagers turned out and rendered every assistance, and the rain was falling in torrents at the time, it was quickly consumed. At Bulwell, about two miles to the east of Nuttall, three horses, the property of C. Allcock, Esq., were killed; they were worth £100. The electric fluid had riven part of the flesh from their bodies, and passed into the ground, making five round deep holes. Except slight injury to a few crops of standing corn, which being over-ripe, had some of the grain beaten out, far less damage was done than might have been expected from so terrific a storm.

The storm of Wednesday was most severe, between the hills that range along the Medway, towards Maidstone, and it was difficult to see across the river owing to the rain and hail. Rochester suffered more damage than Chatham; in the former place they had hail-stones of large size, whilst at Chatham, not a bit of hail fell. The town clock at Rochester, which hangs half across the street, was split by the lightning, and Williams, the postman, on delivering a letter, was struck and forced back against a door-post, fortunately without injury.

At Fort-place, on the Maidstone-road, a wheelwright named Kemp, whilst engaged in lighting a fire, was struck down by the electric fluid, which descended the chimney, displacing a portion of the bricks at the top, and, after striking a chest of drawers, which were splintered in many parts, it again escaped by the chimney, a hole in which, as if made by a musket-shot, showing the spot; besides which, the chimney is rent for about four feet in length. Kemp's wife and child came down stairs to his assistance, and were nearly suffocated by the sulphurous effluvia; the man himself was lying senseless at the time, but shortly afterwards recovered, and has sustained no injury. At the Falstaff, in Troy Town, the lightning descended the chimney, and struck down a woman engaged in washing at the time, and she was so severely injured that she remains in a very precarious state. At a house in the same neighbourhood, the wire of the bells was struck and the bells set ringing. The barge Busybody, belonging to Mr. Barnes, lying off the ship pier, at Chatham, was struck, the sprit being shivered; and at the same moment, as if by the same flash, several of the chimney-pots on the houses in Nile-terrace, lying high above the river, were swept away. A man named Tranah, employed at work on the wall at Frindsbury, between the railway station and the property of the Rev. Mr. Formby, was struck down and received so much injury as to be almost deprived of sight. Several other persons, both within and out of doors, were also struck down by the electric fluid, but in no instance that has reached us with any more serious effect.

On Saturday evening, about five o'clock, Liverpool was visited with a heavy thunder-storm, accompanied with a tremendously heavy shower of rain. The almost unendurable heat which was experienced on Sunday, and the distant claps of thunder which were heard about midday, showed plainly that the atmosphere was charged with vast quantities of electric fluid; but it was not until about a quarter past ten on Sunday night that the town was visited with another thunder-storm, in which the flashes of lightning were very vivid, and the peals very frequent and audible. One peal in particular burst right over the town, so dreadfully loud that it carried terror to almost every breast. We are happy to learn that no injury to life was done, although several persons were knocked down in the streets, and the damage to property has been, comparatively speaking, trifling in amount. At about twenty minutes past eleven a terrible flash of forked lightning was visible, and, almost immediately after, the electric fluid struck a chimney in the centre of Mr. Pemberton's, the upholsterer's, house, at the corner of Colquitt-street and Duke-street. After striking it, a portion of the fluid went down the chimney, and in its passage filled all the rooms of the house with soot and sulphurous vapour. The parlour was covered with soot to the depth of three or four inches. Another portion of the fluid struck the outside of the chimney, descended through the roof, and, breaking one of the rafters, it then appears to have passed in a slanting direction along the edge of the rafter, and to have gone out of the house about two feet from the gutter of the roof. The inmates were greatly alarmed; but, providentially, they all escaped uninjured. The storm ceased about twelve o'clock, but there was a return of it about four o'clock, P.M., on Monday morning, which was not, however, so long in duration, or of so alarming a nature.

A dreadful storm of thunder and lightning occurred in the neighbourhood of Chichester, about nine o'clock, on Wednesday morning. The thunder, lightning, and rain were so violent and so alarming, that all the harvest folds were quickly deserted. One of the reapers was proceeding to a cottage for shelter, with his reap hook upon his shoulder, which attracted the lightning, and the poor fellow's clothes were in an instant scorched up, and he was struck dead. His body presented a shocking appearance.

BANQUET TO LORD GEORGE BENTINCK, AT LYNN.

A banquet was given, on Tuesday, at Lynn, to Lord G. Bentinck, by his friends and constituents; the object of which was to make what is called "a demonstration" in support of Protection About 700 persons were present.

The chair was taken by the Earl of Orford, who was supported on his right by Lord G. Bentinck, and on his left by the Duke of Richmond. Near the chairman were Lord Sondes, Mr. Disraeli, M.P., Mr. W. Miles, M.P., the Marquis of Granby, M.P., Major Beresford, M.P., Mr. Hudson, M.P., Mr. Bagge, M.P., Mr. Christopher, M.P., Mr. Wodehouse, M.P., Mr. Bousfield, M.P., Sir J. Tyrell, M.P., Mr. Chute, M.P., and Mr. Sergeant Byles.

We have not room for the speeches; but our readers will, no doubt, be satisfied with a description of their scope and tendency

The Chairman toasted Lord George Bentinck as the head of the future administration of England. Lord George, in acknowledging the toast, spoke confidently of the revival of Protection, or, at least, of obtaining "compensation and relief for the agricultural interest." He characterised Sir Robert Peel's Corn Bill as "the infernal bill;" and persisted that the agriculturists, although defeated, had turned the right hon. gentleman out of power.

Lord George indulged in a repetition of some of his statistics, to prove that the removal of Protection was injurious to the country; and, in conclusion, asked for honest and consistent men. "I believe," said Lord George, "the English nation is true at heart—that it hates now, as it has always hated, trickery and shuffling (cheers) that it abhors falsehood, and can see no difference between political and any other lying. (Loud cheers.) I know not what difference it makes in [illegible] whether a man obtains political power, and with power, all its emolu[illegible] and advantages by false pretences, or whether a humble and starving ind[illegible]l in the streets, to save his life and that of his family, obtains bread under false pretences. (Cheers.) Well, then, this is the position of affairs now. I am blamed by many of my friends, that I have turned Sir R. Peel out of power. (Loud cries of 'No, no.') But, gentlemen, I say, if Free-Trade is to prevail, let us have Free-Trade carried by honest men. (Great cheering.) This measure has been carried, I am sorry to think, by the assistance of a man to whom this [illegible]y must ever owe a deep debt of gratitude—I mean the Duke of Wellington. [illegible], hear) I believe it was carried, in a great measure, through his means, for he told the Peers of England that, to save the Queen from the Government of Cobden, they must consent to vote with their party. Now I, for one, say that I would rather be governed by Cobden than be governed by Sir R. Peel. (Loud cheers) Cobden I know as an open and an honest foe (hear, hear)—and one we felt no difficulty in repelling, until we were betrayed by that other Judas professing a regard for the poor (loud cheers)—and by false professing friends. (Renewed cheers.) I, therefore, call upon you to exert yourselves now, and show that you have still the courage, the manliness—still the spirit which has ever distinguished Englishmen, and that you will not consent to be made a base utensil to serve the dirty purposes of trading politicians." (The noble Lord sat down amidst the most enthusiastic applause.)

The Duke of Richmond spoke in a similar tone of confidence, that the Protectionists would be able to regain power at the next election, if they organized themselves properly.

The Lord Mayor's Visit to Oxford.—The Lord Mayor reached Oxford by special train, soon after eleven o'clock on Wednesday morning, and immediately proceeded to the residence of the Mayor, Alderman John Thorp, and invited his Worship and the Town-Clerk to dine with him at the Star Hotel. The Lord Mayor and his friends spent the day in visiting the chief attractions of the city and neighbourhood. On Thursday morning his Lordship embarked at eight o'clock in the state barge from Folly-bridge, accompanied by the [illegible] ladies, and proceeded on their way towards Basildon-house, near Pangbourn, where Mr. J. Morrison, M.P., entertained the whole party. The morning was [illegible]cularly fine, and the scene on the Isis at starting was both beautiful and animating. Thousands of persons were on each side of the river, and the Lord Mayor departed amid cheering, firing of salutes, and the enlivening music of his own band.—[Next week, we shall copiously illustrate this very interesting ceremonial.]

OLGA, PRINCESS ROYAL OF WURTEMBERG.

The Grand Duchess Olga—Nicolaewna, now Princess of Wurtemberg—is the youngest daughter of Nicholas, Emperor of Russia; she was born on the 11th of September (old style), 1822. She is said to be his favourite child, and all tourists and travellers who have visited the Imperial Court have paid a tribute of admiration to her extreme beauty. That her hand should have been sought by several Princes of the Royal Families of Europe, is by no means surprising; but more than one suitor was rejected, and it was understood that the Grand Duchess's attachment to her family was so strong that she was unwilling to quit its circle. During the last year the question of an alliance with Stephen, son of the Archduke of Austria, agitated the East of Europe, particularly the Hungarian and Sclavonian subjects of Austria; the Emperor, no doubt, wished to conclude the marriage, as the condition of adopting the Greek faith, imperative on all who marry into the Royal Family of Russia, was dispensed with in the case of the Archduke Stephen. But the match was broken off by a complication of political and religious causes, needless here to specify, and the Grand Duchess [illegible]ried, on the 7th of July, at St. Petersburg, to Prince Charles Frederick [illegible]xander, heir to the throne of Wurtemberg. The ceremony was performed at the Palace of Peterhoff, in all the double splendour of the Greek Church and the Imperial Court of Russia. The princely bridegroom was born on the 6th of March, 1823. The name, Olga, is that of a Russian peasant girl, who, in 946, was, by [illegible] of that day, raised to the throne, and, at her death, canonised. Similar elevations have not been uncommon in Russian history.

THE ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE LOUIS PHILIPPE.

The Paris papers furnish a few additional circumstances relative to the late attempt upon the life of Louis Philippe. The Debats says

"The King was on the balcony of the Tuileries; by his side were the Queen, Madame Adelaide, the Princesses; M. Duchatel, the Minister of the Interior; M. Delessert, the Prefect of Police; and General Jacqueminot. The King had not yet taken his seat. His Majesty began to salute the crowd, which welcome him with their acclamations. He held his hand on his heart -on that noble heart which has always beaten for France. A slight report was heard, and the King exclaimed, 'That is for me.' The persons about his Majesty imagined it to be the explosion of some firework; but the King calmly replied, 'No, there were two pistol shots, which were fired from that spot;' and he pointed out the place with his finger. And such, indeed, was the fact. A miserable assassin, who had stationed himself outside the reserved gardens, behind the statue called the Crouching Venus, had fired two pistol shots at the King. Amidst universal consternation, the King stood unmoved; he advanced in front of the balcony, showing, by his gestures, that he had not been struck, and commanded the orchestra to continue playing the national airs."

"The regicide Henri was visited on Thursday," (last week) says the Constitutionnel, "by M. Dufresne, the Inspector of the Prisons. Interrogated as to the motives of his attempt, the prisoner replied that, on the eve of becoming a bankrupt, and not possessing sufficient courage to commit suicide, he had opened the code to find whether there was not a crime punished by death without its being necessary to kill any one. He then conceived the design of firing at the King, but without intending to kill him, in order that the capital punishment might be inflicted on him for having attempted the King's life."

The Moniteur publishes the Royal Ordinance, convoking the Court of Peers for the trial of the regicide Joseph Henri. The Chancellor of France had given notice to the Peers to attend on Friday (yesterday) to constitute themselves into a court of justice for the purpose specified in the above ordinance.

It is believed that the Commission of the Peers who had been charged with the investigation of the attempt of Lecomte would be again assembled on the present occasion. It was composed of the Duke Pasquier, Chancellor of France, president; the Duke Decazes, and Messrs. Frank Carre, Barthe, Portalis, and Merilhou.

On Thursday morning (last week) the wadding of the pistols was found in the ditches of the Tuileries. "All the persons," says the Commerce, "who visit, in the garden of the Tuileries, the spot where Henri stood when he fired upon the Royal Family, declare that the best marksman would scarcely be able to kill the King at that distance with a carbine."

The following is the official account of the Moniteur:—

No! the country will not believe that another crime has been committed, yet such is the truth -the King has been fired upon.

The visible protection of Providence, which defies the malice of assassins, has for the seventh time saved this life, so dear and precious to France. This news will cause profound consternation in the country. We can hardly master our own emotion and grief.

The King, who preserved, under the circumstances, his usual composure, gave orders to continue the concert, and appeared before the public, to show that he had received no hurt.

OLGA, PRINCESS ROYAL OF WURTEMBERG.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

The assassin was immediately seized by the by-standers, and interrogated. He stated that his name was Joseph Henri. He was aged 51, and was an ironmonger. His lodgings have been searched. He has confessed his guilt, and acknowledged the pistols belonged to him. He had long projected his crime. His intention was to commit the crime on the 1st of July, when he was on duty, as National Guard, at the Tuileries. He is small, and of slender form. He was decently dressed. One hundred and forty francs in gold were found upon him. At ten o'clock a Council of the Cabinet was held at the Tuileries. Immediately afterwards the King returned to Neuilly, and will depart tomorrow for the Chateau D'Eu.

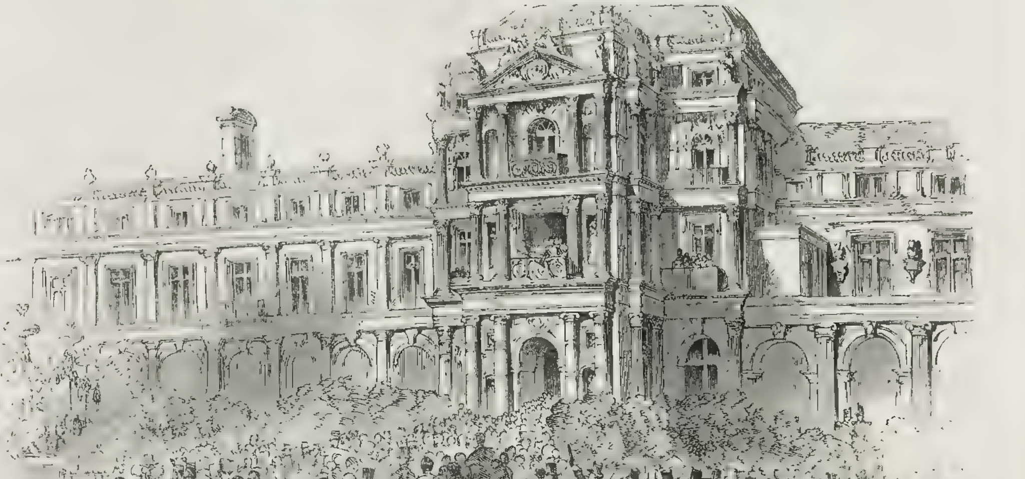
The prisoner, Joseph Henri, declared that he was not actuated by any political motive. He said he was driven to the act by private misfortune; that he owed a sum of 15,000 francs, which, if he did not pay at the end of the month, he should go to prison; and that an account of his life would be found at his residence.

(ANOTHER ACCOUNT.)

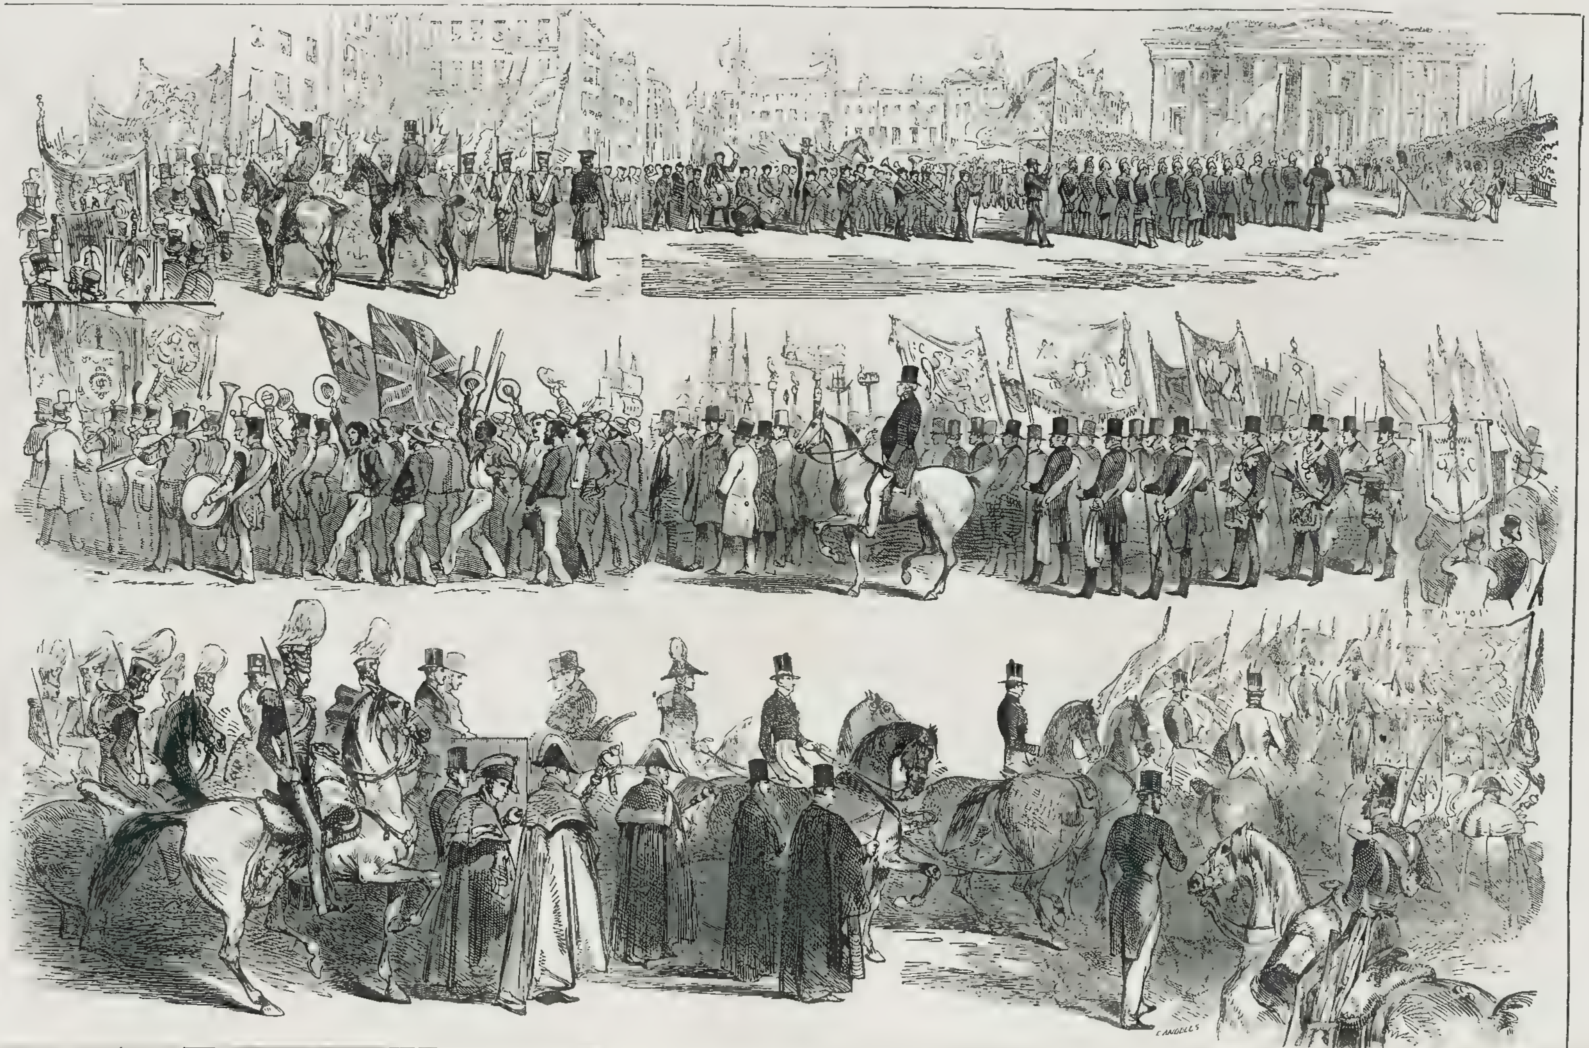
The anniversary of the last day of the Revolution of 1830 was, according to custom, celebrated on Wednesday, in the beautiful public gardens behind the Palace of the Tuileries. At half-past seven in the afternoon, during the performance of a concert, his Majesty and the Royal Family appeared in a capacious balcony, situated near the centre of the long range of the Palace buildings and immediately overlooking the gardens; two pistol shots were fired at his Majesty from the promiscuous crowd promenading beneath; the concert was instantly interrupted, but the King, with the calm courage which has always characterised him, and which seems the inheritance of the sons of Henry of Navarre, directed the concert to proceed, and continued to walk in the balcony, as if to satisfy the agitated and indignant people that he had sustained no injury.

Meanwhile the assassin, for both shots had been fired by one individual, was seized by a hundred hands; his arms (two pistols) were found upon him; and being interrogated by his captors, he made it no secret that his purpose had been to murder the King, before his people, and in the midst of his family. He said that he had long meditated the assassination, and had intended to execute it on the 1st of July, when on duty as a National Guard at the Tuileries, but had not found an opportunity

It appears that various sinister reports have been in circulation respecting the King. The Débats of Sunday alludes to them in these terms: "Alarming and completely false reports have been current in Paris to-day. It was reported that the King was struck with apoplexy; and on the other hand it was affirmed that a carbine had been fired at his Majesty, that he was wounded in the arm, and that the Duke d'Aumale had been killed by his side. These reports, we repeat, are entirely false. The Minister of the Finances to-day authorised M. Baudesson de Richebourg, the Commissary of the Bourse, to give them a formal denial. The Government received a telegraphic despatch, dated from the Château d'Eu, at half-past two o'clock. The King was in perfect health, and expected a visit from the Prince of Bavaria at three o'clock. We do not know with what object these rumours have been spread. Similar reports were current yesterday at Rouen, and produced a disastrous effect on the market. We do not know what object they can serve, but we cannot help expressing our indignation at them, and holding them up to the reprobation of the whole country."



THE ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE KING LOUIS PHILIPPE, AT THE TUILERIES.—(FROM A SKETCH BY A CORRESPONDENT.)



PRINCE ALBERT'S VISIT TO LIVERPOOL.—THE GREAT PROCESSION TO THE SITE OF THE SAILORS' H

THE FETES OF JULY.—PARIS, 1846.

The Sun of July on the Seine's breast is glancing,
The tricolor banner floats on the light breeze,
The glad notes of music, of laughter, and dancing
Are heard from the gardens of proud Tuileries.
Joyously ring out the bells from each steeple,
Loudly the Invalides' cannon reply
'Tis the Fête of the Nation, the King and the people
Assemble to honour the Days of July.

The Days, when surrounded by bigotry's wardens,
The Bourbon would trample on Liberty's shrine,
The Days when the battle shout roar'd through these gardens,
That the Voice of the People alone is Divine.
The Days when Lutetia display'd to the world,
An example of valour that never can die,
When stainless her banner, in triumph was furl'd,
And Europe applauded the Days of July.

Four lustres have passed, and the Orleans' sceptre
Was honour'd by mankind; for peaceful its sway,
France rose with the King whose sagacity kept her
Aloof from the councils that wrought her decay.
[illegible] a rival,
[illegible] to defy
Th[illegible]
That vainly would trample the crown of July.

And now How the cheek of Humanity blushes!
The serpent is found 'mid the garland of flowers,
In the day of rejoicing the regicide rushes
To bring down dire woes on the Tuileries towers.
The scourge, not the scaffold, should lecture the zany;
France spurns the low caitiff, and peals forth her cry,
Of Live Louis Philippe for many and many
Bright years to preside o'er the Fêtes of July.

MUSIC.

THE BRUSSELS OPERA COMPANY.

From the cold reception given to Halévy's "Mousquetaires de la Reine," produced for the first time in this country, at Drury-lane Theatre, on Monday night, we feel convinced that the French opéra-seria is much more relished here than the opéra-comique. The latter requires a small theatre in order that no portion of the smart dialogue may be lost, and Drury Lane is too large for the artists habituated to speak in a more limited locality. Moreover, our audiences—although the French language is now understood or spoken universally—are not accustomed to the rapid mode of utterance of foreign actors, and are soon tired of long soliloquies; whereas, in the recitative, the musical pitch is always agreeable, or, at all events, does not become so soon monotonous. We are not, therefore, astonished that whilst "The Huguenots," "Robert le Diable," "Guillaume Tell," "La Favorite," and "La Juive," have excited immense enthusiasm, the spoken comic operas, "Les Diamans de la Couronne," "Le Chalet," and "Les Mousquetaires," have been heard, comparatively speaking, with apathy.

Nothing but disaster has attended the "Mousquetaires" It was to have been the earliest novelty, but was postponed night after night, owing to Couderc's illness; and, at last, when he was able to play, he was still quite unable to sing; and Mr. Harley, at the end of the second act, had to appeal for indulgence on his behalf. Of course, the opera suffered materially by this contrariety; but, making every due allowance for the chief tenor's misfortune, we are still quite unable to account for the extraordinary popularity of "Les Mousquetaires," in Paris and Brussels. It has been running at the Salle Favart since February last, and is still drawing crowded houses The libretto is certainly one of the most interesting stories of its class, and, with such artists as Mdlle. Darcier, Mdlle. Lavoye, M. Roger, and M. M[illegible] (tenors), and M. Hermann Léon (basso), full justice must be done both to the acting and singing; but the music struck us as being heavy and dry, although beautifully scored. Halévy has not the buoyancy of Auber or Adam, and his inspirations require more than one hearing to catch their elegant import. The action passes in Poitiers, under Louis XIII., where the Court is assembled prior to the Siege of Rochelle. Athénaïs de Solanges (Mdme. Laborde), having been accidentally overheard by Hector de Biron (M. Boulo), a madcap, to avow her affection for Olivier d'Entragues (M. Coderc), one of the Queen's Musketeers, with whom, however, she has not exchanged a word, writes to her, making use of his friend Olivier's name. Olivier is really smitten with Athénaïs; and Hector, ignorant of this fact, manages to obtain an interview with her, whilst his friend has innocently consented to mount guard in his stead. On this mistake, the incidents turn; for Olivier, at the moment he has received news of a large accession of fortune, and that he is the Duc de Montbarret, by his uncle's death, is arrested for having killed an officer in a duel, and would have been summarily hanged by the Grand Prévot, by virtue of Richelieu's edict against dueling, but for the timely declaration of Athénaïs in his favour, that Olivier was with her, at the period indicated for the duel. This avowal is, of course, not highly creditable to the Maid of Honour; and Olivier, who is really quite innocent of the officer's death, expresses his gratitude to Athénaïs for such an immolation, when he discovers the trick that has been played. Hector, on finding the mischief that he has produced, repents, and provokes an old officer, Roland (Zelger), to mortal combat; but Berthe, another Maid of Honour, and friend of Athénaïs, attached to Hector, explains to Olivier matters; and, as Roland has perceived that Hector is seeking death, the life of the latter is saved in time to render explanations satisfactory for the dénouement of the two nuptials between Olivier and Athénaïs, and Hector and Berthe. This plot is ingeniously developed; and the contrasts of character between the sentimental and chivalric Olivier, and the wild, yet brave Hector, the stern duelist Roland, the interesting Athénaïs, and the piquante Berthe, have been well marked by the author, M. de Saint Georges.

The overture was much more lively than the vocal music, which contained more of scientific combination than of melodious imagery. Halévy is a musician of great talent, but he is not a genius; he has grace without freshness, elegance without charm. Madame Laborde had the most effective piece in the first act, "Bocage épais," the cantabile of which was far better than its cabaletta. The concerted piece, "Parmi les guerriers," in which the ladies choose their champions, is very clever and effective; and the March Finale with chorus remarkably striking. A quartet for two tenors and two soprani; a buffa aria for the basso, "Pas de beauté," cleverly rendered by Zelger; a pretty duo, "Comme un ange," sung by Couderc and Madame Guichard; and a vigorous finale, were the most attractive morceaux of the second act. The chorus of trebles, with an air by Madame Guichard, a most exciting duo between Couderc and Madame Laborde, and a quaint buffo duo between Zelger and Boulo, were the most prominent items in the third act. The costumes of the Musketeers were highly picturesque—indeed, the mise en scène was altogether good; but Couderc's indisposition threw a great damp over the performance, although his acting in the last act, when Olivier discovers that some unknown has made use of his name with Athénaïs, was finely acted. The opera was to have been repeated on Wednesday, but Couderc had a relapse, and the theatre was closed on that evening. [illegible] by th[illegible] [illegible]y with their presence [illegible] te:" the scena of Marguerite, from Meyerbeer's "Huguenots," sung by Madame Laborde; and Adam's operetta of "Le Chalet," executed by Madame Guichard, Barielle, and Boulo. Madame Julien was the Leonor de Guzman Laborde Fernand, Massol Alphonse, and Barielle Balthazar, in "The Favo[illegible] Donizetti's work was superbly played, not only in the ensemble, but with great excellence on the part of the leading vocalists. Madame Julien has disagreeable moments, when she strains her voice, but her lower notes are rich, and her impassioned feeling rises in proportion with the dramatic situation, so that she enlists the sympathies of her auditory in a great degree without personal attractions to aid her influence. Laborde's Fernand, although not equal to Duprez's assumption, is one of considerable ability Massol's King is his best part. He gave the air, "Léonor viens j' abandonne," with perfect intonation and expression; and, in the celebrated morceau, "Pour tant d' amour ne soyez pas ingrate," created quite a furore. The choruses and orchestral accompaniments were, as usual, finely executed. It is to be regretted that the band is not equal to that of last year as regards stringed instruments, a portion having been left in Brussels for the German troupe now playing at the Grand Opera, but enough talent remains in M. Hanssen's present forces to render the orchestration effective. In the finale of the second act many amateurs were surprised to hear the four bars of Balfe's Pirates' Chorus in the Enchantress, note by note: but, in justice to Donizetti, it should be mentioned that "The Favorite" was written five years previously

We regret that the Brus[illegible] Company has been such a severe loss to the two amateurs who, from a love of art, and without contemplating the importation of these artists as a financial speculation, have guaranteed the entire e[illegible] The failure has been generally ascribed to the lateness of the season and the he[illegible] of the weather. We hope that it has not arisen from any insensibility to the merits of the best foreign operatic troupe ever heard in this country, for we should, indeed, regret such an imputation on our national taste.

MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

Chertsey.—The usual quiet of this little country town was agreeably disturbed last week by the visit of Miss Dolby, Miss E. Birch, Signor Ferrari, Mr. Brinley Richards, Mr. Blagrove, and Mr. John Parry, who were engaged for a concert at the Literary Institution. The opportunity of hearing London artistes so rarely occurs, that the room was crowded by a most fashionable and [illegible] cluding all the leading families of the vicinity, as well a[illegible] villages of Sunbury, Egham, Staines, Walton, &[illegible] larise the various pieces in the programme, as th[illegible] favourites of the London concert-rooms during the past season. Everything was received with the warmest applause; and the audience were evidently delighted [illegible] Miss Dolby was encored in "Thou art [illegible] from my gaze," and "Terence's farewell." In the latter ballad she fairly bewitched her hearers; and John Parry, having sang Albert Smith's songs of "Foreign Affairs," "Young England," and "Fayre Rosamonde," closed the entertainments, like a play or a novel, w[illegible] devolved upon Mr. Brinley Richards an[illegible] Signor Ferrari ably contributed to the vocal portion of the programme, and were most heartily complimented thereon.

Miss Romer, Messrs. Harrison and Borrani. These vocalists have had great success in their trip to Ireland. The Irish press comment in most flattering terms on their performances.

The Italian Opera in Paris.—The season commences on the 1st of October. The troupe engaged comprises Grisi, Persiani, Marietta Brambilla, the great contralto; Mario, Lablache, Ronconi, Celleni, Corelli, and Tagliafico, who belonged to the company last season, and the new artists are Mdlle. Peppina Brambilla, a sister of the celebrated contralto, and of Teresina, who is now a prima donna at Naples, Mdlle Angiola Albini, and the famous baritone, Coletti.

Rossini.—La France Musicale states that Rossini's resolution is irrevocable not to write any more on the stage, and that his Cantata in honour of the Pope will be his last composition. He is now occupied in writing his memoirs. The Revue et Gazette Musicale, on the other hand, has the annexed article: "Rossini's new opera has at length arrived in Paris; it is not a mythe: it is really the 'Donna del Lago,' with a new overture, and four new pieces. It is accompanied by a letter, in which Rossini not only assumes the entire responsibility of the work, but expressly prohibits the change of a single note in the rehearsals. Gardoni, Bettini, Anconi, Barroilhet, Mdme. Stoltz, and Mdme. Rossi-Caccia, are included in the cast. Mdlle. Nau was offered the part of the attendant, enriched with a cavatina. We do not advise her to accept it."

Jenny Lind.—Mdlle. Lind is expected in Stuttgard in October.

Sivori.—This violinist departs for the United States next month.

Lover, it is stated, also contemplates a tour in America. The Ethiopian Serenaders terminated their prosperous season at the St. James's Theatre on Thursday evening, by a benefit. Carlotta Grisi danced at the benefit of her sister, Ernesta Grisi, the vocalist, at the St. James's Theatre, on Tuesday night. A rehearsal takes place this morning, at Erard's Rooms, in Marlborough-street, of a new opera, called "Le Demon de la Nuit," composed by M. Godefroid, the harp player, for the Brussels Company. M. Godefroid is a Belgian. Next week will close the campaign of the Brussels troupe at Drury-Lane Theatre.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

In addition to the usual excellent stores of entertainment provided for us by the great lyrical and choregraphic artists, who have throughout the season, now alternately, and now together, appeared for the amusement of the Opera votaries, the presence of Taglioni, and her appearance in combination with her sister ballerine has given a more than usual brilliancy to the performances of the few last weeks, as the crowded and elegant audiences have testified.

Thursday was her benefit; and but that we have lately expatiated so largely on the merits of this admirable danseuse, we could with pleasure dilate on such performances, for example, as that of the "Sylphide," the ballet of all others most adapted to her style, and in which her exquisite grace and poetry of motion appear to the highest advantage. Having last week, devoted, however, much of our space to descriptions of Taglioni's performance in the famous "Pas des Déesses," together with that of Grahn and Cerito, we must repair omissions which want of space then necessitated, and compliment St. Leon and Perrot for the part they take in this divertissement. To the latter, as composer alone of a pas so peculiarly ideal, so graceful, and so admirably adapted to show off the peculiar powers of each of the three great danseuses, great praise is due. But it is also as a dancer that, on this occasion, he surpasses himself. We are not great admirers of pirouettes, and we think the effect of a graceful flying step is often impaired by the apparently inevitable twirl at the end; but those executed by Perrot and St. Leon excel, for the marvellous power and activity they display, and the celerity with which they are executed, anything we have seen before. As to St. Leon, his cooperation in some of the pas d'ensemble is truly admirable.

There is one step especially in which Taglioni, Grahn, and Cerito come on, holding each other by the hand, while St. Leon follows behind them, vaulting so high, that his head and shoulders are, for the moment, seen above them all, in which this display of wonderful activity produces an excellent effect. We must not omit to notice en passant the charming performance of Louise Taglioni, who almost always obtains an encore for her pretty twinkling steps—a compliment which, though fully merited, is a great one, when such danseuses as Taglioni Grahn, and Cerito are all present.

"Anna Bolena," "I Lombardi," and "Don Pasquale" have been the operas of the week, the light melodies and drollery of the latter affording an agreeable contrast to the solemn and tragic grandeur of the two others. It is difficult to persuade oneself that the same artists are seen in these three operas, so totally do they alter their styles of singing and acting, according to the occasion; and so closely do they identify themselves with parts entirely opposed to each other.

HAYMARKET.

The translation of the "Antigone" of Sophocles, which was first brought out about two years ago at Covent Garden, was reproduced at the above house on Monday evening, on the occasion of Mr. W. Farren's benefit, the principal character being sustained by Miss Helen Faucit. Although it was this young lady's first performance of Antigone in London, yet it appears that, in the other capitals of the United Kingdom, she has gained the greatest applause by her impersonation; and we alluded last week to the present made to her by the heads of the Dublin University, in testimony of their high admiration of her performance. From what we witnessed on Monday, we are bound to say that the warmest eulogiums have not been unfairly awarded to her. With all the vivid recollection of Miss Vandenhoff's admirable acting, and the bias apt to accompany a first impression, we can state that a more finished and classical performance has seldom been witnessed. Miss Faucit has studied Antigone deeply, not only according to her own good sense and perception, but evidently under higher guidance; so that she completely realised every expectation that could properly be formed with regard to a pure and correct interpretation of the character From her very first appearance to her departure with the guards, not a point w[illegible] lost; nor, indeed, was there one made which did not tell generally with the audience. Even when she was not speaking, the mute eloquence of her action riveted the attention of the house as much as her declamation had done. Her reception was most enthusiastic, and she was throughout loudly applauded, more especially in the scene with the orchestral accompaniment, in which she anticipates her doom, and pourtrays the different phases of feeling incidental to her position. Mr. Stuart was an effective Creon, and Mrs. Edwin Yarnold played Ismene in her usual natural and unaffected manner. The other characters call for little remark, as little is required of them beyond a plain, straightforward delivery of the speeches set down for them. Mrs Stanley, however, nearly jeopardized the good effect of one of the scenes, by an artificial tragedy-queen kind of exit, which provoked a general titter. We cannot award much praise to the chorus—forty in number according to the bill, and twenty-six as we counted them. Their performance was never above mediocrity, and, at times, sufficiently bad to be mildly hissed. However, at the fall of the curtain, the applause was very hearty and general; and Miss Faucit being loudly called for, was led forward by Mr. Farren to acknowledge the compliment. In the entr' acte, Mr. Farren sang the "Old English Gentleman" in character; and Miss P. Horton was encored in "Lucy Neal." But, sweetly as she gave this touching ballad, it lost much of its effect, compared to that created by the Ethiopians; being, in a measure, a dramatic song that requires the usual accessories. In this instance, a chorus was sung behind the scenes. "The School for Scandal," for the first time, at half-price, concluded the entertainments.

LYCEUM.

The farce of "The End of June," produced here on Monday evening, promises to become a favourite, albeit the incidents are not altogether new, nor indeed can the piece itself be called so; the plot being nearly the same as that of the musical farce, "Thirteen to the Dozen," which was brought out exactly twenty years ago at the Haymarket, with Liston in the principal character of Knippen Clipper. The story is that of a village tailor (Mr. Keeley), who has a piece of stuff, of a peculiar pattern, given to him to make into waistcoats for a party of conspirators, that they may know one another by this token. From the stuff the tailor contrives to "cabbage" a sufficient quantity to make a garment for himself, and from this is of course taken for one of the gang, and, in consequence, is involved in all manners of scrapes and dilemmas. The watchword of the party is "The end of June;" and, the time of the action being the depth of winter, this observation constantly recurring, so bewilders the wretched little ninth of a man, that he firmly believes himself to be at last in the clutches of the Evil One, and regards the fatal pattern—a black and scarlet plaid as symbolical of a gridiron over a blazing fire, destined for him. At last, however, fortunately for him, everything is explained, just as he is about to be arrested on the day of his marriage.

Mr. Keeley, as the tailor, was excessively droll; and on him the entire business of the piece rested. His assumption of utter helpless terror, as, one by one, the conspirators address him mysteriously, was inimitable; not less excellent was his transition from mere apprehension to the wildest despair. He delivered a "tag" at the end of the piece, claiming the indulgence of the audience for such a trifle: but this was scarcely needed, as the laughter was incessant, and the reception of the farce completely favourable.

We regret to hear that Mr Willmott, the able stage-manager, has seceded from the theatre, in consequence of some managerial misunderstanding.

A new farce is in rehearsal at the Princess' Theatre, in which Mr. Charles Mathews will sustain the principal character.

A new piece, called "The Fortune Hunter," will shortly be produced at the Haymarket.

VAUXHALL.

In spite of our still being under the influence of St. Swithin, the watery saint has this year withheld his favours from Vauxhall Gardens in a most unprecedented manner. And even when he chooses to visit us with a storm he either selects a day on which the "Royal Property" is not open—last Saturday for instance—or he gets rid of his rainy wrath quite soon enough in the day to determine pleasure-seekers upon venturing out. All this week the Gardens have been crowded, especially on Wednesday evening, when Mr. Green made a night ascent in his balloon, and discharged a quantity of fireworks from the car, with greater effect than we have ever before witnessed. The evening was very favourable for the voyage, and the moon was shining brightly at the time of the ascent, so that the balloon could be seen for some time in its course, which appeared to be towards the S.W. as long as it was visible. The horsemanship alone is worth a visit: the scenes in the circle being by far the best of their kind in London; and if the old conventionality of jumping over the strips of canvass could be abolished they would be perfect. Madame Louise Tourniaire is as graceful a dancer as an ecuyère, and in a "Pas Styrien," on horseback, was loudly applauded; and the time between the different scenes is well filled up with Mr. Barry's drolleries. A love of dancing is wonderfully on the increase, to judge from the indefatigable avidity with which the amusement is pursued at Vauxhall. As soon as the fireworks were over, an excellent band commenced playing polkas and quadrilles with much spirit, and the "votaries of Terpsichore," as we believe it is proper to call them, were hard at work when we left,—at an hour we would rather not state precisely.

Mademoiselle Rachel has, we are happy to say, recovered from her indisposition. She has been playing, as usual, at the St. James's theatre this week; and was announced to appear in "Jeanne d' Arc" last evening. We shall notice the performance at length, in our next.

GOSSIP OF THE WEEK.

If ever a place was named on the lucus a non lucendo principle, it assuredly is the case with the edifice in Dublin which is denominated "Conciliation Hall." The primary object of its founders was, not to reconcile the minds of the people to the Government they lived under, but to make them as dissatisfied as possible. Having, for some years, endeavoured to calm and pacify the spirits of their fellow-subjects by monster meetings, hints about "England's weakness being Ireland's opportunity," chuckling allusions to the chances of French and American wars, and other similarly soothing syrups for the popular feelings, the great men of the Hall have now begun a little friendly course of Conciliation amongst themselves.

Smith O'Brien, the Hero of the Cellar, commences rebellion against the mighty Dan. Young Ireland with Meagher and Duffy at her head, joins the mutiny; and after a debate of exquisitely Irish turbulence, Juvenile Hibernia secedes in a body, leaving the veteran agitators alone in their glory.

Young Ireland has a longing for physical force. The old Danites prefer the system of moral force; which, in their mode of working it, certainly justifies Roebuck's definition of moral force meaning physical force in perspective. O'Connell's system is to keep the masses up at concert pitch, but never actually to sound the note of insurrection; to keep the gun always loaded, primed, and cock'd, but to disclaim all idea of ever pulling the trigger. Young Ireland is, like Pat at Donnybrook Fair, tired of blarney, and ready for a row. This party scorns metaphysical subtleties, and pretty openly avows that its adherents must be,

> Those who do build their faith upon
> The holy text of pike and gun.

The sword, however, is Mr. Meagher's favourite weapon, and he assures us that by a somewhat funny botanical process "it blossoms into flower, to deck the patriot's brow."

In order to show the beauty of physical force,

> By precept and example too,

this sample of adolescent Milesianism attacked, in the street, last Saturday, vi et armis, Captain Broderick, one of the opposite section of the "Conciliators;" for which exemplification of his theories, the said Meagher has been bound over to keep the Queen's peace—and had better have been also commanded to hold his own.

The quarrel is a mighty pretty one as it stands; and, perhaps, these would-be Repealers of the Union may be acting characteristically enough, when they thus begin by repealing all union among themselves

On this side of St. George's Channel, the weather has been the principal topic of attention; and some very lively performances by "Bold Thunder and brisk Lightning" (as the old dramatist was said to have called them) have really made a recurrence to this usually stupid staple of English conversation a little more justifiable than is generally the case.

> Fera diluvies [illegible]
> Irritat amnes;

And Fleet-ditch, which, as Pope sang of it.

> With disemboguing streams,
> Rolls its large tribute of dead dogs to Thames,

has burst its barriers, and devastated Mutton-hill—

> Apparent rari nantes in gurgite vasto;

while drawers, butchers'-blocks, dead kittens, and other treasures, have been swept away by the resorbent stream, through its subterraneous caverns, into the abysses below Blackfriars-bridge.

Fervently hot is still the atmosphere in which noble Lords and honourable members are yet doomed to linger a little longer, to despatch the last dregs of their senatorial duties. Audible gaspings for fresh air rise from committee-rooms, and active exertions of the Government whippers-in are needed to prevent both morning and evening sittings from terminating prematurely in a "count-out." Half of the unfinished [illegible] of legislation is handed over to the tender mercies of another [illegible]n; the other half is bolted through at railroad pace. A few days suffice to administer an aperient to the Court of Common Pleas; and that ancient Court is no longer to be hermetically sealed against all those who do not wear the black patch on the wig, which betokens a sergeant-at-law. Drainage, Deodand, and Local Court Bills proceed with the same rapidity—which is much promoted by the ab[illegible] in the House, at this season, of nearly all the legal members, through their being engaged on their respective circuits. These learned gentlemen will, however, have ample compensation, in the amount of litigation which this system of making laws in a hurry always creates.

In the Great Civic War, the Lord Mayor has conquered. He ha[illegible] to Oxford, as Conservator of the Thames, in spite of the Common Council; and the Metropolitan state barge has been moored on the bank of the Isis—an object, we are told, of great attraction to the denizens of those academic regions

His Lordship bears his honours meekly; and the Oxford Correspondent of the Times informs us that, as it appeared to be his Lordship's wish that his visit should be as private and unostentatious as possible, there was nothing beyond a little additional bustle.

Far different this to the pomp which, in bygone years, Venables displayed, and the pen of Dillon immortalized. Still the influence of the illustrious visitors has been felt by Oxford, and there has been much banqueting: the influence of Oxford has in turn been felt by her guests, and one of his Lordship's retinue has celebrated the event in Horatian strains. Our readers will observe in this ode some appropriate allusions to the thunder-storm and floods in the City, of which we have spoken elsewhere; and there is a very pretty sprinkling of geological learning, but we fear that Professor Buckland was not at our poet's elbow when he wrote, and the niceties of strata and epochs are not quite minutely attended to:—

SAPPHIC ODE TO THE LORD MAYOR,

ON THE OCCASION OF HIS VISITING OXFORD, IN AUGUST, 1846.

Jam satis terris nivis atque diræ, &c.—Hor Od. Lib. 1, O[illegible] 2.

Surely enough we've had of hail and thunder,
Rattling along, like 'busses on the pavement;
Surely enough has watery St. Swithin
Frightened the City;*

Frightened the gents† and dilettante wise men,
Fearing some age aquatic w[illegible] returning;
[illegible]ing the scenes geologists delight in [illegible] were coming.

When along Fleet-street Ptero-dactyls wandered
Saurians had the freedom of the City,
Crocodiles took their chambers in the Temple.
So did Hyænas.

Have we not seen the Thames‡ roll down to London
Laden with filth and floods from upper regions,
Threat'ning the Bank,§ the Monument,|| the Mansion
House with destruction?

Who ¶ will come forth as river-conservator
Who'll go and stop the mischief at the Isis?—
Get on the train, the barge shall go by water
Alderman Humphery!

Come if thou wilt, too, sage Sir Peter Laurie
Round whose decisions jokes are always flying **
Come thou thyself, great Whittington's suc[illegible].
Lord Mayor of London!

Let not the Thames be set on fire at Oxford
[illegible]t it pour down like Phlegethon by Wap[illegible].
[illegible], if you, in interfering,
Burn your own fingers.

Take your own time †† in going back to Guildhall—
Here let us rest 'mid academic bowers,
Let not a cry for limiting expens[illegible]
Hu[illegible] you h[illegible]

Here for a time let Oxford men my-Lord you;
Here return thanks we'll drink you[illegible] bumpers;
Let not the Common Council cut such capers,
Lord Mayor Johnson ‡‡.

---

* Terruit urbem

† Terruit gentes, grave ne rediret
Sæculum Pyrrhæ, nova monstra
[illegible], &c.

‡ Vidimus flavum Tiberim, &c.

§ Labitur ripâ.

|| Ire dejectum monumenta
Regis.

¶ Cui dabit partes scelus expiandi, &c.

 Quem Jocus circumvol[illegible]

†† Serus in cœlum redeas, &c.

‡‡ Neu sinas Medos equitare inultos
Te duce, Cæsar.

GOLD; OR, THE HALF-BROTHERS.

BY CAMILLA TOULMIN.

(Continued from page 62.)

The ball at Mrs. Joyce's was very like balls in general. I have heard it positively said that the company at [illegible] divided into three sorts. [illegible] mere circumstance of "[illegible]" the scene as a rich [illegible] must certainly be culled; [illegible] to disappoint! For a br[illegible]ason these merge, while their places are filled by youthful successors, into the second class, those who have discovered that "going out" may be but a triste affair after all; who put the question to themselves, whom shall we meet? be it the friend that is loved, the lion to be stared at, the singer to be heard, the conversationist to be enjoyed, or, it may be, the partner in an innocent flirtation to be trifled with. Alas! for the third class, dreadful to believe in it; can there be people, matronly dames and patriarchal gentlemen, who think the question "What shall we have to eat?" and to whom the carte of the banquet is the most charming of paper except that issued at the Bank

I am afraid there is a fourth class; people who go into the gay world from circumstance or habit: who are neither gourmands nor gourmets; who are far from the friends they love; who have outlived the season of flirtations, and who are too broken in heart and in spirit to rally their energies in the search of new enjoyments. These wear no outward badge, but they are to be recognised by the initiated, nevertheless.

Margaret Clifford had already thought and felt too much to belong exclusively to the first class; she was just passing out of it into the second. But she spent a delightful evening, though she could not look at her bouquet without thinking of the absent giver. Her self-respect, too, perhaps insensibly to herself, was fostered and gratified by the gracious [illegible] in which she was received and entertained. Her pupils were too young to join the party; there was no "governess" association with her presence; no solicitation that she should make her musical talents conducive to the amusement of the guests; no absence of the thousand little courtesies that mark a watchful assiduity in the hosts.

Catherine Joyce was a warm-hearted, high-spirited girl, a good deal spoiled, as the phrase is, by the excessive indulgence of her mother's sisters, with whom a great part of her early life had been spent, and who had doted upon her, but with a selfish weak fondness, that treated her only as a pet and plaything—a creature of impulse as might be expected from such a training, and yet self-willed and obstinate in her resolutions when formed. Fully conscious of the power and sweets of independence which her fortune would give her, and of which she already, in some measure, tasted, through the handsome pocket allowance awarded to her by her guardians, she was yet of too generous a nature to love money except for its uses. Morbidly sensitive on the subject of her isolated position she would have given half her fortune to purchase disinterested affection; but the suspicions and jealousies so mischievously implanted in her childhood were not to be easily uprooted. A warm friendship—notwithstanding that bar to friendship, inequality of position—was in process of forming between Catherine Joyce, the heiress, and Margaret Clifford, the governess, and the history of the latter being invited to the ball, though apparently somewhat complicated, was, in reality, simple enough.

Mr. Joyce had expressed a wish to that effect to his amiable and obedient wife; intimating a desire that she should be treated with all the consideration due to an esteemed and honoured guest. Moreover, the thing was done so dexterously that Catherine felt in it—as was intended—a double pride and pleasure: pride, that her friend was beginning to be estimated as she deserved to be; and grateful pleasure, to find that her feelings, her wishes, were consulted on such an [illegible]. Never had she seemed so amiable, or in such high spirits, as on the day and evening of the ball. Yes, it was evident that wayward temper was only to be ruled through its affections.

I think the sun looks down on few things more beautiful than one that is very often laughed at and despised—Woman's Friendship! Unselfish, long-enduring, self-devoting is it; possessing, especially in girlhood, not a few of the characteristics of first and passionate love. The same deifying of the object is there—the same absorption of all interests in one; and this goes on until a "destiny is fulfilled" [illegible] for weal or for woe, [illegible]. If for weal, true [illegible], that sympathises and rejoices, [illegible] its moonlight lustre on the [illegible] path, [illegible] through life's darkest and most wintry hours; and, great [illegible] to be a lesser, lighter thing than humanity's yet holier [illegible]tions. But if the "destiny" be not for "weal;" if love's sun be a thing to scorch, not cheer; if it pass away, leaving a ruin behind, then does woman's friendship gleam out again like a planet after an eclipse, to comfort and console in sorrow and sickness—to cheer and assist in adversity—and to defend in absence from the harsh of tongue and bitter of judgment. And—for humanity is frail—if suspicion or error creep in between them, Woman, believing in the Good, forgives, and trusts again, where Man would hate and slay!

But, to return. "I am going to introduce you to a great friend of Papa's," said Miss Joyce to Margaret Clifford. "I don't much admire him; but he has begged me to make him known to you."

As is so often the case on such occasions Margaret did not catch the name of the elderly-young gentleman who was brought forward to her, and most probably would not have enquired it afterwards of her friend, had not her curiosity been piqued by his evident endeavours to make himself agreeable: endeavours which were not altogether successful. "Sefton, Mr. Charles Sefton," was the answer she received, and at the moment Catherine was addressed by some one else, and no more was said. But the coincidence of having met with a namesake of her younger friend, led to a conversation the following day, in which she learned many particulars connected with the family, and that the two were brothers.

Now the truth was, that, since the conference between the two gentlemen which was described in the last chapter, Mr. Charles Sefton had altered his ultimate plans without materially changing his present tactics. He really admired Catherine Joyce very much—even her very waywardness had a certain attraction for one who looked upon women as having "no characters at all;" and he had begun to think he would much rather have her for his wife, and thus possess her twenty thousand pounds, than connive at risking it even in the most promising speculations. Indeed, he had dwelt sufficiently on the idea to fe[illegible] excessively annoyed at the evident satisfaction with which Miss Joyce received the attentions of a certain Frederick Drayton, who appeared to him in the light of a young and good-looking, and, therefore, formidable rival.

The individual in question was a very common-place person. London abounds in specimens of the class; and imitations of it are to be met with even in remote country places. Excellent dancers are they, and they excel especially in the waltz and polka; tolerable singers, for amateurs, and for the most part they can accompany themselves on the piano or guitar; can speak a little bad French and worse Italian, and—threaten German. They have been known to make an acrostic on a lady's name, and are great authorities in all matters of fashionable gossip; for which multifarious accomplishments they are generally looked on as desirable acquisitions at a party, and often attend two or three in one night. The genus have sometimes a small fortune, about sufficient, in their own opinion, to supply them liberally with kid gloves, cigars, and patent leather boots; but which a few exert their ingenuity to live on entirely; while others dawdle over some pursuit that may bring them in a trifling addition of income. But, however small their means, their allowance of brains is usually still smaller; for the intelligence of one really sensible man might commonly be divided with advantage among three of the species.

It was quite true that the handsome, high-spirited Catherine Joyce had suffered herself to become fascinated by a creature of the above description. It is useless to attempt any explanation of things of this sort; and, certainly, it is understandable that, of the two, a girl of twenty might prefer even Frederick Drayton to Mr. Charles Sefton. But, then, she had a wider choice!

What the French call besoin d'aimer—the necessity of loving—has more to do with these early fancies than anything else. The heart will cling "to the nearest, if not to the loveliest thing;" and it is no use wondering at or scolding about it, whatever else may be done. Perhaps, if the warm and true friendship which was forming between Catherine and Margaret had matured to the intensity of unlimited confidence, events might have wreathed themselves very differently. As it was, Margaret Cl[illegible]rd suspected, and sorrowed for her friend, but dared not [illegible].

It was [illegible] days after the party, that Margaret was on [illegible] [illegible] to her of great consequence; and her flushed cheeks, trembling voice, and tearful eyes, [illegible]rmed her words, and almost alarmed her friend.

In a few moments they were tête-a-tête, hand locked in hand, the arm of one round the waist of the other, and Catharine's head leaning on Margaret's shoulder. But the particulars of the interview must be reserved for another chapter.

(To be Continued.)

IRELAND.

THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION AND YOUNG IRELAND.

Considerable excitement prevailed on Monday in the vicinity of Conciliation Hall; numbers of people assembled in the vicinity of the house, and the hall itself was crowded. Many of the Catholic clergy were present; and, on Mr. O'Connell's entrance, he was received with unusual enthusiasm

Daniel O'Connell, Esq., Jun., M.P. for Dundalk, was called to the chair

Mr. O'Connell handed in £74 from the clergy of the diocese of Asaph. A letter from Bishop O'Higgins accompanied the remittance, earnestly approving of the conduct of Mr. John O'Connell at the last meeting, expressing horror, indignation, and disgust at the conduct and doctrines of the Young Ireland party, and closing with a lengthy denouncement of the Nation newspaper, as a disciple of Voltaire and Diderot, and an enemy of religion and truth.

Mr. O'Connell afterwards read a letter from Bishop Cantwell, enclosing £90, and stating that the clergy of his diocese had lately refrained from subscribing to the Association entirely in consequence of the doctrines and conduct of the Young Ireland party. Dr. Cantwell proceeds to deplore Mr. Smith O'Brien's secession, to land the course taken by Mr. John O'Connell at the last meeting, and to promise the "venerated Liberator" the support of all that is good and great in Ireland, towards his moral and peaceful aims.

Mr. O'Connell subsequently addressed the meeting. He said he had scarcely physical force to lay before it the details of the topics he wished to submit. He regretted the dissensions which had sprung up in the Association; but the fault was not his, but of those men who opposed the doctrine of moral force. He regretted the secession of Mr. Smith O'Brien, who had joined the Association at a perilous time. He feared that gentleman was lost to the cause of Repeal, and that he would not turn away from the dangerous path of the Young Irelanders. (Hear hear.) If he came back, and placed himself under the banner of moral force and peaceful agitation, he would be cordially welcomed. But, in stating that, he (Mr. O'Connell) gave up not one particle of his principle—that principle upon which the Association was founded. He (Mr. O'Connell) stood there in the presence of his God; he stood before the clergy of his church, before the representatives of the wealth, the influence, the virtue, and the morality of the metropolis; and he would with confidence refer to all that had been done for the Repeal, and also to the position—the proud position held now by the Irish Repealers. (Cheers.) He would call on them now to support that Ministry which had professed so much good for Ireland. Yet, would he give up the Repeal agitation? Oh, Heaven forbid! (Great cheering.) Yet he would give the Ministry every support, as long as they did good for Ireland

The rent exceeded £400.

Dundalk Election.—Mr. Daniel O'Connell, jun., has been elected member for Dundalk. The candidate was proposed by Dr. Coleman, and seconded by Mr. Joseph Cartin. Mr. O'Connell, on being declared duly elected, addressed the constituency, and in the course of his speech assured the independent electors, that although he "had not the gift of the gab, he was his father's son."

Death of the Bishop of Kildare. This venerable prelate breathed his [illegible] Glassnevin, near Dublin, on Tuesday morning. His Lordship had been in [illegible] state for some time. He was nearly 90 years of age. The bishopric of Kildare is one of the ten doomed by Lord Stanley's Act. The duties will devolve upon the Archbishop of Dublin. The revenues of the see will pass to the [illegible]stical Commissioners.

[illegible] the Royal Exchange, Dublin.—About one o'clock on Tuesday morning, the [illegible] of this fine structure was discovered to be on fire, caused, it is understood by the negligence of some plumbers, who had been at work during the day. The alarm was promptly given, and a number of engines being speedily set to work, in the most effective manner, the fire was got under before four o'clock, not without doing considerable damage to the roof and the lecture-room of the Mechanics' Institute.

POLICE.

THE LORD MAYOR ROBBED.

At the Mansion House on Tuesday, a young man, one of whose names is John Fitzsummons, was brought before Alderman Gibbs, upon the charge of having robbed the Right Hon. John Johnson, the Lord Mayor of London, of a watch and [illegible]s, value 60 guineas

Mr. Hobler attended for the prisoner.

The Lord Mayor stated that on Monday evening he came to the City terminus from Blackwall by the railroad in the ten o'clock train, and was waiting with some friends who accompanied him for a conveyance to the Mansion House. He was hustled by several persons, amongst whom was the prisoner; and one of the number, who was shorter in size than the prisoner, snatched his watch, chain, seal and key, and ran off There was no policeman on the spot, but soon after the robbery [illegible] committed, a policeman made his appearance, and took the prisoner, who said he had come from Gravesend, into custody

In answer to questions from Mr. Hobler, his Lordship said he felt his watch go from him as the prisoner passed. He valued the watch, because when he became of age his father presented him with it. He was waiting at the steps at the time for his carriage.

Mr. John Wood, of Falcon-street, stated that he was standing close to the Lord Mayor at the time, and he saw the prisoner and a shorter man in front of his Lordship, and four or five others about the spot He did not know that the Lord Mayor had been robbed until he heard his Lordship call for the police and say that he was robbed.

Mr. Hobler: Did the prisoner attempt to run away?—Witness: I did not see that he did.

Alderman Gibbs: Did he appear to you to be acting in concert with the shorter man?—Witness: Certainly. I should say they were decidedly acting in concert together.

Alderman Gibbs. How did it happen that there was no policeman at the terminus?—Inspector Woodroffe said the terminus was under the superintendence of the K division of the metropolitan police, and the City police had never had anything to do with that district.

The prisoner proved to be the man whom some months ago Daniel Forrester apprehended at Masterman's banking-house, suspecting that he was lurking about the place for the purpose of committing a robbery

[illegible] on the prisoner's person were found a white silk handkerchief with a broad [illegible] border, which he seemed very anxious to get back from the officer, and a [illegible]

It was stated in the justice room, that within the last few days, bank notes and gold to the amount of upwards of £3000 had been stolen in the neighbourhood of the Mansion House.

The prisoner was remanded till Tuesday next.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The Colonelcy of the 1st Regiment of Foot. It is reported that the Colonelcy of the 1st Royal Regiment of Foot, vacant by the demise of Sir George Murray, will be conferred on Sir John Macdonald, Colonel of the 42d Highlanders and Adjutant-General of the Army, and that he will be succeeded in the latter regiment by Sir James Macdonnell, of the 79th. Major-General D'Oyly, from the Grenadier Guards, it is thought, will be gazetted to the 79th.

Pay to Officers. The new warrant for the regulation of the future grants of unattached pay, retired full pay, and half pay, has just been issued from the War-Office. It contains no less than 48 articles, and is signed by the Hon. Sidney Herbert, late Secretary at War The warrant certainly places retired officers in a much more advantageous position than they have hitherto occupied. The 24th article states that, in order to make a better provision for officers of long and meritorious service, a limited number, twenty regimental lieutenant-colonels, shall receive an allowance of £100 a-year each in addition to the usual rate of half-pay.

A Marine Condemned to be Hanged.—A Cou[illegible] Tuesday (last week), on board the Quee[illegible] named James Sayer, a private of the Cha[illegible] that vessel. There were three charges against the prisone[illegible] upon superior officers, while in the discharge of their duty. The assaults did not appear to be very serious ones. The prisoner was found guilty; and the Judge [illegible]d the following sentence upon him:—The Court, having well and maturely considered the evidence, declares the first and second charges proved, and that the third was not proved, and adjudged that private James Sayer be hanged by the neck from one of her Majesty's vessels, at such time, and on board such vessel [illegible] the Admiralty should direct. The President (Admiral Sir [illegible]h Pigott) told the prisoner that he could not offer any hope of his sentence being mitigated.

[illegible] Case of Poi[illegible] [illegible]eds by the deat[illegible] of Mr Charles H[illegible] shopkeeper, residing [illegible]et, Quarry hill, in that town, and his wi[illegible] poison, on Saturday [illegible] Mr. Hebblethwaite was about twenty-eight [illegible] age, and was a mem[illegible] very respectable family, but both [illegible] for some time past le[illegible] somewhat irregular lives, and it is gener[illegible]ly conjectu[illegible] poison (opium) had been taken voluntar[illegible]y by himse[illegible] at least; but whether or not by his wife, may never, probably, be brought to light. An inquest has been held upon the bodies, but the evidence did not clear up the mystery. The Jury returned an open verdict, to the effect that both the deceased died from the effects of opium, but there was no evidence to show how it was administered.

PRINCE ALBERT'S VISIT TO LIVERPOOL.

The Sailors' Home! The Sailors' Home!
How cheering are the words! They come
[illegible] manly string
[illegible]
[illegible] Home, [illegible] "Poor
[illegible]"
Can give "wide barth" to th' harpy
pack
The syren fiends of ruin's dome:
God's blessing guard the Sailors' Home!

For here the brave and honest tar,
Whose prudence rarely mounts to "par;"
Whose very virtues have been made
Meshes whereby he is betrayed
Here finds he, 'gainst the sharks on land,
A certain succour, heart and hand;
And here his merits may become
An honour to the Sailors' Home!

Time tempests wear the bravest mast—
Too soon broods sickness o'er the blast;
Too soon is manhood's voyage o'er,
When breakers meet life's bark on shore
What beacon burns the light of hope,
And bids the tar with ills to cope?
What port smiles through the ruthless foam,
And cheers brave Jack? The Sailors'
Home!

Nobly, Eliza—Sovereign sage—
Gave to her tars life's anchorage,
Where the rough comrades of the wave
Spin out their yarns of battle brave,
Of wonders rife in distant seas,
Of shipwrecks dire and furious breeze;
Their log of life—most chequer'd tome—
At Greenwich ends—the Sailor's Home

And here, by Mersey's golden tide,
Well may a noble Prince feel pride
(The pride and pleasure to do good)—
In founding the Tar's Home, where food
For mind and body, and the soul,
Rescues brave Jack from Want's control,
And worse than want—foul pleasure's
gnome,
That robs the Sailor of his Home.

Then be that Home with blessings
crown'd;
And long may Liverpool abound
With the true hearts, right British all,
Which raised for Jack his homestead hall;
And long and happily may live
The Queen and Prince, whose virtues give
Pride to our flag where'er we roam,
And succour to the Seaman's Home.

In accordance with our intimation of last week, we proceed to complete our graphic commemoration of the Royal Visit to the good town of Liverpool

On Friday morning, the whole population were again on the alert from an early hour. All the flags, festoons, and other decorations, which had been put up for first welcoming the Prince, were retained, and all the shops were shut: the whole people seemed to be in the streets, and the houses, except the windows and balconies opening on the main streets, which were filled from an early hour in the morning with a gaily-dressed and expectant company, were almost deserted.

All this anticipation had in view the laying of the foundation of the new building, the "Sailors' Home"; preliminary to which ceremony there was to be a monster procession of all the trades, societies, fraternities, and associations, in the place; with all their flags, insignia, and bands of music.

The procession was formed, according to the arrangement previously ordered by the Mayor, soon after half-past nine o'clock, in the North Haymarket, in the order given in our last week's Journal.

The formation of a procession of between 7000 and 8000 people naturally took up some time—more than had been calculated by the authorities; for they had appointed that it should call at the Judge's lodgings at eleven o'clock, at which place the Prince and his suite were to have joined it at that hour. But the extreme length of the procession so delayed its progress, that it did not reach that point till after twelve. The Prince then joined the procession, which proceeded at a rate as rapid as possible down Norton-street, Seymour-street, Russell-street, Clarence-street, Mount-pleasant, Oxford-street, Abercrombie-square, West-side, Bedford-street South, Falkner-street, Catherine-street, Canning-street, Sandon-terrace, Rodney-street, Leece-street, Bold-street, Church-street, Lord-street, and South John-street, to the site of the new building, opposite the Post-office.

The large Engraving at page 89 will convey to the reader some idea of this vast demonstration pouring through the streets of Liverpool. The whole line of route (and it must have traversed a distance of four or five miles) was alive with human beings, the houses decorated with flags, and the windows filled with spectators. As each particular trade, or body, defiled past, they were saluted with cheers by those among the crowd who took any especial interest in them; and, sometimes, a rivalry was produced that was highly amusing. But the chief interest seemed to centre in the sailors: whenever that rolling rollicking mass of dark blue was seen coming up, shouting, laughing, cheering, an infection seemed to be communicated to the spectators, and they cheered too, and the ladies waved their handkerchiefs, carried completely away by the enthusiasm of the moment. The Prince was received in the most enthusiastic manner throughout this long progress

At the site of the Sailors' Home, a vast mass of persons had assembled from an early hour. The arrangements were admirably made, so that there was no confusion. A raised platform, capable of accommodating several hundred persons, commanded an excellent view of the open space below, in which the ceremonial was to take place; and the vast area which forms the site of the building was lined on all sides by visitors, chiefly ladies, who were accommodated with seats. At length, by great exertion, the movements of the vast body who formed the procession were sufficiently accelerated to allow of the Prince's carriage being drawn up to the ground, where he was received by Mr. Aikin, the Chairman of the Sailors' Home Committee, and greeted with acclamations by the assembled spectators. Some delay here took place; but the Committee and Freemasons having arrived with the Trowel, after some preliminaries, Mr. Starkie, the Grand Master of the Freemasons, performed the usual ceremonial, and a glass vessel, containing coins, a list of the donors, the Liverpool papers of the week, and other matters, was placed in the centre of the stone. The orifice was covered by a plate with the following inscription:—

This foundation stone of the Liverpool Sailors Home was laid July 31st, 1846, by his Royal Highness the Prince Albert, K.G., Consort of Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, Patron of the Institution, in the tenth year of her reign, and in the mayoralty of David Hodgson, Esq. Trustees Ralph Brocklebank, Robertson Gladstone, Duncan Gibb, William Potter, Robert Rankin. Committee. James Aikin, chairman; Charles Cotesworth, vice-chairman James Tyrer, treasurer Thomas Darnley Anderson, John Irvine Curry, auditors; William John Tomlinson, honorary secretary, John Lewis Phipps, Josias Booker John Abraham Tinne, William Prowse, James Bold, George Kendall, John Clint, John Archer, Robert Bibby, Thomas Chilton, Joseph Pinder, Joseph Williamson, George Atkinson, John Bond, William Ferguson, Thomas Berry Horsfall, George Grant, William Shand, Andrew Low, John Palmer Younghusband, Robert Cochrane Crosbie, Christopher Bell, R.N., Thomas Sands, Alexander Cu[illegible]ham Dunlop, Robinson Duckworth. The Rev. William Maynard M[illegible], chaplain, J[illegible]n Cunningham, architect.

Mr. Aikin then addressed the Prince in the following speech:—"May it please your Royal Highness,—As Chairman of the Committee to the Liverpool Sailors' Home, it is my duty to express to your Royal Highness our grateful acknowledgments and thanks for your kindness and condescension, in consenting to lay the first stone of the building to be erected on this site. Your Royal Highness is already aware that the great object of the establishment is to benefit the seamen frequenting our port, to improve their condition and their character, and to rescue them from perils of the shore, often more dangerous than those to which they are exposed at sea. That this object will be effected by the means proposed, is no longer a question of doubt. The business of the Sailors' Home has already commenced, and is now in active operation. During the last fifteen months, in premises hired for the purpose, the characters of 60,000 seamen have been registered, and 5,000 have been shipped on voyages, and in vessels of their own selection. The wages of a still greater number have there been paid, and a safe deposit for their money has been provided. The savings' bank, in addition to the bank of deposit, forms an important part of our plan, and the success of this arrangement already presents a fair prospect of inducing those improved habits which arise out of a feeling of prudence and independence." Mr. Aikin then acknowledged the gracious patronage of Her Majesty on the Institution, and spoke of the warranty for its proper management, and then handed the Trowel to the Prince.

His Royal Highness replied as follows:—"I return you my best thanks for this loyal address, which gives a most gratifying account of the state of this Institution and its future prospects. I join with you in fervent prayer that the realisation of its praiseworthy object, towards which this town has shown such liberality, may be further insured by the solemn act we are about to perform, and in which it has given me the greatest pleasure that you should have invited me to take a part."

His Royal Highness then deposited the several articles in their places, and the stone was lowered amidst the loudest acclamations of the assembled multitude

"Rule Britannia" was sung by the party of glee singers, the band and the whole of the company joining in the chorus.

The Rev. Jonathan Brooks, senior rector, then delivered the following prayer:—

[illegible] that thy faithful people d[illegible] we humbly beseech thee to accept the prayers which [illegible]ssful progress of the undertaking which has now [illegible] that without thy blessing all human [illegible] vain, and that we can do no good thing without thee. Prosper, then, O Lord, this [illegible]k to a happy termination, and grant that what has now been begun in thy name may be [illegible]. Thou hast commanded [illegible] to love one another. We render [illegible]teful thanks that thou hast put it int[illegible] the hearts of thy servants to establish [illegible] as a means of inc[illegible]sing the comforts, supplying the wants, and help[illegible] who go down to the sea in ships, and occupy [illegible] humble instruments of that pro[illegible] with which this great commerc[illegible] so signally favoured. May [illegible] have been most actively engaged in promoting this work of mercy be spared to witness its completion, and when, in thy good time, they shall be gathered to their fathers, raise up [illegible] thee, a continued succession of benefactors that so the spirit of benevolence which [illegible]rth to this institution may never be wanting to [illegible]. And as to those who are to be the future inmates of [illegible] to them a sure refuge in the [illegible] ocean are passed, they may find it a haven of peace Grant that [illegible] those temptations [illegible] periodical return to their [illegible]tion and consolations which will be here provided for them, may be the means of bringing many of them to thee of preserving them from sin here, and from the effects of sin hereafter. May they be rooted and built up in Jesus Christ, established in faith, zealous in every good word and work, and abounding ever more and more in thanksgiving to thee, and in [illegible] gratitude to their earthly benefactors. May thy fatherly hand ever be over them, may thy holy [illegible] be with them, and so lead them to the knowledge and obedience of thy word, th[illegible] be numbered amongst the [illegible] of thy faithful servants [illegible], we pray that both they who give and they who receive may be united together in one holy bond of union; and, when earthly things have passed away, when their respective duties have been discharged in this world, and their mortal race is for ever closed, may they at last meet together in thy heavenly kingdom These our prayers we offer unto thee, in the name and through the mediation of thy blessed Son Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour, in whose perfect form of words we conclude our petitions. Our Father, &c.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF THE "SAILORS' HOME," LIVERPOOL.

His Royal Highness joined in the responses. Three cheers were then given for the Queen, and his Royal Highness drove direct to the railway station.

One of the most animated scenes of the Royal Visit was the Cruise in the Mersey, which we have engraved at page 92. The river at this moment presented a most beautiful appearance. Vessels of every description, from first-class ships and steamers, with manned rigging, and hundreds of well-dressed ladies and gentlemen crowding the decks, to "trim-built wherries," laden with joyous spectators, until the gunwales were within a dangerous proximity to the water. The day being beautifully fine, the glittering reflection of the sun's rays on the studded waves, added infinitely to the animation and brilliancy of the scene.

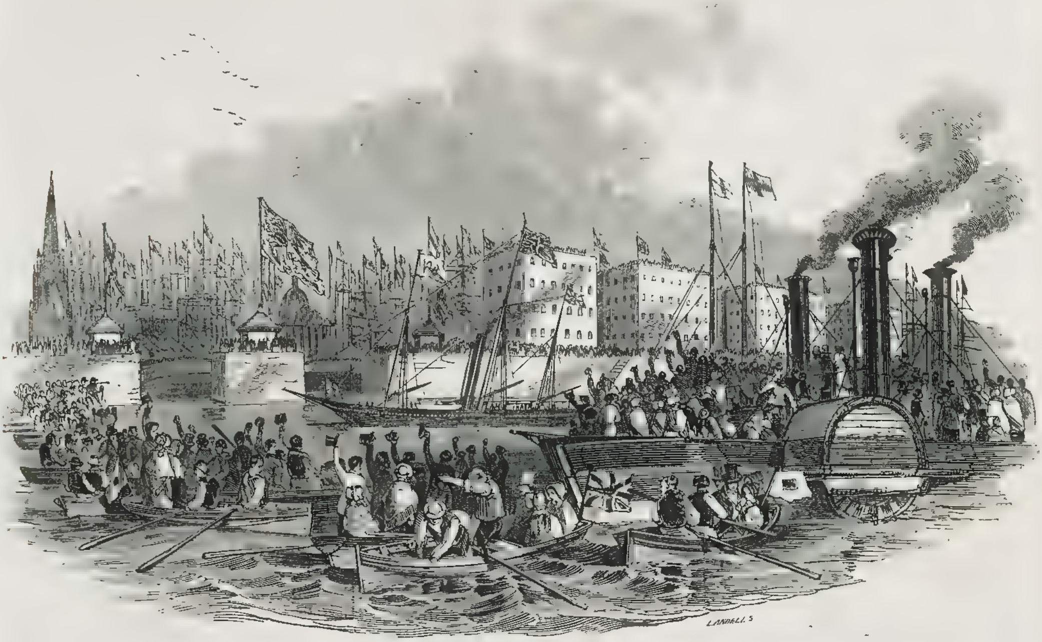
THE SAILORS' HOME.

The Institution will be called "The Liverpool Sailors' Home, Registry, and Savings' Bank." Its establishment was first suggested at a public meeting at Liverpool in 1841, when the objects of the Institution were thus explained by the founders:—"To provide for the seamen frequenting the port of Liverpool, board, lodging, and medical attendance, at a moderate charge; to protect them from imposition and extortion, and encourage them to husband their hard-earned wages; to promote their moral, intellectual, and professional improvement; and to afford them the opportunity of receiving religious instruction. A reading-room, library, and savings' bank shall be attached to the Institution; and, with the view of securing to the able and well conducted seaman a rate of wages proportionate to his merits, a registry of character shall be kept. Among the ulterior objects in contemplation, are schools for sea apprentices, and the sons of seamen, with special regard to the case of children who have lost one or both their parents."

In a very short time, the patronage of her Majesty was obtained, and donations were made to the Institution to the amount of £15,000. The annual subscriptions soon reached £300. Temporary premises were opened in Bath-street, and, by the end of 1845, no fewer than 3,332 sailors had registered themselves—a convincing proof that such an Institution was necessary.

Of the Elevation we gave an Engraving last week. The style of architecture is Elizabethan; and its antiquated gables, towers, vanes, and ogee headed roofs, will present a beautiful contrast with the vastness and grandeur of the Custom House, at the eastern end of which it is to be erected. Its site possesses a frontage to Hanover-street of 168 feet; to Paradise-street, of 53 feet; to Canning-place, opposite the Post-office, of 95 feet; and to the back passages leading from Canning-place to Paradise-street, of 175 feet. The principal entrance front, opposite the Post-office, is divided, by the bays common to the Tudor style, into five compartments. At each of the four angles of the building there will be a square tower, 104 feet high, with ogee headed roofs, surmounted with gilt spires and vanes. On each of the two sides fronting Hanover-street, and towards the back passage, there will be, between the extreme towers, five breaks or projections. These, as well as the projected divisions of the other fronts, will finish with broken culvilinear gables, with brackets, pinnacles, &c.

In the gables towards Hanover-street and Canning-place, there will be scrolled shields placed upon the top, with ornamental and characteristic devices. The gables on the front, towards Canning-place, will also be studded with ornamental devices, the centre one being adorned with the Royal arms; and on the apex will be the sculptured figure of a vessel's hull, stern on, in which the mast, rigged with shrouds, will form a most appropriate flag-staff. Beneath the gables will be caryatides, supporting blocks with ornamental pinnacles, scallop shells, &c. Over the centre doorway and window there will also be ornamental designs. The building will be extremely well lighted, the whole of the four fronts being filled with mullioned and transomed windows. An open balustrade will extend round the top of the building between the gables and towers, and the roof will be asphalted, for the purpose of forming a promenade for the sailors, to which easy access can at all times be had, and which will be so lofty as to command a view of nearly the whole extent of the docks and the shipping in the river.



ARRIVAL OF THE ROYAL YACHT.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

DWARKANAUTH TAGORE.

The family of this excellent, and much-to-be regretted Hindoo gentleman have enjoyed an eminent and wealthy position in Calcutta for more than a century. Joyrum Thakoor (now Tagore) held the office of Aumeen of the twenty-four Pergunnahs, and head native revenue supervisor, previous to, and at the time of the capture of Calcutta, in 1756. From the eldest son of this reputable and opulent personage, descended Dwarkanauth Tagore, the subject of this notice. Dwarkanauth was born in 1795, and, while yet a child, inherited vast estates and immense wealth from his family. He was brought up wholly in the tenets of Hindooism; but, at an early age, he displayed a predilection for European society. When eighteen years old, he entered into extensive commercial enterprise with great spirit and energy. In 1821, he was appointed to the high office of Head Steward of the Salt Department, and he there so acted as to secure the approval and friendship of every member of the Board. Indeed, during his whole life, this Hindoo, of powerful mind and princely soul, has seemed less the proprietor of almost boundless wealth and resources, than the agent of them for the public weal.

His biography consists in a continued series of acts of wise and sumptuous benevolence, and in a course of uniform and persevering support given to her Majesty's Government in India. To the District Charitable Society of Calcutta he presented £10,000; he founded and endowed a Medical College; and he sent, at his own cost, two students to the London University: no public project of value appeared in India without his name and his copious donation attached to it. He allowed no trammels of caste to interfere with his endeavours to reform or abolish the much of cruel and shocking—such as the Suttee—that exists in the Hindoo code; and he himself ventured to Europe, bringing with him his youngest son and his nephew, to advance and finish their education there. For his services to his country, the East India Company had struck and given to him a gold medal of large value, and Queen Victoria had added her own miniature, with that of Prince Albert.

Dwarkanauth Tagore had recently come, for the second time, to this country. He always found the most flattering reception here, and he mingled much in society, where his polished and pleasing manners, and his ready intelligence, made him very popular; he also took much delight in visiting, and making inquiries respecting the various institutions, manufactories, and works, in England, and in even frequenting often places of rational public amusement.

THE LATE DWARKANAUTH TAGORE.

In the full vigour of his manhood and his faculties, at the comparatively early age of fifty-two, death has put a stop to the noble career of this great and good Hindoo.

Dwarkanauth Tagore had, some time ago, symptoms of serious ill-health; these, the change to this climate latterly warded off, until a return of fever, heightened by some organic disease of the lungs, proved fatal to him. He expired on the 1st instant, at his residence, St. George's Hotel, Albemarle-street.

His death may be regarded, especially in India, as a public calamity. There is, perhaps, nothing more beautiful, more excellent, among the native population of our vast Eastern territories than the manner in which those who are rich among them, employ their wealth. Be the sect Mussulman, Brahmin, or Parsee, we find instances such as those of Sir Jamsetzee Jeejebhoy, and this lamented Dwarkanauth Tagore, frequently recurring—instances where every selfish feeling is cast aside; where wisdom, charity, and benevolence are the sole springs of action; and where the very accumulation of the gold becomes sanctified in its use. Do not such examples vividly recall the parable of the Samaritan; and, thunder-tongued, re-echo in the Christian's ear that Divine direction, "Go, and do thou likewise?"

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL ROBERT WINCHESTER, K.H.

This distinguished Peninsular and Waterloo veteran entered the Army early in life: he was appointed an Ensign in the 92nd Regiment, on the 18th September, 1805; and, in that gallant Highland corps, he continued to serve for near forty years, rising through the different degrees of rank, to that of Lieutenant-Colonel, the 28th June, 1838. Colonel Winchester was in the expedition to Copenhagen, in 1807; and he fought at nearly all the battles and engagements during the Peninsular War. In 1815, he was wounded in the left arm, at Quatre Bras; and his right arm was fractured at Waterloo. He had latterly retired on full pay: his death took place at his residence, in Edinburgh, on the 23rd ultimo.

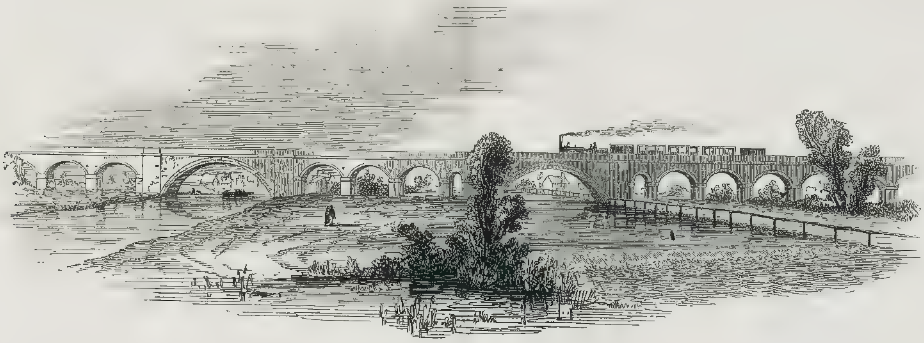
LOUIS BONAPARTE.

Louis Bonaparte was the fourth son of Carlo Bonaparte, by his wife, Letitia Ramolini (Madame Mere), and, consequently, was the youngest brother but one of Napoleon. Louis was born on the 2nd September, 1778; and, of course, rose to eminence in accordance with the transcendant fortunes of his Imperial relative. In 1806, he became King of Holland, but resigned the sceptre in 1810, when he found that his monarchy was to be no more than a vassalage of the French Empire. After his abdication, he adopted the title of Count of St. Leu, and, from that period, passed his life in private and dignified retirement.

His wife was Hortense Eugenie de Beauharnois, the daughter of Josephine by her first husband, and the step-daughter of Napoleon. This marriage proved anything but a happy one; the issue was one son, who died young; a second, named Napoleon Louis, Grand Duke of Berg and Cleves, killed in the insurrection in Romagna, in 1832; and a third and now only surviving son, Charles Louis Napoleon, born 20th April, 1808, who lately effected his escape from the Château of Ham. Hortense, the consort of Louis, was more fortunate as an author and musician than as a wife. Her "Partant pour la Syrie," enjoys a lasting reputation. The poor Queen was created by Louis XVIII. Duchess of St. Leu, and died in 1837, at Areneuberg, in Switzerland, in the fifty-fifth year of her age. Her husband, the ex-King Louis, the subject of this notice, continued for many years to live in the strictest privacy at Florence, entirely aloof from politics or state intrigues. He latterly laboured under paralysis. His death occurred on the 25th ultimo, from a sudden attack of apoplexy, the effects of which caused a profound lethargy, and he expired without the slightest shock or convulsion.

Thus, then, of France's "Imperious Cæsar dead, and turned to clay," there now survives but one brother, Jerome, Prince of Montfort, ex-King of Westphalia. For an account of him, and, indeed, of the whole family connections of the late Emperor Napoleon, we would refer the reader to a very elaborate article in the number for this month of the "Patrician."

THE LATE LOUIS BONAPARTE.



LONDON AND RICHMOND RAILWAY.—THE WANDLE VIADUCT.

THE LONDON AND RICHMOND RAILWAY.

This new line of railway has just been opened to the public.

In our Journal of the 25th ult., we briefly described the course of the line. A great portion of it is but a few feet above the natural surface of the country, and many of the roads are crossed on a level. There is one cutting of about 18 or 20 feet deep, and a viaduct of some length; but the works have been of a very easy character. The country through which the line passes does not present many picturesque views, the property almost throughout being circumscribed by orchards and market gardens. The want, however, of the beautiful along the line is amply compensated by the lovely scenery in the neighbourhood of its terminus.

We have engraved the principal work on the line, the Viaduct, crossing the river Wandle and the valley, just before entering Wandsworth: it consists of 22 arches, three of which are 70 ft. span: it is 1100 feet in length.

According to the Railway Chronicle, "this line is a remarkable example of the rapidity of railway construction in the present day. The Royal Assent for its formation was only given in July last year; and since then, and before the close of the July of this, the road, to the extent of some eight miles, has been completed. The line has, in fact, been completed in about nine months, or at the rate of about a mile a month. The line is of Mr. Locke's engineering, and has cost only £170,000, the original estimate being £260,000. These are facts which deservedly make Mr. Locke so popular with shareholders. The estimated passenger traffic is 1,600,000 passengers annually, and the charge per passenger is to be, for first class, 1s.; second, 10d.; and third, 8d."

ANGLING NOTES FOR THE MONTH.—THE PIKE.

ANGLING NOTES FOR THE MONTH.

In our last paper, Barbel Fishing was left half told, like "the story of Cambuscan bold." Such breaks result from our eagerness, as we have previously intimated, to plunge at once "in medias res"—to "have with you at the fish," without considering whether the hook be properly baited or no: but, as a narration whether in prose or rhyme, which should not only begin, but also end, in the middle, would be very like the anticipated Story of the Knife-Grinder's Political Grievances, we here resume the unfinished theme, and re-knot our line for Barbel Fishing.

Father Walton, who was by no means "fast" as an Angler, but enjoyed the sport soberly and discreetly—just as Philip Nye would wag his thanks-giving beard at a rich Elder's wedding-feast—has declared that "fishing for Barbel is, at best, but a dull recreation." Looking at the simple act, for itself and by itself, performed solus by any amateur or master of the Gentle Art, we entirely agree with the "Sage benign," who, doubtless, speaks from experience—who, having groaned under the load of half a hundred-weight of Barbel, caught during a long day's solitary angling in the Thames or the Lea, has discovered, on reaching [illegible] can he, on reflection, feel vain of having killed some fifty fish which are neither good to use nor to give away?

Yes, Barbel Fishing, considered simply by itself, and without its exhilarating accessories of fine weather, pleasant company, and good cheer—"veal pie, sherry, cigars, and grog"—is, indeed, but a dull recreation; and we should as little think of "enjoying" it solus, as we should think of "enjoying" a solitary supper off Barbel, where the meagreness of the fare was to be compensated by its abundance. To the solitary Barbel-Fisher who prepares his own mance, and who boasts of killing a hundred-weight in a day, we wish no worse punishment than that he should eat all that he kills. Barbel Fishing is not a favourite recreation with the young; in itself, it has for them no charms; and boys—unless when ill brought up—have no relish for the [illegible], the "sherry, cigars, and grog," which give a fillip to the spirits of the seniors, frequently stimulating them to such a degree as to make them imagine that they have been enjoying Barbel Fishing, when, in fact, they have only been making merry over creature comforts in a punt. It is, indeed, in consequence of this pleasing delusion, that Barbel Fishing chiefly finds favour with social men of middle age.

No river in the kingdom affords better Barbel Fishing than the Thames, from Richmond to Windsor; and parties who wish to enjoy the amusement will find no difficulty in obtaining a supply of rods, lines, and baits, from the fishermen of any of the intermediate villages, who, during the season, attend on Angling parties, and let punts on hire. Teddington, Kingston, Hampton, and Shepperton, may be mentioned as the places most frequently visited by Barbel Fishers. It is by no means unusual for a party to take a hundred-weight of Barbel in the course of a day's fishing. The best time of the day to angle for them is, from dawn till nine in the morning; and from four in the afternoon till sunset: and the best months are August and September.

The usual way of angling for Barbel in the Thames, is from a punt, moored athwart the stream; and the place which she occupies is called the "Pitch." In some swims, or Barbel holes, where one Pitch is decidedly better than another, the fishermen who let out punts, and supply baits and lines, take the best in turn. Experienced anglers, therefore, who are fond of the sport, frequently bespeak the services of a fisherman for the day on which he has the best "Pitch." The charge for a punt, with lines, rods, and baits, is about seven shillings a day.

The rod for Barbel fishing ought to be about twelve feet long, similar to a trolling rod—that is, rather stiff than flexible. It should have rings for the line to run through, and a reel is indispensable. A line of silk and hair is as good as any, and it ought not to be less than thirty yards long; as a strong fish will frequently run out that length before he can be turned. The foot-length ought to be of strong gut; and, when a float is used, shotted according to the strength of the current. Two hooks, about ten inches apart, are commonly used, and the [illegible] a ball, formed of bran and clay, mixed with gentles, is generally placed on the line immediately above the lowest shot, which should be about six inches above the upper hook.

[illegible] strong enough to hold the fish. The Barbel takes the bait very leisurely, seeming rather to suck it into his mouth than to seize it between his jaws. The usual baits for Barbel are well-scoured lob-worms, or gentles; but the latter are to be preferred. New cheese is also used as bait in some parts of the country; and Barbel will sometimes take a piece of the boiled gut of a sheep, or a piece of well soaked greaves, when they will not touch any other bait. Balls of ground bait—composed of clay, bran, sheep's intestines, boiled and minced small, or pieces of soaked greaves, together with a few gentles—are to be thrown into the water from time to time, for the purpose of keeping the fish together. The duty of preparing those dainty "mince balls" usually devolves on the fisherman who lets the punt and attends on the party. We may here mention, for the information of juvenile anglers, that greaves is the refuse animal matter, from which all the fat has been extracted by the tallow-chandlers.

When a large or strong fish is hooked, he should be allowed line, but not with too easy a hand, and the Angler ought to use every endeavour to prevent him [illegible] to escape altogether. When one of the party has hooked a fish, the others ought immediately to pull up their lines; for, should they happen to get entangled with that which holds the fish, he is almost certain to be lost.

Barbel are very insipid; and, however they may be esteemed by some Anglers for the sport which they afford, they have no value in the eyes of a pot-fisher. It is said that the best mode of dressing them is to split them down the back, and broil them; and we, from experience, can declare that, at the best, they are bad. We have tried them boiled, fried, and broiled: but are unable to say in which state they are least palatable. The spawn of the Barbel is said to be extremely dangerous when taken as food; and even the flesh is said to be unwholesome. Sir John Hawkins, in his edition of Walton, has stated that a servant of his, who had eaten part of one, though cautioned not to taste the spawn, was so violently affected that his life was in danger. So much for the Barbel.

The Pike now demands our attention; though, at present, we must be content with merely taking a glance at him, without entering into any detail of the [illegible] we shall do our best to fix a barbed hook, either single or [illegible] formidable jaws.

The Pike has been termed "the fresh water shark;" and from the numerous instances [illegible] that a Pike, in Lord Gower's Canal, at Trentham, seized the head of a swan, as she was feeding under water, and gorged so much of it as brought both himself and the bird to a "dead fix:" Pike couldn't swallow Swan—Swan couldn't withdraw her head from Pike's gullet—consequently both perished. The Pike has been known to [illegible] of a woman, as she was wading, and the hand of a man, as it was idly hanging over the side of a boat. Besides his carnivorous propensities, he has even shown a taste for the precious metals; for, in December, 1764, a large Pike, weighing twenty-eight pounds, was caught in the river Ouse, Cambridgeshire, in the stomach of which was found a silver watch, with a black ribbon, and two steel seals. The maker's name, "Thos. Cranefield, Burnham, Norfolk," was engraved on the watch; and on inquiry, it was found to have belonged to a gentleman's servant, who was drowned [illegible]

[illegible] March, and the young reach the length of eight to ten inches, the first year, twelve to fourteen the second; eighteen to twenty inches the third. After their third year, it has been estimated that, if well supplied with food, they would increase about four pounds in weight annually, for six or seven consecutive years. At what age they cease to grow, [illegible] The Pike, barring accidents, is a long-lived fish: Pennant mentions one that was ninety years old; and Conrad Gesner "tells a story" of another that was at least two-hundred-and-sixty-seven years old, and weighed three-hundred-and-fifty pounds. This we consider to be a big one, in both senses of the word.

What we have here said of the Pike is merely an intimation to our Angling friends to prepare their rods and tackle, in order that they may accompany us on a trolling excursion next month, when the water, being more clear of weeds than [illegible] for our sport. X. Y.

The late B. R. Haydon.—A general meeting of the committee for promoting the subscription to make a permanent provision for the widow and daughter of the late Mr. Haydon, was held on Tuesday afternoon, at the Thatched House Tavern. Among other active members of the committee present were Dr. Bowring, M.P., Dr. Darling, M.D., the Rev. J. S. Boone, D. T. Coulton, Hon. Sec., &c. W. Longman, Esq., presided. The Hon. Secretary read the minutes of the previous meetings, from which it appeared, that since the first meeting, held at the chambers of Mr. Sergeant Talfourd, on the 30th of June, about £1,400 had been subscribed. The fund now amounted to nearly £1,700, from which [illegible] to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, Mr. Coulton had received a letter enclosing £10. Among the subscriptions received from distinguished individuals within the last few days, the secretary announced the Earl of Dartmouth, £21; the Duchess of Somerset, £10; Earl Fortescue, £10; G. Hudson, Esq., M.P., £20; W. Ewart, Esq., £10. Mr. Coulton stated that steps had been taken to forward the subscription in the various provincial towns, and that letters had been received from Liverpool stating that a subscription was in progress in that town under the auspices of an eminent member of the Stock Exchange, who had succeeded in collecting a considerable sum for the family of the late Mr. Thomas Hood, the poet.

Funeral of Dwarkanauth Tagore.—The remains of the above highly-esteemed and distinguished foreigner were on Wednesday consigned to their last resting place, in a vault within the grounds of the General Cemetery, Kensal-green. In accordance with the wish of the son of the deceased the funeral was conducted in a private manner. On arriving at the cemetery, the cavalcade filed off into the unconsecrated portion of the ground, where, nearly opposite the en[illegible] riages, and remained standing by the grave until it was lowered to its appointed place. As the mourners were about to retire they were requested by Nogendranath Tagore to remain until the vault was closed—a desire which they, of course, at once complied with. This occupied some time. At length a huge stone having [illegible] ground. The son of the deceased was attired in an Indian costume composed wholly of black cloth. Mohun Lal and the other Indians wore the ordinary brilliant costume of their country. The coffin containing the deceased's remains had a very magnificent appearance. It was covered with puce silk [illegible] language, and the second a translation of the same in English, as follows:—"Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore Zemindar, died 1st August, 1846, aged 51 years."

The Dublin and Cashel Railway.—The first train [illegible] the Dublin and Cashel Railway, started for Carlow on Tuesday morning, where it arrived in perfect safety. The train returned at a speed often attaining, in the long straight runs, fifty-five miles an hour, and without the slightest oscillatory or other unpleasant motion.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange (Friday).—The arrivals of English wheat for our market since Monday have been on a very moderate scale, hence the show of samples of that article to-day was small; still, however, owing to the prevailing fine weather, the demand was exceedingly [illegible] Nearly 12,000 quarters of foreign wheat have come to hand. All descriptions were a mere d[illegible] cheaper. We had a limited quantity of barley on offer, yet the sale for it, as w[illegible] was excessively dull, at barely late rates, and a clearance was not effected. Very large [illegible] oats, viz., 23,410 quarters, have reached us. This caused the oat trade to rule dull, and prices to have a downward tendency. Beans, peas, and flour as last quoted.

Arrivals.—English: wheat, 1230; barley, 100; oats, 370. Irish: Wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 160. Foreign: wheat, 11,670; barley, 5460; oats, 23,410. Flour, 1950 sacks; malt, [illegible] arters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 40s to 50s; ditto white, 46s to 58s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 39s to 47s; ditto white, 43s to 57s; rye, 32s to 34s; grinding barley, 24s to 27s; distilling, 26s to 28s; malting ditto, 30s to 32s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 56s to 62s; brown ditto, 51s to 53s; Kingston and Ware, 62s to 63s; Chevalier, 63s to 64s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 22s to 24s; potato ditto, 27s to 28s. Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s, ditto, white, 22s to 26s; tick beans, new, 36s to 37s; ditto old, 37s to 39s; grey peas, 35s to 37s; maple, 33s to 36s; white, 36s to 40s; boilers, 40s to 43s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 42s to 46s; Suffolk, 36s to 38s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 35s to 37s, per 280 lbs. Foreign—Free wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, —s to —s; white, —s to —s.

Seed Market.—We have no alteration to notice in the value of any kind of seeds, the demand for which is in a very inactive state, with full average supplies on offer.

Linseed, English, sowing, 39s to 45s; Baltic, crushing, 38s to 43s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 43s. Hempseed, 35s to 37s per quarter. Coriander, 11s to 14s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 9s to 11s; white ditto, 7s to 9s. Tares, 3s 0d to 5s 0d per bushel. English Rapeseed, £20 to £23 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £10 15s to £11 0s; ditto, foreign, £7 10s to £8 0s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 0s to £5 5s per ton. Canary, 48s to 52s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, 45s to 50s; extra, 52s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra up to 68s. Foreign, red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis, are from 7½d to 8d; of household ditto, 5½d to 7d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat 47s 5d; barley, 26s 11d; oats, 23s 5d; rye, 28s 2d; beans, 39s 3d; peas, 35s 11d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 50s 11d; barley, 27s 5d; oats, 23s 7d; rye, 32s 4d; beans, 38s 4d; peas, 35s 9d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 7s 0d; barley, 4s; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 4s; beans, 4s 0d; peas, 4s 0d.

Tea.—This market continues in a very inactive state, yet prices rule about stationary.

Sugar.—The importers having given way somewhat in price, a good business has been doing in East and West India sugars; but, foreign qualities—owing to the proposed change in the duties—have an upward tendency.

Coffee.—All kinds of coffee are in very slow inquiry, at late rates.

Rice.—This article is held firmly, at very full prices.

Provisions.—The supply of good Irish butter on offer is small, yet the demand is very inactive, at barely late rates. In foreign and English butter very little is doing, yet prices are supported. Prime parcels of bacon are quite as dear; but all other kinds are much neglected. The market for barrelled pork is firm. There is very little doing in hams. For lard, the inquiry is firm, at extreme currencies. In all other kinds of provisions, comparatively little is doing.

Oils.—Linseed oil is rather more inquired for, at full prices. In all other kinds, very few sales have taken place.

Hay and Straw.—Old meadow hay, £3 0s to £4 0s; new ditto, £2 5s to £3 15s; old clover, £4 5s to £5 17s; new ditto, £3 5s to £5 0s; oat straw, £1 12s to £1 14s; wheat straw, £1 14s [illegible]

Tallow.—We have a fair demand for tallow, yet prices, owing to the large supply of home-made, are with difficulty supported.

Wool.—Privately the demand for all kinds of wool is heavy, yet the quotations rule about stationary.

[illegible] readily command £7 to £9 per ton.

Hops (Friday).—Favourable accounts [illegible] exceedingly heavy, and the whole of the hop districts, owing to which the demand here is exceedingly heavy, and prices are not supported. The duty has advanced to £155,000. Sussex pockets, £5 0s to £6 0s; Kent ditto, £5 5s to £6 6s. Mid and East Kent ditto, £6 0s to £8 12s per cwt.

Coals (Friday).—Tees, 15s 3d; Braddyll's Hetton, 15s 3d; Lambton, 15s; Stewart's, 15s 3d; Killingworth, 14s; Wharncliffe, 14s 3d, and Wylam, 14s per ton.

Smithfield (Friday).—Our market, to-day, was again somewhat heavily supplied with beasts, both as respects number and quality. The demand for that description of stock was, therefore, in a very inactive state, at barely, but at nothing quotable beneath, last week's prices. There were on offer 240 beasts, 430 sheep and lambs, and 34 calves, from Holland. The numbers of sheep were not to say extensive, while the mutton trade was tolerably firm, at full currencies. In lambs—the supply of which was good—a fair amount of business was transacted, at late rates. With calves, owing to the large supply offering, the trade was very dull, and the quotations had a downward tendency. The pork trade was heavy, at late rates. Milch cows moved off heavily, at from £16 to £19 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lb. to sink the offal.—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; second quality ditto, 2s 8d to 3s 0d; prime large oxen, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 8d to 3s 10d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; second quality ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime coarse woolled ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; large coarse calves, 3s 4d to [illegible]

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had rather a slow demand this morning at but little variation in prices.

Per 8lb. by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 2d to 2s 4d; middling ditto, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; prime small ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; large pork, 3s 4d to 4s 0d; inferior mutton, 2s 6d to 3s 0d; middling ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; prime ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; small pork, 4s 2d to 4s 10d; lamb, 4s 6d to 5s 8d.

Robt. Herbert.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

At the commencement of the week the English Market was almost deserted, Shares absorbing nearly all the attention of the speculators. The English Funds were consequently flat, and the absence of business tended to a depression of prices. This heaviness continued until Wednesday, when a decided fall occurred. The Consol Market closes heavily at 95⅝ ⅜ for Money, and 96 to ⅛ for Account, [illegible] change, and to this is mainly attributable [illegible] Bills remain at about the previous week's quotations, quoting 12 to 8 premium. Bank Stock is firm at 209 to 208½; Reduced, 96⅝ to ½; and New Three-and-a-[illegible]

[illegible] about one per cent. from Monday's price. Various bargains were done at prices ranging from 24½ to 25¼, but the last quotation is 24¾. Spanish Five per Cents. have receded from 26¼ to 25⅛, the transactions having been very few during the week. The Three per Cents. are about 36¼, not a bargain having been registered since Tuesday. Passives are 6 to 5¾. Chilian are 100. This price is a proof of what a continued line of honourable policy [illegible] effect, even though necessity may have formerly rendered a compromise inevitable. Portuguese Five per Cents, are 42¾. Four per Cents., 42. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents. [illegible] and Four per Cent. Certificates, 94½ to 94.

Towards the close of the previous week, an increasing animation in the Share Market was evident; but, on Monday, the alteration in prices became so startling, as to attract universal attention. Had it been confined to the registered and dividend-paying lines, not so much surprise would have been felt, as it might [illegible] however, anticipated by those [illegible] both present and prospective, the basis of their operations. As the week advanced, these anticipations were fulfilled. Buyers found plenty of sellers; and advantage was taken, in numberless instances, to get out at the [illegible] There has been a gradual receding in prices generally; but, at present, not to the extent of the late rise. Ambergate, Nottingham, and Boston, Caledonians, London and Yorks, Lynn and Ely, North Staffordshire, and Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, have best maintained the improved quotations. Eastern Counties have not materially improved, although the Report was well received: a dividend of 9s. per Share was declared. It is proposed to give the holders of the old £14 16s. Shares a bonus of £4 per Share; and a call of £1 4s. will be shortly made to complete the amount. The Chairman estimates the next dividend at 8 per cent. The closing prices of the Shares most dealt in is subjoined. Aberdeen, 9¼; Ambergate, Nottingham, Boston, and Eastern Junction, 2¼; Birmingham and Gloucester, New (issued at 7¼ discount), 32¼; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 7⅝; Buckinghamshire, ¼ dis.; Caledonian, 15⅞; Ditto, Half Shares, 1⅝; Ditto, Extension, 1⅝; Chester and Holyhead, 27¼; Cornwall, ⅞; Direct Manchester (Remington's) ⅛; Direct Northern, 3; Eastern Counties, 2¼; Ditto, New, 8⅛ pm; Ditto, York Extension, 2¼; Eastern Union, 43; Ditto, Ipswich and Bury St. Edmunds, 8½; Edinburgh and Glasgow, Quarter Shares, 13¼; Edinburgh and Northern, 11¼; Goole, Doncaster, and Sheffield, &c., ½ dis; Grand Union (Nottingham and Lynn), 1⅛; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 30¼; Great North of England, New, 50⅛; Great Western, Quarter Shares, 23½; Lancaster and Carlisle, [illegible] Leicester and Bedford, ½ dis; Liverpool, Manchester, and Newcastle Junction, [illegible] Birmingham, 234; Ditto, Thirds, 73½; Ditto, Quarters, 32; Ditto, Fifths, 2¼; London and Brighton, 66¼; London and Croydon, guarant. Five per Cent., 10⅛; London and Greenwich, 9; London, Hounslow, and Western, ¾; London and South-Western, New, 27¾; London and York, 2¼; Lynn and Ely, 16½; Lynn and Dereham, 13¼; Manchester and Leeds Extension, 3⅛ pm; Manchester and Birmingham, 88; Ditto, Quarter Shares (A), 16½; Ditto, Quarter Shares (C), 11⅝; Manch., Buxton, & Matlock, 1¼ pm.; Manch. & Southampton, 1⅞; Midland, 146; Newcastle and Darlington Junction, 44½; Ditto, New, 12; Newcastle and Berwick, 28½; Norfolk, Tenths, 3; Ditto, Extension, 2¼; North British, 39¾; Ditto, Half Shares, 14⅞; Ditto, Carlisle Extension, 3⅞; North Kent and Direct Dover, 1⅛; North Staffordshire, 4¼ pm.; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 9; Portsmouth Direct, 5⅞; Preston and Wyre, 37½; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, ⅛ dis.; Scottish Central, New, 8¼; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 3½; Shropshire Union, ⅞ dis.; South Midland, ¾ pm; South Eastern and Dover, New, 18½; Ditto, New, 21½; Ditto, New, 3⅝; South [illegible] Welsh Midland, 1; Wilts, Somerset [illegible] 1½; York and North Midland, —; Ditto, Half Shares, [illegible] Cranch, 49; Ditto, Extension, 39¼; Ditto, East and West Riding Extension, 13¾; Anglo-Belgian, 2⅛; Boulogne and Amiens, 12⅞; Bordeaux, Toulon, and Cette (Mackenzie), 1½; Ditto ditto (Espeleta), 1½; Dutch Rhenish, 6¼; East Indian, ⅞; [illegible] Namur and Liege, 3⅛; Orleans and Bordeaux, [illegible]; Paris and Lyons Consolidated, [illegible] and Havre, 27⅝; Sambre and Meuse, 4½; West Flanders, 3⅞.—Real del Monte Mine, unregistered, 3½.

Saturday Morning.—Flatness predominated in the English and Foreign Markets [illegible] depression of about ⅛ per cent. Rail[illegible]

Powers of Railway Companies.—The booksellers of London have had a meeting, at which a resolution was agreed to condemnatory of the clause in the bills of certain railway companies, authorising the opening of packets and charging separately for each parcel included. This resolution was embodied in a petition to the House of Commons, which has been presented by Lord J. Russell.

OPENING OF THE NOTTINGHAM AND LINCOLN RAILWAY.

The opening of the line between Nottingham and Lincoln took place on Monday morning. The weather was exceedingly unpropitious. The opening [illegible] left Derby for Nottingham at half-past eight o'clock, accompanied by George Hudson, Esq., the Chairman of the Midlands; Mr. Ellis, the Deputy-Chairman; Sir Isaac Morley, Sir Henry Wilmot, Bart., the Mayor of Derby, and several members of the Corporation, and a large number of the Directors, accompanied by several ladies. The line had been previously inspected by General Pasley, on Friday, who expressed his great approbation of the manner in which the works had been completed, and stated that it was the finest line over which he had hitherto travelled. The train reached the Nottingham station about ten minutes before nine o'clock, where great numbers of spectators were assembled to witness its arrival. The carriages were gaily decorated with flags; and, on the train moving slowly into the station yard, it was greeted with enthusiastic cheering by the immense multitude which had assembled in the vicinity. The procession was joined by several of the gentry of Nottingham, who, with their ladies, had been invited to Lincoln.

About half-past [illegible] and the train moved slowly on towards Lincoln, greeted by the cheers of thousands of spectators, who lined each side of the meadows. The train arrived at Newark about half-past ten o'clock, and an immense population had assembled, notwithstanding the pelting of the pitiless storm, to witness its arrival. After a few minutes' delay, the train was again placed in motion for Lincoln, where it arrived in safety at a quarter before eleven o'clock. At this period nothing could be more unfavourable than the state of the weather; the rain poured down in torrents. The Mayor of Lincoln and several of the authorities, had assembled to welcome the arrival. When Mr. Hudson and the Directors alighted from the carriage in which they were seated, they were greeted wi[illegible] cheers, and the bells of the churches rang merry peals. A few minutes after twelve o'clock the train, to which was attached an additional number of carriages, set out on its return to Nottingham, where it arrived at half-past one o'clock. The distance from Nottingham to Lincoln is thirty-three miles. After remaining half an hour, and having obtained a large accession of company, the train again set out at two o'clock on its return to Lincoln, where a public dinner took place at five o'clock.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

Tuesday, August 4.

CROWN-OFFICE, August 3.

MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN THIS PRESENT PARLIAMENT.

County of Sutherland: D. Dundas, Esq., her Majesty's Solicitor-General.

County of Kilkenny: R. Smithwick, Esq., in the room of the Hon. P. Butler.

BANKRUPTCY ANNULLED. [illegible]

BANKRUPTS. [illegible] on-the-Hill, grocer. J. C. MORRIS, Curtain-road, Shoreditch, cabinet maker. F. WATERS, Church-street, Hackney, cheesemonger. A. T. EDWARDS, Idol-lane, Tower-street, City, bricklayer. J. PRITCHARD, Seymour-place, Camden-town, butcher. E. W. PHILLIPS, Bishopsgate-street, dealer in glass. S. TIPPLE, Norwich, tailor. T. W. CLARK, Stroud, [illegible] drapers. J. CAINES, Chilton Cantelo, Somerset, corn-dealer. W. BLANSHARD, Caverley, York, grocer. W. WATSON, Hardcastle, Yorkshire, lead-merchant. J. PAYNE, Bristol, millwright. T. WINFIELD, Bristol, tea-dealer. H. F. ALDRIDGE, Liverpool, musicseller. T. SIDDORN, Liverpool, ironmonger. P. CORLESS, Wigan, Lancashire, tea-dealer. H. COWIE and J. CLARK, Liverpool, merchants.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—F. A. LYON, Hillburgh, cutler. A. BROWN, Calton, Glasgow, cow-feeder. W. BOYNE, junior, Nethert[illegible] of Grange, Elgin, cattle-d[illegible]

Friday, Aug. 7.

WAR-OFFICE, Aug. 7.

Royal Horse Guards: Lieut. H. S. Baillie to be Captain, vice Bastard; Cornet F. W. Berkeley to be Lieutenant, vice Baillie; S. G. L. Fox, to be Cornet, vice Berkeley. [illegible] Guards: R. J. Loch, M.D., to be Assistant Surgeon, vice Power. [illegible] Lieut. A. Robertson to be Captain, vice Reid; Cornet F. D. Hibbert to be [illegible] J. A. Freeman to be Cornet, vice Hibbert. [illegible] J. Vandeleur, to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice Parlby. 10th: Lieut.-Col. W. Parlby, to be Lieut[illegible]

[illegible] tenant-Colonel, vice the Hon. E. B. Wilbraham; Lieut. and Capt. J. Forbes to be Captain and Lieutenant-Colonel, vice [illegible] Lieut. C. L. Cocks to be Lieutenant and Captain, vice Forbes; Ensign [illegible] Lieutenant, vice Cocks.

2nd Foot: Lieut. C. F. Studdert to be Lieutenant, vice H. Piercy. [illegible] R. J. Robb, M.D., to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Mackey. 6th: Major J. Crofton to be Lieutenant-Colonel; Capt. J. T. Griffiths to be Major, vice Crofton; Lieut. E. J. Blanckley to be Captain, vice Griffiths; Ensign W. F. G. Servantes to be Lieutenant, vice Dowker; Ensign H. M. Blackburn to be Lieutenant, vice Blanckley; Lieut. C. H. Dowker to be Adjutant, vice Mansergh; Quartermaster W. Lee to be Adjutant, with the rank of Ensign. To be Quartermasters—Sergeant-Major J. Croker, vice Lee; Quartermaster-Sergeant G. Pollard. 10th: Assist.-Surgeon E. Mockler to be Surgeon, vice Grant. 12th: Assistant Staff Surgeon W. Dick, M.D., to be [illegible] Capt. H. Caley to be Major, vice Semple; Lieut. J. Ker to be Captain, vice [illegible] J. H. Moore to be Lieut., vice Ker; H. W. Palmer to be [illegible] Assistant Staff Surgeon T. M. Fishbourne, M.D., to be Su[illegible] Surgeon, vice Moline. 23rd: Second Class Staff Surgeon R. Smith to be Surg[illegible] 38th: Capt. A. O. Creighton to be Captain, vice Bristow. 39th: Brevet-Maj. M. G. Nixon to be Major, vice E. W. Bray; Lieut. W. C. Wolfe to be Captain, vice Nixon. [illegible] 43rd: Assistant Surgeon H. Macke[illegible] vice Fraser. 91st: Assist.-Surg. W. J. Power to be Surgeon. 93rd: A. Smith to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Irwin. 95th: Lieut. H. Swettenham to be Lieutenant, vice Hayes. 96th: [illegible] 97th: Sergeant-Major P. Carroll to be Quarter[illegible]

[illegible] ment: Captain H. [illegible] to be Captain, vice Creighton. [illegible] Rifle Regiment: Lieutenant H. G. Hayes to be Lieutenant, vice Swettenham.

BANKRUPTCIES ANNULLED.—R. H. EASUM, Commercial-road East, rope-maker. R. KENWORTHY, Liverpool, druggist.

BANKRUPTS.—W. ASHDOWN, Chatham, ironmonger. S. MILTON, Barking, Essex, sail maker. H. CLARK, Watling-street, City, brush-manufacturer. Z. PEARCE, Bradford, Wilts, clothier. T. H. SPENCE, Newca[illegible] RUSSELL and R. RAMSBOTTOM, Salford, builders. J. WARD, Birm[illegible] W. CHAMBERS, South [illegible] Somersetshire, corn-dealer.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.—A. SCOT, Trinity, writer to the Signet. A. CUMMING, North Ulst, cattle-dealer.

BIRTHS

On the 3rd instant, at Swineshead Abbey, Linco[illegible] Etruria, St. John's-wood, the lady of James M'Adam, Esq., of a son.—At Langton Rectory, [illegible] of John Ra[illegible] [illegible] Watson [illegible] Camroux, of a [illegible]

MARRIAGES

At Hampstead, Joseph Toynbee, Esq., F.R.S., to Harriet, only daughter of Nathaniel Holmes, Esq.—At Pimlico, J[illegible] George Sheppard, Esq., to Harriet Anna, second daughter of the late Sir Thomas John T[illegible] Milburne James, Esq., to Maria, fourth daughter of the late Right Rev. William Otter, D.D., Bishop of Chichester.

DEATHS

At Southampton, Frederick Barwell, Esq.—At Calverly Park, Tunbridge Wells, Mary, relict of the late W. Hally, Esq., in the 85th year of her age.—On the 3rd instant, of apoplexy, John Quincey Harris, Esq.—At Islington, in the 68th year of his age, Charles Bucke, author of "The Beauties, Harmonies, and Sublimities of Nature," &c.; "Hail! and Farewell," [illegible]—In New Bond-street, Mari[illegible] sonage, Elizabeth, wife of the Rev. Joshua Bennett, aged 30.—At Muswell Hill, John [illegible] Esq., aged 71.—At Baden-Baden, Elizabeth Blanche, youngest daughter of G. P. R. J[illegible] Esq.—Suddenly, of apoplexy, Joseph Bridgett, Esq.—At Crosby, Liverpool, Thomas Worrall Smith Grazebrook, Esq.—At Harrow-on-the-Hill, aged twenty-nine, Louisa Byron, third daughter of the Rev. John William Cunningham, vicar of Harrow.—August 4, Anna Maria, wife of John Wilson Patten, Esq., M.P.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Last Night but Two of the Season.—The Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public, are respectfully inform[illegible] that there will be an EXTRA NIGHT, on THURSDAY next, AUGUST 13th, 1846, when w[illegible] Mozart's Chef-d'œuvre, IL DON GIOVANNI [illegible] Giovanni, Sig. Fornasari; Leporello, Sig. Lablache; Masetto, Sig. F. Lablache; Il Commendatore, Sig. Botelli, and Don Ottavio, Sig. Mario.

In the course of the evening, the highly successful new and original Ballet Divertissement, entitled LE JUGEMENT DE PARIS; comprising a new and [illegible] Grand Pas, composed expressly for this occasion, by M. Perrot, the music by Sig. Pugni, entitled LE PAS DES DEESSES, by Mdlle. Taglioni, Mdlle. Lucile Grahn, and Mdlle. Cerito, representing the parts of Les Déesses; Mdlle. Louise Taglioni, Mdlle. James, Mdlle. Honore, representing the parts of Les Graces; M. St. Leon, Paris; Mdlle. Lamoreux, L'Amour; Mdlle. Julien, L'Hymen, Mdlles. Cassan and Demelisse, Nymphes; and M. Perrot, Mercure.

With other novelties in the BALLET DEPARTMENT, comprising the talent of Mdlle. Taglioni, Mdlle. Lucile Grahn, and Mdlle. Cerito, Mdlle. Louise Taglioni, Mdme. Petit Stephan, Mdlles. Honore, Demelisse, Cassan, James, Julien, Lamoreux; M. St. Leon, M. Gosselin, M. Venafra, M. Bertrand, M. Di Mattia, and M. Perrot. The particulars of which will be duly announced.

Applications for Boxes, Stalls, and Tickets, to be made at the Box-office, Opera Colonnade. Doors open at Seven o'Clock; the Opera to commence at Half-past Seven.

VAUXHALL OPEN EVERY NIGHT EXCEPT SATURDAY.—Tourniaire's Wonderful Troupe. Novel Scenes in the Circle. [illegible] geous Chinese Pageant—Brilliant Fireworks. Splendid Illuminations. Admission 2s. Doors open at Eight.

VAUXHALL.—GRAND MASQUERADE on MONDAY [illegible] The Rotunda Theatre will be thrown open at Ten o'Clock; Tourniaire's Troupe will make their entrée, and their unrivalled steeds will dance a Quadrille, and conclude with a favourite Galopade. The Ball Room will be most splendidly decorated with choice flowers and refreshing shrubs. A grand Military Band, under the direction of Mr. Creaton, of the Grenadier Guards. [illegible] The grand Orchestra Band, conducted by [illegible] Gouriet, of Her Majesty's Theatre, and Twelve Masters of the Ceremonies. Great preparations are making to present to the public a VENETIAN CARNIVAL, superior to anything of the kind hitherto attempted at these Gardens, or any Theatre in the Metropolis. Tickets to be had of Mr. NATHAN, Costumier to the Royal Property, [illegible] Gentlemen's Tickets, 10s. Ladies, 7s 6d. Doors open at Ten. [illegible] unless in costume. The wines supplied by G. Olivier and Co., 67, Princes-street, Leicester-square.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W BATTY.—Under the especial patronage of her Majesty the Queen, Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and Princess Royal.—Great and glorious success of our Military in India. Sixty-third night of representation. On MONDAY, August 10, and during the week, the popular Spectacle of THE SIKH INVASION, or our Indian Victories of 1846, introducing the whole resources of the Theatre; Double Stud, Splendid Brass Band. Novel and popular Scenes of the Circle, by the British and Foreign Professors, Male and Female. The whole concluding with the Legendary Spectacle of the PHANTOM KNIGHT, or the Fatal Kiss. Box-Office open from 11 to 5. Commence at 7.—Stage-Director, Mr. T. Thompson.

THE SPEAKING AUTOMATON, or EUPHONIA (invented by PROFESSOR FABER, of Vienna). Every Day and Evening, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly. This greatest mechanical wonder ever accomplished or conceived, has been critically examined, and highly eulogised by the Emperor and Court of Austria, the King and Court of Prussia, the Duke of Wellington; the Lord Chamberlain, Earl Spencer; Lords Eldon, [illegible] During the last few days, it has held conversations sufficient to fill a volume. Hours—From eleven to twelve, half-past twelve to two, half-past three to five; half-past seven to nine.—Doors open half-an-hour previous. Admission, One Shilling. Children under ten, Half-price.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A CHEMICAL [illegible] by [illegible] RYAN [illegible], on the Evenings of Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. Professor BACHHOFFNER'S LECTURES on NATURAL PHILOSOPHY, with brilliant experiments, Daily. MACINTOSH'S REVOLVING ENGINE, COLEMAN'S PATENT [illegible] RAILWAY, the ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY, all in action. [illegible]'S ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY VALVE. CLARK, M'NEILL, and CO'S. PATENT UNIVERSAL GAS-BURNER. The OPAQUE MICROSCOPE. The OXY-HYDROGEN MICROSCOPE, exhibiting a fine Collection of Living Objects. A beautiful Picture of the CHAPEL in the CONVENT of St. CATHERINE, near Jerusalem, by Mr. Charles Smith, is one of the New Series of DISSOLVING VIEWS. Admission, 1s. Schools Half-price.

PRICE EIGHTEEN-PENCE.

THE COMING HOME!!!

A COMIC PANORAMA, DRAWN BY LEECH.

London: ACKERMANN and Co., Strand; RENSHAW and KIRKMAN, 12, Budge-row; DORLING, Epsom; and all Booksellers.

DR. MADDOCK on DISEASES of the LUNGS and HEART. "We seriously recommend all persons who are predisposed to, or are suffering under, these complaints, to consult this able work. The treatment pointed out is at once novel, simple, and natural, and is undoubtedly highly efficacious."—Literary Journal.—Third Edition, price 5s. 6d. SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row.

LONDON ART UNION PRIZE ANNUAL, Second Volume [illegible] Engravings Beautifully Executed in Mezzotinto and Line. Royal Quarto, Cloth Gilt, £2 2s., or Proofs, Elegantly Bound, half Morocco Gilt, with Device, £4 4s., India Paper Proofs (only 25 Copies taken off) Splendidly Bound, Whole Morocco, Elegantly Tool'd and Gilt, £12 12s. Publisher, R. A. SPRIGG, 106, Great Russell-street, Bedford-square, London.

HONOUR to BEETHOVEN.—NEW MUSIC Just Published. BEETHOVEN'S QUARTETTS for two violins, tenor and bass, complete [illegible], Nos. 1 to 17, Edited by M. S. ROUSSELOT, as performed by the Beethoven Quartett [illegible] the same. Nos. 1 to 6, each 9s.; Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, each 10s. 6d.; Nos. 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17, each 12s.; or, the entire set, price £6 6s. London: Published only by Messrs. R. COCKS and Co., 6, New Burlington-street, Musicsellers to her Majesty.

READ THE LONDON PIONEER.—The Cheapest Penny Paper in the World: contains half-a-crown's worth of Reading—many beautiful stories, among others "The Unwedded one," by Mrs. Fullwood Smerdon; "The Gascon," a splendid Historical Romance, by Amelia Edwards; "Martin the Foundling," by Eugene Sue, &c. &c. &c. Published in Weekly Numbers at One Penny, and Monthly Parts at Sixpence, by B. D. COUSINS, Duke-street, Lincoln's-Inn, London, and sold by all Booksellers. No. 16 is this day published. Part 3 is also ready. All the numbers are in print. Purchase one of them and judge for yourself.

Just Published, price 10s. 6d.,

A DICTIONARY OF MODERN GARDENING. By GEORGE WM. JOHNSON, Esq., Author of "Principles of Practical Gardening," "The Gardeners' Almanack," &c. * * * This Work is designed for all garden cultivators, whether for profit or pleasure. Though containing more than 700 closely printed pages, it is in form a most convenient hand-book for ready reference on every horticultural subject. It [illegible], Predatory Insects, &c. The science, as well as art, of gardening is fully detailed, and the whole illustrated with references to other authorities, and Drawings of Edifices, Tools, Modes of Pruning, Training, Grafting, &c. ROBERT BALDWIN, 47, Paternoster-row.

[illegible] MOTHER.

In 12mo., price 6s. cloth, a New Edition of

A GRANDMOTHER'S ADVICE to YOUNG MOTHERS, on the Physical Education of Children. By M. J., late COUNTESS of MOUNTCASHEL. * * * "This book is the production of many years' experience, and much reflection; and the Author trusts that it will be of use to those for whom it is designed—the anxious mother, the attentive governess, and the careful nurse."—Preface.

London: ROBERT BALDWIN, 47, Paternoster-row.

FRENCH GRAMMAR FOR PRIVATE TUITION.

In 8vo., price 12s. in cloth, the Ninth Edition of

A GUIDE to the FRENCH LANGUAGE, especially devised for Persons who wish to [illegible] the assistance of a Teacher. By J. J. P. LE BRETHON.

A KEY to the EXERCISES in the above Work, by means of which any person of a mature understanding may acquire the elements of the French Language practically, as surely as if a professed teacher were sitting by his side, and, with a very superficial knowledge of it, may teach it to others. Directions are given in the Key to parents not accustomed to teach languages, who wish to instruct their children, with the assistance of this book, how they must proceed. Price 8s.—London:—ROBERT BALDWIN, 47, Paternoster-row.

13, Great Marlborough-street.

MR. COLBURN'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

I.

VOL. IX. [illegible] QUEENS of ENGLAND; comprising the [illegible] MARY [illegible]

II.

HORACE WALPOLE'S MEMOIRS of the REIGN of GEORGE the SECOND. Edited, with a Preface and Notes, by the late Lord HOLLAND. Now First Printed. In 8vo., in 3 vols., with Portraits, 36s., bound.

III.

HOCHELAGA; or, ENGLAND in the NEW WORLD. Edited by ELIOT WARBURTON, Esq., Author of "The Crescent and the Cross." 2 vols., small 8vo.

IV.

THE WILD IRISH GIRL. By [illegible]. Forming the New Volume of "COLBURN'S STANDARD NOVELS." Complete, for 6s., bound, with Portrait.

V.

PETERSBURGH and MOSCOW. A Visit to the Court of the Czar. By RICHARD SOUTHWELL BOURKE, Esq. 2 vols., 21s. bound.

The following are Just Ready.

VI.

TRAVELS and TRAVELLERS. By Mrs. TROLLOPE, Authoress of "The Barnabys in America," "The Robertses," &c. 2 vols., small octavo.

VII.

LOST and WON; or, The Love Test. By the Author of "The Maid's Husband." 3 vols.

VIII.

THE SEVENTH and CONCLUDING VOLUME of THE NELSON LETTERS and DISPATCHES.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

READING AND BOOK SOCIETIES.

Now ready, in small Octavo,

HINTS FOR THE FORMATION OF READING AND BOOK SOCIETIES IN EVERY PART OF THE KINGDOM, ON A NEW AND IMPROVED PLAN.

This Plan, embracing the facilities afforded by the reduced postage, railroads, and steam vessels, will extend the accommodations of one of the largest Libraries of the Metropolis to the most distant parts of the [illegible]. Sent gratis and post free, to orders enclosing two stamps, addressed Messrs. [illegible] and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit-street.

CHILDREN'S and INVALIDS' CARRIAGES. Invalids' Wheel Chairs, from £3 to £35, with hoops, second-hand as well as new; Spinal and [illegible] Chairs, Children's Chaises, vis-à-vis Waggons, Phaetons, Barouches, &c., from [illegible] guineas. Immense and varied collection on sale or hire, at INGRAM'S Manufactory [illegible] road, Finsbury square.—N.B. Illustrated Catalogues.

GIBBINS' CREAM of ROSES and ROSEMARY. This esteemed and elegant article is most respectfully offered to the Public, by GIBBINS, Court Hairdresser and Perfumer (from Paris), 7, King-street, St. James's-square, as the most delicate and efficient Preservative of the Hair. Being a pomade, it will be successfully applied in promoting its growth and luxuriance.

GIBBINS' EXTRACT of ROSES and ROSEMARY is a Liquid made from the above-named plants, and when applied in Washing the Hair, renders it soft and glossy; or, after illness, its astringent properties prevent the Hair from falling off.

No. 7, King-street, St. James's-square, London.

METCALFE and CO'S. NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH and SMYRNA SPONGES. Useful Inquiry. For proof of the [illegible] durability, power of cleaning, and true economy, ask all who have used Metcalfe's Brushes. The Tooth-brush performs the highly important office of searching thoroughly into the divisions, and cleaning in the most extraordinary manner; hairs never come loose. 1s. Peculiarly penetrating Hair-brushes, with the durable unbleached Russia bristles, which will not soften like common hair. Improved Clothes-brush, that cleans harmlessly in one-third the time. The new Velvet Brush, and immense Stock of genuine unbleached Smyrna Sponge, at METCALFE and Co.'s only Establishment, 130 B, Oxford-street, one door from Holles-street.

CAUTION.—Beware of the word "from" Metcalfe's, adopted by some houses.

FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH.—Price 2s. 6d.

Patronized by her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert.

MR. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM for Stopping Decayed T[illegible], without any pressure or pain, and soon becomes as hard as the enamel, and will remain firm in the tooth for many years, rendering extraction unnecessary, arresting the further progress of decay. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Price 2s. 6d. Sold by Savory, 220, Regent street; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Johnston, 68, Cornhill, and all Medicine Vendors in the Kingdom.

Mr. Thomas continues to supply the Loss of Teeth on his new system of self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever, and is much less expensive than others. Mr. THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

THE PROVIDENT CLERKS' MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION and BENEVOLENT FUND, 42, Moorgate-street.

TRUSTEES.

Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P. | W. G. Prescott, Esq.
Thomson Hankey, jun., Esq. | Baron L. de Rothschild.

Treasurer of the Benevolent Fund: John Abel Smith, Esq., M.P.

Forms of proposal for Mutual Life Assurance, to meet every contingency, annuities, endowments, loans, &c., and the fifth annual report, with every information, may be had at the [illegible] donations and subscriptions to the Benevolent Fund are received.

Table of Premium payable yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly, by a person of the age of 25, to secure the sum of £100 to be paid at death, or on his attaining the respective ages of 50, 55, and 60, whichever event shall first occur:—

Age [illegible]	Age Fifty.			Age Fifty-five.			Age Sixty.
	Year.	Half-Year.	Quarterly.	Year	Half-Year.	Quarterly.	Year	Half-Year.	Quarterly.
25	3 16 4	1 19 0	0 19 8	3 5 5	1 13 3	0 16 9	2 16 2	1 8 6	0 14 11

Policies may be effected daily.
July 30th, 1846.

By order of the Board,
THOS. MULLINDER, Secretary.

COINS of ANCIENT EGYPT, GREECE, and ROME.—PETER WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins and Medals, 46, Strand, London, has just published a short catalogue of his coins and medals, which can be had post free, by sending six (6) stamps. Assignats of the French Revolution, 1s. N.B. Coins sent by post.

TONIC ALE.—This splendid new description of Bottled Beer is now in high perfection. It is strongly recommended by the Faculty as possessing peculiar stomachic qualities, promoting appetite, &c. Sold in quart and pint bottles, secured by Betts's Patent Capsule. JOSEPH STOCKTON, Sole Agent, 51, Lamb's Conduit-street.

DRESSING-CASES.—FISHER, 188, Strand.—A large stock of CASES, with the new and improved Morticed Partitions, which cannot possibly break loose, warranted to stand the Tropical Climate. A good Dressing-case, either Ladies' or Gentlemen's may be purchased from £3 to £50. Also, Writing-desks, Work-boxes, Leather Travelling-desks, &c. 188, Strand.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting and Executing in the most finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The correctness of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted.—Millinery Rooms.

DAMASK TABLE LINENS, most Elegant and Durable, at very Low Prices for Cash, by JOHN CAPPER and SON, Linen-Drapers to the Queen, at their Family Linen Warehouse, 26, Regent-street, two doors below Piccadilly Circus. [illegible]

John Capper and Son's General Linen-Drapery Business, established for nearly Seventy Years, is continued in Gracechurch-street, without change.

BED FEATHERS.

Mixed	1s. 0d. per lb.	Best Foreign Grey Goose 2s. 0d. per lb.
Grey Goose	1s. 4d.	Best Irish White ditto 2s. 6d.
Foreign	1s. 8d.	Best Dantzic ditto 3s. 0d.

HEAL and SON, 196, opposite the Chapel, Tottenham-court-road.

ELASTIC SURGICAL STOCKINGS, KNEE-CAPS, &c.—POPE and PLANTE, 4, Waterloo-place, Pall Mall, have introduced a new fabric for varicose veins, weakness, &c., which possesses sufficient elasticity for drawing on, and compression to afford the required support without the trouble of lacing. It has been pronounced [illegible] the convenience of its application, and efficiency in its uniform pressure.

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS AND GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, kitchen ranges, iron bedsteads, fenders, [illegible], general furnishing ironmongery, tinned copper, iron and best tin cooking vessels, best [illegible] plate, and table cutlery, japanned trays, tea urns, ornamental iron and wire works, for verandahs, lawns, &c., and flower-stands. Every article is warranted, and marked at the lowest prices, in plain figures, for cash.—Adjoining the Royal Bazaar, 58, Baker-street, Portman-sq.

A SCOTCH TWEED GOTHA JACKET FOR 30s.—This Jacket, which is well suited to be worn by Gentlemen when shooting, angling, in the library, or country ramble, is made to measure, in a first-rate style of fit and workmanship, for 30s., best ditto, ditto, 38s.—At GRAVES'S Fashionable Tailor and Trowsers' Maker, 313, High Holborn.

TROWSERS! TROWSERS!! TROWSERS!!!—A good fit in this garment can seldom be obtained.—R. GRAVES, Fashionable Trowsers' Maker and Tailor, 313, High Holborn, after many years experience and study, is enabled to assert, without fear of contradiction, that he can fit gentlemen with this garment better than any other person in London. The characteristic of his fitting is a gentlemanly style, with perfect ease for stooping, sitting, walking, or riding. A well-assorted stock of the newest designs to select from.—R. GRAVES, 313, High Holborn.

REGISTERED PALETOT OF LLAMA CLOTH.—This Garment, mostly used as an Overcoat, is, during the hot weather, both in this country and abroad, worn without another coat; the same one will happily suit both purposes. To its gentlemanly appearance and moderate price, joined to the peculiar elasticity and lightness of the material, may be ascribed the cause of its being universally a public favourite. It can be bought only of the Patentees in London, and care should be taken to observe that, whether supplied by Agents in the country or abroad, each are stamped on the inside, H., J., and D. NICOLL, 114, Regent-street, and 22, Cornhill.

SPORTSMEN who wish to be effectually protected from the RAIN, are invited to try BERDOE'S WATERPROOF SHOOTING-JACKETS, which (without being air tight) are guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever. A large stock of first rate Garments [illegible] OVER-COATS [illegible] that these Garments are REALLY completely impervious to the rain, and not so in NAME only. Made only by W. BERDOE, Tailor, and Over-Coat Maker, 69, Cornhill, and (shortly at) 96, New Bond-street.

LADIES.—M. NUNN is SELLING OFF his pretty and ugly Foreign and British Summer Stock of Ladies' Dress, Bonnets, and Night Caps, Capes, Canzous, Sleeves, Gumpes, Habit Shirts, and similar indispensable articles of dress, including heaps of novel collars, the prices of which, in very many instances, are absurdly low. BABY LINEN of all kinds. Attention is called to a quantity of Needle-worked Long Robes and Short Frocks, at prices that ought to draw tears, when we reflect at the pitiful remuneration that must have been given by one Christian to another for working them. By way of giving an idea of price, a Long Robe or Short Frock may be had for Two Shillings!!!—MARTIN NUNN, 259, Regent-street.

TO LADIES.—GRAFFTEY'S DEPILATORY, Price 4s. 6d., may be had of all perfumers in the United Kingdom, and is the only safe and certain antidote to superfluous Hair, on the Face, Neck, or Arms. Directions enclosed are simple, and lead to certain success. Sample packets, 2s. 6d., post-free, may be had at GRAFFTEY'S, 26, Warwick-street, Regent-street.—N.B. Sole proprietor of GRAFFTEY'S POMPEIAN HAIR DYE-INFALLIBLE, and also of the elegant BALMA POMPEIANA, for dressing the Hair.

GOWLAND'S LOTION for Purifying the Skin and preserving the complexion. The use of Gowland's Lotion is speedily followed by the disappearance of every species of eruptive malady, discoloration, &c., and the establishment of a pure surface of the skin, accompanied by the brilliant circulation which constitutes the tint of beauty; whilst as a refresher it preserves the most susceptible complexion, and sustains to a protracted period the softness of texture and vivacity peculiar to earlier years.—"ROBERT SHAW, LONDON," is in White Letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is Genuine. Price, 2s. 9d., 5s. 6d., Quarts 8s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Medicine Vendors.

THE NEWLY-OPENED HOUSES.

(A BRIEF OUTLINE.)

The Extensive New Establishment of E. MOSES and SON is now open for the transaction of the various features of its business, and the Proprietors are anxious to state the principles upon which it is conducted, and the improvements under which it has opened. Bespoke customers have now devoted to them a spacious range of Show-Rooms, entered by a Private Waiting Hall, 84, Aldgate. There are also apartments for cutting and measuring, and a select Waistcoat Room. Ladies are informed that a private Habit Room is likewise set apart, and E. MOSES and SON have made other additions, too numerous to name at present. The "Ready-Made" Department is at least four times its former extent, and its business will, consequently, be despatched with much greater facility. This department occupies 85 and 86, Aldgate. The Hat Depôt is at 83, Aldgate, and is furnished with every description of Hats and Caps, of the best quality and fashion. The Hosiery Mart, 155, Minories, is equally distinguished for the worth and variety of its articles, from which the most satisfactory purchases are made. The Outfitting and General Clothing Department, 154 and 155, Minories, has equal recommendations, and is an important feature in the New Houses of E. MOSES and SON. Let it be remembered that "Economy! Economy! Economy!" is the maxim at the new Establishment, as it was at the old; and be it also remembered, that the Proprietors still adhere to the marking of the articles in plain-figured prices, from which no abatement can be made. Let it be borne in mind, also, that any articles may be exchanged, or that the price of the article may be returned, without the least hesitation. For particulars of Self-Measurement, and other essential information, obtain the new book, entitled "Past, Present, and Future," which may be had gratis, and post-free, of the Proprietors, E. MOSES and SON, 154, 155, 156, 157, Minories, and 83, 84, 85, and 86, Aldgate, City, London.

E. MOSES and SON, Tailors, Woollen-drapers, Clothiers, Hatters, Hosiers, Outfitters, and General Warehousemen, regret to be obliged to guard the public against imposition; but, having learned that the untradesman-like falsehood of "being connected with them," or it's the same concern, has been resorted to in many instances, and, for obvious reasons, they have no connection with any other house in or out of London; and those who desire genuine cheap clothing, should, to prevent disappointment, call at or send to the Minories or Aldgate, opposite the Church, City, London.

NOTICE.—The entrance to the Bespoke Department is at 84, Aldgate.—No business transacted at this Establishment from sunset Friday evening till sunset Saturday evening, when it is resumed till twelve o'clock.

BRIGHTON RACES.—WEDNESDAY.

The Two-year-old Stakes of 10 sovs each, with 25 added.

Duke of Richmond's Mistress Jean	(Abdale)	1
Lord George Bentinck's Jollity		2

The Brighton Stakes of 25 sovs each, with 100 added.

Count Bathyany's Gannet	(Abdale)	1
Mr. Waller's Columbus		2

The Town Plate of £50, added to a Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each. Heats.

Mr. G. Hobson's Chatham	(Esling)	1
Mr. Wall's c by Coronation		2

The Marine Stakes of 5 sovs each, and 30 added. Heats.

Duke of Richmond's Cherokee	(Abdale)	1
Mr. Pratt's Decdora		2

AQUATICS.

DOGGETT'S COAT AND BADGE.—On Saturday last Doggett's Coat and Badge were rowed for from the Old Swan, near London-bridge, to the Swan at Chelsea. The competitors were John Prince, William Nugent, Matthew Dewing, William Johnson, James Smith, and John F. Wing. Wing came in first, and Prince second, but he was 100 yards behind.

LONDON YACHT CLUB.—On Monday the second match of the season came off. The Lady Louisa at starting took the lead, and kept it to the flag-buoy off Gravesend, which she reached at thirty-five minutes past two o'clock, followed by the Cygnet, five minutes later. The Mischief had previously been thrown out of the race by an accident to her gaff. The Lady Louisa returned to East Greenwich at twenty five minutes past five, beating the Cygnet by a quarter of an hour.

THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP OF THE THAMES.—THE SILVER SCULLS CONTEST.—The great contest for the Winkfield sculls came off on Monday evening. According to the conditions of the wager, the gentlemen who aspire to the honorary distinction row their trial heat on the 3rd of August, and the winner contends with the holder on the succeeding 10th. On this occasion, however, the race was decisive in its trial, as Mr. Chapman, who has won them three or four [illegible] expressed his intention of not again contending for the symbol of amateur superiority. The distance was, as usual, from Westminster to Putney with the tide. Mr. Russel, 1; Mr. Whalmsley, 0; Mr. Fellowes, 0; Mr. Dodd, 0. Mr. Russel won by about a hundred yards.

ROYAL VICTORIA YACHT CLUB REGATTA.—This aquatic festival, under the patronage of the Queen, is fixed for Tuesday next, at Ryde. The Duke of Beaufort, the Marquis of Anglesey, Commodore Fleming, and Captains Locke, R.N., Brigstocke, R.N., Carter, R.N., and Green, Q.S., are the committee of management.

RICHMOND AMATEUR REGATTA.—This regatta took place on Wednesday. Scullers' Match: First prize, silver model wherry; second, pair of silver sculls. Won, after three heats, by Ellis; Wilberforce second.—Pair Oars' Match: First prize, pair of silver cups; second, a pair of silver oars. Was won by Plunket and Duplan, first; Walton and Wilson, second.—Four Oared Match: First prize, silver oars and rudder; second, silver medals. The Sylph, Twickenham, won by three lengths.—The prizes were presented by C. J. Selwyn, Esq.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

ROYAL SOUTHERN YACHT CLUB REGATTA.

> How many things by season season'd are
> To their right praise and true perfection.
> SHAKSPEARE.

THE most essentially national of all British sports is, undoubtedly, yacht sailing. In riding the horse "without remorse or ruth," we have rivals [illegible] of the world than one: many nations produce as skilful marksmen; woodcraft, as a type of war, is carried on more characteristically against the tiger of the jungle than the fox of an acre of gorse; but where shall we look for pleasure afloat, in fitting guise and with apposite appliance, save on the glad waters of our island seas and rivers? When, early in the present century, yachting became a [illegible] pastime, a site was selected for its head-quarters which [illegible] might have been proud to [illegible] her court. Cowes has since become a marine St. James's—a spot that may truly, and in the best sense, be called "gentle and aristocratic." Facing that fair port of the Wight—the island of the blest, as the guide books denominate it—lies Southampton Water, an "ocean stream" in the legitimate application of the phrase, complete in natural and artificial beauty. On its shores stand goodly specimens of ancient and modern architecture: Netley Abbey, the poetry of tower and hall; Cadlands, the prose of comfortable stone and mortar, while, far as the eye may reach, spread noble woodlands and teeming valleys—the ideal of sylvan landscape. Here it was that, during the early portion of the week, the Royal Southern Yacht Club celebrated its annual aquatic festival.

That Society was first established in 1838—being then called the Royal Southampton Yacht Club. The Commodore was James Weld, Esq. It continued to gain popularity, and, of course, patronage, for a short space; and then a change came o'er its spirit. At that crisis, Mr. Knight volunteered his services for the rescue, as Secretary; and, with a new name—that which it at present sails under, and a new Commodore, the Marquis of Conyngham—better days smiled upon it. In the season of prosperity, it was proposed that the Club should have a becoming local habitation; and straightway, last year, a Club-House was commenced, facing the entrance to the Royal Pier, which, on Monday last, was opened with a ball and supper. It is a very handsome structure, splendidly fitted up, and replete with all luxurious convenience. But, "alack and a well-a-day," next comes the reckoning! The cost of this temple of Thetis was £6000 or thereabouts; and there was, in hand, £1500 to meet it. A special meeting was, consequently, called for this day—with such results, as we shall detail in our next. For the present, our affair is with the pastime of the occasion.

Tuesday set in with gorgeous weather and a light breeze, to be wooed to some favour by means of the muslin canvass which yachts are wont to spread in such emergency. Between the pier and the mouth of the Itchen half the Royal Yacht Squadron was moored, surrounded by a vast fleet of miscellaneous craft. The list was a fair average one. Five prizes, ranging from a plate of £45, for yachts not less than 20 tons nor more than 45, to one of £10, for boats not exceeding 12 tons, were offered for competition; but the first was a draw, as the conditions required at least three vessels to start, and only one could be found to enter the lists with the redoubtable Heroine; consequently, the Second Class, for yachts not less than 20 tons and not exceeding 35 O.M., became the first issue in importance—and this brought to the post the following field:—

YACHTS.	TONNAGE.	OWNERS.
Ino	[illegible]	H. G[illegible], Esq.
Secret	25	— Smith, Esq.
Vixen	25	J. J. Heighington, Esq.
Belvidere	25	Lord Alfred Paget.
Fawn	25	J. F. Selby, Esq.

For the £25 Plate three were entered; and, for the £20 Prize, five. Twelve o'clock was the hour named for the start, and in the rules it was written, "No allowance will be made for the old and worn-out excuse of not being ready, the Committee having determined that the time shall be strictly adhered to." It was, therefore, rather odd that the gun to "slip" did not fire till half-past one: the time not adhered to being the consequence of the delay caused by sealing down the yachts' platforms, to prevent the ballast being shifted! As the yachts for the £35 Plate were [illegible] The Fawn made fast by her bobstay to the stern-post of the Belvidere, and fouling was the order—or rather, disorder—of the day. With the reader's leave, we will accompany this division of the squadron. The course lay from the winning buoy off the Royal Pier at Southampton, round the north-west buoy of the Sturbridge, abreast of Ryde; and, as the breeze was what is called "a soldier's wind," the distance out and home again was done without a board.

The run down to Calchot Castle pretty well told the tale of the match. There the Secret was a mile or nearly a-head, was never caught, and won cleverly, leading the van like a clipper as she is. At one time, the Belvidere looked as if she meant mischief; but, in the run home, she became as sluggish as ever, and the Fawn beat her soundly for second place—the Vixen nowhere. The £25 prize was won by the Zuleika; the £20, by the Mazeppa. Truth compels us to state that the management of the details was not popular; and that, in the course of the night, nearly all the Yacht Squadron craft left the river. Wednesday only produced the attempt at a single race—"a grand time race for yachts of any tonnage." For this there came to the post

YACHTS.	TONNAGE.	OWNERS.
Alarm	42	E. Jekyll, Esq.
Zuleika	20	Morris King, Esq.
Ino	25	H. Gibson, Esq.
Mazeppa	14	C. Brom[illegible]
Termagant	15	R. Wrig[illegible]
Sea Nymph	[illegible]	C. W[illegible], Esq.

The latter got off the first, but off Calchot the Alarm was well placed. In returning, however, it became a stock calm, and a drifting match ensued, of no interest but for those engaged. In the evening, the Club dined at their new House; the noble Commodore was not present.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The subscribers were so fully occupied in arranging their Goodwood accounts—and they were enormously heavy—that very little attention was bestowed on future events. Money, we are glad to say, was "easy," and, greatly to the credit of the ring, the settling, on the whole, was very good. The St. Leger quotations show two or three important changes.

ST. LEGER.

5 to 1 agst Pyrrhus the First	10 to 1 agst Traverser (t)	25 to 1 agst Erin-go-Bragh
6 to 1 —— Grimston	12 to 1 —— Iago	40 to 1 —— Poynton
7 to 1 —— Sir Tatton Sykes (t)	12 to 1 —— Fancy Boy

DERBY.

15 to 1 agst Van Tromp (t)	30 to 1 agst Planet (t)	50 to 1 agst Johnny Armstrong (taken)
22 to 1 —— Epirote	40 to 1 —— Bingham (t)

CRICKET.—On Monday the first of the "return" matches of the Marylebone Club (Kent v. England) was commenced at Canterbury, in the presence of a very numerous and fashionable assemblage. The game lasted Monday and Tuesday, and exhibited most scientific play. The result was that Kent won in one innings by three runs, the scores being—Kent, first innings, 94; England, both innings, 91.

OPENING OF THE ROYAL SOUTHERN YACHT CLUB-HOUSE, SOUTHAMPTON.

THIS chaste building—which, since the last season, has been erected for the use of the members of the Royal Southampton Yacht Club—was opened on Monday last, the day preceding the Regatta, agreeably to announcement.

At noon, a Royal salute was fired from the battery of the Secretary, James M. Knight, Esq., whose office adjoins the building we are about to describe. There was a liberal display of bunting from the lofty flag-pole, or mast, in front of the building during the day; and a ball was given to 200 persons, in the Club-room, in the evening.

The site of the new Club-House has been judiciously selected; the building forms a pleasing ornament to the southern part of the town, and, from its proximity to the Pier, and consequent easy access to the water, must be, as a matter of course, very convenient to the lovers of aquatic sports. The new edifice is in the Italian style of architecture, although we should rather term it the mixed modern English, comprising a "wee bit" of each of the orders of the ancients. The plans were furnished by Thomas Sauden Hack, Esq., the architect, Mr. George Brown, of Southampton, being the builder.

The internal arrangements are very complete. On the first-floor is the Club-room, which extends the whole width of the building, 49 feet in length, by 21 feet, and 15 feet 6 inches in height, in which are five windows, opening on a capacious platform over the portico of the building. On this floor also, are the Committee-room, ante rooms, &c. On the second-floor are eight bed-rooms, over which, in what may be termed the roof, is a well ventilated smoking-room, for the accommodation of the members; and above is a platform, from whence the most beautiful views are obtained of the Southampton water, the Solent, and even as far as the Needles, with the whole of the Isle of Wight in the distance.

FASHIONS FOR AUGUST.

LONDON will very soon be no longer the head quarters of fashion; the fickle deity will betake herself either to the sea-side, or to those magnificent mansions whither the aristocracy retire to ruralise during so many months in the year. There, doubtless, will take place numberless réunions, for which our élégantes are now making preparations.

Travelling bonnets—those called Chapeaux Chemin de Fer (Railway Bonnets) are made of a close shape, and in rather coarse, but light, straw. They are very simply trimmed with Chinese green, pink, or Nemours blue sarsnet ribbon, without flowers. Capotes of glacé silk are still worn, but they must be covered with tulle.

For more dressy occasions, bonnets are always made of illusion or Brussels tulle, and trimmed, when they are of a pink colour, with a bunch of forget-me-nots without leaves, or else with auriculas; they are also [illegible] bouts, willow, or a feather of the same colour as the bonnet. [illegible] made of lace, lined with crape, either China green, blue Elodie, or pink. [illegible] Nemours blue crape bonnets are still worn. They are trimmed with oat-ears.

At the Opera, and at the few lingering balls given in defiance of the heat, the toilettes are all of the lightest description. Embroidered tarlatan, illusion tulle, and crepe lisse, are the only materials chosen by the fair votaries of the dance. The dresses are always made with three and even four skirts, looped up with green garlands, or with very large flowers, and surrounded with green leaves.

A very much admired style of dress, is one made of sea-green crape, trimmed with white flowers and green leaves. This colour, which by candlelight might be taken for blue or verdigris, is as original as it is new. The body is made en Blouse, with long floating streamers.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR AUGUST.

Flowers are still very much worn in the hair, either in wreaths or singly; the forms of the wreaths vary according to what is most becoming the fair wearer.

It is still the fashion to wear very large bouquets in the front of the boddice, and also in the hand; the intense heat has now rendered the fan an indispensable appendage.

The most favourite morning dresses are foulards, with small running patterns, in blue and white, lilac and white, chesnut and white, or dust coloured Taffetas d'Italie; or, for occasions when something more is required, silk dresses embroidered down the front of the skirt, or else trimmed with flowers, of which the heading must be of a darker shade than the flounce itself; the number of flounces is now happily reduced to four. Dresses with embroidered Gothic borders or patterns, black on lilac, or Nemours blue, or violet en écru, are also very pretty for morning wear. Another charming toilette for the promenade is a dress of very clear tarlatan, embroidered all over with large spots, and lined with blue sarsnet.

All the mantillas, &c., are made in embroidered tarlatan, lined with a light gauze of a colour suited to the dress.

We have made an arrangement to receive our drawings of Fashions from the Editor of the Modes Parisiennes, the most elegant and distinguished of all the Journals of the Fashions, and patronised by the Royal Families of Europe. Subscriptions for this work are received by Madame Frederick, No. 40, Albemarle-street: it is forwarded direct from Paris, and is received in London every Tuesday morning, price, for six months, 12 shillings.

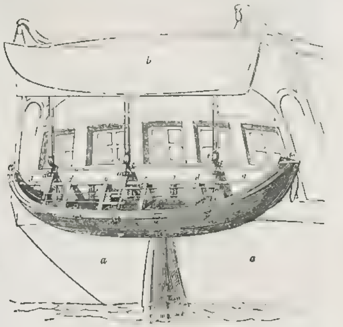
THE ROYAL SOUTHERN YACHT CLUB-HOUSE, SOUTHAMPTON.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

PORTABLE LIFE-BOATS, AND LIFE-RAFTS FOR SHIPS. BY COMMANDER GEORGE BEADON, R.N.

THE ingenious inventor having devoted his attention to this branch of seamanship for many years, during which time he has tried scores of plans to prevent loss of life in cases of shipwreck, it appears to him that a boat or raft should be suspended to every sea-going vessel, and that it should be so constructed as not to prevent ships carrying the full complement of boats necessary for the performance of the ordinary duties

The mere act of lowering it should render it fit for use, with its gear, paddles, and appointed crew complete. It should free itself from the tackles, without requiring to be "unhooked," an operation fatal to so many boats, before they can get clear of the side. When fairly off, the means of propelling should be such as can be plied in a sea-way; they should be light, strong, and capacious, and of little draft.

The most perfect Life-Boats being very soon rendered, in a sea-way, imperfect rafts, Captain Beadon considers it preferable to meet the probability of immersion half way, by quitting the ship in a raft, which, if well managed by an accustomed crew, with paddles, would afford a safer means of reaching the shore than a boat, although, in idea, it may not appear so pleasant. The natives of South America and of India will, with their catamarans, land through surfs which we dare not attempt with boats.



BEADON'S FOLDING LIFE BOAT.

The Cut represents the stern of a vessel and the Folding Life-Boat eased down below the stern-boat, and in the act of opening:—a a, ship. b b, stern-boat. c c, stem and keel d d d, water hinges, attaching the thwarts, t t, to stanchions, l l [illegible] e e, tackles "toggled" to a span, t t t, by toggles, f f f, to which are [illegible] of a given length, wound round small reels or bobbins fixed above [illegible] h h [illegible] the spans. i i, drop stanchions. k k, oars with universal rowlocks attached. There is a sliding bar which keeps all firm when open. m m, rowing chocks with sockets When the tackles, e e e, are eased down longer than the toggle lanyards the toggles, f f f, must come out and the raft will be disengaged.

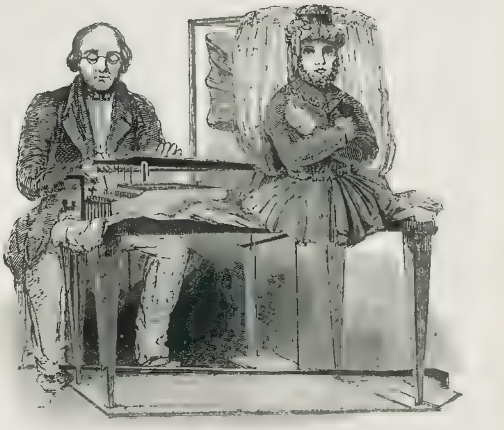
The principal feature of the Folding Boat is that the thwarts are divided in the middle, and there hinged to upright stanchions, which pass, through a gang-board, about eight inches wide, into the keel. The second tier of thwarts are hinged to the gang-board, and form seats for the rowers. Next comes the bottom, of good, substantial elm plank, well braced, and also hinged to the keel. At the extremities of these thwarts are ash moulding pieces, running round on each side, and hinged to the stems. This comprises the framing, to which is battened prepared strong canvass, or other suitable material, enveloping the whole, and forming, when open, a perfect boat; none of the canvass being exposed, except at the sides, where it is protected by the battens.

She is opened by spans fastened to the extremities of the upper tier of thwarts, on each side: in the centres of these spans are rings, or thimbles, through which are passed the eyes of the tackle straps, which suspend the Boat, through these eyes, wooden or iron pins are passed, with lines attached to them; and, when the slings at the stems are cast off, and the whole weight of the Boat is brought upon the spans, the framing opens, forming a perfect boat. Between the mouldings or frame-work are air vessels, which become inflated on the opening of the Boat during the operation of lowering; strong flexible hoses, or air tubes, also surround the sides, into which air is forced by a bellows formed under the gang-board: in case of emergency, this would render her buoyant, although full of water. The available space occupied by a Boat of this description would be eight inches; which, extended, would be a Boat 26 feet long, 7 feet beam, 2 deep—and could be ready in thirty seconds.

The chief feature of the Life-Raft is, its hinges suffering it to fold up when suspended.

THE EUPHONIA.

WE noticed this new Speaking Automaton a fortnight since, and then recorded its feats arte loquendi. It is stated by Professor Faber to be the result of twenty-five years' labour! It is well observed in the Athenæum:—"It is in vain to apply the 'Cui bono?' to a matter like this. It is quite true that mechanical figures, in heads and turbans, with their lungs in red baize and worked by machinery, are not in themselves utilities—the more particularly as their talking machinery requires the impulse of a real living and talking man, who might more conveniently have done the talking at first hand. As an example of inductive and mechanical skill, however, such an exhibition as this is well deserving of attention; and there is no difficulty, besides, in imagining a number of purposes to which the discovery of any artificial means for producing vocal articulation might be applied with valuable effect. It is, in any case, an old scientific problem; and anything that brings us nearer to its solution would have an interest, were it for that reason alone. We believe this invention of Professor Faber comes closer to that result than any previous 'instrument made with hands.'"



THE EUPHONIA, OR SPEAKING MACHINE.

Still, the writer continues: "This is, like all similar attempts which have preceded it, only an approximation, though a nearer approximation, to the thing proposed. It requires all our sense of the ingenuity and perseverance which have been bestowed on the work, to induce our assent to the proposition which calls the voice a human voice; but we recommend it to notice as a remarkable result of contriving skill and scientific patience."

In this light, the Euphonia has been numerously visited and inspected.

The Speaking Head of Roger Bacon, and similar inventions of much earlier date, show that the idea of applying machinery to imitate life, is of some antiquity, and that considerable success was not deemed impossible. One of the greatest masters in this way was Vaucanson, with his duck, his flute and flageolet players; but even he must duck his diminished head before the Euphonia of our day.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, AUGUST 8, 1846.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 224.—Vol. IX.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, AUGUST 15, 1846. [Sixpence.

THE DUKE AND THE ARMY.

FREQUENTLY as the Duke of Wellington has had occasion to testify to the high character of the British soldiery, he never did so with more heartiness and effect than on Tuesday evening. The opportunity of doing so, too, was a good one—better than that of writing a despatch. All the courage, devotion, and stern endurance that Wellington has chronicled was exhibited under a system calculated to chill and repress many of the better qualities of the soldier. Colonel Napier speaks of the achievements of our army in the Peninsula as increased in merit by the fact that they were performed by men who fought "under the cold shade of aristocracy;" while the French, under the Imperial system, were stimulated by hopes and rewards that never brightened the career of our "rank and file." It was the defect of our system: the Duke of Wellington often felt the disadvantage of it. he has been known to complain of the strictness with which his hands were tied by the "authorities" at home with regard to rewards and promotions; he could do little but "recommend" in cases of good service; all honorary distinctions were the gift of the Sovereign, and the Duke has always, from a sense of loyalty, refrained from interfering with its exercise: under such circumstances, the result was certain. Honours and rewards, crosses, medals, and clasps, became the objects of political intrigue; the friends and connections of the predominant party were sure of prizes in the Lottery, if they could show the faintest claim to them; where that interest was not possessed, the most brilliant services went unmarked. The force of circumstances, of course, compelled some departures from the general rule, and there were cases of great and unfriended merit getting its due honour; but they were just enough to blind the mass of men to the system itself, and enable great abuses of a trust to be committed with impunity.

Promotion in the English Army has been so completely a matter of purchase or interest, that in but few instances were the officers of the higher grades unconnected with influential parties at home. In all distributions of honours, they were pretty secure. A glance at the Army-List will confirm this statement. But descend a little in the scale of rank, and we find the subaltern officers, the non-commissioned officers, and privates, who struggled through the long and hard-fought campaigns of the Peninsula, without any emblem of their services at all; the chiefs blaze with orders and decorations; the great body of the army has nothing. Often and often has this been complained of, and with great justice; but no ear has been given to all representations from the aggrieved parties.

The Duke of Wellington, true to the principle he had laid down to himself in this matter, declined to interfere; and the denial of this honorary distinction remains a source of discontent in the army to the present day.

We only mention this as exhibiting one phase of our system. The same cold policy that was so sparing of honours to all but the luckily connected—a matter very distinct, one would imagine, from military merit—was lavish of punishment. Every victory of our arms has been gained by men who for every fault were liable to the lash; and who, by no merit whatever, could rise above a certain level. Time has wrought some improvements in both respects: an almost unlimited and discretionary power of punishment was restrained; but still its infliction was capable, in some cases, of producing death. Again and again were efforts made, and almost exclusively by civilians, to abolish the power; but they were always met by the same objection, that there was no other way of maintaining discipline. Some officers, however, at last made the experiment; it was found possible, even amid the difficulties that parsimony and the carelessness of official routine places in the way of better means. And even under the modified practice, cases occurred at intervals that were really disgraceful to a civilised community; and one such case has at last given the death-blow to the system.

The speech of the Duke of Wellington in the House of Lords on Tuesday is evidently the beginning of a new era in our military system: it is forced on by the much greater influence that public opinion has acquired over public men. Those who underrate the representative system and scoff at the Reform Bill, should look at the treatment that all proposals for improving any class or body met with before that political change. Sneers, scorn, contempt, absolute denial of the remedy, without inquiry into the abuse. Forty years did the Slave-trade struggle for abolition; not till the representation was placed on a wider basis did slavery in our own empire, as an institution, follow it. Count the number of great changes late years have produced, and we shall soon perceive how much society gains from the people having a real share in the governing power. It is the vice of small knots and corporations of men to be mean and cruel. A great public, properly informed, is neither one nor the other; though those who administer its affairs make it appear so.

The defects of our military system, with its exclusiveness of ranks, its tests of birth and wealth, as the fitness to command, are essentially those of a "proud aristocracy;" or, what is still worse, a rich oligarchy. Their elevation is not the real one of worth and talent; and they only feel secure in extraneous means of support and influence over others. The rudest expedient is the easiest, so brute force is adopted. But the end of this is coming; and this one change is the precursor of a thousand. Let no one fear that these changes will be for the worse, either for the army or the nation. Glad are we to see the sternest of all disciplinarians, one of the last of that series of great soldiers which the wars of the French Revolution produced, and the greatest English General since the days of Marlborough, preparing the first process of the change. He "speaks as one having authority." To the army itself the change will come better recommended than had it proceeded from one less experienced. But we would remind the public that, in the limitation of the power of flogging, nay, in its total abolition, they will by no means have done all its duty. Mere negation is cheap and easy to any system; but something positive must take its place, and here, what will be required will be something more solid than declamation and sympathy. For all the improvements we hope to see in the condition of the soldier, the nation must be prepared to pay; it cannot have good service and cheap service at the same time. Nothing could be less costly than terror and whipcord; but in that as we resolve to put our trust no more, we must be ready for the alternatives.

THE PROPHECY OF THE FLOWER.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

THE PROPHECY OF THE FLOWER.

The name of Vidal must be already well known to our readers, by his charming sketch "Curiosity," an engraving of which we gave in a former number. We this week give another specimen of the same artist; it is a copy of the engraving by Messrs. [illegible] of Paris, [illegible] exhibited by M. Vidal in the Exhibition of the Louvre, of the present year. It represents a girl consulting the flower [illegible] the practice is not wholly unknown in England, [illegible] it ranks with the many other little superstitions [illegible] have furnished so many themes to poetry and painting. [illegible] a beautiful sketch of Margaret plucking the leaves from the flower, from one of the scenes in "Faust."

Vidal is very popular in this country; engravings from his sketches [illegible] almost every print shop. His female figures [illegible] [illegible] This remark is peculiarly applicable to the new series, of which the present Engraving is one. M. Vidal's beauties have an elegance and reality, possessed by no other living artist, with the exception of Gavarni; they recal to the mind the celebrated girls' heads of Creuze. Vidal executes in several crayons, a mode which has become now as great a rage as it was in the last century; but it has been much improved by the discoveries of our modern water-colour painters; in fact, it might be termed a combination of the two systems.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

The most recent visitor to France and guest of Louis Philippe's court is the Prince Royal of Bavaria—come, some say, to influence the Government as regards the Bavarian [illegible] guided by his desire to [illegible] wards King, spent the happiest days of his life as a Colonel in the French service. From one of his suite I have learnt that her Royal Highness the Princess William of Prussia, wife of the brother of the King, and heir to the throne, will visit England at the end of the present [illegible] accomplished woman, who has managed to fix the [illegible] a whole novel of inconstancy.

Louis Philippe has once more turned sailor at Eu, delighted at his marine prowess [illegible] Treport, and Dieppe, were it not that [illegible] the shores of Great Britain, [illegible] news of his [illegible] days Count de Jarnac, [illegible] singularly, went to Paris to give away his sister, [illegible] to the Queen, to M. de Lasteyrie, the grandson of Lafayette, and one of the most thorough-paced and sincere Radicals of France. The Count de Jarnac being detained at Eu had this singular result, that the whole of the habitually numerous French Embassy to the Court of St. James's was [illegible] Count d'Asterg, [illegible] unfortunate non-election of his son; whilst the return of the second secretary of Embassy, Count Louis de Noailles, was prevented at the last moment by the death of his father, the Duke de Poix.

The greatest sensation is created in Paris by the nomination of the Marquis of Normanby to the Embassy to the Court of the Tuileries. The interest in the eyes of Frenchmen is, that the Marquis has [illegible] Minister of State and a Viceroy of Ireland, [illegible] a great dilettante and lover of art, [illegible] of Great Britain at this Court is certainly one of the most [illegible] artistical Grand Seigneurs that ever visited Paris. [illegible] is no wise hurried; and I know positively that Lord Normanby intends going to take the waters at Vichy before assuming his high diplomatic functions.

We are, here, far from having recovered from the effects of extreme heat: a celebrated chymist, M. Payen, has lately [illegible] and [illegible] milk and coffee for breakfast, [illegible] this season every year [illegible] count for the [illegible] countrywomen, which is general [illegible] This year, the heat has not only increased fearfully the number of lunatics, but likewise of suicides. Of the latter, the number is now appalling in that once happy France which was wont to laugh at English spleen of the true Briton, and at the number of good folks across Channel who killed themselves to get rid of ennui, and of the November fogs. The number of suicides, which already created so much astonishment in 1827, when they amounted to 1,542, last year already [illegible] men as a capital resource, in case of great difficulties arising in their finances, and nothing is commoner than to behold two lovers asphyxiate themselves with charcoal, [illegible]

Of late, no less than six parishes of France have been [illegible] still greater, [illegible] Governments, the maintenance of the energy of the nation, and the exciting of [illegible] because, in France, a too great majority for Government in the Chamber one year, has always awakened the lower classes to revolt, and proved destructive to the next Government that followed. Now, however, all the different shades of Opposition combine to sink differences, and close their ranks: the resistance will be sufficient to control. The Legitimists have lost 11 deputies of their party, because they have not marched with the age, and their opinions are now antediluvian. There are four lawyers [illegible] the press, three are added—M. Leon Faucher, of the [illegible], M. De L[illegible] of the Esprit Publique; and that fierce writer of the Gazette de France, a priest, and a Legitimist, M. De Genoude. From new elements so eccentric, strange scenes are [illegible] of Deputies. In the meantime, the Parisians are enjoying all jokes and tricks played off at the elections. Much amusement has been excited by one perpetrated in Paris, at the expense of a once all-powerful, and now expelled Conservative—M. Jaques Lefevre, the ex-member for the second arrondissement of Paris, whose election was implicitly relied upon by Government as well as himself. A man, genteelly dressed in black at a critical hour of the election day, rushed into the house of M. M——, the bookseller, and frightening his wife by the mysteriousness and pressing appearance of his manners, got introduced to the good bibliopolist, who was in his bath, and told him he was the chief valet of his friend M. Lefevre, who sent him to tell him that if he did not come and vote at once, he was lost. The man of books rushed out of the bath, huddled on his clothes, and followed precipitately his deceiver, who took care so to guide his hand that he only discovered just too late that he had put in his voting ball for his friend's antagonist—M. Berger—now a member of the Chamber.

Before I terminate, I must state to you, for the benefit of the tradesmen of London, a new and effective mode of recovering debts due to them. Yesterday a man walked [illegible] student, with an immense placard on his back, on which was written, [illegible] me the amount of thirty bottles of claret, and here I am going to walk until he has cashed my bill!" The wine had long since gone the way of all juice of the grape, and money was scarce with the gay student, but he made gigantic efforts and raised the required sum, for he could not stand the laughter of the crowd, of which a new volley exploded as each fresh passenger read the placard.

FRANCE.

The elections in France are now all concluded; and the Journal des Débats gives the following as the final result of the returns:—

Conservatives	289
Opposition	168
Majority for Ministers	121

Out of 457 nominations, 289 belong to the Conservative party, and 168 to the Opposition. On the whole, the new Chamber contains at this moment 110 new deputies. 82 are Conservatives—34 of whom were elected in the place of ancient Conservative deputies, and 48 replace deputies of the Opposition; 28 belong to the Opposition—9 of whom were elected in the place of ancient deputies of the Opposition, and 19 replace Conservative deputies. The Conservative party obtained a double election; and the Opposition, four. The Conservative gains 49 nominations, and loses 23. Thus, the definite result yields to the Conservative party, in addition to the ancient majority, 26 nominations more than to the Opposition.

The journals mention the arrival at Paris of "l'illustre chef de la Ligue contre les Céréales, M. Cobden."

The Chamber of Peers assembled a day or two ago to receive the communication of the Royal ordinance of the 29th ult., constituting it a court of justice for the trial of Joseph Henri, and then went into a secret sitting, under the presidency of the Chancellor, on the subject of the ordinance. M. Hébert, the Procureur-General, and M. Bresson, the Avocat-General, named in the ordinance, were present. After hearing the requisitory of the Procureur-General, the Court formed itself into a Chamber of Council, at which a decree was drawn up, ordering the usual preliminary arrangements, and appointed the Duke Décazes, Count Portalis, Baron Girod (de l'Ain), and M. Laplagne-Barris, to assist the Chancellor in the examination of the prisoner. There were 131 Peers present. The Examining Commission of the Court of Peers, under the presidency of Duke Pasquier, attended by the Registrar-in-Chief, M. E. Cauchy, have commenced the interrogation of Joseph Henri.

The President of the Court of Peers interrogated Henri, on Monday last, at the Conciergerie. M. Laplagne Barris, it was stated, would be charged with drawing up the report on the attempt, but it was not expected to be read before the opening of the Parliamentary session, announced for the 17th instant. The pistols used by the assassin were not, as had been pretended, mere pocket pistols that could carry only a distance of from six to fifteen paces.

"If we are correctly informed," says the Journal des Débats, "a bullet fired from them would strike a wall, but without precision, at the distance of a hundred yards. A board half an inch thick was pierced by a bullet fired at sixty [illegible] were repeated [illegible]

[illegible] back to England, to obtain further information on the system of the Penny Postage now in force in England. It appears certain, from this fact, that the Ministry, in conformity with what it has promised, intends, in the next session, presenting a Postage Reform Bill, of a more complete character than that previously brought in."

The Chamber of Peers and the new Chamber of Deputies is to meet on Tuesday next. The session will be a very short one, as no public business of any kind will be entered upon, and the only object of it is to enable the Chamber of Deputies to verify the returns of the members, and to choose a President, Vice-Presidents, and Secretaries. The session will close in the first week of September. The Débats states that, contrary to general expectation, the King will open the Parliament in person; but that, in his speech from the throne, his Majesty will merely express the pleasure and satisfaction it gives him to see himself surrounded by the Representatives of the nation. The Chambers will send up an address in answer to the speech; and, after the routine business for which the session is held, the Chambers will adjourn to the end of the month of December or beginning of January.

[illegible] insurrection in favour of Abd-el-Kader among the tribes of the province of Oran.

ITALY.

Letters from Rome to the 1st inst. state that the excitement caused by the [illegible] arranging the case of future proceedings. It is said that he [illegible] Ministerial exposé, and that the Pope has announced his determination annually to make known the state of the finances, and to solicit plans for their amelioration.

The new Government is in the highest degree popular, and Rome is [illegible] is equally tranquil, and the Pope and Cardinal Gizzi are as popular there as in the capital.

THE UNITED STATES.

The Cambria has arrived at Liverpool, after a very quick passage from Halifax, [illegible]

After one of the most strenuous struggles ever known in any political body, the Tariff Bill from the House of Representatives finally passed the Senate of the [illegible]

As might have been expected, there was great excitement on the subject, and the doubt of its passing is proved in the fact of its having been finally carried by the casting vote of Mr. Vice-President Dallas; the Senate itself, on a division, were equal, and the Vice-President, by giving a casting vote in favour of the bill, succeeded in carrying it. Mr. Webster was the great opponent of the measure; his speeches are reported at enormous length in the American papers, but it is hardly necessary to recur to his arguments. The measure has now become law, [illegible] passing of this great measure, [illegible] only topic of discussion in the New York papers; everything appears to be sunk in the general excitement on this all important matter.

[illegible] exertion was being made to prepare for an effective advance up the river to Monterey. Camargo had been converted into a depôt for supplies, with a view to ulterior operations.

From Vera Cruz the advices are to the 25th July. These advices, in the opinion of the American journals, and in that of Mr. Webster also, lead to the impression that a determined effort is to be made to repel the hostile attacks of the United States; and, it is said, that the Executive had received authentic information to that effect. Paredes, up to the 7th ult., had not left the capital, deterred by the fear of an immediate revolt. A slight attempt in the city had been successfully suppressed. The blockade of Vera Cruz was still maintained. A [illegible] force of 300 Mexicans, who fired on the boats and wounded one man. The Princeton, lying close by, opened her fire upon the chapparal and concealed breastworks, and soon silenced the battery. The Mexican account of the affair is, that they had three men killed and several wounded, and that the Americans lost one officer and some men. The American account is, that the Mexicans had six or eight wounded and three killed, and on their own side only one man wounded. Arista had issued a proclamation to the troops of the division, declaring that his and their honour was affected by the disastrous action of the 9th of May, and he states that he has demanded an investigation, which the Government had granted. Late advices from Yucatan would seem to throw some light [illegible] upon the entire separation of the department from Mexico.

INDIA.

ARRIVAL OF THE OVERLAND MAIL.

The Bombay Mail of the 1st of July arrived on Tuesday. The other dates are Calcutta, June 19; Madras, June 22. We have no news from China. The Mail had been overdue some days, and apprehensions were beginning to be felt on the subject. It appears that the Mail arrived at Suez on the morning of the 27th [illegible] miles from that port, experienced a severe gale which caused her considerable injury, and obliged her to return. She reached Bombay on the 30th June, when the Mail was transferred to the Semiramis, which had a favourable passage to Aden. From thence the Mail was conveyed to Suez by the Atalanta.

The news by this mail is unimportant. The chief item is the surrender of Fort Kote Kangra. Our troops having, with no inconsiderable exertion overcome the difficulties of the march, sat down before the place on the 28th of May. The Commander and his Chiefs having come forth to endeavour to make conditions, were informed that the only terms which could be allowed them were those of unconditional submission; that, if within the hour the garrison resolved to submit, they would be permitted to retire, carrying with them a single bundle each. All arms, ammunition, stores, and property of every kind, with these exceptions, were made over to us. The evacuation took place in the course of the day, and by the afternoon the British flag waved from the battlements of a fortress hitherto deemed impregnable.

The monsoon had set in most favourably; the sufferings of the poor were diminished, and the cholera had lessened its ravages.

Tranquillity prevailed throughout India. In L[illegible] satisfaction. Money was difficult to be had there. The Government was determined preparing to enforce its claims upon the Nawab of Moultan; he was preparing to defend his town. At Peshawur, the Sikh soldiers had exhibited symptoms of insubordination from want of pay; but some advances had partly pacified them. Gholab Singh was busy in regulating his newly-acquired country.

Scinde enjoys complete repose.

The Governor-General was at Simla, in good health; he was expected in the Jullunder Doab after the rains.

The Rajah of Ludwa, who had been betrayed by the Sikh Prime Minister, Rajah Lall Singh, was coming as a prisoner into the British territory to be detained for life.

A Bombay [illegible] the Bombay Castle, has been [illegible] suspicion fell upon some persons belonging to her crew.

The Governor of Bombay, Sir G. Arthur, who had [illegible] was better, and preparing to go into the Deccan. It was said that he was waiting for a successor from England, before he took his departure from India. His period for holding the reins of [illegible] retirement is expected.

Sir Henry Roper, the Chief Justice of Bombay, was also making preparations for resigning his appointment. Much speculation was afloat as to his successor.

Both at Bombay and at Calcutta we have no change to record in commercial or monetary matters; the former continuing very dull, and the latter very tight.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

THE SUGAR DUTIES BILL.

The Sugar [illegible] passed in the House of Commons [illegible] exclusive benefit of the planters in the colonies. He contended that this measure would not only procure for the British consumer a sufficient supply of sugar, but would give it to him at a reduced price, while, at the same time, it would bring an addition of half a million of money into the Treasury. He denied that it would give any stimulus to the slave-trade, and asserted that the West India colonies themselves did not object to the bill, when assured of facilities to free immigration, and the abolition of their differential duties. To these two subjects the Government had promised to direct their careful attention. He ridiculed the idea of taking the gold, diamonds, coffee, cotton, and other products of slave labour, and even of carrying, and refining to sell again, slave produced sugars, while we made exception to one particular description of sugar alone. This was, indeed, laying ourselves justly open to the charge of hypocrisy.

Lord Stanley remarked on the extraordinary rapidity of change which characterised the present time, and more especially the present Parliament, which would go down to posterity as the rapid propulsion Parliament. The principle of excluding slave-grown sugar had been maintained till now, not merely as a con[illegible] system of Protection under [illegible] producers of free-grown sugar were assured of the continued guarantee of an Act of Parliament; but, in July, a new Government comes into office, and, without the slightest hesitation, a new Sugar Bill is brought in, which, in the month of August, was submitted, he would not use the mockery of saying to their deliberation [illegible] it was by the use of arguments [illegible] "famine" was ludicrous. From the West Indies we expected a supply of 120,000 tons, from the East Indies 80,000; 46,000 tons were actually shipped from the Mauritius; 20,000 tons of free-grown sugar were anticipated, and there were [illegible] Protection, [illegible] to expose them to the cheaper labour, and the vast and fertile soil of Cuba and Brazil. Were they prepared to incur the moral guilt and responsibility of adding ten or twenty thousand slaves annually to the slave population of these countries [illegible] one halfpenny per pound, and [illegible] strictions on emi[illegible] Africa would be [illegible] period of the Session, divide the House on his amendment.

Lord Denman declared his irrecon[illegible]

The Marquis of Lansdowne defended the bill. He argued that because our efforts on the coast of Africa had failed, and because the poor consumer of this country was liable to a heavy imposition for his sugar, the Government were [illegible] the measure. He suggested to [illegible] his amendment.

Lord Ashburton [illegible] without a majority [illegible] desire of going to a general election with a cry of cheap sugar. The noble and learned Lord commented in a vein of irony upon the changes of opinion avowed by Sir Robert Peel, Lord Sandon, and the Chairman of the East India Company, Sir James Hogg; and affirmed, on the authority of Sir John Rae Reid, that the merchants connected with the West Indies were refusing to send out the usual supplies, under the belief that their security would be affected by the present bill. Passing from individual to general considerations, he reviewed the arguments in support of the bill, contending that slavery and the slave-trade had so isolated the question of the cultivation of [illegible] took, not to resist any change, but actually to create one which would tend actively and positively to stimulate the African slave trade.

Earl Grey spoke at considerable length in favour of [illegible] Trade. He accused Lord Brougham of having hung back, when in office, from giving any assistance to Lord Ripon, in preparing the Slave Abolition measure, and declared that the noble and learned Lord's opinion on this question would not be held at the value of a pin by any man, woman, [illegible] country.

Lord Brougham having defended himself from these taunts,

Lord Stanley [illegible] bill to be read a first time.

The Marquis of Lansdowne immediately moved that the bill be read a second time on Thursday next.

Lord Stanley then moved, as an amendment, that it be read a second time that day three months.

[illegible] it was negatived without a division.

The House sat till one o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

The House met to-day at twelve o'clock, and sat till one o'clock the [illegible] There are to be morning sittings till the end of the session.

Newly Elected Member.—Lord Robert Grosvenor took the oaths and his seat for Ch[illegible]

Private Business of the House.—Mr. Hume submitted to the House eight resolutions, with the view of reforming the manner of transacting the private business. After a discussion, resolutions 1, 3, 4 [illegible] 6, were agreed to: the others were withdrawn.

Ordnance Estimates.—After long and tedious discussions upon several unimportant subjects, the House went into Committee of Supply on the Ordnance Estimates, and several votes were taken.

Reduction of the Duty on Rum.—The House went into Committee on the Customs' Duties, and the duty on colonial rum was reduced one shilling.

The Arms (Ireland) Bill.—Mr. Labouchere moved the second reading of the Arms (Ireland) Bill.—Mr. Hume moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day three months. After a long debate, in which a great many honourable members took part, the House divided—

For the second reading	56
Against it	23
Majority for the bill	33

Several continuance and official bills were forwarded a stage; and on the Sunday Trading Bill the House was counted out at one o'clock on Tuesday morning, there having been only fourteen members present

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

Military Flogging.—Earl Fortescue presented a petition, praying for the abolition of flogging in the army, and took occasion to pass a high encomium on Colonel Whyte.—Lord Brougham also bore his testimony to the gallant Colonel's general conduct, and expressed his opinion that the charges brought against that officer were unfounded.—The Duke of Wellington: My Lords, it is my duty, in considering the conduct of the gallant officer whose name has been mentioned, and in referring to the subject brought forward by the noble Earl who first addressed you, and the noble Lord who followed him, as well as by my noble and learned friend, to assure your Lordships I have no doubt whatever in stating that the slightest blame does not attach to any officer in connection with the late unfortunate transaction. With respect to the subject generally, it has long been the wish of all those connected with the command of the army, and particularly of the illustrious individual who was my predecessor in that command, that the punishment should be diminished in the greatest possible degree. (Hear, hear.) It has been my invariable practice, since I first had the honour of a command in the army, to make every endeavour to diminish the punishment, so as, if possible, to lead by degrees to its entire discontinuance My Lords, this has been the object of all my arrangements throughout the service, ever since I first commanded a regiment, now not less than fifty years ago. (Cheers.) But really, my Lords, the fact is, that it is impossible to carry on the discipline of the British army without some punishment of that description which the individual shall feel. This has been found to be invariably the case; and so much has it been the case, that, even when it was thought possible to discontinue it altogether, as had been recently tried in the East Indies, where, under an order of the late Governor-General, the punishment was entirely discontinued, it was found necessary to re-establish it, owing to the impossibility of carrying on the duties of the service without it, the troops amongst whom it had been abolished having mutinied in the most remarkable and disgraceful manner—in a manner, in fact, calculated to disgrace their country, and the nation in the service of whose Government they were acting. (Hear, hear.) My Lords, in consequence of the feeling of the Government, of the Parliament, and of the public on this subject, I have taken upon myself to issue an order greatly to diminish the severity of the punishment; and I hope, with the arrangements made in future, and with an alteration in the law, it may still further be diminished, so as to lead to its final discontinuance. (Hear.) I must, however, beg your Lordships to observe, that, if we are to have an army, we must have it in a state of discipline (hear, hear)—a state of subordination to command, and of obedience to the State. (Hear, hear.) This country does not like an army under any circumstances; but in no case would it bear any but the best troops that can be had. I entreat your Lordships to remark, that you cannot have an army, if, unfortunately, it should lose its discipline and habits of subordination and good order; but your Lordships may rely upon it that I will continue to do what I have always endeavoured to do—that is, to diminish the punishment as much as possible; and I hope I may live to see it abolished altogether. (Cheers.)

